The original of the Pharisees is not so easie to go back unto, as that of the Sadducees, nor is the significancy of their name so readily determined and fixed upon as the other; The Sadduces, it is well known were so called from Sadoc, the first Author of their Sect, and he the Scholar of Antigonus; Rabbi Nathan in his Aboth. Perek. 5. hath thus clearly given us their original. Antigonus of Socoh, saith he, received his learning from Simeon the just: This was his saying: Be not as servants that serve their Master, because of receiving * a reward, but be as servants that serve their Master, not for the receiving of a reward, but let the fear of God be upon you. This Antigonus had two Scholars, which changed his words; they changed them to their Scholars, and their Scholars to theirs: They stood up and taught after them, and said, what saw our Fathers to say thus? is it possible that a work-man may do his work all the day, and not receive his wages at even? But if our Fathers had known that there is a world to come, and that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, they would never have said thus: They stood up and separated from the Law, and from them broke out the two Sects, the Sadduces, and Baithusæans: the Sadduces after the name of Sadoc: and the Baithusæans, after the name of Baithus. So he. Now this Antigonus, whose good doctrine had this bad construction, was Scholar to Simeon the just, whom we shall have occasion to look after by and by.

* פרס a portion.

But the time and occasion of the rising of the Pharisees, is of more obscurity, and the reason of their name admitteth of more conjectures; As, whether they were so called from Perush, which importeth Exposition, for that they took upon them to be the great Expositors of the Law by their Traditions; or from Parush, which betokeneth separation, for that they accounted and pretended themselves more holy then others of the people, and so became Separatists from them, as despising them, Luke 18. 9. Either of which Etymologies carry with them a fair and plausible probability of their notation, but the last most agreeable to what both the Scripture, and other writings have said of them, in regard of their singularity; and as we shall have further occasion to descry, when we come to meet with them in their Doctrines, Practises or Opinions.

And the time of their first starting up, is yet obscurer: But to speak mine own thoughts, I cannot but conceive them to have been somewhat more ancient then the Sadduces, though but a little: And that that passage of the Prophet Malachi, [when he and the Spirit of Prophecy with him was to leave this world] Remember the Law of Moses, Mal. 4. 4. gave occasion to the rising of the Pharisees, and to the confirming of the Sadduces in their opinion when they had taken it up. For whereas the Spirit of Prophecy and revelation was now to depart from Israel, God having revealed as much of himself, and of his will to them, as he thought fit and necessary: He sendeth back the people in this defect of Prophetick guidance and direction, to the Law of Moses, to be their study, and their rule of Faith, and of Obedience. Hence did a certain generation among them take occasion and opportunity, to vent and broach traditions and glosses upon the Law, pretending them to have descended from Moses himself, and to have been handed over to them, from hand to hand, and as the Prophets while their race continued, expounded Moses, and instructed the people in the knowledge of the Law, by the Spirit of God, so these men (now the Prophts were gone) took on them to explain Moses, and the Law also, and by a way which they pretended to be of equal authority with the words of the Prophets, For that, say they, is Gods own glosse upon his own Law, and this he taught Moses while he was with him in the Mount: And this, Moses taught Joshua, and Joshua the Elders, and Eli received it from the Elders and from Phinehas nchas, and Samuel from Eli, and David from Samuel, and Ahijah the Shilonite from David, and Elias from Ahijah, and Eliſha from Elias, and Jehojada the Prieſt from Eliſha, and Zacharias from Jehojada, and Hoſea from Zacharias, and Amos from Hoſea, and Eſay from Amos, and Micah from Eſay, and Joel from Micah, and Nahum from Joel, and Habakkuk from Nahum, and Zephany from Habakkuk, and Jeremy from Zephany, and Baruch from Jeremie, and Ezra and his School from Baruch. The School of Ezra was called the men of the great Synagogue, and they were Haggai, Zechary, Malachi, Daniel, Hananiah, Miſhael, Azariah, Nehemiah, Mordecai, Bilſhan, Zerubbabel, and many wiſe men with them, to an hundred and twenty: The laſt of them was Simeon the juſt, and he was in the number of the hundred and twenty, and he was High Prieſt after Ezra. Vid. Rambam in Miſhu. Tom. 1. ſtatim ſub initio.

This nameleſs number that were between the time of Zerubbabel, Nehemiah, Mordecai, and thoſe holy men that we find mentioned in Scripture, and between the times of Simeon the juſt, I ſuſpect to be the Generation that afforded the riſe and original of Phariſaiſm and Traditions: For there was a good large ſpace of time and diſtance detween Ezra and Simeon the juſt, as might be cleared by ſeveral particulars, if that were needful. And a preparative, if not a ground-work, to Phariſaiſme, and traditions ſeemeth to be that famous ſpeech of the great Synagogue mentioned in Pirck. Aboth. Per. 1. The men of the great Synagogue ſaid three things, Be deliberate in judgment, and raiſe up Scholars in abundance, and make a hedg to the Law: Now the leſſon of making a hedg to the Law, by a fixed and determinate expoſition, was to bring on, and into credit, thoſe gloſſes and traditions which they would produce and bring upon it. For that the Law ſhould lie to the Commons without any fence about it, to keep men off from breaking in upon it by their own interpretations and expoſitions of it, they could ſoon perſwade the People, was a thing not to be tolerated or indured: and when they had wrought this leſſon home upon their hearts, then had they gloſſes ready of their own invention to put upon it, as to hedg or fence in from private interpretations. Theſe gloſſes or expoſitions they had a twofold trick to bring into requeſt.

Firſt, To pretend ſtrongly that they had deſcended traditionally from Moſes, and from God himſelf, as the pretended pedegree of them is ſhewed before.

And ſecondly, to uſe a ſtrict and ſevere preciſeneſs in their own converſation, and to pretend and ſhew a holineſs above other men, and to withdraw from them as too profane for their ſociety, that this might bring their perſons into admiration, and their traditions into repute. And thus they came by their name of Separatiſts, and thus they laid the foundation for traditions.

And as the Phariſees took this opportunity and occaſion from thoſe words of the Prophet, Remember the Law of Moſes, to vent their fooliſh and wicked Expoſitions upon Moſes, as ſeeming thereby to do the people a ſingular benefit, and to make as ſingular a fence to Moſes himſelf: So likewiſe did the Sadduces make uſe of the ſame occaſion to confirm themſelves in the error they had taken up, and to aſſert it unto others, in that in all the Law of Moſes, to the ſtudy of which the Holy Ghoſt had eſpecially directed them in thoſe times, and which Scripture only they imbraced, there is not mention nor hint at all as they pretented, of the reſurrection of the dead, or of a world to come.

The Phariſees and Sadduces were not repulſed by John, though he call them by ſuch a name as Vipers, but they were baptized by him: as is moſt apparent by comparing the relation that Saint Luke maketh of this Story and this together: That ſaying therefore of Luke, Chap. 7. 20. But the Phariſees, rejected the Counſel of God againſt themſelves, being not baptized of him, is to be underſtood of ſome of that Sect and not all.

By Generation we are not to underſtand the preſent age, as when it is ſaid, ſhall riſe up in judgment with this Generation; An adulterous generation ſeeketh a ſign, &c. that is, the people of this age: It is not to be ſo taken, as if the Baptiſt meant this preſent Generation are Vipers: for it is not γενεὰ in the Original, but γεννήματα: though he include no leſs in what he ſpeaketh, and though, if ever generation were viperous, that was. But the Baptiſt uſeth an expreſſion, that hitteth and reflecteth upon their Fathers, and predeceſſors as well as themſelves, for he calleth them a brood or off-ſpring of Vipers: intimating that they and their Fathers were Vipers both. And this he doth, that he might face and affront that fond and vain opinion of theirs, which ſo much deluded them, and whereupon they built great hopes and made great boaſting, namely, of their being the children of Abraham: No,

No, ſaith John, Say not within your ſelves, we have Abraham to our Father, for ye are not the ſeed of the promiſe, but the ſeed of the Serpent: And thus he ſpeaketh not only to the Phariſees and Sadduces, the hereticks of the Nation, but as Luke inlargeth it, to all the multitude that came to be baptized: Commenting upon the firſt promiſe at this firſt preaching of the Goſpel, and as on the one hand proclaiming Jeſus that was coming after him to be the ſeed of the Woman, ſo on the other, declaring the Jews to be now become the ſeed of the Serpent who ſhould perſecute and kill the ſeed of the Woman, howſoever they boaſted themſelves for the holy ſeed of Abraham.

And the ſame leſſon our Saviour readeth them, when he giveth them the ſame title, Mat. 12. 34. and 23. 33.

Vipers are the worſt and moſt deadly of any Serpents; for they deſtroy and kill ſuddenly, Act. 28. 4. 6. See Job 20. 16. Iſai. 30. 6. and 59. 5. from whence the Baptiſt and our Saviour ſeem to have this phraſe and Epithet: and Iſai. 41. 24. as the margin of our Engliſh and an Expoſitor in Dav. Kimchi do interpret it.

§ To flee from the wrath to come.

In this ſpeech, John ſeemeth to refer to the laſt words in all the Old Teſtament: where Malachi prophecying of the Baptiſt, and of his beginning to preach the Goſpel, He ſhall turn, ſaith he, the hearts of the Fathers to the Children, and the hearts of the Children to the Fathers, Leſt I come and ſmite the Land with a curſe. This meaneth, that wrath to come, which ſhould ſurely fall upon them, if they ſhould diſobey the Goſpel, which was now the laſt means offered them for their converſion, and ſo it came to paſs with them, when about forty four years after this, they were deſtroyed by the Romans.

Matth. 3. Verſ. 9. Say not, we have Abraham to our Father.

This was their common boaſting: as John 9. 33. the Chaldee Paraphraſt, and R. Sol. on Iſai. 62. 6. And ſo doth Rabbi Solomon conceive, that the Edomites were proud of their deſcent from Abraham as well as the Jews: for thus he expoundeth thoſe words in the Prophecy of Obadiah, ver. 3. Which dwelleſt in the clefts of the Rock: He leaneth upon the ſtaff of his Fathers, Abraham and Iſaac, and they will not profit him.

§ Of theſe ſtones to raiſe up children to Abraham.

Some take this figuratively, as Ignat. Mart. Epiſt. ad Magneſios. Clem. Alex. Portrept. ad Græc. and others, of the Gentiles, who are ſtony-hearted toward the Truth, and who worſhip ſtocks and ſtones, God is able to raiſe up children to Abraham: But it is rather to be interpreted literally for the crying down of their idle boaſting: That it was but a vain prop whereupon they leaned, to think that it was enough for them that they were deſcended of Abraham, for God by his omniponent power was able to make as good and towardly children to Abraham as they were, even of ſtones.

Matth. 3. ver. 10. And now alſo is the Ax laid unto the root of the Trees.

Whether we read it rationally, as doth the Vulgar Latine, For now the ax, or conjunctively, as doth our Engliſh, And now alſo; it plainly ſheweth it ſelf to be an Argument or Reaſon uſed to inforce ſomething that goeth before. And indeed it ſuiteth ſo very well with any of the three verſes next preceding, that it is hard to tell, to which moſt properly it ſhould be applyed. For being laid to the ſeventh verſe, it doth ſo ſtrongly confirm that there was a wrath to come, that it ſheweth it to be hard by, and even cloſe at hand, For now the ax is laid to the root of the Trees. Join it to the eighth verſe and it followeth the metaphor that is uſed there, of bringing forth fruit, and enforceth the exhortation or Doctrine that is there given, from the danger that may follow on unfruitfull trees, For now the ax is laid to the root of them. Or apply it likewiſe to the verſe next preceding, and it doth argue againſt the carnal confidence that the Jews had in their deſcending of the ſtock of Abraham, paraphraſtically thus: Ye have had warning of wrath that is to come, and you think you are out of the danger of it, becauſe ye are the children of Abraham, and deſcended lineally from his loins; a Prerogative ſo little to be boaſted of, that it may be common with you to ſtones, for God is able of them to raiſe up children unto Abraham, and a ſhelter ſo little to be truſted under, that look to your ſelves; the Ax is already laid to the root of the trees.

Some by the Ax underſtand the word of God, and the preaching of the ſame, or the publication of the Goſpel: from Jerem. 23. 29. after the reading of the LXX: and from Hoſea 6. 5.

6. 5. Others, Christ himself, consisting say they of two natures, divine and humane, as an Ax of two parts, the head and the handle. But the current of the most, and the best Expositors understand it of the judgments of God: and that it is so to be understood, may be strongly concluded by these reasons.

First, because the context both before and after, speaketh of Judgement and vengeance to come upon the impenitent and unfruitful, as wrath to come, ver. 7. and casting into fire, and fire unquenchable, ver. 10. 12. and therefore it is most proper to expound the Ax as an instrument destroying, for judgment or destruction.

Secondly, this place seemeth plainly to have reference to Esai. 10. 33, 34. Behold, the Lord, the Lord of hosts shall lop the bough with terror: and the high ones of stature shall be hewn down, and the haughty shall be humbled. And he shall cut down the thickets of the Forests with iron, and Lebanon shall fall by a mighty one: which how the more ancient Jews understood of the destruction of their State and Kingdom, and that neer upon the coming of Christ, a testimony of their own in their Talmud, in the treatise Berachoth may sufficiently evidence. There was a certain Jew, say they, was plowing, and one of his Oxen lowed. The Ox lowing, told of the coming of the Lord. A certain Arabian passing by, heard the lowing of the Ox, and said unto the Jew: O Jew! unyoke thine Oxen, and care not for thine implements, for your Sanctuary is destroyed: And the Ox lowed again: and the Arabian saith, O Jew! yoke thine Oxen, and make fit thine implements, for your Messias is born, &c. Rabbi Abuni said, And what need you to learn this of an Arabian? The text is plain in Esay which saith, Lebanon shall fall by a mighty one: and it followeth, And there shall come forth a rod out of the stemm of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his root.

§ To the root of the trees.

First, by the root of the trees, might be understood the root of Jesse, of which mention was made before from Esay 11. 1. For in all the crosses and calamities, Wars, overthrows, and captivities, that had befallen the Nation of the Jews, the stock of Jesse, or line of David, could never be rooted out, or extinguished, because the promise that Christ should come out of it, did preserve and keep it alive, in despight of all opposition, till he that was promised did come indeed. But now, seeing that he was come, and that that line had no more the shelter, and preservative of the promise, it also must come to ruine and rooting out as well as others.

Secondly, the Ax is now laid to the very root of your confidence and boasting: For whereas ye say within your selves, and stand upon it, that ye have Abraham to your Father: the time is now come, that that distinction betwixt who is, and who is not, of the Seed of Abraham, shall be no more regarded, nor looked after: but every one of what Nation soever that feareth God shall be accepted of him, and the seed of Abraham for not fearing him shall be rejected, and that priviledge not respected at all.

Thirdly, Jerusalem was at the root of the whole Nation, from which they derived the sap of religion and policy, but now the ax of destruction is laid even to that.

Fourthly, this phrase may be understood, as comparing the ruine of the Jews here threatned, with those desolations they had felt before: For then, as at the captivity of Babylon for example, they were not utterly cut off from their Land for ever, but had a promise of returning, and returned, and were planted there again: but now the vengeance threatned must strike at very root, and quite destroy them from being a Nation for ever, and from all hope of returning to their Country any more.

By the Ax being now laid to the root of the trees, may fitly be understood, 1. The certainty of their desolation. And 2. the nearness: in that the instrument of their destruction was already prepared and brought close to them, the Romans, that should ruine their City and Nation, being already Masters and Rulers over them.

Luke 3. vers. 10. And the people asked him, &c.

Or, the multitude, as vers. 7. which verse compared with this, sheweth, that the question what shall we do then? proceeded from those to whom the Baptist addressed his last speech, O ye generation of Vipers, &c. which were Pharisees and Sadduces, as appeareth by Matthew, and other multitude mixed among, as by Luke. Now whether this their question proceeded from the apprehension of the danger threatned, or application of the exhortation urged, whether they desired to learn how to avoid the evil of the wrath to come, or to do the good works of repentance, when they ask, what shall we do? is neither so material to search, nor easie to find, as it is fit to observe, how powerfully the doctrine of the Baptist hath wrought with them, when it hath thus brought them to look off the goodness of Abraham in which they trusted, and to think after goodness of their own.

Vers.

Verſ. 11. He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none, &c.

It appeareth by the Baptiſts anſwer, that their queſtion demanded what were thoſe good fruits, that he called upon them to bring forth, ver. 8, 9. and the ποιήσωμεν here may ſeem to have reſpect to the ποιήσατε and μὴ ποιεῖν, in thoſe verſes.

His anſwer is an exhortation to Almes-deeds, or giving to the needy, rather then any other leſſon, not that thereby they might think to ſatisfie for their ſins, or merit for themſelves, but for divers other important and conſiderable ends. For, 1. he ſetteth them this as an eaſie leſſon, for yet they were but very children in the Evangelical School: To have put them at their firſt entry into this School, to the hard lecture of ſelf-denial, mortification, patience and joy in perſecution, and other ſuch things as theſe, had been too ſtrong meat for ſuch babes, too difficult a task for ſuch infants to take out, and therefore he ſetteth them this eaſie Copy, and layeth no greater an impoſition upon them, then what even the weakeſt of them might follow and undergo, to impart of their abundance to the poor.

2. The tenor of the Goſpel is mercy and not ſacrifice, Hoſea, 6.7. Mat. 12.7. and therefore he putteth not upon them the coſt of oblations and offerings which were required by the Law, nor the faſting and pining of the body, as did many of his own Diſciples, but the lovely works of Charity and Mercy, the firſt and moſt viſible of which is relief of the needy.

3. By this he putteth them to tryal, how they forſake the world, by parting with their wordly goods, how they live by faith in not fearing poverty though they give of their wealth away, how they love their neighbour as themſelves, in making him partner of what they have, and how their eyes are fixed on things to come, by giving away here, and looking for reward thereof in heaven.

And, 4. it may be very well ſuppoſed that among the multitude that ſtood before him, the Baptiſt ſaw ſome rich, and ſome poor, ſome in good cloathing, and ſome in mean, and that the preſent object that he beheld might be ſome occaſion to him to propoſe this leſſon to be put preſently in practice.

§ That hath two Coats, &c.

He requireth not wilfull Poverty, but Alms-deeds of their ſuperfluity, not to give away their coat if they have but one, but if they have two, then give one of them; and to the ſame purpoſe he uſeth Βρώματα, Meats, in the plural number; not to go naked themſelves, that they may cloath others, nor to prevent others begging by their alms, and to beg themſelves, but what they have above their own neceſſaries, to contribute to the neceſſities of the needy, and firſt to love themſelves, and then their neighbours as themſelves.

Verſ. 12. Publicans.

Publicans at the firſt were ſuch as gathered the tributes and cuſtom of the Romans in thoſe Countries and Provinces that were under their dominion. And this at that time was an honourable place and calling. For Tully commending M. Varro to Brutus giveth theſe two reaſons of the ſtrong tie of friendſhip betwixt them: The one is, ſaith he, becauſe he is verſed in my way of ſtudies in which I am chiefly delighted. And the other, becauſe he betook himſelf maturely to the company of the Publicans, which indeed I would not have had him to have done, becauſe he had ſuffered great loſſes, and yet the cauſe of that common order, of me moſt highly eſteemed, made our friendſhip the ſtronger. And in his Oration for Plancius, he ſaith, That the flower of the Roman Knights, the ornament of the City, the ſtrength of the Common-wealth, is comprehended in the order of the Publicans. And ſo it was an honourable memorial that was left, τῷ καλῶς τελωνήσαντι, To him that had played the good Publican. Suetonius in vita Veſpaſiani ſtatim ſub initio. Epiſt. lib. 13. 10

But in after times the quality of the Office it ſelf, and the conditions of the Officers became very much altered. For now men of inferiour rank farmed thoſe places, and took the Office upon an yearly rent, and quickly brought the calling into diſgrace. So that in the Goſpel Publicans are branded with a ſpecial note of infamy above other men, and ſtill go hand in hand with the moſt notorious ſinners.

And this, firſt, generally every where, becauſe of their covetouſneſs, and racking exactions, which are the common fruits of buying and farming of Offices. Tacitus calleth them immodeſtiam Publicanorum, the immodeſty of the Publicans, and mentioneth a general complaint againſt them in the time of Nero, and ſome reformation of their injuri- Annal. lib. 13.

injuriousnes. And Suidas giveth them this character, The life of the Publicans, is open violence, unpunished rapine, an unseasonable trade, and a shameless merchandize.

Secondly, More especially were men of this profession odious among the Jews; because, whereas they held themselves to be a freeborn Nation, and that they ought not to subject to any, nor pay tribute, but only their dues to God, and homage to their own King, these wretches, as enemies to the common Liberty, did help forward their subjection in exacting of custom, though they were of the same Nation themselves, complying too much with the Romans company, contrary to Jews punctualnes of sequestration from the Heathen, and too too much with their tyranny in augmenting those burdens of bondage which they had made heavy enough before.

Ver. 13. Exact no more, &c.

By this answer is approved what is said immediately before, about their extortion, that not only they sided with the Romans, in putting the Jews their own Nation to tribute, but also did aggravate the burthen themselves, by exaction of more then was required by the Roman Governors. Now it is observable, that of the Pharisees and Sadduces the Baptist requireth affirmatively some duties to be done. He that hath two coats, &c. because these people stood upon their own righteousnes, and pleaded perfection: therfore will he try them by the touchstone of action: but of the Souldiers and Publicans, he requireth only negatively, some enormities to be foregon: for they being notoriously and scandalously wicked, it was necessary they should first cease to do evil, before they could learn or be brought to do good.

Vers. 14. The Souldiers.

These were Romans, or some of other Nations under the Roman pay; for no one can think that the Romans would use the Jews for their garrisons in their own Country, lest they should rebel: and here do the Gentiles first hearken to the Gospel.

& Do violence to no man, &c.

The Baptist in his answer tyeth both hand, tongue and heart, deed, word, and thought from the injury of another, their profession especially tending so much toward injuriousnes.

First, he forbiddeth them to open violence in act, whether by blows, ravishing, plunder, firing, or such like mischiefs as attend the wars, and go with Souldiers.

Secondly, secret underminings, by false accusing, abusing the power of the Superiour to the wrong of another, when their own could not reach, and sewing the Foxes skin to, when the Lyons was too short. And,

Thirdly, discontentation and repining at their wages, which indeed was the cause and original of both the other. And so is that a main argument used by Percennius, which moved the great mutinie of the three legions in Pannonia, in the very entry of the Reign of Tiberius, Denis in diem assibus corpus & animam æstimari: How poor a thing it was that their lives and bodies were rated and set to sale but at ten farthings a days Tacit. Annal. lib. 1.

It is observable in both the answers of the Baptist, to the Publicans and to the Souldiers, that he gainsayeth not their professions, but their abuse of them: to the one he forbiddeth not to gather tribute, but to exact more: and to the other not to exercise Souldiery, but practice violenc.

Ver. 15. As the people were in expectation, &c.

Divers things there were that concurred, to make the Jews to think of Christ, when they saw the Baptist, and to muse in heart whether he were he or not.

First, the first and the prime one was the agreement of the time. For they had learned by divers pregnant evidences both in the Law and in the Prophts that this was the time when Christ should come: for now was the Scepter departed from Juda, now was the Lawgiver or Sankedrin slain by Herod, now were the Romans Lords of their Nation, and now were Daniels seventies expired, by which they knew that this was the time, and now they looked that the Kingdom of Heaven should appear, Luke 19. 11. and they gather together from all Nations to Jerusalem to see its appearing, Act. 2. as was hinted before.

When therefore, secondly, in this time of their great expectation, they behold the excellent sanctity, piety, and zeal; the admirable strictnes, austerity and Spirit; And,

Thirdly

Thirdly, The ſtrange, unuſual and powerful manner of the preaching of the Baptiſt, it is no wonder if they entertained a doubtful and muſing thought of him, whether he were the Chriſt or no. And,

Fourthly, Their longing deſire and earneſt wiſhing after Meſſias his coming, might ſomething forward ſuch a conceit, for facile credimus quod volumus; and the Greek word doth import a deſire joyned with their expectation. So Chriſt in Gen. 49. 10. is προσδοκία ἐθνῶν in the LXX, the expectation of the Nations; and their deſire, Hag. 2. 7. It is not unlike but the coming of the wiſe men, the words of Simeon and Anna, and other teſtimonies of Chriſt then come, were diſperſed among very many, and notice taken of them, and this might be a ſtrengthening and helping forward of this ſurmiſe: but that the ſtrangeneſs of the Baptiſts birth, and of what befel his Father about it, ſhould be any induction or ſeconding thereunto, as ſome do hold, is hard to be believed, unleſs we can think that either this people had forgot to look after the Tribe of Judah for the Meſſias, or that Elizabeths alliance to that Tribe, for ſhe was couſin to the Virgin Mary, Luke 1. 36. did ſatisfie them if they looked after it.

Ver. 16. John anſwered.

Whereas ſome hold that John knew the thoughts of their hearts, by the Revelation of the Spirit, for it is ſaid only before that they muſed of the matter in their heart, and put it not to queſtion, it is far more probable, that John came to know this their thought, by ſome outward expreſſion of their own. For among ſo great a multitude, when they were all in the ſame doubt and heſitation, it was impoſſible, but there would break out ſome whiſperings, queſtions, arguings, or other token of the general conceit, that even a ſlow and dull apprehenſion might in ſhort time have found it out.

All the Evangeliſts have this anſwer of the Baptiſt, in regard of the ſubſtance, but in ſome circumſtances there is difference among them. As firſt, whereas Luke ſaith, that theſe words were occaſioned from him by the thoughts of the people, Matthew, that hitherto hath joyned with him in this ſtory, even to the very words, that hath no ſuch thing as about the queſtions aforementioned, nor about this ſuppoſal, but joyneth this as a continued ſpeech to the Phariſees and Sadduces: but this needeth to breed no ſcruple, ſeeing that it is not only uſual, but alſo neceſſary among the four, one to relate what another hath omitted, and one to declare at large, what another hath done in brief.

Secondly, Whereas both Luke and Matthew have ſet this teſtimony of the Baptiſt after other ſpeeches of his made before; Mark, as was mentioned before, hath ſet it the firſt of all his Preaching, and indeed hath mentioned no ſpeech elſe: But this he hath done, partly becauſe he would haſten to the Baptiſm, Preaching, and Miracles of Chriſt, partly becauſe Matthew had ſet out the matter at large before; but chiefly to give us to know that this witneſs went along with John in all his Sermons, and to all companies that came to be baptized.

Thirdly, Whereas Luke hath alledged this ſpeech as an anſwer to the peoples thoughts, John hath brought it as an anſwer to an open queſtion, Joh. 1. 25, 26, 27. And here it may be queſtioned indeed, whether theſe two ſpeak of one and the ſame thing, and of the ſame time: But the reſolution is eaſie, that they do not. For as it is plain by Luke, that theſe words mentioned by him, proceeded from John before the Baptiſm of Chriſt, ſo is it as plain by John, that thoſe in him came from him after: for in ver. 26. he intimateth that Chriſt himſelf had already ſtood among them, but they knew him not; No nor he himſelf, but by the Holy Ghoſt, which he ſaw deſcend upon him, ver. 33. By which is confirmed what was ſaid even now, that John made ſure to bear this witneſs to Chriſt, at all times, and before all companies. Now becauſe the eyes of the people upon himſelf, looked at the ſtrangeneſs of his Baptiſm, and the ſanctity of his perſon, therefore doth he apply this his teſtimony accordingly, by comparing Chriſt and himſelf, and his baptiſm and his together, and proclaiming his own inferiority in both, as far as baptiſm with water only, is below baptizing with the Holy Ghoſt, and further then the ſervant that unties his Maſters ſhoos, below him that wears them.

Mark hath it in another tenſe, I have baptized: which either may import the continuedneſs of Johns baptizing, this being compared with Matthew and Luke as Janſenius hath conjoyned them, I have baptized, and do baptize you. Or, rather doth it intimate that he ſtill baptized the companies that came unto him, and then gave this teſtimony teſtimony to them concerning Chriſt. For his preaching was firſt of repentance, and then having won the people to be baptized, he brought them to the water and baptized them in the name of him that was to come after him, Act. 19. 4. So that theſe ſeem to have been the words that he uſed in ſprinkling or applying the water. I baptize thee with water, but a mightier then I cometh, who ſhall baptize with the Holy Ghoſt and with fire.

In the Greek it is indifferently, with or in, anſwerable to the ſignificancy of Beth the Hebrew prepoſition, either local or inſtrumental: And according to both ſenſes it may be taken here. For as it is undoubted that John brought thoſe that were to be baptized into the River, Matth. 3. 6. 16. So is it almoſt as little to be doubted, that when they were there he threw and ſprinkled the water upon them, both to anſwer the types of ſprinkling that had preceded in the Law, and the predictions thereof that were given by the Prophets, *Ezek.*36.25. underſtood by Hierome of baptiſm, *Epiſt.*83. So *Act.*8.38. The Eunuch firſt goeth into the water, and then Philip baptizeth him.

§. Water.

As the form of the Church was changed at the coming of Chriſt, from Jewiſh to Chriſtian, and from Legal to Evangelical, ſo is it no wonder if the Sacraments were changed therewithal. For if Chriſt were to give a new law, as Moſes did the old, which the Jews themſelves confeſs that he muſt, and the Prophets had foretold that he ſhould do; it was alſo neceſſary that he ſhould give theſe new, as well as other things. But it is ſome wonder, that ſeeing he inſtituted the Sacrament that ſhould ſucceed the Paſsover ſo near to the nature of the Paſsover, as that it was a ſupper as well as it, that there ſhould ſuch a main diſtance and difference be between Baptiſm and Circumciſion, the one of which ſhould ſucceed the other; for what affinity betwixt waſhing with water, and cutting off of the foreskin? For the better viewing of the reaſon of which difference, it will be neceſſary to conſider the main particulars of either Sacrament apart; and then may the Reader compare them together in their variety.

Firſt, then, Circumciſion to Abraham was a ſeal of the promiſe, thou ſhalt be the father of many Nations: but to his ſeed, of the promiſe of the Land of Canaan, I will give to thee, and to thy ſeed, all the Land of Canaan: therefore thou and thy ſeed after thee, ſhall keep my Covenant, Gen. 17. 8, 9. And ſuch a different end may be obſerved in the adminiſtration of baptiſm to Chriſt himſelf, and the adminiſtring of it unto Chriſtians. The Text alledged ſealeth the leaſe of the Land of Canaan to the ſeed of Abraham with the ſeal of Circumciſion, and confineth that Ceremony only to that Land, and only to their continuance there. And upon this inference, [I will give thy ſeed the Land of Canaan; therefore ſhall they keep my Covenant] it was that Joſhua, as ſoon as ever they had ſet foot upon that Land, was commanded to circumciſe them, Joſh. 5. And from hence it will follow, firſt, that that Land muſt be conſidered dilated, as far as Circumciſion went with the ſeed of Abraham, in Iſhmaelites, Midianites, Edomites and others.

Secondly, Hence they will be found to erect circumciſion again in the Church of Chriſt, that hold the called Jews ſhall have a temporal Kingdom again in the Land of Canaan.

And, thirdly, hence it may be reſolved why that Sacrament was deferred ſo long, and not given to the World before. Adam, Enoch, Noah, Eber, &c. were not circumciſed; becauſe to them a fixed and ſetled place for the Church to reſide together was not deſigned, but when ſuch a one is deſigned to Abraham, then circumciſion is given alſo.

The Land of Canaan was bequeathed to Sem by his father Noah, the occaſion was, becauſe Cham, and his Son Canaan derided Noahs nakedneſs as he lay aſleep in the midſt of his Tent: when therefore that Land is to be ſetled upon the right heirs of Sem, to which God in the Prophetick ſpirit of Noah intended it, a ſeal, and an aſſurance thereof is given in that member, which had been derided by Canaan, to his loſs of that Land, and to his perpetual ſlavery. This was a main reaſon, why Males alone were circumciſed, and why in that member; becauſe a male alone, and that member in him was ſo derided. Other reaſons of the inſtitution of the Ceremony, and only for maſculines, and in that part, might concur for inſtruction [ſuch as are given by Lumbard, Aquinas, Biel, Lyra and others] but that they were not of the nature or eſſence of the Sacrament, and that this forementioned was the vigor and ſpirit of it, may be concluded by theſe two things.

Firſt, That Circumciſion concerned not the children of Iſrael only, but the whole ſeed of Abraham: For thoſe children of his by his Concubines, that lived in Arabia, as Iſmaelites

Iſmaelites, Dedanites, Medianites, Midianites, Shuhites, Amalekites, and the reſt were circumciſed as well as Iſrael in Paleſtina. Thoſe Countries whither Abraham had ſent them to inhabite were once in the poſſeſſion of Canaanites, till he obtained them by conqueſt of the four Kings, Gen. 14. and thither he ſendeth them with the ſeal of Circumciſion upon them, which gave them intereſt in the Land there, as well as Iſaac had elſwhere: Abraham taught his children, and his houſhold after him to keep the way of the Lord, Gen. 18. 19. which though this off-ſpring of his in Arabia did not long in other things, yet in circumciſion it did. So that from hence may reſult the obſervation of another end, and reaſon of the inſtitution of this Ceremony, namely, for diſtinction, not of Iſrael from other Nations, as Lyranus would have it, but of the ſeed of Abraham from all other people.

Secondly, Howſoever all the Iſraelites dwelling before the coming of our Saviour out of the Land of Canaan, as both of the Babylonian and Grecian diſperſion, uſed Circumciſion in Heathens Lands, and uſed it lawfully; yet it was becauſe their claim and intereſt to the Land of Canaan did ſtill continue: nay, this was one reaſon why it held up ſome ſtore of years after Chriſt his coming and aſcenſion: but when Jeruſalem was deſtroyed, and their leaſe of that Land of promiſe, either expired or forfeited, or both; then did this ſeal of it fall and come to ruine alſo, and might not lawfully be uſed ever after: and when they muſt for ever relinquiſh the Land, they muſt for ever alſo relinquiſh this ſeal or Ceremony that had aſſured it. This well conſidered, will cauſe us alſo to obſerve:

Firſt, That the intereſt of Iſrael in the holy Land began to ſhake, when baptiſm came to ſhoulder out Circumciſion. Secondly, That John moſt properly preached much of the Kingdom of Heaven, for their earthly one began to ceaſe when baptiſm began to extinguiſh Circumciſion.

As Circumciſion it ſelf had relation to the inheritance of the Land of the Canaanites: ſo the fixed time for the adminiſtration of it; namely, the eighth day ſeemeth alſo to have ſome aim and reſpect to the ſame thing. For ſeven nations were in that Land, which the Children of Abraham were to ſubdue and dwell in their ſtead, Canaanites, Hittites, Hivites, Perizzites, Girgaſhites, Amorites, and Jebuſites, Deut. 7. 1. Joſh. 3. 10. In correſpondency to this number of ſeven Nations that were to be ſubdued, Jericho the firſt field fought in that Land, is compaſſed ſeven days, and ſeven times the ſeventh day. And in like anſwerableneſs, every child of Abraham for ſeven days, was like the children of thoſe ſeven Nations, but on the eighth day he was to receive circumciſion the pledge of that intereſt and claim that he had in that Land, which thoſe ſeven Nations had uſurped.

This then was the ground-work and Original of that Sacrament, that every Son of Abraham might bear in his body the ſeal of the inheritance of the Land of promiſe, and the badge of diſtinction from all other people, and that this viſible ſign might make him ſtrive after the inviſible grace which it ſealed, the inheritance of Heaven, and walking as the peculiar of the Lord. From which appropriated and reſtrictive ends of the Rite, the neceſſity of the changing of it at the coming of Chriſt doth plainly appear: for when there was to be no more diſtinction betwixt the children of Abraham, and other people, and no one land more peculiarized then another, but of every Land and Nation he that feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſs is accepted of him; that badge of appropriation, and ſeal of ſingularity, muſt either clean come to nothing, or become unneceſſary.

Now that baptiſm did ſucceed in the ſtead thereof, ſome reaſons may be given. As, firſt, becauſe the Sacraments of the New Teſtament were to be gentle and eaſie, in ſtead of the ſmart and burdenſom ones of the Law. Secondly, Becauſe God would comply with men even in their own common cuſtom, of waſhing children when they are newly born, Ezek. 16. 4. 9. and turn the common to a ſacred uſe, thereby to catch and win them the more. But, thirdly, this one main reaſon may ſerve for all; namely, the near correſpondency that is between the Sacrament, and the thing ſignified, and the full ſignificancy that the element beareth of the grace that it ſigneth forth. To which, fourthly, might be added, that baptiſm took place in the Chriſtian Church, to fulfil the types and predictions that had gone before of it under Moſes Law, and before. As in the flood and Ark, 1 Pet. 3. 21. in the paſſage through the red Sea and Jordan, 1 Cor. 10. 2. in the purifications and ſprinklings at the Sanctuary: But eſpecially in four remarkable particulars, was this fore-ſignified and typed out in a ſpecial manner.

Firſt, In Jacobs admiſſion of the preſerved Sichemites to his family and communion, Gen. 35. 2. And Jacob ſaid to his houſhold, and to all that were with him, Put away the ſtrange Gods that are among you, and be clean, and change your garments. Wherein he injoyneth them three things for their admiſſion to his Church. 1. To relinquiſh their idolatry. 2. To waſh or baptize their bodies, for ſo muſt the הטהרו Make your ſelves clean, be underſtood, and ſo it is well rendred by Aben Ezra. Eſpecially, 3. Since he giveth order order for the changing of their garments: All three containing the cleanſing of their minds, bodies and cloaths. And there obſerve, firſt, that when Circumciſion in the next Chapter before had proved a Sacrament of death to the Sichemites; Jacob uſeth baptiſm for admiſſion of Proſelytes in the ſtead thereof. Secondly, That the company to be admitted are females, [unleſs there were ſome Syrian male Idolaters] for all the males of Sechem were ſlain, Gen. 34. 25. or at the leaſt, the moſt of them, and therefore he uſeth a Sacrament which women alſo might come under, for under circumciſion they did not come.

Secondly, In the admiſſion of the Iſraelites to the hearing of the Law, by ſanctification and waſhing, *Exod.*19.10. from which the Jews themſelves did ground the baptizing of Proſelytes, as a ſpecial ground.

Thirdly, At the making of the Covenant at Sinai, the introduction of Iſrael to the viſible Church, was by baptiſm, or the ſprinkling of water as well as of blood, as ſaith St. Paul, *Heb.*9.19. yea, and even the Jews themſelves. Our Rabbins teach, ſaith Rabbi Solomon, that our Fathers entred into the Covenant, and baptiſm, and ſprinkling of blood: for there was no ſprinkling of blood without baptiſm. R. Sol. in loc. 4. In that in the times of David and Solomon, when heathens were converted to the Jews Religion by multitudes, their admiſſion to their Church was by baptiſm, and not by circumciſion. And the groundwork of this their practiſe, was, becauſe, Iſrael coming out of Egypt waſhed their garments; and the Prieſts coming from their common employments, to their function, waſhed their bodies: Let all be concluded in the words of the Talmud, Rabbi Akiba ſaid, O Iſrael you are bleſſed: Before whom are ye juſtified or cleanſed? Or who is he that cleanſeth you? It is your heavenly Father, as it is ſaid, I will pour clean water upon you. In Kippurim.

Our Maſters ſay, That baſtards and Gibeonites, ſhall be all juſtified in time to come. And this is the doctrine of Ezekiel, as it is written, I will pour clean water upon you. In Kidduſhin.

Matth. 3. ver. 11. Unto repentance.

Here the Schools think they find a main difference between the baptiſm of John, and the baptiſm uſed in the Chriſtian Church; becauſe that was only the baptiſm of repentance, and the other of grace, and remiſſion of ſins: but that there was no eſſential or ſubſtantial difference between them, ſhall be ſeen anon.

Luke 3. ver.16. But one mightier then I cometh.

Though by this mightineſs of Chriſt above the Baptiſt, his omnipotency or all-powerfulneſs as he is God, may well and truly be underſtood, as many Expoſitors do take it, yet ſince John ſpeaketh of him, as he ſhould ſhew himſelf among the people when he came, and in compariſon with himſelf as concerning preaching and baptizing, it cannot be but his words have reſpect to ſome particular things, wherein Chriſt ſhewed this mightineſs above John, yea, even converſing among men in his humane fleſh, and in what reſpected his preaching and miniſterial Office. And theſe may be reduced unto theſe four heads.

Firſt, The power of miracles, which Chriſt had, but John had not: For John wrought no miracle, Joh. 10.41. Nor was it fit he ſhould, ſince he in whom that power reſted as in its proper center, was ſo near to come, and ſo ready to ſhew it.

Secondly, In the different power of the Preaching of John, and of our Saviour, and their converſion of the people, John many, but Chriſt far more, as *Joh.*3.26.

Thirdly, In the ſeal and confirmation of their Doctrine and Miniſtry; for whereas John ſealed it with his death, our Saviour did not only ſo, but alſo with his reſurrection.

Fourthly, In continuance and increaſe of their preaching, and Diſciples, and this difference John ſheweth himſelf, *Joh.*3.30. To which may be annexed the excellency of Chriſts baptiſm above that of Johns, which is the very thing that is in compariſon, I baptize you with water, but he ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt.

§. The latchet of whoſe ſhoos I am not worthy to unlooſe.

The ſenſe is but ſtrained which delighteth ſo many, namely, that John confeſſeth under this ſimile, that he is unable to reſolve the great myſtery of the incarnation; Seeing Matthew giveth this his ſpeech in other words, and Mark by adding one word more to theſe, maketh it more neceſſary to take them in their literal meaning. For Matthew hath it thus, Whoſe ſhoos I am not worthy to bear, and Mark, The latchet of whoſe ſhoos, I am not worthy to ſtoop down and unlooſe. Both joyntly ſhewing, that the Baptiſt hath no myſtical and figurative meaning in this his ſpeech, but doth in plain and down-right terms aver his inferiority to Chriſt, that was to come after him, to be infinitely great, and more then a ſervants that ties his Maſters ſhoos, or carries them, is to his Maſter. For theſe meaneſt and baſeſt of offices of ſervant to Maſter, he inſtanceth in, that he might expreſs the infinite diſtance betwixt him and Chriſt, the more to the life, and to the peoples apprehenſion.

am

§. He ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt.

Hence ariſeth that opinion ſo mightily taken up in the Schools, and imbraced, concerning the great diſparity and difference betwixt the Baptiſm uſed in the Chriſtian Church, and the Baptiſm of John; for this (ſay they) could not confer grace, but the other doth, and Johns was but as a mean betwixt the purifications of the Jews, and the baptiſm of Chriſtians. In which, firſt, the words of the Baptiſt are miſconſtrued, and ſecondly, there is a difference pretended where there is none at all.

For, firſt, John compareth not his own baptiſm with ours, but his own with Chriſts. For that he meaneth not the baptiſm that Chriſt inſtituted to be uſed by others, but that he practiſed and exhibited perſonally himſelf, is plain, in that he mentioneth not water in Chriſts baptizing, which our Saviour himſelf doth, when he ſpeaketh of the baptiſm that they mean, *Joh.*3.5. and in that he ſaith perſonally that Chriſt ſhould baptize, which with water he never did, *Joh.*4.2.

Secondly, By the Holy Ghoſt, wherewith Chriſt ſhould baptize, is not meant the grace concomitant to our Chriſtian baptiſm, as they ſuppoſe, but his ſending down the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, as is plain by our Saviours own expoſition, *Act.*1.5. For John indeed baptized with water, but you ſhall be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt not many days hence. Where uſing the very ſame words with theſe of the Baptiſt, and applying the baptizing with the Holy Ghoſt plainly and undeniably to his ſending down of the Holy Ghoſt on Pentecoſt day, he hath given a ſure, plain and undoubted explanation of theſe words.

Thirdly, Neither, if the baptiſm of John, and the baptiſm uſed in the Chriſtian Church be well compared together, will any ſuch difference or diverſity be found betwixt them, nay, ſet the form of words aſide, no difference at all.

For, firſt, They both had the ſame inſtitution from Chriſt, for he that ſent the Apoſtles to baptize, ſent alſo the Baptiſt, John 1.33.

Secondly, They both had the ſame element, water.

Thirdly, They had both the ſame end, repentance. For though our Chriſtian baptiſm is called the Baptiſm for remiſſion of ſins, Act. 2. 38. &c. and a great deal of preeminence of this, above that of John, picked as is thought out of that title, yet is it no more then what is ſaid of the baptiſm of John, Mark 1.4.

Fourthly, Whereas it is commonly ſaid, that one end of our Saviours being baptized was, that he might ſanctifie our baptiſm, how can this be ſuppoſed, if he received not our baptiſm, but one different from it?

Fifthly, The Diſciples were baptized with no baptiſm but that of John, for Chriſt baptized them not, and who other ſhould do, it cannot be imagined, and therefore if this of ours be more excellent then Johns, we have a better baptiſm then the Apoſtles that firſt adminiſtred it.

Sixthly, and laſtly, Howſoever the Schools without any ſtumbling, do hold rebaptization of thoſe that had received the baptiſm of John, this croſſeth their own tenet, that his was a degree above the waſhings under the Law, for their imperfection was ſhewed by their reiteration, and in this they make his to differ nothing at all. And whereas it is ſaid, *Act.*19.5. that ſome that were baptized with the baptiſm of John upon Pauls inſtruction of them, were baptized in the Name of the Lord Jeſus: it was rather their renewing to their baptiſm, then their baptiſm to them, and not that they took any other then that of John, but that they now began to entertain and apply it to the right intent. As it may be exemplified in circumciſion in any heathen ſon of Abraham: as in Jethro for an inſtance. He was circumciſed while he was an unbeliever, becauſe he was a Midianite, a child of Abraham; now when he came to be a convert, and imbraced the true Religion, he was not to be circumciſed again, for that was not poſſible, but he then began to know and apply the right uſe and meaning of his circumciſion, and ſo was renewed to it, and not it to him: Or thoſe words, [When they heard this they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jeſus,] may be underſtood to be the words of Paul, and not of Luke, as ſee Beza in loc.

This phraze of baptizing with the Holy Ghoſt ſheweth, firſt, the reſtoring of the Holy Ghoſt, which long ago was departed from Iſrael, and gone up.

Secondly,

Secondly, The abundance and plenteousnes of that gift when it should be exhibited, that it should be as water poured upon them, as the word is used, Joel 2.28.

Thirdly, It sheweth whither all the washings and purifyings of the Law aimed, and had respect, namely to the washing and purging of men by the Holy Ghost.

§. You.

That is, some of you, as 1 Sam. 8. 11. He will take your sons, that is, some of them: or You, that is, the people, as Deut. 18. 15. The Lord shall raise to thee a Prophet, that is, to thy people, and unto him you shall hearken, that is, the Nation of your posterity.

From *Isa.*4.4. The Lord shall wash the filthines of the Daughter of Zion, and purge the blood of Jerusalem out of the middest thereof, by the spirit of Judgment, and by the spirit of burning. It is easily to be resolved what John meaneth here by fire, seeing our Saviour himself hath applied the other part of his speech to the coming down of the Holy Ghost on Pentecost day, when we know he appeared in the visible shape of Tongues of fire, Act. 2. Now Christs baptizing in this manner with fire, was, 1. That the giving of the Holy Ghost might fully answer the giving of the Law, both for time and manner, for both were given at Pentecost, and both in fire. 2. To express the various operations of the Holy Ghost, which are fitly resembled and represented by the effects of fire: As 1. To inlighten with knowledge; 2. To inflame with zeal; 3. To burn up corruption; 4. To purifie the nature; 5. To turn the man to its own qualification of sanctity, as fire maketh all things that it seiseth like it self. 3. To strike terror in the hearts of men, lest they should despise the Gospel, and to win reverence to the Holy Ghost, for fear of the fire. 4. Hereby was clearly and fully shewed, the life and significancy of the sacrifices under the Law, upon whom there came a fire from Heaven: intimating that they are lively sacrifices, and accepted, who are inflamed by the Holy Ghost from above.

And thus the two elements that have and shall destroy the world, water and fire, hath God been pleased to use for the benefit and salvation of his chosen.

Vers. 17. Whose fan is in his hand.

By the fan in the hand of Christ, the most Expositors understand the power of judgement that God the Father hath committed to him, For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgement to the Son, Joh. 5.22. And thus some take it for an argument against security to all: and others, against Apostasie to those that have been baptized with the Holy Ghost: and that as the Baptist in the former words hath told what Christ would do, at his first coming and appearance, so in these, what he will do at his second: but I rather adhere to the interpretation of them that by the Fan of Christ, understand the Gospel, and his preaching and publication of the same; and that upon these reasons:

First, Because unless it be thus taken, we have not here any testimony at all given by the Baptist to the people, concerning that part of the Office of Christ. Now that being a matter of so great importance, as that the Prophets do more insist upon the preaching of Christ, and his power in the Gospel, then upon any other thing that concerned him in the work of Redemption, and this being in several respects more regardable then his baptizing with the Holy Ghost, it cannot be imagined that John should omit to bear witnes of him for such a thing, nay it had been to neglect to bear witnes of him for the chief thing of all.

Secondly, Because the Gospel or the Word of God is the proper touchstone that trieth and differenceth betwixt gold and dross, truth and falshood, pure and vile: and this is the instrument wherewith he confoundeth every strong hold that exalteth it self against himself, *Isa.*11.4. 2 *Thes.*2.8. *Revel.*1.16. & 2.16. And,

Thirdly, Because John speaketh of Christ as he should presently shew himself among them, as it is apparent in the verse preceding, and not as he should shew himself at the end of the world.

If these words and those that follow, be applied to the whole Church in all places, and at all times in general, the application may be very profitable and pertinent, as giving warning warning to all men, to bring forth the fruits of repentance, for fear of the judgement to come, and ſo the end of this verſe may be of the ſame uſe with the end of the ninth to all men whatſoever; but that by the floor of Chriſt in this place is meant the Church of Iſrael, or the nation of the Jews alone, may be concluded upon theſe obſervations:

Firſt, That the title given, His floor, is but the very Epithet of Iſaiah, that he giveth to Iſrael, Iſa. 21. 10. Oh my threſhing, and the corn of my floor: which though ſome Expoſitors both Jewiſh and Chriſtian apply to Babel, yet let the Reader upon common reaſon, and ſerious examination be the Judge.

Secondly, Becauſe the phraſe of fanning of that Nation betokeneth their final deſolation, Jer. 15. 7. I will fan them with a fan in the gates of the Land: and the Baptiſt ſeemeth in theſe expreſſions his fan and his floor, to have reference to theſe two Prophets.

Thirdly, Becauſe the words being thus appropriated to Iſrael, they have the more agreement with the verſes preceding, which tell of the wrath to come upon that Nation, and of the ax already laid to the root of that tree.

Fourthly, The phraſe of throughly purging, which the Greek word importeth, [and the ſame word is uſed both by Luke and Mark] denoteth a final ſeparation of the Wheat and chaff, and an utter conſumption of the wicked, and this being ſpoken only to the Jews, and to thoſe Gentiles that were mingled with them, they cannot ſo fitly be applyed to any thing as to that Nation, and their utter deſolation; for God had often purged them before; but now their thorough purging is near at hand, when Chriſt by the fan of the Goſpel ſhall have ſifted and tried them, and found them out, who was Wheat, and who was chaff. And, Fifthly, This Expoſition is conſented to, even by the Jews themſelves, the more ancient of whom have held, that the coming of Chriſt ſhould be the final deſolation of their Nation. So doth their whole Sanhedrin confeſs, Joh. 11. 48. This man doth many miracles, and if we let him alone, all men will believe on him, and the Romans ſhall come and take away both our place and Nation. And to the ſame tenor of confeſſion is that collection of the Talmud cited ere while from the laſt verſe of the tenth Chapter of Iſaiah, and the firſt of the eleventh, where the fall of the foreſt and Lebanon, and the coming of the branch out of the ſtem of Jeſſe, are laid together. And to the ſame purpoſe doth the Chaldee Paraphraſt render Iſa. 66. 7. Before her pains came, ſhe was redeemed, and before the pangs of her birth, Meſſias her King was revealed. A Text from which Rabbi Samuel bar Nachaman in Bereſhith Rabba concludeth that the deſtruction of the Temple, and the birth of the Meſſias ſhould be near together.

And laſtly, that this verſe, as it was ſpoken only, ſo alſo is to be applied only to the Jews, may be ſomewhat inferred from the Titles given to the parties ſpoken of, wheat and chaff, which both grow from one root, and come up upon the ſame ſtalk: reſembling fitly both the believing and unbelieving Jews, or the godly and wicked of them, both deſcended from the ſame National Original. And to back this obſervation, it is obſervable, that whereas our Saviour maketh his metaphor of Wheat and Tares, becauſe he would only ſhew the difference betwixt the righteous and the wicked, the Baptiſt doth his of Wheat and chaff, becauſe he would not only ſhew the ſame difference in condition, but alſo their agreement and identity in Nation.

5. The Wheat he will gather.

By Wheat and chaff, might very well be underſtood true and falſe doctrine, and the rather becauſe the Scripture elſwhere calleth them by ſuch terms, Jer. 23. 28. and maketh the fire of the Word of God, the trier and touchſtone of them both, 1 Cor. 3. 12, 13, 15. from Deut. 33. 2. and the rather ſtill, becauſe the words are ſpoken to Phariſees and Sadduces, which were both very erroneous in their tenets: but that it will be very harſh to apply the gathering into the Garner, and the unquenchableneſs of the fire in reference to doctrine: therefore the two different titles are ſeverally and properly to be underſtood of righteous and wicked mens perſons differenced in thoſe their ſeveral qualifications: and under this interpretation may the truth or falſity of doctrine be alſo underſtood: Now the righteous or Saints of God, are fitly compared to Wheat in diverſe reſpects, as in goodneſs, uſefulneſs, weight and fulneſs, whereas the wicked on the contrary are like chaff, in being refuſe, vile, unprofitable, light, empty, and fitteſt for the fire.

5. He

§. He will gather.

The obſervation is not far amiſs, eſpecially the ſignificancy and force of the Greek word regarded, that from hence inferreth, that the righteous lie ſcatteredly and diſperſedly among the wicked: but the word gathering doth not always neceſſarily import ſo much, for a Leper was ſaid to be gathered when he was cleanſed, 2 King. 5. 3. which was not from amongſt men, but unto them: and the manner of ſpeech here, ſeemeth to be taken from the gathering of harveſt or ripe fruits, *Exod.*23.16. or from the gathering of dying men unto their reſt, as *Gen.*25.8.17.

§. Into the Garner.

Seeing that the main intent of the verſe is to ſhew forth the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, as is proved before, by theſe words might well be underſtood the care and charge that God took of his faithful ones in that ruine, when by the warning of a voice in the Temple that ſaid Migremus hinc, let us flit hence, he removed them to Pella, a place far enough diſtant from the danger, but that our Saviour hath taught us to underſtand it of the reſt in Heaven, in his parable of the Wheat and Tares, Matth. 13.

Reaſon of the Order.

THERE can be no doubt or ſcruple about the ſubſequency of the beginning of this Section to that that was next before, for the three Evangeliſts have ſo unanimouſly ranked them together, that the order needeth no more confirmation. But about this latter part or the genealogy of Chriſt there is ſomething more difficult. For ſome Harmoniſts have brought this line of Luke, and that of Matthew together, ſome bringing Matthews hither with Lukes to Chriſts baptiſm, and others this of Luke, to the time of Matthews to Chriſts birth: But as the Evangeliſts have laid them aſunder, ſo are they to be kept aſunder, and to be diſpoſed in the Harmony according as they lie: for pregnant reaſons may be given why the two have laid them at times ſo far diſtant. Why Matthew at our Saviours birth, the reaſons were given their, in there proper place; and why Luke at his baptiſm, may be the better ſeen by looking on the promiſe, *Gen.*3.15. The ſeed of the woman ſhall break the head of the Serpent. Matthew wrote his Goſpel chiefly for the Jews; and therefore it was neceſſary for him to ſhew and approve Jeſus for the Meſſias by his Pedigree, which was the manifeſt and the chiefeſt thing that Nation looked after, for the judging of the true Chriſt; this he doth therefore, at the Story of his birth, and beginneth it from Abraham, who was the ultima Analyſis, or the furtheſt that they cared to look after, as concerning his diſcent. But Luke a companion of the Doctor of the Gentiles in all his travailes writeth his Goſpel for the Gentiles, as well as for the Jews: and therefore he ſheweth Chriſts deſcent at the Story of that time, at which he was firſt born toward the Gentiles, that is, at his revelation at his baptiſm, from whence he firſt began to preach the Goſpel. The firſt words of the promiſe, the ſeed of the Woman, the Evangeliſt ſweetly expoundeth in this genealogy, ſhewing through ſeventy five deſcents, that he was the ſeed of the woman promiſed to Adam in the garden, and therefore he draweth his line from Adam, in whoſe loins the Gentiles were, for whom he writeth as well as the Jews, when the promiſe was made. The latter words, ſhall break the head of the Serpent, begin to take place from the baptiſm of Chriſt and forward: and firſt in his victory againſt Satans temptations, which is the very next ſtory that the Evangeliſt handleth, and then in his preaching of the Goſpel, the power of which muſt deſtroy the Kingdom of Satan, from that time forward.

Harmony and Explanation.

Mat. 3. ver. 13. Then Jeſus cometh, &c.

THE Tabernacle in the wilderneſs was ſix months current in working and preparing for, before it was finiſhed and ſet up. For on the tenth day of the month Tiſri, which anſwereth to part of our September, Moſes cometh down from his third Faſt of forty days, and bringeth with him the glad tydings of Gods reconciliation to his people, and in ſign thereof the renewed Tables, and the welcome command to make the Tabernacle. From that time forward the working and offerings for the making of the Sanctuary began, and ſix months after it was finiſhed and erected, namely, in the month of Abib, Exod. 40. So long a time was the Baptiſt conceived and born before the conception and birth of our Saviour, Luke 1. 26. and ſo long a time did he preach and baptize and prepare for the great building of the Gospel before our Saviour himself came, and by his own baptism and preaching reared it up. For as our Saviour was baptized and entred into his ministerial function, when he began to be thirty years of age, and that according to a legal ordinance, as shall be shewed ere long; so likewise did the Baptist begin to preach when he began to be thirty, which was six months current before. And this may be the better supposed if it be but considered how great multitudes were baptized of John before the baptism of Christ, and how far he travailed up and down to preach. Of the latter, Luke witnesseth thus, And he came into all the Region round about Jordan, Preaching the baptism of repentance, Luke 3. 3. And Matthew of the former thus, There went out unto him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the Region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him. A space of ground not to be travelled over [with resting in many places by the way] and a number of people not to be baptized in a short space of time.

Now the reasons, why Christ that needed no cleansing, being purity it self, would be baptized, are given divers.

As first, that by this Symbole he might enter himself into the society and fraternity of the Christians, as by Circumcision he did of the Jews: like a King, [it is Jansenius his comparison] that to unite and indear himself to any City of his Subjects, condescendeth to be made a freeman of it, as are the ordinary Citizens.

Secondly, that he might bear witness to the preaching and baptism of John, and might receive testimony from him again.

Thirdly, that by his own baptism he might sanctifie the waters of baptism to his Church.

Fourthly, that he might give example himself, of the performance of that, which he injoyned to others, and by his own coming to be baptized, teach others not to refuse that Sacrament.

Fifthly, that he might receive testimony from heaven that he was the son of God.

Sixtly, that he might occasion the revealing of the Trinity.

Seventhly, that he might shew the descending of the Holy Ghost on the waters of Baptism.

But eightly, the main reason of all, and that which is equal to these all, is that which is given by Christ himself, namely, that he might fulfill all righteousness; of which anon.

Ver. 14. But John forbad him.

So Peter forbad Christ to wash his feet, not in any surly frowardness, but in an holy humility, having an eye upon his own unworthiness. This refusal of John, being of the same nature, seemeth to have had respect to three things according to the several persons there present, Christ, the people, and himself.

First, in regard of Christ, because he needeth no baptism, in that he needed neither repentance nor remission of sins.

Secondly, in regard of the people, lest they might mistake, and seeing Christ baptized as well as they, might judge him sinful as well as themselves.

Thirdly, in regard of the Baptist himself, who had told the people so oft, and so constantly of him that came after him, that he was greater then he: and that his baptism was more excellent then his, and how would this cross that testimony of his, in the eyes and hearts of the people, when they should see him as an inferiour, come to be baptized of John? But,

Fourthly, and chiefly this his reluctancy proceeded from his true and right comparing of Christ and himself together, the Majesty and purity of him, with the baseness and sinfulness of himself, and therefore he saith, I have need to baptized of thee, &c. Not refusing the service, nor crossing the will of Christ, but confessing the unworthyness of himself, and ponderating the inequality of the persons.

But it may not unfitly nor unseasonably be questioned here, how the Baptist knew that this was Christ, seeing that he saith himself, I knew him not, but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, on whomsoever thou shalt see the Spirit descending and abiding on him, the same is he that baptizeth with the Holy Ghost, Joh. 1. 33. Now the descending of the Holy Ghost was after he was baptized, and these words, I have need to be baptized of thee, were spoken before. To this doubt and scruple many answers are given, but not so many resolutions.

First, some take the words I knew him not, &c. to be spoken by John, to make his testimony to be without suspition: For John and Jesus being a kin by birth, [for their Mothers were Cousins, Luke 1.36.] it might be surmised that John gave so high and large a testimony of him for kindred and affections sake, therefore he protesteth that he knew him not in any such a way, but only by divine revelation. Thus Chrysostome and Theophylact.

phylact. In which anſwer if there be any ſatisfaction at all, which is but little, yet is it not to our whole quære, but only to the leaſt part of it.

Secondly, ſome thus, that John before his baptiſm knew that he was the Chriſt, but not that it was he that ſhould baptize with the holy Ghoſt and with fire, till he ſaw the Spirit deſcend upon him; and thus Theophylact again, and upon this he fixeth, as on the moſt genuine and proper reſolution, which is very hard to apprehend or collect out of the words of John, in his whole Sermon: for this maketh him to diſtinguiſh betwixt Chriſt, and him that ſhould baptize with the Holy Ghoſt, and to make them two diſtinct perſons in his opinion, whereas both his own words, and no doubt the expectation of the people did take him for one and the ſame to be Chriſt.

Thirdly, their opinion is yet far more ſtrange, that think that the Baptiſt took not Chriſt for Chriſt, when he gain-ſayeth his being baptized by him, but for ſome extraordinary holy man, and continued in this opinion till the deſcending of the holy Ghoſt confimed him in the Truth, that he was the Meſſias: For it is not imaginable that John having the peculiar Commiſſion from God to baptize all that ſhould come unto him, ſhould himſelf deſire to be baptized by another man.. And again, his words, I have need to be baptized by thee, ſhew that he underſtood that it was he that Baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, as will appear by and by.

Fourthly little leſs improper and equally ſtrained is the Expoſition of Auguſtine, that John knew indeed that he was the Chriſt, and that it was he that ſhould baptize with the Holy Ghoſt, but till he ſaw the deſcending of the Holy Ghoſt, he knew not that it was only he that ſhould baptize with the Holy Ghoſt, or that he reſerved the propriety of the power of baptizing to himſelf alone, and did not communicate it to his Miniſters. And this propriety the Schools make to conſiſt in theſe four particulars: 1. That he reſerved to himſelf the power of inſtituting baptiſm, though he communicated the power of baptizing to others. 2. That he can confer the grace or effect of Baptiſm, without the adminiſtration of the Sacrament, which the Miniſters cannot. 3. That he giveth efficacy to baptiſm by his death. 4. That Baptiſm is adminiſtred and given in his name. Which gloſs as the Father ſtrained out of the Text to retort upon the Donatiſts, that maintained that this Sacrament adminiſtred by a wicked miniſter availed nothing, ſo is it but ſtrained, and that ſtrangely too, for how can it poſſibly be collected, that John ſhould collect any ſuch thing from the deſcending of the Holy Ghoſt?

Fifthly, More plauſible is their reſolution that hold that John knew Chriſt indeed in ſome meaſure before his baptiſm, but not ſo fully as after, when the Holy Ghoſt deſcended. But,

Sixthly, a plenary and ſufficient ſatisfaction to the queſtion may be had by theſe three obſervations.

Firſt, that John though he knew the myſtery of the incarnation of the Meſſias, and his excellent and divine graces, and that he was neer at hand, yet had he never ſeen his face till now, nor knew he him by ſight till he came to be baptized.

Secondly, That then he knew him by a preſent revelation, as Samuel knew Saul, 1 Sam. 9. 15, 17. For if in his Mothers womb he leaped at the approach of Chriſt in the womb of his Mother, much more may it be conceived, that by the revelation of the Spirit he knew him and acknowledged him now.

Thirdly, That the ſign which was given him when he began to baptize, On whomſoever thou ſhalt ſee the Holy Ghoſt deſcend, &c. was not given him for his firſt knowledg of Chriſt, but for the confirmation of that knowledge that he had of him before: and for his aſſurance and confidence to point him out unto the people. And ſuch a one was the ſign given to Moſes, Exod. 3. 12: not for firſt his inſtruction that he was ſent by God, but for his confirmation in that wherein he was before inſtructed, nor that neither ſo much for himſelf as for the people.

§ I have need to be baptized of thee.

He meaneth not, with the baptiſm of water, which he himſelf adminiſtred to others, but with the baptiſm of the Holy Ghoſt. For, firſt, Chriſt himſelf baptized none with water at all, Joh. 4. 2. but referred the adminiſtration of this Sacrament to others.

Secondly, the Baptiſm wherewith he baptized, was of the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 11. and it cannot be doubted that when John ſpeaketh of being baptized by Chriſt, he meaneth the proper baptiſm wherewith Chriſt baptized.

Thirdly, it is not conſonant to reaſon, that John ſhould complain of the want of that which he ſo plentifully afforded unto others: but though he himſelf were not baptized, in water, yet his ſpecial deputation from God, to be the firſt and chief baptized, made that he needed it not.

Fourthly, be it granted that John ſpeaketh of baptizing with water, as ſome Commentators would have it, yet are not his words to be underſtood ſimply of any abſolute neceſſity that he had of baptiſm, but comparatively betwixt him and Chriſt, that it was fitter that he ſhould be baptized by Chriſt, than Chriſt by him. For ſo the Phraſe I have need, is uſed, not always to import neceſſity, but ſometimes conveniency. And ſo doth the Rabbinical word צריך indifferently ſignifie, and divers words that ſignifie neceſſity in other tongues.

Ver. 15. Suffer it to be ſo now.

The Emphaſis of this clauſe is held to be in the word now: As ſhewing that howſoever Chriſt was the Son of God, and ſhould in time reveal himſelf mightily ſo to be, as Rom. 1. 4. yet now the time required that that his glory ſhould be veiled under his humiliation, and his divinity concealed till its proper ſeaſon to be revealed. This expoſition is as currant as any among Expoſitors, how ſubſtantial let the Reader judge. For,

Firſt, the baptizing of Chriſt by John, was not ſo great a means to veil his Divinity as it was to reveal it: for then he had the teſtimony from Heaven, that he was the Son of God.

Secondly, there needeth no other reaſon to be looked after why Chriſt ſaith, ſuffer it to be ſo now, than what he himſelf giveth, in the very next words following: For thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteouſneſs. The word now, as it lyeth in the Engliſh, might be taken for the ſenſe of נא or עתה ſo ordinary in the Hebrew, words of intreating or perſwaſion, and might very well alſo ſuit with that ſenſe here, if the LXX traſlated them by the Greek word here uſed Ἄφες, but they do not: therefore may we the more juſtly ſuppoſe the word to be emphatical in ſome reſpect, and the reſpect ſeemeth to be this. Whereas John had told the people before of Chriſts baptizing with the Holy Ghoſt, and had told Chriſt in the verſe preceeding, that he had need of that baptiſm, to that it is that our Saviour giveth this anſwer, Suffer it to be ſo now, as meaning thus: That it was true indeed that he was he that ſhould come after him, and he that ſhould baptize with the Holy Ghoſt, of which baptiſm John had more need from him than he of Johns; yet the time of that his baptizing was not yet come, for firſt muſt he fulfil all the righteouſneſs required of himſelf, before he was to pour out or beſtow that baptiſm of the Spirit upon others: And therefore muſt John ſuffer him to be baptized now with the baptiſm of water, for that baptiſm of his with the Spirit was not yet to be exhibited.

The greateſt doubt and difficulty in this clauſe is, what our Saviour meaneth here by righteouſneſs, which being reſolved upon, the other ſmaller words, and leſs ſcrupulous in it, will offer themſelves the more readily to be underſtood.

Firſt, Hilary, though ſomewhat obſcurely, ſeemeth to conſtrue it of the righteouſneſs of the Law, for by him, ſaith he, all righteousneſs was to be fulfilled, by whom alone the Law could be fulfilled.

Secondly, but Hierom ſpeaks it out more plainly and fully and underſtandeth it of all righteouſneſs of the Law and of nature, either of which indeed were not an unproper gloſs to be applyed unto Chriſt alone; but ſince the word us, joyneth the Baptiſt alſo in the ſame fulfilling with him, it is not ſafe to underſtand it of all the righteouſneſs of the Law, becauſe it is not pious to hold John the accompliſher of it, as well as he.

Thirdly, Theophylact, and ſome others with him go the ſame way with theſe Fathers named, but they go ſomewhat further, for they add, that Chriſt had fufilled all the Law already, but only in this one particular of being baptized, and when he had performed that, he had compleated all righteouſneſs. But the word us ſpoyleth this expoſition, as well as it did that before: and it will be ſome work to prove that baptiſm, taken in its proper ſenſe, or as John adminiſtred it, was any part of the Law that Chriſt was to fulfill.

Fourthly, others deſcant upon the words litterally, and take righteouſneſs for juſtice diſtributive, and baptiſm for a ſpecial part or act of it: For he that is baptized, ſaith Ludolphus, pleaſeth God, pittieth his own ſoul, and edifieth his neighbour by his example, and ſo fulfilleth all juſtice, in that he doth to God, himſelf, and his neighbour what he ought. An Encomion of baptiſm, and a new invention of fulfilling the Law, which I ſuppoſe was never dreamed of before.

Fifthly,

Fifthly, to omit other expoſitions much like this, which ſome have given, not near to the text, nor truth: Janſenius and ſome with him, but not ſo largely as he, do paraphraſe it thus. According as I by an humble ſubmiſſion deſire to be baptized by thee, ſo it becometh us, becauſe we are ſent of God the Father, to call men away from all unrighteouſneſs, and to teach the people, to fulfill and perform in work whatſoever is right, omitting nothing, be it never ſo little, which we know to be agreable to the will of God. Therefore he importeth not, that by the receiving of baptiſm all righteouſneſs is fulfilled; but that by them that are Maſters and Teachers of all righteouſneſs, nothing is to be paſſed over which is right, although they be not bound thereto by neceſſity, and though the thing it ſelf ſeem never ſo ſmall. Which expoſition though it be good and ſound in regard of the truth contained in it, yet ſeemeth it not to be punctuall and ſeaſonable for this place. For whereas the very marrow and pith of it lyeth in this, that Chriſt and John being teachers of the people, muſt practice themſelves what they teach others to practice; and therefore muſt Chriſt be baptized for example to others: let the Reader judge whether the inference be good by this, that John himſelf was never baptized: and conſequently whether the application of ſuch a ſenſe to theſe words, be fitting and agreeable.

Sixthly, Chemnitius yet goeth nearer the text and the mark, and bringeth the word Righteouſneſs to reflect upon men: explaining it thus: that ſince Chriſt came to conferr and apply righteouſneſs to men, and accordingly to ſanctifie every thing and means that might conduce to convey the ſame unto them, therefore would he thus conſecrate baptiſm by his own being baptized, and give vigor to it to be a ſeale and ſtrengthener of righteouſneſs and grace begun: and in this ſenſe he ſaith that it becometh him to fulfill all righteouſneſs, or every thing whereby the righteouſneſs of man may be forwarded and promoted, and becauſe John was the Miniſter of Baptiſm; therefore in the word us, he joyneth him alſo in the fulfilling with him. To this purpopoſe he and far more largely coming as cloſe to the mark, as any we meet with, and yet [if I judge aright] not ſo cloſe as to hit it in theſe two reſpects.

Firſt, in that he ſeemeth to hold, and ſo alſo do many others with him, that Chriſts performance of the ſeveral parts of righteouſneſs, perſonally in himſelf, was requiſite to the ſanctifying of ſuch things to others, whereas his very inſtitution of any ſuch a thing giveth validity ſufficient to it without his own actual example: As in this very thing in hand concerning baptiſm, if Chriſt inſtituted that in the hand of John for a Sacrament to continue in his Church for ever, I cannot ſee what vertue, vigor, or efficacy his being baptized by John added to it, more than his inſtitution of it before had done, ſave only for the more ſenſible reverence of it in the eyes of the People.

Secondly, and chiefly, becauſe it is harſh and bold, to conceive that Chriſt in the performance of any thing that might tend to mans juſtification, ſhould take a man to be a ſharer and co-worker in ſuch equality as the words thus and us do make the Baptiſt.

By righteouſneſs therefore in this place may rather be underſtood the equity and juſtice of the Law, and Chriſts fufilling of the ſame. Not the moral, for that opinion we refuſed before, but the other parts of it, which were either Prophetical, or figurative and tipical. Not denying his fulfilling the moral Law neither, for that he performed to a tittle, being without the leaſt taint of ſin, either in thought, word, or deed, but rather illuſtrating and ſetting forth his performance of that the more, in that he was alſo ſo punctual to fulfill the other parts of the Law which were leſs material. And to this expoſition of righteouſneſs, namely, for the equity of the Ceremonial or typical Law, not only the matter or thing in hand it ſelf, but even every word alſo that is in this clauſe do give their conſent and confirmation.

For, firſt, if we look upon the Ceremonial Law it ſelf, and the reaſon why it was given, we ſhall find that it was neither ſo exact and exquiſite in regard of it's injunctions, nor ſo ſtrict or neceſſary to be performed in it ſelf according to the Letter, as it was in regard of its ſignificancy of good things to come; the force and vertue of it conſiſting not ſo much in its very verbal precepts, and corporal obſervances, as in its repreſentative and typical predictions and fore-ſhewing of ſome better things to come thereafter. And howſoever thoſe Rites and Ceremonies had their obedience in the practices of the Jews, yet their equity and very intent indeed they had not but in the fulfilling of Chriſt.

Secondly, if we look alſo upon baptiſm which was the matter now in agitation, and the baptiſm of Chriſt alſo, how they were both fully and plainly prefigured under legal Rites and Ceremonious obſervances, was ſhewed before.

Thirdly, it was requiſite that Chriſt ſhould fulfill the Ceremonial Law, as well as the moral, in ſome kind of neceſſity, though not as much for the one as for the other. For as the Moral was a Law of Faith, ſo alſo was the Ceremonial a Law of hope, as the judicial was alſo of Charity. In the Moral Law it was ſhewed to man what he was to do, but withall he ſaw by the ſame Law his own diſability and impoſſibility of performing what was to be done. The ſight of this driveth man to lay hold of Chriſt that performed that Law

Law for him; and thus the Law, though it be according to the letter a meſſage of death, yet in the ſpirit it is a doctrine of Faith unto life. The Jew being thus entred by the moral Law into the School of Faith, then came in the Ceremonial, and was as an uſher of hope: for by thoſe rites and legal obſervations, the memory of Chriſts coming was continually kept freſh, and the eye and expectation, and the fruit and application of his performance of the moral Law for the good of men dayly read in thoſe typical and ſhadowed lectures: As therefore as it was abſolutely neceſſary that Chriſt ſhould fulfil the moral Law in regard of all men, ſo was it reſpectively neceſſary that he ſhould anſwer and accompliſh the Ceremonial, in regard of the Jew. For if the outward obſervance thereof were for nothing ſo much, as to lead his eye and expectation to Chriſt, and the very life and equity thereof were included in him, how neceſſary was it that for the ſake of that people, and for confirmation both to them and all others, that he was Chriſt that was to come, that he ſhould fulfill that part of the Law, as well as the other? At the leaſt how fitting? And ſo he ſaith in the place in hand, Thus it becometh us to fulfill all the equity of the Ceremonial Law. Now the Ceremony to which our Saviour looketh in theſe words, was the waſhing of the Prieſts in water, when they entred into their function, *Exod.*29.4. *Lev.*8.6. the equity of which appeared in him, when he was baptized at his entrance into his Miniſtry. And this indeed was the manifeſt and propereſt end and reaſon of Chriſt being baptized; namely, that by baptiſm he might be inſtalled into his Miniſterial office.

Not all that were to be baptized by John, for the contrary is evident, *Joh.*3.23. where John is baptizing a twelve month after this; but all thoſe that were reckoned by the Evangeliſt before, from Jeruſalem and Judea, of Phrariſees, Sadduces, Publicans, and Soldiers, which he now reckoneth up in this ſumma totalis of All the people, to ſhew what multitudes were baptized into Chriſt, before Chriſt came to be revealed.

But it may be queſtioned among all this number, whether there were any women baptized by John, or no. And the doubt may ſeem to be equally ballanced, for as the ſilence of the Text doth ſeem to deny it, ſo reaſon on the other ſide doth ſtrongly affirm it.

For, firſt, the baptiſm of John was ſuch a thing as women might receive as well as men, in regard of poſſibility, which they could not poſſibly do by Circumciſion.

Secondly, it was ſuch a thing as they might receive as well as men, in regard of capability, for women were as ready to repent, as they.

But, thirdly, that which putteth it out of all doubt, that women were baptized by him, is the teſtimony of our Saviour, Matthew 21. 32. John came unto you in the way of righteouſneſs, and ye believed him not, but the Publicans and the Harlots believed him.

About the time, place, and manner of our Saviours baptiſm, the Evangeliſts have been ſo ſilent in this place, that what is to be reſolved upon them is to be fetched from and by compariſon of other texts, and collection from other places, which about the firſt will give very full ſatisfaction, about the ſecond indifferent, and about the laſt, little or none at all. The time then of his being baptized, that is, the time of the year, is only, or at leaſt, chiefly to be found, by computing the time or length of his Preaching, and therewith conſidering the time or ſeaſon of his death. Now the length of his Preaching, or from his baptiſm to his death, was juſtly and exactly three years and an half, as was touched before: And from that very thing or in relation to it, that number is ſo very renowned in Scripture, being ſometimes expreſſed in the plain terms, of three years and ſix months, Luke 4. 25. ſometimes by half a week, Dan. 9. 27. ſometimes, by a time, times, and half a time, Dan. 12. 7. Rev. 12. 14. and ſometimes, by a thouſand two hundred and threeſcore days, Rev. 11. 3. & 12. 6. and ſometimes, by forty and two months, Rev. 11. 2. To evidence which account of his Miniſtery, firſt may be produced the Text of Daniel alledged inſtanly before, *chap.*9. 27. where it is ſaid, that Meſſias ſhould confirm the Covenant for many for one week: or in that one week rather, namely, which he reckoneth the laſt of the ſeventy: for firſt, he nameth ſeven weeks by themſelves, and then ſixty two by themſelves, ver. 25. which every one knoweth made ſixty nine; and then coming to ſpeak of the laſt week which was to make up the ſeventy, he ſaith, that in that one week, Chriſt ſhall confirm the Covenant for many: and then deſcribing and declaring the exact time of that his work, he ſaith, And in half that week ſhall he cauſe ſacrifice and oblation to ceaſe.

Now that by theſe weeks are meant weeks of years, or as many years as a week hath days, hardly any man ever denyed, or ſuſpected the contrary; and that then by half a week week, is meant half ſeven years, or three years and an half, there can be as little doubt or ſcruple: This then the Angel Gabriel telleth was the exact time in which the Meſſias did confirm the Covenant, and was bringing to an end Sacrificing and other Ceremonies, or the time of his Preaching the Goſpel, which was from his Baptiſm to his death.

Secondly, if not for proof, yet for better illuſtration of the ſame, may be produced that place of the Goſpel alledged ſo lately alſo before, namely, Luke. 4.25. where Elias is a glorious type and reſemblance of Chriſt, in a ſweet and harmonious diſcord and difference: For as he ſhut up heaven by his prayer, and there was no rain for three years and ſix months, ſo Chriſt opened heaven at his baptiſm, as it is ſaid in the verſe in hand, and continued to diſtil the divine dew and rain of his heavenly doctrine, as Deut. 32. 2. for the ſame ſpace of time.

And thirdly, as there is ſuch evidence for the time averred; from a Prophecy, and ſuch illuſtration from a type, ſo is there a full confirmation of it in the Evangelicall ſtory. For John hath plainly parcelled out the three years by four Paſſeovers: as the firſt, chap. 2. 13. the ſecond, chap. 5. 1. the third, chap. 6. 4. and the fourth, chap. 13. 1. &c. and the odd half year [which ſince he dyed at the laſt Paſſeover muſt be laid before the firſt] was taken up in theſe particulars, of his journey into the wilderneſs, and forty days faſt, Mat. 4. 1. his return to Jordan, and abode thereabout, John 1. 29. 35. 44. his voyage into Galilee, and miracle at Cana, John 2. 1. his removal after ſome ſpace to Capernaum, and ſome abode in it, chap. 2. 12. and thence his journy to Hieruſalem, to the firſt Paſſeover of the four, John 2. 13. So that it being thus apparent that the length or ſpace of his Preaching was three years and an half, from his baptizing to his ſuffering, it being withall conſidered that he dyed at Eaſter, it will readily follow that he was baptized half a year before that time of the year, namely, in the month Tiſri, or September; And it being again conſidered that he was baptized, when he was juſt entring upon a new year of his age, as ſhall be obſerved anon, it will thence likewiſe follow that he was born at the ſame time of the year alſo. And who is he that can imagine that the renownedneſs and fame of this month in the Old Teſtament, both befor the Law and under it, was for any other thing ſo much as in reference and prefiguration to, and of theſe glorious things?

Now though there be theſe aſſured evidences of the time of the year when our Saviour was baptized, yet is there but conjecture of the time of the month: And that may moſt conſtantly be conceived to have been at the Feaſt of Tabernacles, which began on the fifteenth day of the month, Levit. 23. 33. upon theſe probable and not altogether un ſatisfactory reaſons.

Firſt, becauſe he dyed on the fifteenth day of the month Abid or Niſan, the day after the Paſſeover, and to make the odd half year, ſpoken of before, an exact and juſt half year indeed, his baptiſm muſt be fixed on the fifteenth of Tiſri.

Secondly, the two other of the three ſolemn Feſtivals, the Paſover and Pentecoſt, Chriſt accompliſhed, or fulfilled what they ſignified, by his death at the one, and by the giving of the holy Ghoſt at the other, and there is no reaſon to think the third, or the Feaſt of Tabernacles any leſs figurative, or typical then the other, and as little to think that he ſhould leave the equity of that unſatisfied more than the other, and if he anſwered not that in his birth and baptiſm, he anſwered it in nothing at all.

Thirdly, the very nature of the Feaſt of Tabernacles, and the occaſion and reaſon of its inſtitution have a forcible reference to ſuch a thing. For though Moſes hath given but this reaſon for one Cuſtom and practice which they uſed in the Feaſt, Ye ſhall dwell in booths ſeven days, that your generations may know that I made the children of Iſrael to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the Land of Ægypt, Levit. 23. 42, 43. Yet had the original and inſtitution of the Feaſt a great deal more in it. For the main occaſion was this: Moſes having after long faſting and prayer made the peace of Iſrael with God about the Golden Calf, and having obtained the Tables renewed, which himſelf had broken, and regained the commiſſion to build the Tabernacle, which had been ſuſpended becauſe of that ſin; on the tenth day of the month Tiſri, [which according to our account was about the two or three and twentieth day of our September] he coming down from the Mount, bringeth theſe glad tydings of peace and reconciliation to the people, for which that day was obſerved for the day of reconciliation or expiation ever after: and the people now hearing that they muſt make the Tabernacle in which God would dwell among them, and that they muſt not remove from the place where they were, viz. from Mount Sinai, till that be finiſhed, they then addreſſed themſelves to pitch their tents, and make them booths for their winter abode there, and inſtantly fall upon the work of the Sanctuary, and this was it that was the occaſion of that ſolemn Feaſt in ſucceeding times. Now let the ſubſtance be laid unto the ſhadow, and the Antitype and figure brought together, and the application is not only ſweet, but alſo ſomewhat evincing. For ſince the occaſion of that Feaſt was God coming to dwell among the people in his Tabernacle and that now firſt begun or exhibited, and this juſt half a year after their firſt delivery from Egypt; obſerve how fully theſe are anſwered in Chriſts ſhewing himſelf to the world at his baptiſm, in whom God dwelleth among men; and this the firſt revelation of him to the world, and this juſt half a year ſince John began to publiſh the delivery of men from the bondage of Sin and Satan, by the preaching of the Goſpel.

Fourthly, the Conſecration of the Temple of Solomon was at this very time, namely, in the ſeventh month, or the month Ethanim, which is all one with Tiſri, and thence the ſervice of it began, 2 Kings 8. 2. Now ſince Chriſt himſelf averreth that the Temple was a figure of his body, John 2. we may follow the Allegory with the more boldneſs, and apply the dedication of that, and the time of the dedication, to his conſecration by baptiſm, to his miniſterial ſervice, and parallel them both in the very ſame time.

Secondly, the certain and determinate place where our Saviour was baptized, cannot abſolutely be fixed and reſolved upon by any warrant of Scripture: though many have been ſo confident as to point it out, and to ſhew a croſs ſet in the very place of the River, and miraculous curing of Lepers in the water. The Evangeliſts have given no more ſettlement of it then this, that it was in Judea, and that it was in Jordan: Two circumſtances the more remarkable.

Firſt, becauſe that after that baptiſm of our Saviour, we cannot certainly find John baptizing either in the ſame Country, or in the ſame River ever again. For whereas there is mention of his being about ſix weeks after this in Bethabara, John 1. 28. that was both on the other ſide Jordan, and it was a water different from Jordan, Jud. 7. 24. and of his baptizing in Enon, a whole twelvemonth after this, Joh. 3. 23. that was alſo out of the precincts of Judea, and diſtant ſomewhat from the banks of Jordan, and the waters there, the waters of the place it ſelf and not of that River. And this ſheweth the reaſon more plainly, why Luke in the clauſe next before this that we have in hand, ſummeth up the baptiſm of all the people, before he ſpeak of our Saviours: becauſe that there were now collected out of Judea, all the harveſt of believers that might be gathered in by the preaching of John, and when Chriſt was baptized, John was to remove to another place.

Secondly, from this, that Chriſt was baptized of John in Jordan, and in Judea, it will almoſt inevitably follow, that he was baptized in the place, where the river was dryed up, and the Iſraelites firſt entred into the Land of Canaan. For if it be conſidered, 1. That the Army marched through the channel in two main bodies the one on the one ſide of the Ark, and the other, on the other. 2. That either of theſe main bodies were two miles diſtant from the Ark on either ſide, and conſequently four miles from each other.

Thirdly, That theſe two great ſquadrons conſiſting either of them of ſo very many thouſands marched in an extraordinary breadth, becauſe they were to paſs over in a reaſonable time, it will follow hereupon, even paſt all denyal, that this their paſſage took up all the length of Jordan, that it had in Judea, or very near it, ſo that the place we ſeek for, is within this compaſs: and by this we may obſerve the ſubſtance ſweetly anſwering to the figure, and way made through the waters of Jordan, to the heavenly Cannan by baptiſm, in the very ſame place where there was to the earthly, by its drying up.

Thirdly, The manner of his baptizing differed not from the common manner that John uſed with others, ſave in one particular. For he went into the water, had water ſprinkled on him, and prayed as well as they, but whether John uſed the ſame form of words in baptizing of him that he did to the other, or ſome other, or none at all, is ſome queſtion or ſcruple. The leaſt is of the firſt, for it may be readily reſolved that he baptized not him in the ſame words, that he did the others, becauſe he then ſhould have baptized him in his own name, which who can imagine? and into him, or in his name which was to come, which had been to have pointed out another Chriſt. Betwixt the two latter the ſcales are ballancing, and they weigh ſo even, that it is not much material which way your allowance doth turn them, for the Quære it ſelf is of far more curioſity then neceſſity: For why might not John baptize him in varyed words? As, I baptize thee with water to the Preaching of the Goſpel; or why might he not baptize him without any words at all, ſince he received baptiſm, not ſo much for a Sacrament, as for ſatisfaction of the typical Law? Let the Readers judgment weigh down the ſcale.

Mat. 3. Ver. 16. He went up ſtreight out of the water.

The invention of Auricular confeſſion hath invented a ſtrange Expoſition of this clauſe. For the reſt of the people, ſay ſome, ſtanding in the waters, I know not how deep, after they were baptized, confeſſed their ſins unto John before they came out, being detainded there by him, until they had ſo done, but Chriſt, becauſe he had no ſin, ſin, needed no ſuch confeſſion, and therefore he came ſuddenly out of the water after he was baptized. A gloſs that includeth impoſſibilities. For neither was it poſſible that ſo great multitudes ſhould be baptized in ſo ſhort a time, if every one made a ſingular confeſſion of their ſins to John; nor was it poſſible that John ſhould indure ſo long in the water as this work would require, and never come out, for if they ſtood up to the neck in the river, I cannot think but that he alſo ſtood ſome deepneſs in the water. But this ſpeedy coming of our Saviour out of the water after he was baptized, is expreſſed by the Evangeliſt, only to ſhew how near and cloſe the opening of the heavens was to his baptizing, namely, that it was almoſt in the very ſame inſtant, as Mark explaineth it; And ſtraightway coming up out of the water he ſaw the heavens opened, &c.

This it ſeemeth was the manner of thoſe that were baptized, as ſoon as they were baptized, to come up out of the water and pray, and this explaineth that before, about confeſſing their ſins, that it was not to John, but to God, as ſoon as they came out of the water. Now ſince Chriſt had no ſins to confeſs of his own, the tenour of his prayer tended to another purpoſe. If we think it was for the glory of God, for the converſion of many by his Miniſtry which he was now beginning, for the preſervation of the Elect, and the ſanctifying of the Church, and the like, we think not much amiſs, ſince we find his prayers in other places to be made and tendered to the ſame effect. But it ſeemeth rather that his prayer at this time was for what followed upon his prayer, the ſending down of the Holy Ghoſt, and the glorifying of him by a teſtimony from Heaven. For, firſt, the Text hath laid his prayer, and the opening of the Heavens ſo cloſely, and ſo conſonantly withal together, Jeſus praying the Heavens were opened, as that it ſeemeth to point out what was the tenour of his prayer by the conſequent upon it.

Secondly, In another place there is the like return upon the like prayer, Joh. 12.28. Father glorifie thy name; there came therefore a voice from Heaven, &c.

Thirdly, It being conſidered that our Saviour was to enter now upon the great work of Redemption, and the preaching of the Goſpel, it will be the leſs ſtrange to conceive that he prayed for the viſible ſealing of him to that work and office by the Holy Ghoſt, and for a teſtimony of him that he was the Meſſias.

Matth. 3. ver. 16. Lo the Heavens were opened.

There is no material difference in the thing, though Luke hath put the Heaven in the ſingular number, and Matthew, the Heavens, in the plural, for one followeth the Idiome of the Hebrews, and the other of the Greeks. For the Hebrews cannot call the Heaven by its proper name, but in the plural or dual number שמים, Heavens: but the Greeks can in the ſingular. And ſo little doth the Syriack make of this difference of number in the two Evangeliſts, that he tranſlateth it juſt croſs, Matthews plural in the ſingular, and Lukes ſingular in the plural.

About the opening of the Heavens or the manner of the ſame, as it is of far more conſequence to inquire, ſo it is of difficulty to reſolve, becauſe of diverſity of opinions, and probabilities ſeveral ways.

Firſt, Some deny the opening of the Heavens at all, but underſtand that Chriſt ſaw them opened, and the Holy Ghoſt deſcending intellectually only, or by ſpiritual viſion, as Ezekiel ſaw the Heavens opened, Ezek. 1. 2. But this expoſition is very improper, for John ſaw the ſame alſo, and the deſcending of the Holy Ghoſt was in a bodily ſhape and not imaginary, and the voice was Articulate and Audible, and not viſionary.

Secondly, Others deny alſo the opening of the Heavens, but with another manner of evaſion, and expoſition. For there was, ſay they, no ſeiſure or parting of the Heavens aſunder, becauſe they are incorruptible, but a great, glorious, and miraculous light ſhone round about Chriſt, as if the very higheſt Heaven had been open, and the light thereof imparted clearly to the Earth: But this opinion alſo is confuted by the word that Mark uſeth, differing from the other two. For though the phraſe, The Heavens were opened, would admit of ſuch a Metaphorical or comparative expoſition, yet when Mark ſaith expreſly, that the Heavens were cloven, or parted aſunder, for ſo is his word in the Original, [the Syriack expreſſeth it by the very ſame word that the Chaldee Paraphraſt uſeth in Lev. 11. for parting of the hoof] it inforceth us to look for a literal interpretation in it, and not a tropical.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, Aquinas evadeth the real opening of them with this gloſs ſtranger than both the other, and by another intellectual viſion than that that was ſpoken of before: For it may alſo be underſtood, ſaith he, of an intellectual viſion, namely, that Chriſt [baptiſm being now ſanctified] ſaw Heaven open unto men. But this expoſition the word of Saint Mark, newly mentioned, confuteth much more than it did the other.

Fourthly, Mark therefore tying us to a litteral ſenſe, and to underſtand a real and proper cleaving of the Heavens indeed, the doubt now only reſteth, what Heaven it was, whether the Aereal or Æthereal, for ſo are the heavens properly diſtinguiſhed, according to the ſignificancy of the Hebrew word Shamaiim, which importeth a duality, or a thing doubled. Anſwer, It was only the Aereal, for that is called Heaven, and the Firmament, Gen. 1. 8, 20. as may be confirmed by theſe reaſons:

Firſt, Becauſe there needed no further ſeiſure in the Heavens, than the renting of the clouds in the middle Region, either for the deſcending of the Holy Ghoſt, or of the voyce, or for the ſatisfying of the eyes and ears of the ſpectators, and hearers, that they came from Heaven.

Secondly, Becauſe the Scripture in other places ſpeaking of things which came but out of the clouds, yet uſeth the very ſame term to expreſs the clouds by, that is uſed here, namely Heaven: As, The Lord that gave the Law out of a cloud, *Exod.*19.16. is ſaid to have ſpoken from Heaven, *Exod.*20.22. So the like voice to this here, that came out of a cloud, Luke 9.35. yet is ſaid to come from Heaven, 2 *Pet.*1.18. And Elias that by his prayer ſhut up the clouds, that there was no rain, is ſaid to have ſhut up Heaven, Luke 4. 25. The opening of the Heavens then was the renting of the clouds, as we ſee them rent, when the lightning comes forth, and out of that rent came the Holy Ghoſt in viſible ſhape, and the heavenly voice. And thus did the Goſpel or Preaching of Chriſt begin with the opening of the Heavens which the Law had ſhut, and thus were the heavens ſhaken, when the deſire of all Nations came firſt to be revealed openly, as Hag. 2. 6, 7. The very ſame difference of expreſſion that is betwixt Saint Mark and the other Evangeliſts, is betwixt the Hebrew, and the LXX in *Iſa.*64.1. for the Original readeth קרעת, thou wouldeſt or haſt rent, but the Greek, Ἐὰν ἀνοίξῃς, If thou open the Heavens, &c.

Matth. 3. ver. 16. The Heavens were opened to him.

To him, to whom? To Chriſt, or to John? Why, to the eyes and beholding of them both, for in that John ſaith, he ſaw the Holy Ghoſt coming from or out of Heaven like a Dove, *Joh.*1.32. he maketh it paſt denial, that he ſaw the opening of the Heavens; but the word to him in this place muſt be reſerved and referred in a ſingular peculiarity to Chriſt, and the opening of the Heavens to him, importeth a more emphatical propriety than their opening to his ſight. For, the Syntax and Grammatical conſtruction that Mark uſeth, maketh it impoſſible to fix the words to him, any other ways than upon Chriſt: And ſtraightway, ſaith he, coming up out of the water, he ſaw the Heavens rent, or cloven, &c. This then being the propriety of the words, that the Heaven was opened to our Saviour, and yet ſince it was alſo opened to the ſight of John, it doth neceſſarily inforce us to underſtand it otherwiſe than only to his view or beholding, namely, to his prayer: as the phraſe is uſed by him himſelf, Knock, and it ſhall be opened unto you. For had the Evangeliſt intended only to ſhew how he ſaw this apertion in the Heaven, he might have joyned John with him in the ſame ſight; but he would give us to underſtand by the phraſe that he hath uſed ſingularly of Chriſt alone, that the Heavens were not only opened to his ſight, but for his ſake. And from hence may be confirmed what was ſpoken before concerning his prayer, namely, that it aimed at ſuch a thing, as Elias prayed, and the Heaven was opened and fire came down upon his Sacrifie. Thus Heaven that was ſhut to the firſt Adam, becauſe of his ſin, is opened to the ſecond, becauſe of his righteouſneſs, and to all that by faith are partakers of it.

This is to be underſtood as that before, of Chriſt only, and after the ſame ſenſe, or to the ſame purport. But ſince it is certain that John ſaw this as well as he, as is alſo obſerved before, and yet none of the three Evangeliſts that record the Story, have given any undoubted o plain evidence of any ſuch a thing; it may likewiſe be queſtioned whether the reſt of the people which were there preſent did ſee this ſight as well as Chriſt and John. Theophylact is peremptory in the affirmative; For all of them, ſaith he, ſaw the Spirit coming upon Jeſus, leſt they ſhould think that the voice, This is my beloved Son, had been ſpoken concerning John; but upon the ſight of the Holy Ghoſt they might believe that that voice was concerning Chriſt. And of this opinion are very many others with him, and no marveil; for who could conceive any other thing? And yet upon the weighing of theſe Reaſons following, we may very well be perſwaded to believe the contrary, or that this Heavenly ſpectacle, and divine voice was conſpicuous and audible to none, but only to Chriſt and John.

Firſt, Becauſe John after this doth himſelf tell thoſe that were preſent at this time, that there had ſtood one among them, but they knew him not, that that was he that was to come after him. For the Greek word ἑστηκεν, John 1. 26. muſt of neceſſity be rendred in its preterfect ſignification; for John ſpake not thoſe words till after Chriſt was baptized and gone, for he was at that time in his temptation in the wilderneſs.

Secondly, Becauſe Chriſt himſelf alſo telleth the Jews, that they had never heard his Fathers voice, John 5. 37. and among thoſe to whom he ſpeaketh, were divers that had imbraced the doctrine and baptiſm of John, ver. 35. and it may very well be ſuppoſed, ſome that were preſent at his baptiſm at this very time. The maintainers of the contrary Opinion have ſpied this ſcruple and difficulty ariſing upon that Text, and have gone about to ſalve it, but with a very improper and dangerous plaiſter: holding that though they heard this voice, yet they heard not the voice of the Father, but of an Angel which ſpake in his Name, which ſhall be examined by and by.

Thirdly, It is improbable that when Chriſt had ſuch another teſtimony from Heaven at his transfiguration, that he ſhould conceal it from nine of his Diſciples, and charge the three ſilence that heard it, and ſaw what was done, Matth. 17. 9. and yet ſhould let this voice and viſion from Heaven be ſo publick, as to be heard and ſeen of all the people.

Fourthly, John himſelf telleth that this Revelation was given chiefly, if not only, for his ſake, John 1. 33.

Fifthly, The preaching of the Baptiſt was the means that God had ordained to bring the people to the knowledge of Chriſt, John 1. 7, 31. and this Revelation, to bring the Baptiſt to it.

Sixthly, Had all the people been partakers of this ſight and voice, John had needed no more to have pointed Chriſt out, but the people would have known him as well as he, nor could the opinion have ever prevailed, as it did, that valued John above him.

Seventhly, When John ſhewed him forth-with the finger, with Behold the Lamb of God, preſently Diſciples followed him, which they would have done much more, had they thus ſeen and heard him, pointed out from Heaven; but it is plain they did not the one, and thereupon it may be boldly concluded that they did not the other.

Eighthly, To which may be added, that God ordained preaching, partly of John, partly of Chriſt himſelf, and partly of his Diſciples, the way to bring the world acquainted that he was Meſſias. And theſe divine Revelations were for the inſtruction and confirmation of them his preachers, who were choſen witneſſes for ſuch a purpoſe, that they thereupon might the more confidently confirm the people. And herepon it is obſervable, that while the Baptiſt was at liberty, our Saviour contented himſelf with his teſtimony and preaching, but when he was ſhut up, then inſtantly choſe he others.

Now if any doubt of the poſſibility of this, and queſtion how could John ſee and hear theſe things, and the other company that was preſent not do ſo as well as he: The anſwer may be readily given by example of Eliſhaes ſervant, 2 King. 6. 17. and the two men that went to Emmaus, Luke 24. For the mountain was full of Horſes, and Chariots of fire, and Eliſha perceived them, but his ſervant did not till his eyes were opened in a more ſpecial manner. And Chriſt it is like was in the ſame ſhape and appearance upon the way when they knew him not that he was in the houſe when they did, but till then their eyes were holden. Yet if any one will ſuppoſe that the people ſaw the flaſhing of the opened Heaven, and heard the noiſe of the voice that came from thence, and took the one for lightning, and the other for thunder, as John 12. 29. we will not oppoſe it, for now was the ſeaſon of the year fit for lightning and thunder: but that either they ſaw the Holy Ghoſt, or diſtinguiſhed the words of the voice, any more then Pauls companions did, Act. 9. 7. compared with Act. 22. 9. the reaſons alledged do inforce to deny, till better information.

Matth. 3. verſ. 16. And he ſaw the Spirit of God.

The Syntax and conſtruction of Mark, doth tye and fix theſe words [He ſaw] only to our Saviour, as it did thoſe before; and both for the reaſon mentioned; namely, to ſhew the return and anſwer of his prayer. But theſe words of Matthew are not ſo ſtrict, but that they may equally be applied unto John.

For, firſt, there may be obſerved a diſtinction in the verſe, and a kind of difference of ſpeech betwixt what goeth before about the opening of the Heavens, and this ſight of the Holy Ghoſt. For of that he ſpeaketh thus. And Jeſus being baptized went ſtraightway out of the water, and lo the Heavens were opened unto him. And then cometh he on with a diſtinct clauſe concerning the other, And he ſaw the Spirit of God deſcending, leaving it at the leaſt in an indifferency, whether to apply it to Chriſt or John.

But, ſecondly, it ſeemeth rather to be underſtood of John, becauſe he ſaith himſelf that this deſcending of the Holy Ghoſt was given to him for a ſign, and that he ſaw it; and if it be not to be ſo taken here, none of the three Evangeliſts have mentioned it in the ſtory at all.

And, thirdly, the rather may it be taken of Johns ſeeing it, becauſe he ſaith, He ſaw him deſcending and coming, Ἐπ' αὐτον upon him. Had it been ſaid, ἐφ' ἑαυτὸν upon himſelf, it muſt needs have been underſtood of Chriſt upon whom the Spirit came, that he ſaw the Spirit coming upon himſelf: but ſince it is upon him, without any reciprocation, it may be the better applied to John, that he ſaw it. It is true indeed that Αὐτὸς ſometimes ſignifieth reciprocally himſelf, as our Lexicons do give examples, and as it is of force to be taken in Saint Mark in this place, like as Ἑαυτῶ ſometimes doth not ſignifie reciprocally, as in the LXX, in Judg. 7.24. But why ſhould we take the word out of its commoneſt and propereſt ſenſe, unleſs there were neceſſity to do it, which in Matthew there is not, though in Mark there be.

Fourthly, and laſtly, Theſe words he ſaw, being underſtood of John, it maketh that the three Evangeliſts being laid together, the relation ariſeth out of them the more full, and the ſtory more plain. For Luke telling that the Heavens were opened, and the Holy Ghoſt deſcended, Mark addeth, that Jeſus ſaw this, and Matthew, that John.

Matth. 3. ver. 16. The Spirit of God.

רוח אלהים; Gen. 2. 2. The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters in the beginning of the old world, and ſo doth it here, of the new: It is needleſs to inſtance, how oft in Scripture the Holy Ghoſt is called the Spirit of God, as *Gen.*41. 38. Exod. 31. 3. Numb. 24. 2. and very many other places; but it is moſt neceſſary to obſerve that whereſoever he is ſo called, it is in the Hebrew the Spirit of Elohim, in the plural number, and ſheweth his proceeding from more perſons then one. Contrary to the opinion of the Greek Church that holdeth, that the Holy Ghoſt proceedeth not from the Father and the Son, but from the Father only.

Luke 3. ver. 22. The Holy Ghoſt.

As he is called the Spirit, not ſo much in regard of his own nature, as in regard of his manner of proceeding, ſo alſo is he called Holy, not ſo much in reſpect of his perſon, for the Father and Son are Spirits, and are holy as well as he, but in regard of his Work and Office, which is to ſanctifie the Church of God. And in this reſpect he is called by the Hebrews, not רוח קרושה The Holy Spirit onely, but רוח הקדש Ruahh hakkodeſh, the Spirit of Holineſs, for this phraſe the Holy Ghoſt, is taken from the common ſpeech of the Jews: And ſo is he called by Paul, Πνεῦμα ἁγιωσυνης, Rom. 1. 4. and ſo doth the Syrian call him Rubba dekudſha, in this place.

5. The Holy Ghoſt deſcended.

This deſcending of the Holy Ghoſt was, firſt, partly for the ſake of John, for this token had been given him, when he firſt began to preach and baptize, whereby to know Chriſt when he ſhould come, Joh. 1. 33.

Secondly,

Secondly, Partly for Chriſt, that he might thus receive his Conſecration and Inſtitution for the Office that he was now to enter upon, the Preaching of the Goſpel. This was as his anointing to inſtal him into his Function, as Aaron and his Sons were with material oyl to enter them into theirs, as Iſa. 61. 1. The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, therefore hath he anointed me, he hath ſent me to Preach the Goſpel. And,

Thirdly, Partly for the buſineſs and matter that was now to go in hand, namely, Chriſt beginning to preach accordingly. For,

Firſt, The Goſpel is the Spiritual Kingdom and Scepter of Chriſt, in and by which he was to rule all Nations for ever, and therefore it was agreeable that the Spiritualneſs of that ſhould be ſealed and confirmed by the Holy Spirits ſhewing himſelf even in the beginning of it. The carnal rites of Moſes were now to vaniſh, and his Corporal and Ceremonial obſervances to be changed into a Spiritual Worſhip: and neither at Jeruſalem, nor at mount Gerizim, nor elſewhere, muſt there be any more adoration, with fleſhly and earthly Ceremoniouſneſs, but he that will worſhip God muſt worſhip him in Spirit, as Joh. 4. 21. Therefore it is no wonder, if the Holy Ghoſt doth now reveal himſelf, now when his ſway of ſpirituality, and dominion, by ſanctification is to begin.

Secondly, The Holy Ghoſt was departed from Iſrael, after the death of the laſt Prophets, as was obſerved before, and now he is to be reſtored again, therefore himſelf cometh viſibly and apparently at this his reſtoring, and lighteth upon him to whom it belonged to give and diſtribute the gifts of the Spirit, to whom he pleaſed. For as John had told that Chriſt ſhould baptize with the Holy Ghoſt, ſo is that power and priviledge now ſealed unto him in the ſight of John, when the Holy Ghoſt cometh down upon him and there abideth.

God is ſaid to deſcend, not that he moveth from place to place, or cometh where he was not before, for he is incircumſcriptible, and every where and filleth all places: but in that he ſheweth this his preſence upon Earth, in ſuch or ſuch a place, by ſome external ſign, and viſible appearance: And ſo he is ſaid to come down to ſee whether the wickedneſs of Sodome were according to the cry that was come up unto him, becauſe he revealed himſelf to Abraham, Lot, and the Sodomites in the viſible and conſpicuous repreſentation of men: So is he ſaid to have come down upon Mount Sinai, becauſe of the outward revealing and expreſſion of his preſence there. And ſo the Chaldee Paraphraſt underſtandeth the Trinities deſcending, Gen. 11. 5. for a conſpicuous appearance of it, for he tranſlateth, The Lord revealed himſelf to take vengeance, &c. And ſo is the Holy Ghoſt ſaid to deſcend in this ſtory, and in that in Act. 2. not but that he was preſent in the ſame places before, by his power and Godhead, but that he revealed and expreſſed his preſence by ſo ſenſible an evidence, and by, and in ſo revealed a work.

Firſt, It was convenient that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould reveal himſelf at this time: Firſt, for the ſake of John, who was to have a ſenſible ſign, whereby to inform him which was the Meſſias, as Joh. 1.

Secondly, In regard of the Holy Ghoſt himſelf, whoſe work in the Church was now in a more ſpecial and frequent manner to be ſhewed under the Goſpel, namely, that he might be expreſſed and revealed to be a perſonal ſubſtance, and not an operation of the Godhead only, or qualitative vertue. For qualities, operations and acts cannot aſſume bodily ſhapes, nor ought but what is in it ſelf ſubſtantial.

Thirdly, That a full and clear, yea, even a ſenſible demonſtration of the Trinity might be made at this beginning of the Goſpel. For it may be obſerved in Scripture, that the Holy Ghoſt hath a ſpecial regard to expreſs this myſtery upon ſingular occaſions, that we might learn to acknowledge the three Perſons in one Godhead, as he alſo doth the two natures of Chriſt, that we might acknowledge them in one perſon. So the very firſt thing that is taught in all the Bible, is this very myſtery: For when Moſes beginneth the Story of the Creation, he beginneth alſo to teach that the three Perſons in the Trinity were co-workers in it. God Created, there is the Father. God ſaid, there is the Word, or the Son. And the Spirit of God moved, there is the Holy Ghoſt. And the very ſame myſtery is intimated by the Prophet, treating upon the very ſame Subject, Iſa. 42. 5. Thus ſaith God the Lord, he that created the Heavens, and and they that ſtretched them out: That we might learn, that Of him, through him, and to him, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, are all things, Rom. 11. 36. So Moſes alſo when he is to teach concerning the creation of man, he firſt teacheth that it was the Trinity that created him, Gen. 1. 26. And God ſaid, Let us make man after our Image. He ſaith, Let us, to ſhew the Trinity of perſons: and he ſaith, In our Image, not in our Images, to ſhew the unity of eſſence; That every man, even from the reading of the ſtory of his Creation might learn to remember his Creators in the days of his youth; as Solomon with the word בוראיך Boraiecha, anſwereth the ſame myſtery, Eccleſ. 12. 1. So likewiſe at the confuſion of Tongues the Trinity is expreſſed, Gen. 11. 7. Let us go down and confound their Language: as it is alſo at the gift of Tongues, I will ſend the Comforter from the Father, Joh. 15. 26. Act. 1. 4. Such a one alſo was the bleſſing pronounced by the Prieſt upon the people, when he diſmiſſed them from the daily ſervice of the Temple, in the name of the Trinity, Numb. 6. 24, 25, 26. the name Jehovah or the Lord, three times repeated, for denotation of the three Perſons, as Paul explaineth it, 2 Cor. 13. 13. When Moſes alſo beginneth to rehearſe the Law to Iſrael, and to explain it, the firſt thing he teacheth them is the Trinity in Unity, and Unity in Trinity, Deut. 6. 4. Hear O Iſrael, the Lord, our God, the Lord, is one. Three words anſwering the three Perſons, and the middle word our God, deciphering fitly the ſecond, who aſſumed our nature, as is well obſerved by Galatinus. To theſe may be added, the entrance of Moſes his revelation with the Name of the Lord, three times rehearſed, Exod. 34. 6. The Viſion of Eſay with three Holies, Iſa. 6. 3. The beginning of Pſal. 50. and of Pſal. 136. and many of the like nature, which the heedful reader will obſerve himſelf. How fitting then was it that at the beginning of the new world, and the new Law, and the baptiſm of Chriſt, the three Perſons ſhould be revealed, eſpecially ſince he ordained baptiſm to be adminiſtred in their Names; Baptize them in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt. Matth. 28. 19.

§. Like a Dove.

It is thought by Auſtin, and after him by Aquinas, that this was a very living Dove, not of the flock indeed of common Doves, but immediately created by God for this purpoſe, but created as true a living Dove, as any of them: and the reaſon they give for this their opinion is this. Becauſe it is not to be ſaid that Chriſt alone had a true body, and that the Holy Ghoſt appeared deceiveably to the eyes of men, but that both thoſe are to be ſaid to be true bodies: for as it was not fit that the Son of God ſhould deceive men, ſo was it not fit that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould deceive them neither. But it was no difficulty to the Creator of all things, to make a true body of a Dove, without the help of other Doves, as it was not hard for him to frame a true body in the womb of the Virgin without the ſeed of man. So they, too punctual where there is no neceſſity, nor indeed any great probability. For,

Firſt, What needed there a real living Dove, when an apparent only would ſerve the turn? For the deſcending of the Dove was, that there might be a viſible demonſtration of the Holy Ghoſt his reſting upon Chriſt, and anointing him for his Miniſtration: ſo that the viſibility of the Spirit was as much as was required, and there needed no reality of a living body.

Secondly, The Text ſaith expreſly in all the Evangeliſts, that it was ὡσὶ περιστερὰν, like or as it were a Dove; which plainly ſheweth the ſimilitude to ſuch a thing; and not the being of the very thing it ſelf.

Thirdly, In apparitions of the like nature, when the furtheſt end of the body appearing, was but for viſibility, the bodies that were ſeen, were not of the very exiſtency and nature of thoſe that they repreſented, but of another. As the Angels that appeared in humane ſhapes, had not very living humane bodies, but only bodies aſſumed and framed to ſuch a repreſentation: And ſo the fire in the buſh, on Sinai, and with the cloven Tongues, was not very real fire, but only a viſible reſemblance of it; and the like muſt be held of this Dove, or elſe it will be ſuch an apparition as never was before, nor ſince.

Fourthly, The parallel betwixt the appearing of our Saviour, in humane fleſh, and the appearing of the Holy Ghoſt, in a living Dove, is not only very improper, but alſo ſomewhat dangerous. For if they appeared alike, then may the Holy Ghoſt be ſaid to be a very Dove [for Chriſt was a very man,] and that were improper, and in its kind, to be incarnate, [for Chriſt was incarnate,] and that is dangerous. And,

Fifthly,

Fifthly, As for fallacy or deceiving there could be none, no more than there had been in all other apparitions ſince the world began, ſince in ſuch things, the verity and reality of the body that appeared, was not looked after, but only the conſpicuity, and the ſpirit that lay hid under that body.

Now reaſons why the Holy Ghoſt appeared in the ſhape of a Dove, rather than of any other creature, are conceived, ſome to have concerned Chriſt, ſome to have concerned the Holy Ghoſt himſelf, and ſome to have concerned man. As,

Firſt, To ſhew Chriſts innocency, purity, ſimplicity, charity, and love, for all theſe qualities are obſervable in a Dove.

Secondly, To ſhew the like graces of the Holy Ghoſt; and Aquinas and Ludolphus do parallel the ſeven graces of the Spirit, Iſa. 11. 2, 3. to ſeven properties of a Dove; as if any be ſo curious as to ſee them, he may, in Lud. in loc. and Aquin. par. 3. *queſt.*39. Art. 6.

Thirdly, To ſhew what innocency and harmleſneſs ſhould be in thoſe that are baptized.

Fourthly, To anſwer the figure in Noahs flood; for as a Dove did at that time bring tidings of the abating of the waters, ſo doth it now of the abating of the wrath of God, upon the preaching of the Goſpel. Theſe are the common and moſt current reaſons that are given by Expoſitors, to which may be added:

Fifthly, That ſince Chriſt was to have viſible teſtimony from Heaven, it was fitteſt it ſhould be by the likneſs of a fowl of Heaven; For it was not fitting that fire ſhould have come thence upon him, for he was to baptize, and not to be baptized with fire: and for a cloud to come from thence upon him, was reſerved till another time, namely, at his transfiguration: and what then can be imagined to deſcend upon him, but a bird? And what bird ſo fit as a Dove which was the only fowl that was clean, and allowed for ſacrifice? *Lev.*1.14.

Matth. 3. ver. 16. And lighting upon him.

In the ſtrictneſs of the Greek, it is coming upon him, which is to the very ſame ſignification: eſpecially the addition of the Baptiſt himſelf being laid unto it, viz. that it abode upon him, Joh. 1. 32. Some conceive and that not improperly, that the Dove ſate upon his head: which if it did, it was like the inſcription in the golden plate, that was on the fore-head of the High Prieſt, and declared him to be Kodeſh Laihovah, The Holy one of the Lord, Exod. 28. 36. How long the Dove ſat upon him, is not to be queſtioned, becauſe not to be anſwered, it is not unlike, that it did ſo, all the while he was in the ſight of John at this time, eſpecially ſeeing that the Text ſaith, that ſtraightway this Spirit drove him into the wilderneſs.

Ver. 17. And lo, a voice from Heaven.

The teſtimony of two witneſſes, is a confirmation paſt denial, and greater witneſſes than theſe two could not be produced, the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe a teſtimony could not be given to a greater than to Chriſt. Nor could theſe two witneſſes have properly gone ſingle, one without the other: the deſcending of the Dove to point out to whom the voice was intended, and the deſcending of the voice explaining what was meant by the deſcending of the Dove.

§. A voice.

Both the Talmudick, and the latter Rabbins make frequent mention of Bath Kol, Filia vocis, or an Echoing voice, which ſerved under the ſecond Temple, for their utmoſt refuge of revelation: For when Urim and Thummim, the Oracle was ceaſed, and Prophecy was decayed and gone, they had [as they ſay] certain ſtrange, and extraordinary voices upon extraordinary occaſion, which were their warnings, and advertiſements in ſome ſpecial matters. Infinite inſtances of this might be adduced, if they might be believed; one allegation in the Talmud ſhall ſerve for all, concerning Jonathan the Chaldee Paraphraſt. When Jonathan the Son of Uzziel, ſay they, had compoſed the Targum of the Prophets, there came Bath Kol, or a divine voice, and ſaid, who hath revealed my ſecrets to the Sons of men? And when he went about to explain the Chetubbim, or the books of Holy Writ, there came a Bath Kol, or a divine voice again, and ſaid, It is enough. What is the reaſon? Becauſe in them is revealed the end of the Meſſias. In Megillah.

Now

Now here it may be doubly queſtioned: Firſt, Why they called it Bath Kol, The Daughter of a voice, and not a voice it ſelf? And ſecondly, Whether this voice that we have in hand, were ſuch a voice as that or no? To the firſt, If the ſtrictneſs of the Hebrew word Bath be to be ſtood upon, which it always is not, it may be anſwered, that it is called the Daughter of a voice, in relation to the Oracle of Urim and Thummim: for whereas that was a voice given from off the Mercy Seat, within the vail, and this upon the decay of that Oracle, came as it were in its place, it might not unfitly, nor unproperly be called a Daughter, or ſucceſſor of that voice. But to the ſecond, and which is more material and pertinent to the ſubject in hand, it may be anſwered, that this voice was not of the nature of their Bath Kol, upon theſe two reaſons.

Firſt, Becauſe this voice came deſcendingly from Heaven, but their Bath Kol cannot be proved to have deſcended; or at leaſt to have conſtantly come from Heaven. For the Migremus hinc, which gave warning of the deſtruction of the City, came not from above, but from the Temple, as Iſa. 66. 6. And this can hardly be denied to have been one of their Bath Kol voices: And if we will believe the Jewiſh Authors in every place where they give examples of this their Bath Kol, it will appear rather to be ſuch a voice as came to Samuel, which was ſo far from a perpendicular deſcending voice, that he could not diſtinguiſh whether it were the call of Eli.

Secondly, Becauſe, whereas the Jews repute their Bath Kol, both the laſt and the loweſt kind of divine Revelation among them, this kind of a voice from Heaven, was both moſt ancient, as Gen. 21. 17. & 22. 11. and alſo moſt honourable, Exod. 20. 22. Deut. 4. 33, 36.

The opinion that theſe words were ſpoken by an Angel, deputed by God for that purpoſe, which ſome do hold, is not only improper, but alſo dangerous: improper, becauſe it croſſeth a plain and facile Text; and dangerous, becauſe it bringeth a created Angel into a kind of equality, and compartnerſhip with the ſacred Trinity. For,

Firſt, Why ſhould there be any ſurmiſe of ſuch an Angel, uttering theſe words, unleſs it might be thought that God could not utter them himſelf?

Secondly, As Paul ſaith, To which of the Angels ſaid God at any time, Thou art my Son? So may it be ſaid much more, which of the Angels ever durſt or might call Chriſt his Son?

Thirdly, Peter ſpeaking of the Parallel, or like voice to this, which was uttered at our Saviours transfiguration, he ſaith, it came from the excellent glory, which doubtleſs ſheweth more than from an Angel, 2 Pet. 1. 17.

Matth. 3. Ver. 17. This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed.

In Mark and Luke it is, Thou art my beloved Son, &c. whereas Matthew expreſſeth it, This is: which though it ſhew ſome difference, yet is it not material: nor doth the difference breed ſo much difficulty, as it doth ſatisfaction to the Reader, and fulneſs to the ſtory: For the two Evangeliſts firſt named, relate it as ſpoken to Chriſt, for the ſealing of his perſon, and in anſwer to his prayer; but the other expreſſeth it only as ſpoken of Chriſt, and not to him, but pointing him out to the notice of John.

Now this whole ſpeech is taken from 2 Sam. 7. 14. Pſal. 89. 26, 27. and Iſa. 42. 1. and when it is uttered again from Heaven, at our Saviours transfiguration, this addition Hear him, is put to it, Matth. 17. 5. Luke 9. 35. ſealing him then for the great Prophet of his Church, whom all muſt hear, Deut. 18. 15. as it ſealeth him now for the high Prieſt of his Church, being now to enter into his Miniſtry.

Luke 3. ver. 23. And Jeſus himſelf began to be about thirty years of age.

Agreeable to this age of Chriſt, when he began his Miniſtery, was the age of the Prieſts, when they entred their Office, Numb. 4. 3. the age of Joſeph, when he came to promotion, Gen. 41. 46. and the age of David, when he began to Reign, 2 Sam. 5. 4. Now how this is to be underſtood is ſome controverſie: Some there are that take it thus, that Jeſus was now fully and perfectly thirty: Others thus, that he now began or drew on to be full thirty, and ſo preaching three years and ſix months, that he died at thirty three years old and an half.

But

But this interpretation, the phraſe uſed by the Evangeliſt, and the common and ordinary manner of the Scriptures reckoning of the ages of men, and of other things doth ſufficiently contradict: For,

Firſt, In that Luke ſaith, ἀρχόμενος ὢν ὡσεὶ, he was baptized, beginning to be as it were thirty: the word beginning to be, denieth his being thirty compleat; and the word as it were, denieth his drawing upon thirty compleat likewiſe: For if he were full thirty, then he began not to be ſo: and if he were drawing on to full thirty, then was he not drawing to as it were thirty, but to thirty indeed. By the phraſe therefore, is to be underſtood, that he was now nine and twenty years of age compleat, and juſt now entring upon his thirtieth: and this the Evangeliſt hinteth ſo clearly, that it needeth not much confirmation: For that he was in his thirty current and not compleated is plain by the word ὡσεὶ, as it were thirty, that is, thirty years old, after a certain reckoning: and that he was but now entring upon this his thirty current, is as plain by the word ἀρχόμενος, he began but to be ſo.

To which alſo, ſecondly, may be added the common and current uſe of Scripture in reckoning of ages, either of men or beaſts, to account the year which they are now paſſing, for a year of their age, be it never ſo newly or lately begun: Examples of this it is needleſs to give, the thing is ſo uſual and obvious to every eye.

So that now to take up the times of the world, and of our Saviour, according to this computation, they reſult to this.

Firſt, That ſince he was born in the year of the World 3928. ſtilo veteri, but newly begun, he was baptized in the year of the World 3957. but newly begun, by the ſame ſtile likewiſe.

Secondly, That ſince he was born in Tiſri, he was alſo baptized in Tiſri.

Thirdly, That ſince his laſt reſidence in Bethlehem, to his firſt appearing publickly in the work of the Goſpel, were full ſeven and twenty years: all which time he had lived either in Nazareth, the Town of his Mother, or in Capernaum, the Town of his ſuppoſed Father, and ſo his birth in Bethlehem, is utterly grown out of the thoughts and obſervation of the people.

Fourthly, That he hath now three years and a half to labour in the Goſpel from his Baptiſm to his crucifying, Rabbi Janna ſaid, Three years and a half the glory of God ſtood upon Mount Olivet, and preached, ſaying, Seek the Lord while he may be found, call upon him while he is near. Midr. Tillin.

Fifthly, That he lived but two and thirty years and an half: and that his thirtieth year was the firſt year of his preaching, and not the laſt year of his private life. Compare the date of Davids reign in Hieruſalem, 1 Chron. 29. 27. The time that David reigned over Iſrael, was forty years: Seven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty three years reigned he in Heiruſalem. Exactly, Seven years and ſix months reigned he in Hebron, 2 Sam. 5. 5. and then thirty and two years and ſix moneths reigned he in Hieruſalem.

Sixthly, That if Hieruſalem were deſtroyed exactly forty years after our Saviours death, as it is apparent it was, both in Chriſtian and Heathen Stories, then that deſtruction of it befel juſt in the four thouſand year of the world, and ſo as the Temple of Solomon had been finiſhed Anno mundi exactly 3000, ſo in Anno mundi exactly 4000. both the City and the Temple that then was, was deſtroyed never to be repaired or rebuilt again. And from that time moſt properly began the Kingdom of Heaven, and the new Hieruſalem, when that earthly Kingdom, and that old City were utterly ruined.

ſ. Being [as was ſuppoſed] the ſon of Joſeph, which was the ſon of Heli.

At every deſcent in this Genealogy, the word Jeſus is to be underſtood, otherwiſe the firſt and laſt deſcents are improper, and different in ſtile from all the reſt. For Joſeph was not the Son of Heli, but only his Son in Law, and Adam was no more the Son of God, than any of the other holy men, that were named before. The ſupply therefore is thus to be made to make all proper, Jeſus, being as was ſuppoſed the Son of Joſeph, Jeſus the Son of Heli, Jeſus the Son of Matthat, &c. Jeſus the Son of Seth, Jeſus the Son of Adam, Jeſus the Son of God.

And the like ſtile of Genealogy, Moſes uſeth, Gen. 36. 2. Aholibamah the daughter of Anah, the daughter of Zibeon, where Anah is not called the daughter of Zibeon, for he was a man and not a woman: no more was Joſeph the Son of Heli, for he was only his ſon in Law, but the word Aholibamah is to be ſupplied thus, Aholibamah the daughter of Anah, Aholibamah the daughter of Zibeon.

Heli or Eli [for the name ſeemeth to be the ſame with his in 1 Sam. 1. 3. &c.] was not the natural Father of Joſeph, for Matthew told us plainly before, that it was Jacob

Jacob that begot Joseph, but Heli was the Father of Mary, and Father-in-Law of Joseph only: Now because it is not used in Scripture to mention any women in a pedigree, or to run the line from the Mother, but from the Father to the Son, therefore Mary is not here named at all, but intimated or included, when the line begins from her Father, and calleth her husband his son, which he was only because of her.

So that Luke intending to shew Christ the seed of the woman, must of necessity reckon by Mary the daughter of Heli, as Matthew intending to shew him the heir of the Crown of David, doth reckon by Joseph the heir male apparent. In comparing and laying together these men that Matthew and Luke have named, in the ancestry of Joseph and Mary, betwixt the returning out of the captivity, and the times of our Saviour, we find that every one man in the stock of Joseph, did almost outlive two of those in the line of Mary, the one line affording twenty descents betwixt those two periods, and the other but one above half so many: which easily and readily confuteth that opinion that some have strangely held, that the persons in the two Genealogies have been the same men, only under different names: and it helpeth somewhat to settle the times between those two periods, against the different miscountings of several men, some stretching them longer than the eleven persons named in Matthew could stretch to live, and some cutting them shorter than the twenty named in Luke could be comprehended in.

Ver. 27. Which was the Son of Salathiel, which was the Son of Neri.

Neri was the natural father of Salathiel: he seemeth to have been so named from the candle which the Lord reserved for David and his house, 2 Chron. 21. 7.

Ver. 31. Which was the Son of Nathan.

2 Sam. 5. 14. 1 Chron. 3. 5. It is like that he was named after Nathan the Prophet, who brought David word of the promise, 2 Sam. 7. and of the cotinuance of his house, which failed in the race of Solomon: but continued in the race of this Nathan, till the King came that was to sit on Davids Throne for ever. Here again the number of persons in the Genealogy of Mary, betwixt David and the captivity, exceed the number in the Genealogy of Joseph, in Matth. 1.

Vers. 36. Which was the Son of Cainan, which was the Son of Arphaxad.

In Moses it is said Arphaxad begat Shelah, and Shelah begat Eber, Gen. 10.24. & 11. 12. And so is it briefly reckoned, 1 Chron. 1. 24. Shem, Arphaxad, Shelah, without any mention of Cainan at all, nor is there any memorial of such a son of Arphaxad throughout all the Old Testament, nor indeed was there ever any such a man in the world at all. Here therefore is an extraordinary scruple, and a question of no small difficulty meeteth us; where Luke found the name of this man, which is not to be found elsewhere in all the Bible? And whether it be not an error in the Text, and were not a miscarriage in the Evangelist, to reckon a man for an ancestor of Christ, that the world never saw, or that never was upon the Earth.

Answer, It is easie indeed to resolve, where Luke found this name of Cainan, and from whence he took it, namely from the Greek Bible, or the Septuagint, which hath inserted it in those places of Moses that are alledged; but when this is resolved, the greater scruple is yet behind, of his warrantableness so to do, and of the purity of the Text, where it is so done.

The Seventy Translatours indeed read Gen. 10. 24. thus, Arphaxad begat Cainan, and Cainan begat Sala, and Sala begat Eber. And in Chap. 11. they say, Arphaxad lived one hundred and thirty five years, and begat Cainan, And Cainan lived one hundred and thirty years and begat Sala, and Cainan lived after he begat Sala three hundred and thirty years. And from hence hath Saint Luke without controversie taken in Cainan into this Genealogy, a man that never was in the world, but the warrantableness of this insertion will require divers considerations to find it out. As let the Reader be pleased seriously to ruminate upon these.

First, That the Seventy Translatours did that work unwillingly, and for fear: For the Scripture was the Treasure of the Jews, which made them more glorious than any Nation under Heaven. Therefore to communicate this their riches to the Heathen, whom they abominated and detested, was as much against their heart as what was most. So that had not the fear of the power of Ptolomy brought them to the work of of the Tranſlation, more than their own good will, there had been no ſuch thing done. Ptolomy Lagus, the Father of Ptolomy Philadelphus, for whom they tranſlated, had carried away an hundred thouſand Jews captive into Egypt, as ſaith Ariſteas, ſo that the fear and dread of that houſe lay upon them, that they durſt deny it nothing, which otherwiſe they would moſt vehemently have done ſuch a thing as this, to have communicated their Scriptures to the Heathen in a vulgar Tongue.

Secondly, The Tranſlation then being undertaken for fear, and with ſo ill a will [that as Ariſteas, who was preſent at the work, ſaith, the Tranſlatours were very unwilling to go for Egypt, though he interpret it, becauſe loath to go from Eliazar the High Prieſt] and that the Jews kept a mournful faſt every year, ſorrowing for that work of the Tranſlation. It cannot be expected that the Tranſlation will be done with any more fidelity, than barely what will keep the Tranſlatours out of danger.

Thirdly, Therefore they ſtrive as much as they can, to conceal the Truth and Treaſure of the Scripture from the Heathen, and as much as they dare to delude them. Their chief means for this, is to uſe an unpricked Bible, in which the words written without vowels, might be bended divers ways, and into divers ſenſes, and different from the meaning of the Original, and yet if the Tranſlation were queſtioned, they might prick or vowel the word, ſo as to agree to their Tranſlation. How they have dealt in this kind, there is none that ever laid the Hebrew Bible, and the Septuagint together, but hath obſerved.

Fourthly, Their differences from the Original, which were innumerable, were partly of ignorance, they themſelves not being able to read the Text alway true in a Copy unvowelled. But this ignorance was alſo voluntary in them, they not caring to miſtake, ſo that they might do it with their own ſecurity.

Their general care was, that ſince of neceſſity they muſt Tranſlate the Bible, as little of it might be imparted and revealed by the Tranſlation as was poſſible.

Their particular and ſpecial heed was alſo, that thoſe places of the Text, which Tranſlated Literally, or according to the true meaning, might prove dangerous any ways to the Nation of the Jews, or bring them into diſtaſte with the potent King for whom they Tranſlated, ſhould be ſo tempered and qualified that no hazzard might ariſe, nor any ſuch matter might be ſeen.

Fifthly, It was a common ſpeech among the Jews, and rang ordinarily in their Schools, and Pulpits, That the ſeventy Souls of Jacobs family, that went down into Egypt, were equivalent, or anſwerabe in worth to all the ſeventy Nations of the World.

This was a dangerous doctrine for the Jews, if it ſhould come to be known, (as it could not chooſe but be) eſpecially when their puiſſant enemies ſhould find the numbers agreeable, of ſeventy Souls, Gen. 46. and ſeventy Nations, Gen. 10. To prevent any ſuch danger, the Tranſlators thought it a ſure way, to ſpoil the juſt number in both places, and ſo they did reckon ſeventy five Souls, and ſeventy two Nations, both which accounts are followed by Saint Luke, Act. 7. and in this place.

Sixthly, The ſeveral perſons reckoned Gen. 10. Every one of which was the Father and original of a ſeveral Nation, be juſt ſeventy. The Tranſlatours to ſpoil the ſum, which might prove perilous, have added two more, and both of the ſame name, Cainan, the one the immediate ſon of Sem, the other his Grandchild, or the ſon of Arphaxad. For ver. 22. of that Chapter, they read thus. The ſons of Sem were Elam, and Aſſur, and Arphaxad, and Lud, and Aram, and Cainan; and verſ. 24. thus, Arphaxad begat Cainan, and Cainan begat Sala.

In which additions, theſe two things are very obſervable.

Firſt, The place where they have thruſt in theſe two men: Namely, ſo cloſe to Sem, as could not poſſibly be cloſer, unleſs they would have had him to have had two ſons of the ſame name, Cainan.

Secondly, The name it ſelf, that they have thus choſen twice over, namely Cainan, which ſignifieth mourning or lamenting. So Enoſh called his ſon, Gen. 5. 9. Becauſe of the lamentable corruption of Religion in thoſe times: And it is without doubt, the Tranſlatours in the iterated choice of this word, or heavy and doleful name, intended to ſhew ſome inward ſorrow: the cauſe of which may be beſt imagined, by laying the name, and the place of it together.

The

The bleſſing of Noah upon Japhet, God ſhall inlarge Japhet, and he ſhall dwell in the tents of Sem, Gen. 2. 27. The Jews themſelves of old, underſtood, to aim at the Greek Tongue, viz. that God ſhould uſe that as a means for the admiſſion of the Heathen to the ſecrets and myſteries of the Jews Religion. This was their vexation at all times, to hear, or to think of the Gentiles being called, as appears by Jonah, Chap. 4. 1. by the Nazarites, Luke 4. 28. and by them of Jeruſalem, Act. 22. 21, 22. For Moſes had plainly told them, that their calling in, ſhould be the others caſting off, Deut. 32. 21.

Therefore, it could not but be a moſt vehement ſorrow, and main vexation to theſe Tranſlators, that they, perforce, and ſo ſore againſt their wills, muſt be made the inſtruments, by tranſlating the Bible into Greek, to let Japhet, or the Heathen, into the tents of Sem.

This ſorrow, as their Nation expreſſed by a mournful Faſt, ſo did they themſelves among other things, by a lamenting and ſorrowing name, Cainan twice over, put in ſo cloſe to Sem, as if they called on him to mourn with them, becauſe his tents were now unlocking for the entrance of the Gentiles.

Seventhly, God uſing the Septuagint, as the Key for admiſſion of the Heathen, and as an Harbinger to the New Teſtament, left it not there, but therein uſed it alſo in allegations from the Old, yet oftentimes differing from the letter of the ſame, but never without ſpecial reaſon.

Eighthly, Saint Luke, as he followed the Doctor of the Gentiles, Saint Paul, ſo he wrote his Goſpel for the Gentiles: therefore whereas Matthew writing his for the Jews, deriveth the Genealogy, but from Abraham the firſt Father of the Jews, This Evangeliſt writing for the Gentiles, fetcheth the Line from Adam, the common Father of all, both Jews and Gentiles.

This is the aim and ſcope of this Genealogy, and the reaſon why it is ſet at Chriſts Baptiſm:

Firſt, To ſhew that there was no diſtinction of perſons in the promiſe given to Adam, for all Nations were then equally in his loins: for this, the holy line runs down to him.

Secondly, That therefore all Nations have equal intereſt in the Meſſias, and that in the Preaching of the Goſpel, which Chriſt began from his Baptiſm, there ſhould be no difference of people made, as there was before. This being the intent of the Pedegrees placing here, as the very placing of it doth inevitably evince, it is not only warrantable, but alſo admirably divine, that Luke taketh in Cainan from the Seventy.

For, firſt, writing for Heathens, he muſt follow the heathens Bible in his quotations.

Secondly, In Genealogies he was to be a Coppier, not a Corrector.

Thirdly, and chiefly, In following this inſertion of the Seventy, he imbraceth not their error, but divinely draweth us to look at their intent.

When Jude mentioneth Michaels ſtriving with Satan about the body of Moſes, he approveth not the ſtory as true, which he knew to be but a Talmudick Parable: but from the Jews own Authors, he uſeth this as an argument againſt them, and for their inſtruction.

So though Luke from the Seventy, the Bible of the Heathen, have alledged Cainan the ſon of Arphaxad, he alledgeth it not as the truth more than the Hebrew, but from the Septuagints own authority, or from the matter which they inſerted in diſtaſte of the calling of the Heathen, he maketh comfortable uſe and inſtruction to the Heathen concerning their calling.

Firſt, They put in two men, Gen. 10. that they might diſſemble their arrogating of ſingularity above all Nations, and to make Ptolomy believe, that there was no ſuch diſtinction of people held by them: [but they thought otherwiſe.]

Luke reſerves the one of theſe in his pedegree (for the other could not come in it,) to teach the Gentiles really, what they did in diſſimulation, that there was no ſuch diſtinction of Nations in the ſight of God, even the Seventy themſelves being witneſſes.

Secondly, They uſed a mournful name for the men whom they inſerted, in deteſtation of the coming in of the Gentiles; Luke reſerves this alſo for the comfort of the Gentiles, which were now to be called in: To teach them from the Jews own confeſſion, that the divulging of the Goſpel in vulgar languages, ſhould bring Japhet into the tents of Sem: which thing was now ready to begin, when Chriſt at his Baptiſm is anointed to Preach the Goſpel, and to ſend it abroad to be Preached both to Jew and Gentile. And what the Seventy in their Cainan ſorrowed to ſee afar off, Luke in his Cainan calls to behold now with comfort near at hand.

Preached

Thus are the Cenſers of Korah and his company though ordained for an evil end by them, yet reſerved in the Sanctuary for a good by the command of GOD.

Ver. 38. Which was the Son of Adam, which was the Son of God.

Thus hath the Evangeliſt ſhewed Chriſt to be the ſeed of the woman, promiſed to Adam, and deſcended from him: And that, he that was proclaimed the ſeed of the Woman to Adam, in the garden, was now pointed out and proclaimed the Son of God, from Heaven to John, at Jordan. And thus doth the Evangeliſt conclude this Genealogy with a clear expreſſion of Chriſts two natures, his humanity, for he was the ſon of Adam; his divinity, for he was the Son of God: And this leſſon, of theſe two natures being knit and united in the perſon of our Saviour, the Evangeliſts all of them teach very frequently as they go along, as a thing of chief and choice obſervation: which we ſhall take up and obſerve, as we proceed.

THE SECOND PART OF THE HARMONY OF THE Four EVANGELISTS.

SECTION XI.

The second Adam tempted like the first, but overcometh in such temptations, as in which the first was overcome.

St. MATTHEW. CHAP. IV.

THEN was Jesus [a] led up [b] of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the Devil.

2. And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward an hungred.

St. MARK. CHAP. I.

AND immediately the Spirit [a] driveth him into the wilderness.

13. And he was [d] there in the wilderness forty days tempted of [e] Satan, and was with the wild beasts.

St. LUKE. CHAP. IV.

AND Jesus being full of the Holy Ghost, returned from Jordan, and was [a] led by the Spirit into the wilderness.

2. Being [c] forty days tempted of the Devil, and in those days he did eat nothing: and when they were ended, he afterward hungred.

[aaa] Each Evangelist hath his peculiar expression, and each expression its peculiar meaning; though some Translators do not much mind their differences: as the Syriack that useth the same word in Matthew and Luke; and the Arabick the same in Matthew and Mark, only either of them take it actively in the one, and passively in the other. 1. Luke saith ἤγετο. He was acted or moved; actus est, & agebatur, in Beza and the Vulgar, intending the internal moving of the Spirit within him; for so the manner of speech is used, Rom. 8. 14. Gal. 5. 18. 2. Mark saith ἐκβαλλει, the Spirit casteth, bringeth, or driveth him out, for in these senses is the word used, Matth. 12. 35. Luke 9. 40. John 10. 4. Gal. 4. 30. &c. And he implieth by it; First, his parting him from the company at Jordan. Secondly, his sending him out upon his office and function; for so the word is also used, Matth. 9. 38. And thirdly, it seemeth to denote some visible vehemency and rapture wherewith all the Spirit separated him from the company, as Philip was taken away from the Eunuch, Acts 8. 39. 3. Matthew saith ἀνήχθη, He was led up, as our English hath well rendred it; from the low grounds about Jordan, to the high mountains of the wilderness; some conceive he was rapt up into the air, and there carried aloft till he came into the wilderness; which if it were so, the evil spirit imitated this act of the holy Spirit, when he carried him in the air to the pinnacle of the Temple.

[b] The Syriack in Matthew addeth, By the holy spirit; Luke saith ἐν πνεύματι; where ἐν is put casually, as ב is in Hebrew very frequently, Psal. 33. 6. Hos. 1. 7. &c. so ἐν, Matth.

Matth. 12. 28. for this temptation of Christ was not in vision, as Ezekiels carryiny into the valley of dried bones was, Ezek. 37. 1. where he saith of himself, ἐξήγαγέ με ἐν πνεύματι κύριος, as the Seventy render it; but it was really done, and Christ was bodily driven, or carried into the wilderness; and therefore Matthew's ὑπὸ πνεύματος, and Luke's ἐν πνεύματι, must thus far bear the same sense, that they denote a real, and not a visionary action, and the power and activity of the Holy Ghost moving and driving our Saviour in it, and to it. Though Luke's ἦγετο ἐν πνεύματι may more singularly express the internal motion, and Matthew's ὑπὸ πνεύματος, the external impulsion.

[c] The Vulgar Latine reads it thus, Forty days, and was tempted of the Devil, joyning the forty days to the story of the Verse preceding, as that he was in the wilderness forty days before any temptation at all began; Agebatur, saith he, in Spiritu in deserto, diebus quadraginta & tentabatur; and to the like sense he seemeth to drive the same passage and phrase in Mark translating it thus, erat in deserto quadraginta diebus, [yea, he addeth, & quadraginta noctibus] & tentabatur: But the Text of both the Evangelists is clear and facil, and sheweth that Christ suffered some temptations for the forty days, as well as those three temptations that are mentioned after them.

[d] Beza conceiveth that the words, in the wilderness, might have been spared, because that having mentioned immediately before, That the Spirit drave him into the wilderness, it had been enough to have added, And he was there forty days; without any more repetition of the word wilderness at all: And which is equal to such a conceit, the Arabick and the Vulgar Latine have left the word there out, and read it only, And he was in the wilderness: But the Syriack hath well reserved both, observing belike what they did not, that this duplication or מלות שנוות (as the Jews call such passages) is a common and usual Hebraism, as Gen. 39. 20. Josephs master put him into prison, and he was there in the prison, &c.

[e] There are three names of the Devil in this story, Σατανᾶς, Διάβολος, & ὁ πειράζων, Satan, Devil, and Tempter: or Enemy, Accuser, and Tempter: and they do very fitly and very fully set out the Devils actions and affections in reference to man; and here all these hellish actions and affections are practised towards him that is God himself.

S. MATTHEW Chap. IV.	S. LUKE Chap. IV.
3. And when the tempter came to him, he said, If thou be the Son of [f] God, command that [g] these stones be made bread.	3. And the Devil said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, command that [g] this stone be made bread.
4. But he answered and said, It is written, man shall not live by bread alone, but by [h] every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.	4. And Jesus answered him, saying, It is written that man shall not live by bread alone, but by [h] every word of God.

[g] The Greek reads it, say, or speak to these stones, as Numb. 20. 8. and accordingly it is rendred by the Syriack and Vulgar: for Gods speaking is commanding, and his commanding is operative in things of this nature. And so, he spake, or said, and all things were made, Gen. 1. which the Psalmist expresseth, he commanded, Psal. 148. 5. And the Devil doth purposely and pertinently use this phrase, because he saith instantly before, If thou be the Son of God; and if God speak, it must be done.

[g] The difference in number used by the Evangelists, the one saying, This stone, and the other, These stones, is no strange thing in Scripture, but of common and familiar use, as Gen. 28. 11. He took of the stones of the place; which in Verse 18. is expounded, He took the stone: E. Luke sheweth, that Matthews expression, These stones, is to be understood for one of these stones, as Judg. 12. 7. Jephthah was buried in the Cities of Gilead; that is, in one of the Cities: And 1 Sam. 18. 21. Thou shalt be my Son-in-law in the two; that is, in one of the two, &c. And that speech of Reuben, Gen. 42. 37. seemeth to be to a sense and construction not very far from this kind, slay my two sons, that is, slay two of my sons; for Reuben had four sons at this time, Gen. 46. 9.

[h] In the Hebr. in Deut. 8. 3. from whence these words are quoted, it is על כל מוצא פי By every thing that cometh out of the mouth; without any determinate naming of a word: but the Chaldee and the Seventy have rendred it, by every word that proceedeth or cometh forth: and Matthew useth the very words of the Septuagint. Luke gives the sense of מוצא פי rather than the very construction or translation of the words. מוצא שפתי is Gods promise, Psal. 89. 34.

S. MATTHEW Chap. IV.

5. Then the Devil taketh him up into the [i] holy City, and ſetteth him on a [k] pinnacle of the Temple.

6. And ſaith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, caſt thy ſelf down: for it is written, He ſhall give his Angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands, they ſhall bear thee up, leſt at any time thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone.

7. Jeſus ſaith unto him, It is written again, Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

LUKE Chap. IV.

5. And the Devil taking him up into an high mountain ſhewed unto him all the Kingdoms of the world in a moment of time.

6. And the Devil ſaid unto him, All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered unto me, and to whomſoever I will I give it.

7. If thou therefore wilt worſhip me, all ſhall be thine.

8. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, Get thee behind me Satan, for it is written, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve.

[i] The holy City, was the common and ordinary name of Jeruſalem; as Eſay 48.2. & 52. 1. Dan. 9. 27. Nehem. 11.1. Matth. 27. 53. &c. yea, even when it was full of all abomination and corruption; yea, even when the ſtory is relating that it is crucifying Chriſt, as in the place laſt cited, yet is it ſo called, in regard of Gods preſence, and his worſhip which he had placed there: Separiſts might do well to meditate a little upon this conſideration. The ſhekel of Iſrael had an inſcription on the one ſide of it carrying this ſame title, though not in the very ſame words, ירושלם קדושה Jeruſalem the holy: The Turks own the place by the ſame name and title at this day: and the Papiſt, in the ſame notion and nature: But when that worſhip and religion, and preſence of God in them, which he himſelf had planted there was removed, then was Jeruſalem no more holy than other places: nay, more accurſed for their other abominations, and eſpecially for crucifying the Lord of Life: And the Lord buildeth up for himſelf a new holy City, a new Jeruſalem, when the old one is deſtroyed; namely, a ſpiritual building, a City not made with hands, a Church under the Goſpel, when that under the Law had undone themſelves, *Rev.*21.2. &c.

[k] Πτερύγιον ἱερῦ: this is underſtood variouſly, but it ſeemeth to mean the battlements of the Temple wherewithal it was ledged round about; as *Deut.*22.8. called there מעקה an hedge, or, incloſure, as R. Sol. renders it: the Chaldee expreſſeth it by the Greek word Θήκη, חיקא a caſe. The Seventy by Στεφάνη a Crown. The Vulgar and Eraſmus uſe Pinnaculum here, as our Engliſh doth, meaning ſome ſpire or broach that ſhot up from the roof. Camerarius indifferently takes it for the top or higheſt part of the Temple, be it pinnacle, battlement, ſpire, fane, or what elſe it would: The Prieſts uſed to go to the top of the Temple, Talm. in Taanith, R. Sol. on Eſay 22. 1.

S. MATTHEW Chap. IV.

8. Again the Devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and ſheweth him all the Kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them.

9. And ſaith unto him, [l] All theſe things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worſhip [o] me.

10. Then ſaith Jeſus unto him, Get thee hence Satan: for it is written, [p] Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve.

11. Then the Devil leaveth him, and behold Angels came and miniſtred unto him.

S. LUKE Chap. IV.

9. And he brought him to Jeruſalem, and ſet him on a pinnacle of the Temple, and ſaid unto him, If thou be the Son of God, caſt thy ſelf down from hence:

12. And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto him, it is ſaid, Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

13. And when the Devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from him for a ſeaſon.

MARK Chap. I. ver. 13.

And the Angels miniſtred unto him.

[l] This helpeth to conſtrue the phraſe in Luke, Ἐξουσίαν ταύτην ἅπασαν: that it is to be taken for the Realms and Kingdoms themſelves, which Satan ſhewed him, rather than for the the dominion and rule over those Realms: For that expression which Matthew useth, All the Kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, of which Satan saith, All these things will I give thee, Luke uttereth it, ἡ ἐξουσία πάντα & ἡ δόξα αὐτῶν.

[m] The Chaldee Paraphrast on the 91 Psalm, out of which this allegation is produced, applieth the promises made there, to Solomon; but Aben-Ezra to the days of the Messias.

[n] This phrase seemeth to allude to Balaams miscarriage in his way, Numb. 22. 25. Now the Devil in this quotation from the Psalm, doth visibly and palpably play legerdemain two ways. In the allegation it self, he omitteth this clause, To keep thee in all thy ways: For such an action as he was now tempting our Saviour to, namely, to tempt the Lord, was none of the ways of Christ. And secondly his allegation reacheth not to take in the words that next follow, Thou shalt tread upon the Lion and Adder, &c. for those directly propheſie of Satans own ruine and treading down, and he cannot find in heart to meddle with them.

[o] The two Evangelists expressions laid together, may make this useful result and observation, That if to worship before the Devil, be to worship the Devil, (for whereas Matthew saith, if thou worship me; Luke expresseth it, if thou worship before me) sure to worship before an Image, is to worship an Image; whatsoever evasion Popery would make to the contrary: or else let it shew a reason of the difference.

[p] In the Hebrew in Deut. 6. 13. & 10. 20. from whence this citation is taken, it is 1. Thou shalt fear the Lord, which the Evangelist renders, thou shalt worship: 2. The word only in the second clause, is not extant. But first our Saviour applies the Text close to the present occasion; for the Devil had perswaded him to worship him: and he retorts the Scripture so, as to face the temptation most directly; and since the fearing of God contains and includes all mans duty towards God, be it what it will, whether in affection, or action, and whether in worship, or in holy conversation, our Saviour doth reduce it to such a particular, as was most pertinent and agreeable to the thing in hand: And so parallels might be shewed in great variety, where one place of Scripture citing another, it doth not retain the very words of the portion cited, but doth sometime change the expression, to fit the occasion, as Matth. 2. 23. translates Netzer a branch, in Esay 11. 1. A man of Nazareth. And that which is sorrows in Esay 53. 4. he hath rendred sickness, Matth. 8. 17. because he is there discoursing of Christs healing diseases: And divers more of this nature will the Reader take up by his own observation, so that it is needless to insist upon examples. Secondly, Although the word only be not in the Hebrew Text, yet is it in the Septuagint, in the place first cited, and it is most ordinary for the Evangelists to follow that copy: And that translation hath warrantably added it, seeing as Beza well observeth, so much is included in the emphatical particle him, and is also understood, by comparing other places.

Reason of the Order.

THE juncture and connexion of the two stories of Christs baptism, and of his temptation, and the speedy succeeding of the one to the other, is so clear and manifest in all the Evangelists, that it were but loss of time to go about to prove or confirm it; especially since Mark hath tied them so close together with the word immediately, that it is impossible to put them asunder. But it is a difficulty that requireth some study and seriousness, viz. how to reconcile the two Evangelists Matthew and Luke together in their relating of this story of the temptation, they do so much differ in their order. For whereas Matthew hath laid that temptation that was on the pinnacle of the Temple, for the second temptation; and that upon the high mountain for the last: Luke hath laid that upon the mountain for the second, and that upon the pinnacle for the third. And in the laying down their Text, I have suffered each to retain his own order, and have not been so bold as to alter and transpose it.

Now for the reconciling of the difference, and satisfying of the difficulty, let these things be taken into consideration:

1. That the order in which Matthew hath laid the temptation is the proper method and order in which they were done and acted. And this is plain by those particles which he hath used to express the time, which Luke hath not done, as vers. 5. Then the Devil taketh him; and vers. 8. Again the Devil taketh him: which clearly methodize and rank, the second temptation after the first, and the third after the second.

2. That Luke was not punctual in setting down the order, since he saw Matthew had done it before, but he changeth and inverteth it for special reason.

3. The reason of his alteration may be conceived to be this: He had in the Chapter and Section preceding, laid the genealogy and proper pedegree of our Saviour at his baptism, and had drawn his line up to Adam: and this he did in reference to, and in explanation explanation of that part of the promise made to Adam, The seed of the woman: In this story of the temptations, and of Christs victory over Satan in them, he illustrateth the other part of the promise, Shall break the head of the Serpent. Now that he may the clearer explain that latter part, concerning Christs breaking the Serpents head, he doth not only shew how he conquered the Devil in his temptations, as our first parents were conquered by him, but he also giveth such a hint by this dislocation of the story, that we might observe that these temptations were agreeable to the temptations by which we fell, and that this second Adam overcame the Devil, in such temptings, as in which the first Adam was overcome.

Our mother Eve had been tempted of the Serpent, by the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, as 1 Joh. 2. 16. By the lust of the flesh, for the woman saw that the tree was good for food; by the lust of the eyes, for she saw that it was pleasant to look upon; and by the pride of life, for she conceived that it was a tree to be desired to make one wise; and she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, Gen. 3. 6.

Accordingly was our Saviour assaulted at this time by the same tempter: 1. He would have tempted him to lust of the flesh, when perceiving him hungry, he moveth him to turn stones into bread. 2. To lust of the eyes, when he shewed, and offered to him the glory and pomp of all the Kingdoms of the Earth. And 3. to pride of life, when he would perswade him from the ordinary way of coming down from the top of the Temple, but would have him to cast himself headlong, presuming upon a promise.

The order laid down by Luke is so point-blank correspondent to the order of those first temptations, that we may well conceive that the reason of his ranking these in this method, is, that the Reader might compare and consider the one from the other.

4. Now the reason why the Devil did not tempt our Saviour in the very same order and method that he tempted our first parents, is very difficult to determine: But this is plain to observe, that he tempted him first to works of power, to make stones bread, and to fly in the air; and when in these he could not prevail, then he tempted him to a work of sinful weakness, viz. to adore the Devil; such is the impudency of the Devil, as even to cross himself in the tenor of his temptations, and if he cannot speed in one, to take up another clean contrary to it, rather than to fail, and to go away without speeding in what he desireth, if it may be done.

Harmony and Explanation.

OUR Saviour being installed into his function of the Ministry by baptism, and by the the unction of the Holy Ghost, as the Priests under the Law were into their office by washing and anointing, Lev. 8. 6, 12. he beginneth now to act no more as a private man, but as the great High Priest, the Redeemer, the Messias, and Captain of our Salvation, and such an one is he held out in this story; and such an one is he offered to this combate by the Holy Ghost: 1. That the work of the Redemption might begin to parallel the fall, for both of them were with temptations. 2. That Christ from the very first entrance into his function, might be looked on as the subject of the promise, Gen. 3. 15. That seed of the woman that shoul break the head of the Serpent in the end, when he thus bruised him in the beginning. 3. That this beginning of his Ministry might vindicate and glorifie his Ministry all along, when the Prince of this world had come and found nothing in him. And 4. that a greater than Adam in innocency might be acknowledged here; for he by temptation had been overcom, but this in temptation overcame. Other reasons of Christ being tempted, referring to men, may be given diverse: As 1. to shew, that even the holiest of men cannot expect to be free from temptations. 2. That Christ might teach us how to combate against the temptations of Satan, namely, with fasting, prayer, and the Word of God. 3. To shew that we are to overcom through him who overcame temptations for us, as he overcame death for us. 4. For our assurance of help and succour in our trials, since our Redeemer was tempted like unto us, as Heb. 4. 15. See Aquin. part. 3. quest. 41. Art. 1.

Luke IV. ver. 1. And Jesus being full of the Holy Ghost.

For the better understanding of these words, there are two things very material to take into consideration. The first is, what need there was of Christs being now filled with the Holy Ghost, when all the fulnese of the Godhead had dwelt in him hitherto. And secondly, in what the fulness of the Holy Ghost that was in Christ, these gifts that were in him did differ from that fulness, and from those that were in other men.

For the first, it is to be observed; 1. That by the term the Holy Ghost, is to be understood the Prophetick gifts, wherewithal Christ was filled, for the preaching and publishing liſhing of the Goſpel, as the revealing of the will of God, and working miracles. The expreſſion רוח חקודש or the Holy Ghoſt, is a phraſe and manner of ſpeech uſed by the Jews in their writings, and very common and frequent there, and from them muſt the ſenſe of it be explained, for from them it is taken; and moſt commonly and conſtantly uſed in their ſenſe in the New Teſtament: Now the Jewiſh Authors do conſtantly mean by it the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, which he beſtowed upon Prophets and Prophetick men, enabling them for that employment unto which they were called.

As if we ſhould go about to multiply examples from them to this purpoſe, we might do it infinitely.

The Holy Ghoſt, ſay they, was one of the five things that were wanting in the ſecond Temple, Maſlecheth Ioma. cap. 1. cited by R. Sol. and Kimchi, on Hag. 1.8.

Thou haſt ſhewed that the Holy Ghoſt dwelleth not on thee, to know that I am not drunk, Raſi. on 1 Sam. 1.13.

The Holy Ghoſt was gone from Eli, therefore prophecy came to Samuel, D. Kimch. on 1 Sam. 3.2.

The Holy Ghoſt was born in him from that day and forward, and he uttered Pſalms and Songs by the Holy Ghoſt that was born in him; for under this general term the Spirit of the Lord, is the Holy Ghoſt and the Spirit of power, or ſtrength, underſtood, Idem. on 1 Sam. 16. 13. The Holy Ghoſt reſted on the falſe Prophet, Idem. on 1 King. 13.20.

Our Wiſemen ſay, before Elias was taken away, the Holy Ghoſt was in Iſrael, when he was taken away, the Holy Ghoſt departed, R. Sam. Lanjade. on 2 Kings 2.

In all which ſpeeches, and in divers others which might be produced, it is apparent that the Jews by this phraſe, the Holy Ghoſt, do conſtantly and continually intend, Prophetick gifts, wherewith men and women were indued either for the managing of ſome publique employment to which they were called, or for the ſuiting to ſome ſingular and ſpecial occaſion wherewithal they met. And in this ſenſe is the expreſſion moſt conſtantly to be taken in the New Teſtament, [when it ſpeaketh not of the third perſon in Trinity it ſelf] as Luke 1.15,41,67. John 7.3,9. Acts 2.4. & 8.18. & 10.44. & 13.52. & 19.2. and in very many other places. And ſo is it to be underſtood here, that Chriſt being now to enter upon the publique Miniſtery of the Goſpel, and to act as the great Prophet of his Church and people, he is at his baptiſm anointed, and ever after filled with the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt befitting ſo great a work, and befitting ſo great a Prophet.

Now 2. it is to be obſerved, that theſe Prophetick gifts that the Holy Ghoſt beſtowed upon ſome particular perſons, did really, and very far differ from the grace of ſanctification, which he beſtoweth upon all his Saints: They might indeed ſometimes be, and very often they were in one and the ſame perſon, but they were very far from being one and the ſame thing. For

1. Prophetical gifts were ſometimes in wicked and prophane men, as in Balaam, the falſe Prophet at Bethel, Judas, &c.

2. Theſe were given for the benefit of others, rather than for his own that had them, but ſanctifying grace is given for his benefit chiefly that doth enjoy it.

3. They did not make a man any whit the holier towards God, but only the more able for ſome occaſions amongſt men.

So that by this expreſſion, Jeſus being full of the Holy Ghoſt, is not intended any addition of grace or ſanctity, which he had not before, but the collation of Prophetick qualifications at the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon him, which he had not till then. For though by the union of the humane nature to the Godhead that nature did partake of glorious and moſt excellent perfections ariſing and reſulting from that union; yet did it not partake of theſe gifts or perfections that we have in hand, becauſe theſe were not properly fruits of that union, but of a donation: And not things conducing to the ſatisfaction of God in the work of Redemption, but to the ſatisfaction of men in his work of the Miniſtry: The proper fruits of that union, were the qualifying of the perſon of Chriſt ſo, as that he ſhould be abſolutely without ſin, that he might exactly perform the Law, and might be able to ſatisfie Gods juſtice, and overcom death; for theſe were the proper ends and reaſons for which ſuch an union was required: but to work miracles, to expound difficulties, to heal diſeaſes, to teach divinity, to foretel things to come, and the like, were not ſo properly the fruit of that union, for even meer men have been enabled to do the ſame: nor did they ſo directly tend to the moſt proper end of the incarnation; namely, the ſatisfaction of Gods juſtice, as to the inſtruction, conviction, benefit, and advantage of men. And therefore although the humane nature of Chriſt, through the uniting of it to the Godhead, did abound in all holineſs, and wiſdom, and graces, as to the knowing of God, and the beſt things, to the enjoyment of the viſion of God, and communion with him, to the being and perſiſting abſolutely without the leaſt corruption, to the entire performing of the whole Law, and to a non-poſſibility of committing ſin, all which capacities tended towards the ſatisfaction of Gods juſtice and mans redemption; yet for the miniſtration of the Goſpel, and for his working upon the bodies, bodies, minds, and affections of men, by teaching, preaching, and working miracles, he is indued with the immediate gifts of the Spirit, [as it was the way of God to deal with Prophets and prophetick men] which gifts did not so properly accrew from the union of the two natures, as from the unction of the Spirit; The result of the union of the two natures, being more properly acceptance with God in the work of Redemption, and the fruits of this unction being to the acceptance with men in the work of the Ministery. And whereas it is not to be denied, but that Christ before the Holy Ghost came upon him at his baptism had the power of miracles, and Prophetick wisdom in him, as appeareth by his disputing with the Doctors at twelve years old, this was through the fulness of the Holy Ghost that was in him even from his mothers womb, as it was, and much more than it was with John the Baptist, Luke 1.15. and that with this difference from what it is now, that it was then upon him as one to be ordained, and now upon him as ordained already to the Ministery.

Now the difference of the fulness of the Holy Ghost in Christ from other men, who are also said to have been filled with the Holy Ghost; as, Luke 1.67. Acts 6. 5. may appear in these particulars:

1. In the measure, which may be measured, by consideration of the difference of the persons, and of their employments: for Christ was more capable by infinite degrees of the fulness of the Holy Ghost, than meer men were, or could be; and his employment being also so infinitely beyond the employment of men, the measure of the Holy Ghosts fulness in him must needs be accordingly beyond all measure.

2. In the manner and vigor of acting; The power of the Prophets in working of miracles was exceeding great indeed, and wondrous, and their descrying and discovering the will of God and things to come was exceeding wonderful and sublime, but they could neither do nor tell all things, nor could they act upon all occasions, but had always their bounds, and had sometimes a recess of the Spirit, or departure of it from them. As Isaac can see what shall befal Jacob and Esau many hundred years after, yet cannot know Jacob from Esau when he is in his arms: And Jacob can tell what shall become of all his sons in the last time to come, yet cannot tell what is become of his best son Joseph in his own time for 13 years together.

So Moses hath power over Egypt, yet hath not power over his own stammering: and the Prophet at Bethel can command the Altar that it rent it self, but cannot command the Lion not to rent him.

Thus to this great gift of Prophecy on men, as to the Ocean, God set its bound, which it might not pass, and so far might the operating of it go, and might go no further; but with Christ it was not so. He could work what miracles he would, when he would, how he would, and on whom he would; he could reveal all truths, resolve all doubts, clear all difficulties, know all thoughts, and had no limit of the vigor and acting of the Spirit upon him, but his own will.

Namely into the wilderness of Judea. For 1. that was in mention in the story next preceding, *Matth.*3.2,3. and a wilderness being here spoken of, without any further mention what wilderness it was, none can so properly be understood as that of Judea, which was last named before. 2. It is said by Luke, that Jesus returned from Jordan: by the word returned, importing that he came back [when he went to his temptation] on the same side Jordan on which he was baptized: Now that the wilderness of Judea lay on that side is more evident than needeth any demonstration. Chemnitius indeed hath supposed this wilderness where our Saviour was tempted, to have been the great desert of Horeb or Sinai: and he giveth these three reasons for it: 1. Because other wildernesses have their distinguishing titles, as of Ziph, 2 Sam.23.14. Shur, Exod.15.22. Engedi, 1 Sam.24.11. &c. but this wilderness of Horeb is called the wilderness, by a special emphasis, without any other addition, and so is the wilderness mentioned in this story. But this is easily answered, that it wants its distinctive title here, because it was named by it a little before, and called the wilderness of Judea.

2. Because saith he, Mark saith, that Christ in this wilderness was with the wild beasts: now in other wildernesses there are either dwellings of men here and there, or they are not altogether remote from the converse of men; but in the great desart of Horeb there were only wild beasts, as there are mentioned to have been here.

Ans. Mark when he saith, Christ was with wild beasts, doth not therefore inforce that that wilderness was without either men or dwellings; But first, That Christ for that time avoided both the one and the other, and kept himself in the wildest places, and most retired from humane society. And secondly the Evangelist seemeth to regard rather the state of Christ, than the state of the place: and to shew Christ to be the second ſecond Adam, as in the temptation which he was now about, ſo in his ſafety and ſecurity among the wild beaſts [as Adam in innocency had been] and they hurt him not. The wilderneſs of Judea had indeed both cities, and villages, and dwellings of men in it, but withall it had ſome places wild in it without any ſuch habitations, and it had wild beaſts in it in thoſe places, 1 Sam. 17.28.34. 2 *Sam.*23.20. *Jer.*49.19.

3. By this ſuppoſal [he addeth] that this wilderneſs where Chriſt was tempted, was the great deſart of Horeb, there is a fair anſwerableneſs found out, between this ſtory, and the ſtory of Iſrael in that place, and betwixt this faſting of Chriſt and of Moſes and Elias in the ſame deſart. Anſwer: it is true, there would be ſo indeed, but the being of the thing cannot be grounded upon this correſpondency, but this correſpendency muſt be built upon the thing firſt found ſo to be: and if this may argue for Horeb deſart, we may as well argue for Judea wilderneſs, for there the ſore tryals of David under the perſecution of his enemies, and otherwiſe may be as fit parallels to harmonize with this temptation, as Iſraels being in that deſart, ſee 1 Sam. 17. 34 & 23. 14, 19, 24. & 24. 1. Pſalm 61. in title, &c.

Mark 1. ver. 13. And was there forty days tempted.

For theſe forty days together, Satan was tempting him inviſibly,and did not yet aſſume any viſible or conſpicuous ſhape, which at the end of forty days he did; and ſo is Matthew to be underſtood, when he ſaith, The tempter came to him, that is, in an apparent and viſible form.

Now if we look upon the time and place, and Chriſts preſent poſture, we may ſee what materials or occaſions the Devil had to frame theſe his inviſible temptations of, all this while.

1. The time of the year, was from about the middle of the month Tiſri, ſix weeks forward, that is, from the beginning of our October, till about the tenth of our November, and then was the cold increaſing, the nights growing long, and the winter driving on apace; but very comfortleſs ſubſiſting in the open plain of a deſert wilderneſs.

2. The place of our Saviours reſidence all this while, be it where it will in the wilderneſs of Judea, whether two miles from Jericho at Quarantania, as it is pointed out by ſome, or further ſouthward along the banks of the dead Sea, as the more deſert place, or whereſoever elſe, it was in the company and danger of wild beaſts, and no humane company near him to comfort him, nor houſe to ſhelter him.

3. His poſture in this time and place was not only in a faſting, but in an impoſſibility of getting ſuſtenance unleſs by miracle; in ſolitude, in want of company, in want of neceſſaries, and in a condition that made a life as comfortleſs, as likely might be.

Upon theſe outward occaſions as fit opportunities for ſuch a matter, Satan would be buſie with his ſuggeſtions to inject them into Chriſt if it had been poſſible, either to have moved him from that reſolved work upon which he was, or to have moved him to the acting or entertaining of ſomething which ſhould not have been.

And herein did theſe forty days and nights faſting of our Savlour, exceedingly outgoe the like dated faſtings of Moſes and Elias. For he did not only faſt, but he was in continual watching and conſtant combat with Satan, and did not ſo much as enjoy the repoſe of his body, or of his thoughts in reſt and contemplation, as Moſes and Elias had ſweetly done in their faſts, without ſuch diſturbance.

Compare the combate in 1 Sam. 17. 16.

Luke 4. ver. 2. And in thoſe days he did eat nothing.

Matthew mentioneth the nights of his faſting, as well as the days, that it might be diſtinguiſhed from the ordinary faſtings of other men, who though they ate nothing of all day, yet at night they did, 1 Sam. 14. 24. 2 Sam. 1. 12. &c. But the faſt in Suſan was for three days and nights, Eſth. 4. 16. Now this long and miraculous faſt of Chriſt was not for imitation, no more than were the like of Elias and Moſes, but as theirs was, ſo was this for another end: For as Moſes faſted three times forty days and forty nights at his giving of the Law, and ſetling of religion, that the authority of the one, and the honor of the other might be the more advanced; and as Elias faſted forty days and forty nights at his reſtoring of decaying prophecie, and beginning of a reformation, that the one and the other might be the more dignified in the hearts of the people, upon this very conſideration, that the agents in theſe things, did as it were for a preface to the acting of them, lead ſo Angelical and miraculous a life for ſo long a time.

So was this like action of our Saviour for the greater honour and authority of the Goſpel which he was now to preach; when he that preached it,had led ſo the long life of an Adgel without meat and drink, had foiled the Devil upon the greateſt advantages imaginable, and had dwelt among the den of wild beaſts, and was hurt by them; compare Eſay 11. 6.

Thus did John the Baptiſt begin the Goſpel with wonderous abſtemiouſneſs, and Chriſt with miraculous abſtinence, both of them thereby not only honouring the Goſpel which they preached, but alſo thereby inſtructing them to whom they preached it: 1. That the kingdom of heaven is not of meats and drinks. 2. That man is not to live by bread only, but by the Word of God. And 3. That the liberty of the Goſpel is not licentiouſneſs, but liberty of another nature.

§ And when they were ended he afterward hungred.

It is not ſo ſaid either of Moſes or Elias, though the ſame thing were true likewiſe of them; but it is expreſſed thus of Chriſt: 1. To evidence his humanity. 2. And chiefly to give light unto the ſtory following, namely, to ſhew that Satan took occaſion for his firſt propoſal to turn ſtones into bread, from Chriſts hungring. And 3. that this and the firſt temptation might be parallelled, where Satan aſſaulted Eve; when ſhe now began to hunger, and it was eating time.

Matth. 4. ver. 3. And when the tempter came to him.

Now is the ſeed of the Woman and the Serpent met viſibly together, and the enmity which was ſet betwixt them from the firſt day of Adam, is now breaking into an open combate. And the Evangeliſt in the Epithet, the Tempter, doth plainly call us to take notice of the firſt temptation, that occaſioned the fixing of that enmity. The Devil now appeareth to Chriſt in a viſible ſhape, as he had done to Eve; but in what appearance, the text is ſilent: It is moſt likely, like an Angel of light: and as ſhe was deceived by him in taking him for a good Angel, in the trunk of the Serpent; ſo that he goeth now about to deceive Chriſt alſo in the repreſentation of a glorious Angel: For in that he requireth Chriſt to worſhip him, and promiſeth him all the kingdomes of the world, it is very unlikely that he carryed the image of a meer plain ſimple man, or of any brute beaſt; for either of them it was moſt improper to make any ſuch overture: but that he carryed indeed a humane ſhape, but with that luſtre, majeſty, and glorioufneſs, that the holy Angels uſed to appear in, Judg. 13. 6. For that the Devil can transform himſelf into ſuch a faſhion and garb, the Apoſtle doth tell us.

§ He ſaid, if thou be the Son of God.

He tempteth Chriſt under the notion of his two natures, twice in reference to his Godhead. To turn ſtones into bread, and to fly in the air, works of divine power; and once in reference to his manhood, to fall down and worſhip him for wordly preferment, an act of humane ſinfulneſs and weakneſs. When the Devil doth twice uſe this expreſſion, If thou be the Son of God; it argueth not that he was ignorant who Chriſt was, as ſome conceive, [for the miracle of his birth, his adoration by the Wiſemen, his wiſdom at 12 years old, the voice from heaven, and his ſaftety among wild beaſts at this time, ſhew that impoſſible.] But concluding the thing it ſelf to be ſo, he argueth from it to perſwade Chriſt to act as the Son of God, and to do things miraculouſly. And the If in his ſpeech is not ſo much of doubting as of aſſurance, as the If in thoſe words of Lamech, If Cain ſhall be avenged ſeventy fold; and he forceth it as the conſequence upon a thing undoubted, Seeing thou art the Son of God, as the voice from heaven did proclaim thee, it is very agreable to thy ſo being, that thou ſhouldſt exert thy divine power, and command theſe ſtones into bread for the ſatisfying thy hunger. And ſo in the other temptation that carryeth the ſame front, Seing thou art the Son of God, it is very fit thou ſhouldeſt act according thereunto, and not go down the ſtairs as men do, but caſt thy ſelf headlong, and ſhew thy power. In both which temptations, though a cloſe perſwaſive to diſtruſt Gods proviſion for him in the wilderneſs, to rely too much upon ſecond cauſes, and to preſume without warrant upon a promiſe, be included, yet Satans main bent and aim is to move him to act according to the dictate and direction of the Devil. And as he had perſwaded Eve from the commandement of God, to follow his advice, ſo would he fain do Chriſt from that work and injuction which God had laid upon him, for the Miniſtery, and for mans redemption, to do things tending nothing at all to that purpoſe, but rather to vain-glory and ſelf-exalting, and the Devil had had enough if he could have moved the Redeemer to have acted any thing upon his inſtigation. Ignatius Martyr, Hilary, and others of old; and Beza, Chemnitius, ſome others of late, ſuppoſe that Satan knew not yet the myſtery of the incarnation [no more than the Diſciples did till after the reſurrection] but that he propoſeth this, if thou be the Son of God, as doubting of the truth of the thing, and ſeeking to be reſolved in it: nay, that by the phraſe, the Son of God, is to be underſtood, and was ſo in Satans apprehenſion, only a very holy, and an extraordinary qualified man; as whereas the Centurion calls Chriſt the Son of God, Mat. 27.54. Luke expreſſeth it only a righteous man, Luke 23.47.

Anſwer 1. It is moſt true indeed, that the myſtery of the Incarnation is a myſtery moſt high and deep, and which created underſtandings cannot ſadome, and that the Diſciples were exceedingly ignorant of it, till more than fleſh and blood revealed it to them: but yet for all this, the Angels good and bad might know the truth of the thing, though they could not reach the myſtery of it: and the Diſciples have ſome light of it before, though they had the more perfect underſtanding of it after the reſurrection, as ſee Mat. 16.16. The Devil was not ignorant of the Angels proclaiming him Chriſt the Lord, or Jehovah, Luke 1.16, 17. & 2.11. of an Angels and Gods proclaiming him, The Son of God, Luke 1.35. & 3.22. Of the Prophets calling him, Jehovah, Jer. 23.6. And the mighty God, and Father of Eternity, Eſay 9.6. and an hundred ſuch expreſſions as theſe, which could not but put him paſt all queſtoning, who it was with whom he dealt.

2. It is true indeed that the Church and people of God are called his Sons, but it will be hard to find this applyed to any one particular perſon, or ſingle man in all the Scripture: That in 2 Sam. 7.14. Pſalm 89.28, 27. is readily known to be ſpoken of Chriſt, and that in Luke 3.38. we have explained before.

3. It is likewiſe true, that whereas the Centurion in Matthew, is brought in, ſaying, This was the Son of God, Luke hath brought him, ſaying, This was a righteous, or juſt man; but muſt it therefore follow, that he took him not for the Son of God, but that he called him ſo only becauſe he was a holy man? In very many of the Evangeliſts, various expreſſions, we are not always to take the one to mean the other, but we muſt take them both in their proper ſenſe to make up the full ſenſe, as will fall to be obſerved in divers places: And ſo is it to be done here: The Centurion and his company upon the ſight of the wonders that attend our Saviours death, concluded that not only he was a moſt holy man, but ſome roſe higher, and ſure, ſay they, He was the Son of God. Compare and examine the places.

Now the daring impudence of the Devil, thus to aſſault and aſſail him whom he knew to be the Son of God, will be the leſs wondrous and ſtrange, if we conſider [joyntly with his pride, deſperate wickedneſs, and malice] the ground that he might think he had to undertake ſuch an attempt as this, to go about to foil him, who his own heart told him was the Son of God: And that was from thoſe words of God in the garden to him, when upon the denunciation upon him, that the ſeed of the woman ſhould break his head; yet God tells him withall, That he ſhould bruiſe his heel. Hence did his impudence take its riſe to do and dare what he did and dared at this time; and the having this very paſſage in ones eye and conſideration upon the reading of this ſtory of the temptation, will help exceedingly to clear, inlighten and explain it. For whereas two main ſcruples may ariſe about this temptation, [beſides this that we have in hand of the Devils daring to aſſault Chriſt thus] namely, how chance it was now, and not before, and why it is ſaid by Luke after theſe temptations, that the Devil departed from him for a ſeaſon; the conſideration of this thing doth give ſo much ſatisfaction to both theſe doubts. For, 1. it is indeed ſome matter of wonder that Chriſt ſhould live to thirty years, and the Devil never attempt to tempt him of long a time, but ſhould now come to aſſail him, when he had a teſtimony from heaven that he was the Son of God, and when he had the fulneſs of the Spirit in him above meaſure, which were greater diſadvantages to Satan than ever; but the reaſon was becauſe that now Chriſt was offered to the Duell in an apparent manner, which he never had been before, to try that maſtery with the Devil about breaking and bruſing head and heel: and the Devil having an aſſurance that he ſhould bruiſe his heel, undertakes the combate, and dares be thus impudent. And 2. when he ſaw that he could not prevail with him this way to bruiſe him, namely, by temptation, he departs from him for a ſeaſon, till he can find an opportunity for another way to do it, namely, by open and actual perſecution.

Sect. Command that theſe ſtones be made bread.

To change the form of a Creature is the greateſt miracle, as coming neareſt to creating: and therefore when the power of miracles was firſt given, the firſt that was wrought was transforming, Exod. 4.3. And ſuch a one was the firſt that was wrought by our Saviour, John 2.9. The Devil therefore aſſaying Chriſt in a work of wonder, tryeth him in one of this nature: and when he cannot move him to ſhew his power upon another Creature, in Changing the form of it in this temptation, he ſeeketh in the next to move him to ſhew his power upon his own body, in altering the quality of it, and making it fly.

Now

Now to enquire what ſins they were that the Devil would have perſwaded him to in this temptation, in turning ſtones into bread, whether to gluttony, or diſtruſt of providence, or what elſe, is not ſo material and pertinent, as to conſider why he tryed him firſt by ſuch a manner of temptation. And the ſatisfaction to this is facil and obvious; namely, 1. becauſe he took advantage of his preſent hungring. And 2. becauſe he had ſped ſo ſucceſsfully to his own mind, by a temptation about a matter of eating, with the firſt Adam, he practiſeth that old manner of his trading with the ſecond.

Ver. 4. It is written.

This is the firſt ſpeech that proceeded from our Saviours mouth, ſince his entrance into his Miniſterial function, that is upon record; and though it be very ſhort, yet is it very material for obſervation of theſe things:

1. That the firſt word ſpoken by Chriſt in his miniſterial office is an aſſertion of the authority of Scripture.

2. That he oppoſeth the word of God as the propereſt incounterer againſt the words of the Devil.

3. That he alledgeth Scripture as a thing undeniable and uncontrolable by the Devil himſelf.

4. That he maketh the Scripture his rule, though he had the fulneſs of the Spirit above meaſure.

§ Man ſhall not live by bread only, but, &c.

He doth moſt properly and divinely produce this place of Moſes, Deut. 8.3. it being a Leſſon which the Lord had read to Iſrael, when they had fallen into, and in a temptation, not much unlike to this that Satan would have tript Chriſt in at this time. Now the ſenſe of the Text alledged is ſomewhat controverted; ſome take it to mean, that man hath not only a life of the body to look after, which is ſuſtained by bread; but alſo, and rather a life of the ſoul, which is ſupported by the Word of God: And ſome again, by the Word of God, underſtand the Word of Doctrine; others, the Word of Gods power, providence, and decree, as meaning that mans life doth not depend upon bread only, but that God can ſupport and ſuſtain it by other means as he ſhall ſee fit. Any of which carry a moſt proper, and a moſt conſiderable truth along with them. But the moſt facil interpretation of theſe words, and the moſt agreeable to the context in Moſes, with which they lye, is, by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, to underſtand Gods commandments, by the obſerving of which a man ſhall live, proſper, and it ſhall go well with him: for to this ſenſe the firſt verſe of that Chapter in Deuteronomy ſpeaketh, All the commandments that I command thee this day, ſhall ye obſerve to do, that ye may live, &c. Now our Saviour retorteth this in this ſenſe, againſt the Devils temptation, that incited him to have turned ſtones into bread; 1. To ſhew that it was his meat and drink to do the will of him that ſent him, and to finiſh his work, as John 4. 34. And 2. that obedience of Gods commandments is more propely the way to live, than by the uſe of the Creature.

Matth. 4. ver. 5. Then the Devil taketh him up.

Here it is controverted, whether this were done really and truly, or only in viſion and apparition. And there be that aſſert the latter, conceiving that Chriſt was brought no otherwiſe to the pinnacle of the Temple, or to the high mountain, than Jeremy went to Euphrates to hide his girdle, Jer. 13. or Ezekiel ſlept on his right, and left ſide, &c. Ezek. 4. or other things of this nature mentioned in Scripture, which it is paſt all denial, were done only in viſion, vid. Janſen. in loc.

But that theſe tranſportings of our Saviour from place to place, were really and actually done, even in the body, and not in viſion, may be ſtrongly confirmed by theſe conſiderations.

1. Otherwiſe they had been no temptations, which the Evangeliſts tell plainly that they were: For what had it been for Chriſt, to have ſeen a thouſand of ſuch things as theſe in a viſion, and to have nothing more to do with them, but only ſee them; what temptation could this be to him?

2. The next place that we hear Chriſt was in after the temptations were finiſhed, was beyond Jordan, as ſhall be ſhewed in the next Section: now it will be hard to find how he was got inſtantly after his temptations to the other ſide Jordan, if he were not carryed thither in the next temptation after this that is now in hand. For in the temptation before this, he is in the wilderneſs of Judea; in this temptation he is at Jeruſalem on the top of the Temple; and in the next on the top of an high mountain; and the next tydings of him after is, that he is beyond Jordan.

Now this taking him up, was bodily, and locally, and really, the Devil catching him up into the air, and carrying him in the air to the battlements of the Temple, and from thence in the next temptation to the high mountain: And here may the Reader fix his meditations upon four or five material things very pertinent and profitable to conſider of upon this paſſage.

As 1. the horrid impudency of the Tempter, that cannot but ſuppoſe him the Son of God, and yet dare aſſail him as the baſeſt of men.

2. The wonderful humiliation of the Redeemer, that was even now proclaimed the Son of God from heaven, and now is hurryed by the Devil in the face of heaven.

3. The power of evil Spirits over mens bodies, if they be permitted, and let looſe to execiſe their power upon them.

4. The conſtant and continued providence ſhewed in our preſervation, that we are not hurryed away bodily by Satan every moment, who is thus buſie here even with our Redeemer, who was the Son of God.

5. That in all the Scripture there is no mention of the like ſtory, that the Devil ever thus carryed any man in the air, unleſs he had firſt bodily poſſeſſed him: For having firſt done ſo, it is ſaid of the poor wretch among the Gaderens, That he was driven of the Devil into the Wilderneſs. And ſo, we have obſerved elſewhere, that it is probable that the Devil took Judas into the air, and there ſtrangled him, and threw him down to the earth, and burſt out his bowels, for the Devil was bodily in him before: but for one not poſſeſſed to be ſo tranſported from place to place, by the evil ſpirit, is a thing that hath no parallel in all the Scripture from end to end. Now whether it be not probable that the Devil would have poſſeſſed our Saviour bodily, if he could have done it, and when he could not do it betook himſelf to this violent Rapture of him, be it alſo referred to the Readers conſideration.

§ Into the holy City, and ſetteth him on a pinacle of the Temple.

There are two main ſcruples and queſtions ariſe out of theſe words: 1. Why the Devil bringeth Chriſt to this place in this temptation. And 2. whether his flying in the air, and ſtanding on the Temple, were viſible, or no.

As to the firſt; It cannot be doubted, but ſomething more was in the Devils thoughts when he brought our Saviour hither, than meerly his precipitation, or caſting down headlong, or flying in the air: For had that been all, he might have found promontories, rocks, precipices by hundreds; from whence to have got him caſt down, would have ſerved the turn, as well as from hence, if his precipitation had been all that was intended and aimed at. But certainly there was ſome reflecting in Satans mind upon the very place, as well as upon the very thing. And that being apprehended what it was, if it be poſſible to apprehend it, it will help to reſolve both the queſtions at once. Conjecture is all that we can go upon here, and it is better to conjecture at Satans mind in ſuch a thing as this, than to be acquainted in it; and in a matter of this nature if one fail in conjecture, it is as excuſable on that hand, as it is difficult to hit aright on the other.

1. Therefore it may be conceived, that the Devil according to his conſtant practice, would make the utmoſt advantage he could of his deceipts in this paſſage and temptation: and that he meant not only evil to our Saviour, whom he had in hand, but ſome deluſion alſo to the men of Jeruſalem, amongſt whom he brought him: For why ſhould he take him from the ſolitude of the wilderneſs, into the middle of a City, if he meant no more than what he might have equally acted in that ſolitarineſs? or why ſhould he ſet him upon the Temple, if he intented no more than what he might have done upon any precipice in the deſert.

2. It ſeemeth therefore, and is very probable, that our Saviour as he flew in the air, and as he ſtood on the Temple, was viſible and conſpicuous to the eyes of the people: and that Satan acted thus, that the people might be deluded with ſome miſapprehenſions concerning him. And truly I cannot but conjecture, that he intented to deceive them with miſpriſion concerning Elias, who was ſo much in their thoughts and expectation, to come perſonally as the fore-runner of the Meſſias: For he having been rapt away into the air, and ſo into heaven, when the Lord took him from the earth, as is related in the ſtory of his tranſlation, 2 King. 2. how readily might the people have their thoughts on him, when they ſaw a man in a mantle flying in the air, and taking his pitch upon the Temple, and away again? and this they might be deceived in the rather, becauſe of the miſconſtruction which they blindly made of thoſe words of the Prophet, Mal. 3. 1. Of the Angel of the Covenant coming to the Temple, which they underſtand of Elias, as ſee D. Kimch. in loc. But it will be ſaid, what could Satan gain by this deceit? Why, this, that they would be confirmed in the miſtake of Elias his perſonal coming at the laſt converſe among them, and ſo the preaching of the Baptiſt, and the appearing of Chriſt after him would be the leſs regarded.

3. Now

3. Now the acting of the Devil in reference to Chriſt, affords us theſe conſiderations:

1. That whereas in his former temptation, he would have injected into Chriſt diffidence and deſpair in God, now would he do the clean contrary, and inſtigate him to preſumption; then would he have ſuggeſted that God was mindleſs of him, and that there was no truſt to be had in providence, for he muſt either turn ſtones into bread, or be without: but now he will have him to caſt all upon providence and promiſes preſumptuouſly, and neither to uſe any means, nor regard any rule.

2. That the Devil doth here ſomewhat parallel his firſt temptation of our firſt parents, for that was in the garden a place of happineſs, this is on the Temple the place of holineſs; that in the paradiſe of delight, this in the paradiſe of Religion.

3. That though the Devil could ſet Chriſt on the top of the Temple, yet could he not throw him off. Our Saviour refuſed not to ſuffer him to bring him to a temptation, but he would not ſuffer him to have the leaſt power over him in it: either to perſwade him into the leaſt ſin, or to caſt him into the leaſt danger.

4. Whereas Chriſt had uſed Scripture to him before, he uſeth Scripture to Chriſt now, and ſo goes about to aſſault him with his own weapon.

5. That he might the more feaſibly caſt him upon a preſumptuous relyance on the guard of Angels, he hath now brought him to a place as likely to have Angels ready about it, as any place under heaven: for where might they more readily be thought to be, than about the Temple?

What part of the Temple it was that Chriſt was ſet upon at this time, it is in vain to go about to determine, whether on ſome turret of it, as is conceived by ſome; or on the battlement ledge, as by others; or on ſome of the flying fanes, as by a third ſort; or on the ſharp broches that were ſet there to keep off birds, as by a fourth: it is as little material, as it is little determinable; only take this teſtimony of Joſephus concerning the terrible height of ſome part of the Temple, and then be it left to ruminate upon. He ſpeaking concerning the South ſide of the Temple, and of the Βασιλικὴ στοὰ, the Kings porch there, he ſaith thus; It was one of the moſt renowned works under the Sun; for there being a great depth of a valley, even not to be ſeen to the bottom of, if any one above looked down: Herod, raiſed a vaſt height of a Porch over it, ſo that if any one from the roof of it looked down, σκοτοδινιᾷν ἂν ἐξικνουμένης τῆς ὄψεως εἰς ἀμέτρητον τὸν βυθὸν: his head would be giddy, his ſight not reaching to the unmeaſurable depth, Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 14.

Verſ. 8. Again the Devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain.

It is as undeterminable what mountain this was, as it is what part of the Temple it was that he ſet him upon, and it is as little material: Only this is conceivable upon good probability, that this mount was beyond Jordan eaſtward, becauſe the firſt appearing of Chriſt after this amongſt men, is at Bethabara on that ſide, Joh. 1.28. Now whether it were Piſgah, Nebo, Horeb, or what elſe, is but loſt labour to make enquiry, becauſe we are ſure we cannot find; only this again is worth our thoughts, to compare together the being of Moſes in the mount with God, and the being of Chriſt, in a mount with Satan: and the Lords ſhewing to Moſes from an high mount all the Kingdoms of Canaan, and ſaying, All theſe will I give to the Children of Iſrael; and the Devils ſhewing to Chriſt all the Kingdoms of the Earth, and ſaying, All theſe will I give thee, &c.

Here are two things mainly conſiderable: 1. The object repreſented to the eyes of Chriſt. And 2. the manner of Satans repreſenting it: The firſt, the text expreſſeth to be all the Kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them: upon which, if we come to ponder, by weighing and conſidering the ſtate of the world at this time, it will appear, that the object that the Devil preſented Chriſt withall in this ſpectacle, was Rome, her Empire and glory. For 1. That Empire is called by the very name of all the world, Luke 2. 1. and the very ſame word that Luke uſeth to expreſs it there, he uſeth here, ἀπογεγράφθαι πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην there; and πάσας τὰς βασιλείας τῆς οἰκουμένης here.

2. Where was there any pomp or worldly glory to be ſeen any where upon all the earth at this time, but what belonged to the Roman State? nay, where was there almoſt any Country or Kingdom, but was within the compaſs and dominion of that Empire? or where was there any power or rule [as Luke uttereth it πᾶσαν ἐξουσίαν ταύτην] either comparable to the power and rule of that State, or indeed where was there any power or rule that was not now under it? The Roman ſtories that deſcribe the State of Rome at theſe times, do give an abundant account of her wealth, pomp, power, revenues, extent and largeneſs even to the amazement of the Reader, they were all ſo vaſt: and they do ſo commonly and familiarly call the Roman Empire, the Empire of the whole world, that ſcarce any any thing is more ordinary among them: Let but one be a taſt of the reſt, and let us take up all in little, in that prayer that Paterculus, a man that lived in theſe very times, makes in reference to Tiberius, who was Emperour and Lord of this vaſt pomp and power at this very preſent, in the concluſion of his Book: Voto finiendum volumen ſit. Jupiter Capitoline—Gradive Mars—Veſta—& quicquid numinum hanc Romani Imperii molem in ampliſſimum terrarum orbis faſtigium extulit, —deſtinate ſucceſſores quam ſeriſſimos ſed eos quorum cervices tam fortiter ſuſtinendo terrarum orbis Imperio ſufficiant quam hujus ſuffecriſſe ſenſimus.

3. If Satan had claim and intereſt in any place, ſtate, or pomp under heaven, it was in Rome and her appurtenances: and if thoſe words of his which Luke hath added, All this glory will I give thee, for that is delivered to me, and to whomſoever I will give it, were true of any place, it was true of this. For, firſt, obſerve the characters and dechipherings of Rome, as it is ſet out in Scripture, and ſee whether it carry not the very image and ſuperſcription of the Dragon upon it. In Numb. 24. 24. the firſt place that it is pointed out, it is doomed to eternal perdition; for both Jews, and even ſome Romaniſts themſelves, underſtand Rome by Chittim in that place. In Iſa. 11. 4. it is called The wicked one, as the Chaldee Paraphraſe there: And Paul, 2 Theſ. 2. 8. do expound it. The abominable armies, Dan. 9. 27. The abomination of deſolation, Matth. 24. 15. The mother of fornications and abominations of the Earth, Rev. 17. 5. &c. Secondly, obſerve that in it was met together all the cruelty, bloodines, and perſecution that was in the four beſtial Monarchies, that were enemies to the Church before Chriſts firſt coming, Dan. 7. compared with Rev. 13. And thirdly, obſerve that this was the ſeat of Satan, Rev. 13. 2. and that he gave his power, and ſeat, and authority to the beaſt of this City, That this was as his ſpecial heritage, and his heir apparent, the ſingular ſeed of the Serpent, Antichriſt was to ariſe here. And laſtly, obſerve, that the Kingdom of Chriſt, and the oppoſite kingdom of Antichriſt were both now beginning, and that now the Serpents head began to be in danger, according to the prophecy ſo long ago, Gen. 3. 15.

Now after all theſe conſiderations may the Reader take up ſome ſuch hints as theſe; and enlarge them in his own thoughts, according as he finds them fixing on his thoughts, and worthy meditation.

1. How probable it is that Satan when he maketh this offer to our Saviour, doth intentionally point out this very Antichriſtian City and her glory.

2. How much truer he ſpeaketh, than he commonly doth, or is commonly obſerved to do here, when he ſaith, that all power was delivered to him, and he might give it to whom he would.

3. How he doth offer to ſeat Chriſt in the very throne of Antichriſt, and would perſwade the ſingular ſeed of the woman, to become the ſingular ſeed of the Serpent, and his own heir placed by himſelf in his own ſeat.

4. How by this curſed overture, he would have ſtopped and ſtifled the Goſpel in the very beginning and riſe of it, by choaking the great Preacher of it with all the power and pomp of the Roman State.

5. How, that he might prevent the breaking of his own head by the Kingdom of Chriſt, he ſtriketh at the very head of Chriſt, tempting him with the glory of the Kingdom of Antichriſt; and would have him to do as Antichriſt would do, fall down and worſhip the Dragon.

6. How Rome is laid by the Devil for a ſtumbling block in the way of the Goſpel, as ſoon as ever Chriſt appeareth towards the preaching of it.

7. How when Satan cannot at the entrance of Goſpel, perſwade Chriſt by all the pomp of Rome, to do like Antichriſt, he ſetteth up Antichriſt at Rome, to be an enemy to the Goſpel, in all the continuance of it.

8. Compare Chriſts refuſal here, with the Jews choice hereafter, John 19. 13. Here he is offered to be the Cæſar and Lord of the Roman Empire, which he refuſeth; there he is refuſed, and Cæſar preferred before him.

Now for the reſolution of the ſecond Quære, viz. After what manner Satan repreſented this object before him, theſe things may be conſidered:

1. That it is not poſſible that this was a real and a very repreſentation of theſe things indeed, for divers things do contradict it: For, firſt, there is ſcarcely any mountain under Heaven from whence any one kingdom can be viewed over: and if there were, there is ſcarcely any eye under heaven that could view it. And whereas the Devil brought Chriſt into an exceeding high mountain when he would ſhew him this ſpectacle, it was rather to colour the deluſion, than to realize the proſpect; for what he ſhewed him from that mountain, and as he ſhewed it him, he could have preſented it as well upon any flat or valley. For,

Secondly,

Secondly, Matthew ſaith, that he ſhewed him not only all the Kingdoms of the world, but alſo the glory of them; now this clearly argues that Satan preſented ſomething, more than could be ſeen in a common proſpect. For though it had been poſſible for any eye to have ſeen all the Kingdoms of the world, that is, all the Countries of them as they lye, yet would not that view and proſpect ſhew their pomp and glory. He that from Highgate vieweth London, ſeeth the City; but he that will behold the glory of London, muſt go into it.

And thirdly, Luke addeth, that he ſhewed him all theſe things in a moment of time: by which very expreſſion he ſeemeth to intimate, that here was ſomething different from common proſpecting or beholding: for men looking upon a goodly proſpect from an high place, view it ſucceſſive, one part after another, and muſt turn themſelves round; and if they will look further than that place will ſuffer them, they muſt remove to another hill where that proſpect terminates: but here all this vaſt object of all the Kingdoms of the Earth is preſented at one view, in a moment of time.

2. Therefore there was ſome jugling and deluſion of the Devil in this buſineſs, and he rather preſented an object of his own framing, than the eyes of Chriſt took up the ſight of theſe Kingdoms as they really were. And it is far more proper to conceive thus of this matter, than either to underſtand theſe Kingdoms for the Spiritual Kingdoms of Sins, as ſome do, and to little ſenſe, or to think that his ſhewing theſe Earthly Kingdoms and their glory, was but pointing out where ſuch a Countrey and Kingdom lay, and telling what wealth, pomp, and power it was of, as it is interpreted by others. Nor is it any derogation to our Saviour at all, to conceive, that deluſion was practiſed and propoſed to him in this matter, any more than it was derogation to him, to be aſſaulted and uſed by the Devil in the other temptations. For,

1. Though here had been deceptio viſus, and our Saviours eyes had taken and received this, as a real and a true object, which was but fictitious and phantaſtical, it had but ſhewed the truth of his humane nature, and neither ſin nor imperfection at all. For, 1. Error of ſenſe ſimply conſidered, is not ſin. And 2. ſuch a thing as this might have been done to Adam in innocency, ſeeing deceptio viſus, or error of any other ſenſe, is conſequens naturæ, rather than fructus peccati; an invincible neceſſity in the finiteneſs of our nature, rather than any proper iſſue or fruit of ſinfulneſs.

2. But our Saviour was ſo fully accquainted with the legerdemains of the Devil, and with the courſe of natural things, as that he could not be thus deceived by ſhadows, but judged of this proſpect according as it was indeed, airy, deluſory, and phantaſtical, though the Devil preſented it to him under the notion of real.

3. Now the acting of Satan in this deluſion, was, the framing of an airy Horizon before the eyes of Chriſt, carrying ſuch pompous and glorious appearances of Kingdoms and States, and royalties, and riches in the face of it, as if he had ſeen thoſe very Kingdoms, and their very State indeed. For this prince of the air doth moſt commonly work his deluſions by that element, when he frameth them to the outward ſenſes. And that expreſſion uſed by the Apoſtle, The Prince of the power of the air, Epheſ. 2.2. is worth the looking after to this purpoſe. Κατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ κόσμου τούτου, κατὰ τὸν ἄρχοντα τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ ἀέρος, In time paſt ye walked according to the courſe of this world, [Secundum ſæculum mundi hujus, doth the Vulgar and Eraſmus render it, and it may be with reference to the worlds age of Heatheniſm] according to the Prince [which the Syriack explaineth, as is the will of the Prince] of the power of the air: or according to Beza, Secundum Principem cui poteſtas aeris: Now what is to be underſtood by, the power of the air, is of doubtful and various conjecture; whether to take it for darkneſs, or for the power that the Devil hath upon that element, or, which I rather conceive, for the principality of the air, that is, for the Devils; for in that ſenſe the word ἐξουσία cometh ſo oft in Scripture, that it were needleſs to exemplifie, yet ſee Luke 4. 6. Rom. 13. 1, 2. &c. And according to this conſtruction, the phraſe, the Prince of the Principality of the air, is but the ſame with that in Mark 3.22. the Prince of Devils: And ſo the ſcope of the Apoſtle ſhould intend this, to make a gradation, or to heighten the conception of the Epheſians former impiety, by this aggravation, that they walked not only according to the garb of the world, but according to the will of the very Prince of Devils; and κοσμος ουτος, & ἐξουσια ἀερος, this world, and the principality of the air, to ſtand in Antitheſis one to another, for the viſible world of men, and for the inviſible world of Devils, and αἰὼν and ἄρχων, to ſtand in the like oppoſition, for the rule and courſe of the one, and for the Ruler and Prince of the other. But be the ſenſe of the expreſſion which of theſe it will, it holdeth out the dominion and power that the Devil hath in the air, and upon it, which he exerciſeth accordingly, ſometimes in real and very ſenſible effects indeed, as in raiſing ſtorms and tempeſts, and ſometimes in deluſive and phantaſtical apparitions, as in the thing in hand, and in the blood and frogs of Egypt, which the ſorceres produced: Now in the exhibition of ſuch phantaſmes as theſe, he doth a threefold act at once, namely, condenſate the air that it may may become a viſible object, ſhape it into ſuch or ſuch a figure, and colour it into ſuch or ſuch colour, that it may be an object of this or that repreſentation; and this is no hard thing for the Devil to do, conſidering the activity of his nature as he is a Spirit, and his readineſs to act this activity, that he may deceive. In ſuch a way as this did he deal in his falſe and deluſive miracles in Egypt, in turning water into blood, and producing frogs; not that he did either really, [for it is impoſſible for any creature either to create forms, or to change forms] but his acting was upon the air, by colouring it over the waters, and by condenſating it to the repreſenting of frogs. And it is obſervable, that of thoſe frogs that Moſes produced upon the land, it is ſaid, They dyed and were gathered by the people on heaps, and ſtank, Exod. 8. 13,14. for they were frogs indeed; but of thoſe that were brought up by the Magicians, there is no more mention, for they were but airy and phantaſtick apparitions.

9 If thou wilt fall down and worſhip me.

Here is impudency come to its height, and the Devil ſhewing himſelf in his own colours indeed. Neither of the former temptations, had ſo viſibly and deſperately invited Chriſt to impiety, as this doth with open face: for in the firſt perſwaſion, to turn ſtones into bread, there was ſome colour of Chriſts own benefit, for he was now hungry, and bread might have been a thing of welcomneſs to him: and in the ſecond, to have flown in the air, there might be ſome colour of his honour and repute, in ſhewing himſelf ſo miraculous before the people; as we read that ſome vain men have ſought eſteem by ſuch a vain courſe, as Icarus mentioned by Suetonius in the life of Nero, chap. 12. And Simon Magus, ſo reported of by all Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians, and both theſe not very many years after this time. And Bladud mentioned in our own ſtories, if he lived at any time at all. But to be invited in plain anddown right terms, to fall down and worſhip the Devil, hath no colour at all upon it but naked impiety. What, did not the Devil know Chriſt who he was? that we have proved before that he did: or, did he think that Chriſt knew not who he was? that he could not think, if he knew Chriſt as he did. What ſhall we ſay then to this damned overture of having Chriſt to adore him? why? here he joyneth all his power of temptation together; and would 1. bring Chriſt into a more low fall than he had done Adam; and 2. makes a ſtroke deſperately at him to have bruiſed his head, whereas it was told him only he ſhould bruiſe his heel; and all this, becauſe being of an intolerable impudency, he would obtrude any thing, even beyond all ſenſe, reaſon, and modeſty, to compaſs his own deſign; and ſeeing Chriſt had condeſcended ſo far as to be hurryed by him in the air, he would leave no way unattempted of tempting, if ſo it might have been poſſible to have corrupted innocency now, as he did once in Adam; and to have power over his mind, as he ſaw he had ſo far over his body. And thus hath he done his worſt, and ſhewed his Devilſhip to the utmoſt, to have brought the ſecond Adam to have been a ſinner like the firſt, but here the ſeed of the Woman that was promiſed Adam, bruiſed the head of the Serpent, who would have bruiſed his.

Ver. 10. Get thee hence Satan.

Lukes expreſſing of this hath bred ſome ſcruple, for he hath phraſed it ὕπαγε ὀπίσω μου, rendred by our Engliſh, Get thee behind me Satan; being the very ſame words that our Saviour uſeth to Peter, Mark 8. 33. when he would have perſwaded him not to have been Chriſt, as the Devil would here have perſwaded him to be Antichriſt: Hence hath a doubting been bred with ſome, whether Chriſt commanded the Devil clean away, any more than he did Peter, or only commanded him either to get behind his back, or not to offer to adviſe or direct him in any thing further, as he had impudently done hitherto. The Syriack hath omitted that paſſage in Luke wholly, and ſo hath the Vulgar Latine; and Beza mentioneth four ancient Greek copies that wanted it alſo: But, ſaith he, in the other, and in Theophylact theſe words are found; and ſo are they in the Arabick, and moſt authentick copies, expoſitions and tranſlations. Now the meaning of Chriſt in theſe words, is to pack Satan clean away from him indeed, as is apparent by the expreſſion of Matthew, who ſaith only ὕπαγε, be gone; and by the ſequel it ſelf, for Matthew telleth, that upon theſe words, the Devil departed; But Luke hath added the words ὀπίσω μου, Behind me, becauſe he hath mentioned another temptation after this: and it would have ſeemed that Chriſt had not had command over the Devil, if he had bidden, Be gone Satan, and he had not departed. Therefore though it were true indeed, that the Devil did depart upon theſe words, and tempt Chriſt no more, yet ſince it ſeemeth not ſo in Lukes method, therefore he uſed ſuch an expreſſion as was ſuitable and agreeing to his own method and order; and which might both ſerve the ſame ſenſe that Matthew intended in his expreſſion, and yet withall ſave the ſenſe of Luke himſelf in regard of the ranking of theſe temptations. By the phraſe therefore, therefore, Get thee behind me, he meaneth not, that Satan ſhould only leave adviſing and inſtructing Chriſt what to do, and come behind him, as a diſciple doth behind his Maſter, yet following, and not departing from him: but by it he commandeth the Devil never to offer to tempt and aſſault him in the like kind again; and curbeth his hideous impudency and ſaweineſs that durſt thus aſſail him, &c. And to the ſame tenor may the ſame words of our Saviour to Peter, be readily and facily underſtood, the intention of the temptation only differing.

It is not ſo much material, to queſtion, whether to render this for a ſeaſon, [as our Engliſh, and ſome other Tranſlators do] or, till a ſeaſon, [as the Syrian, Arabick, and ſome others ſeem to do, and the word ἄχρι will very well bear] as it is to inquire, when it was that the Devil returned to aſſault Chriſt again, as this expreſſion of the Evangeliſt ſeemeth to inforce he did. But we ſhall take the conſideration of all theſe together. The Evangeliſt ſaith firſt, That the Devil having finiſhed all the temptation, departed. Now this ending or finiſhing all the temptation, is underſtood by ſome to mean, that when he had propoſed theſe temptations, he had propoſed all manner of temptations whatſoever; and ſo he had, for he had tempted him to luſt of the fleſh, luſt of the eye, and pride of life, which the Apoſtle John makes the heads or generals of all the things that are in the world, 1 John 2. 16. and he had tempted him viſibly and inviſibly, which are the two only ways of his temptations in his own perſon: But it may withal, and rather be underſtood, that the Devil having now done his worſt to have tempted him to ſin, and not ſeeing himſelf prevail in it, he departed, reſolving to aſſail him afterwards in another way. It was told him in the garden, that he ſhould bruiſe his heel; but here, if you obſerve him in all theſe his temptations, he ſtriks at his very head, namely, to have brought Chriſt to have ſinned, and ſo to have ſpoiled himſelf and redemption: but when he ſeeth that his endeavour in this hath been in vain, and that ſtill he was far from bringing Chriſt to ſin, but that Chriſt did foil him in every temptation, he will try no more at this time, nor to this purpoſe, nor in this way, but will reſerve his further enterpriſe till another time, end, and way of tempting. And the firſt of theſe the Evangeliſt means, when he ſaith, He departed from him, ἄχρι καιροῦ: and indeed includeth the other two. The words ἄχρι καιροῦ, if we render them, till a ſeaſon, [which is the moſt natural ſignification of them] may be taken in a double ſenſe; either, till a ſeaſon opportune, or, till a ſeaſon fixed. And I take the latter to be the moſt proper and very meaning of the words. For a more opportune ſeaſon for his temptations than he had had already, Satan could not have wiſhed; for he had had Chriſt alone, he had had him ſo, in the bitter inconveniences of hunger, cold, and watchfulneſs, and had had him ſo much in his power, as to carry him in the air from place to place, and yet with all theſe advantages on his ſide, he could not have his will over him: and therefore there was no expecting any better convenience, or ſeaſon, to bring him to ſin, as he would have had him: But there was a ſeaſon fixed, when Satan muſt bruiſe his heel, for God had ſo told him in the garden, and when he muſt have ſome power over him in ſomething elſe, though he could have none over him to bring him to ſinning; and therefore he departs now unſped of what he came about, for he could not cauſe Chriſt to ſin; but he will wait till that fixed time come, when he is ſure he ſhall ſpeed againſt him ſome other way; and that was when he cauſed his death. And to this very thing Chriſt himſelf ſeemeth to allude in thoſe words, Joh. 14.30. The Prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me; where almoſt every word in a manner faceth ſomething in this ſtory that we have in hand. The phraſe, The Prince of this world, anſwereth that offer that Satan had made him, of giving him all the Kingdoms of the World, For they, ſaith he, are mine to give. The word, cometh, anſwereth the words here, Departed till the ſeaſon: And the words, He hath nothing in me, meaneth, his not being able to infuſe any ſin into Chriſt in any of theſe temptations, that he might thereby lay any claim to him. And this coming of this Prince of the world, was to work his death, as is apparent by the very verſe it ſelf, and as our Saviour himſelf doth further explain it, Luke 22.53. This is the power of darkneſs.

Satans departure therefore from him at this time when he had ended all the temptation, was, 1. With intent to aſſault him again, at the fixed ſeaſon; when he knew he ſhould have power over him to do him ſome hurt, though he could not now. 2. Then to bruiſe his heel, and to cauſe his death, though he could not now break his head, and cauſe him ſin. 3. To aſſault him then by his wicked inſtruments, whom he could not now damage by his wicked ſelf; In one inſtrument [not properly his, but abuſed by him for ſuch a purpoſe] he once tempted Chriſt to ſin, before he aſſaulted him to bring him to ſuffer, and that was in the mouth of Peter, Mark 8. 32. who received the very ſame check for his pains, Get thee behind me Satan, that Satan himſelf did for his laſt temptation.

Matth. 4. ver. 11. And behold, Angels came and miniſtred unto him.

Mark hath told the ſtory of the temptation very ſhort, He was there in the wilderneſs forty days tempted of Satan, and was with the wild beaſts, and the Angels miniſtred unto him: In which relation as he hath given us account of his temptation, which ſhewed him man, ſo hath he alſo of two other things which ſhewed him more: and thoſe were, his ſafety among wild beaſts, and his viſible attendance by Angels: Now he mentioneth only his forty days temptation, which was by Satan inviſibly, and ſpeaketh not a word of the three temptations, when Satan aſſailed him in a bodily ſhape, and yet he ſaith that the Angels miniſtred unto him: which if you will ſtrictly conſtrue according to the very letter of his relation, you muſt conclude, that this miniſtration of Angels was before Satan appeared viſibly to him; and ſo it will follow that the Angels miniſtred to him viſibly, and Satan tempted him inviſibly at the ſame time. But ſince the briefneſs of one Evangeliſt is to be cleared by the larger relation of the other, we are to underſtand Mark by the fuller ſtory of Matthew, and ſo as Matthew doth ſhew you the full hiſtory of the temptation, and teacheth you how to conſtrue Mark's briefneſs upon it; ſo muſt he alſo explain the time of the Angels miniſtration, namely, after all the temptation was ended; which Mark hath left undetermined.

It were no very great Soleciſm in Divinity, to hold, that the Angels might be viſibly attending of Chriſt all thoſe forty days that the Devil was inviſibly tempting him: but ſince it is moſt probable, that Chriſt expoſed himſelf in the nakedſt manner, I mean, in the greateſt plainneſs and meanneſs that might be, to Satans tempting, that ſo his victory over him might be the more glorious; it is alſo very probable, that he called not for ſuch attendance of Angels, but ſuſpended it till his combate was done and the victory obtained. And then [howſoever they did before] The Angels came, ſaith Matthew, and miniſtred unto him.

When the Scripture ſpeaketh of Spirits or Angels coming or going, it doth moſt generally mean it of a viſible and apparent manner, as Gen. 19. 1. & 32.1,2. Jude 6. 11. and in very many other places, and ſo is it to be underſtood here: that after the evil Angel, or the Prince of the evil ſpirits was departed, who had aſſailed Chriſt in a viſible ſhape; the good Angels in viſible appearances alſo came and gave their attendance on him. Their miniſtring unto him, as to particulars, was in bringing to him neceſſaries and proviſions in that his hunger, and in that place where it is likely proviſions were not otherwiſe ſuddenly to be had: ſo the Son of man eateth Angels food, and like Elias is fed by the Angels of the Lord in a deſert place.

And thus hath Chriſt been ſhewed the Son of God by the voice of the Father, and anointed for the great King, Prieſt, and Prophet viſibly by the Holy Ghoſt: And thus hath he ſhewed his power and command over the evil Angels; and the good Angels have owned his Lordſhip and dominion over themſelves; and thus every way atteſted, is he preſently to appear amongſt men as the Miniſter of the Goſpel.

SECTION XII.

S. JOHN Chap. I. Verſ. 15.

JOHN [a] bare witneſs of him, and cried, ſaying, This [b] was he of whom I ſpake, He that [c] cometh after me is preferred before me, for he was before me.

16. And of his fulneſs have all we received, and grace for grace.

17. For the Law was given by Moſes, but grace and truth came by Jeſus Chriſt.

18. No man hath ſeen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is [d] in the boſom of the Father, he hath declared him.

[a] In the Greek it is, John beareth witneſs, and cryed, μαρτυρεῖ καὶ κέκραγε, the former word in the preſent tenſe, and the latter in the præter tenſe; the tenſes being either indifferently put one for another, as the the Tranſlator of Cyrill hath rendred them, Teſtatur, & clamat, or Nove hoc, (as Eraſmus phraſeth it) this ſtrange conſtruction is uſed by the Evangeliſts, to ſhew in the former word μαρτυρεῖ, the continuance of Johns teſtimony; and in the latter word κέκραγε, the openneſs, clearneſs, vigor, and powerfulneſs of it: So Chemnitius, Grotius, Beza, &c. Change of tenſes indeed is no ſtrange thing in Scripture language, as John 4. 28. ἀπῆλθε καὶ λέγει, ſhe departed, and ſaith, &c. yet this alteration ſeemeth to carry ſomething more with it, than meerly change of tenſe, without difference of conſtruction, eſpecially if the ſenſe and ſcope of the whole verſe be conſidered and taken up together, which ſhall be done hereafter in the explanation of it.

[b] Beza conceiveth here that ἦν is put for ἐστὶ, was, for is, for he ſaith he can ſee no reaſon why the præterimperfect tenſe is uſed in this place; but on the other hand, I ſee as little reaſon why John, if he meant to ſay here, this is he, ſhould not ſay, Οὗτος ἐστὶν here, as well as he doth in verſ. 27. & verſ. 30. and I ſuppoſe it will be very hard to give a reaſon, why in the one place he ſhould ſay Οὗτός ἦν, and in the other Οὗτός ἐστὶ, if he meant the ſame thing. But this alſo ſhall be taken into explanation afterward.

[c] Or, that is to come after me, as ὁ ἐρχόμενος ſignifieth, Rev. 1.8.

[d] Εἰς doth often carry the ſenſe of ἐν, as Matth. 2. 23. Luk. 1. 20. Act. 7.4. & 8.23. and ſo may εἰς ἐλευθερίαν τῆς δόξης, Rom. 8. 21. be beſt interpreted in the ſenſe of ἐν ἐλευθερίᾳ, Becauſe the creature it ſelf alſo ſhall be delivered from the bondage of corruption in the glorious liberty of the ſons of God. The prepoſition ἐν, or in, denoting the time; as, ἐν κλάσει ἄρτου, As he was breaking bread, Luke 24.35.

The phraſe, in the boſom, ſee Numb. 11. 12. Deut. 13. 6.

S. JOHN Chap. 1.

19. And this is the record of John, when the Jews ſent Prieſts and Levites from Jeruſalem to ask him [e] Who art thou?

20. And he confeſſed and [f] denied not: but confeſſed, I am not the Chriſt.

21. And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he ſaith, [g] I am not. Art thou that Prophet? And he anſwered, no.

22. Then ſaid they unto him, Who art thou, that we may give an anſwer to them that ſent us? What ſayeſt thou of thy ſelf?

[e] It is more than probable that they that ask him this queſtion, did know who John was both by birth and name: And therefore their quære, who art thou? Is propoſed to him in regard of his function, rather than in regard of his perſon; and meaneth rather, what kind of Miniſter art thou, than, what man art thou? So Ruth 3. 16. מי את בתי Quænam tu filia mea? Who art thou my daughter? that is, Quo ſtatu tu, or, how is it with thee? So 1 Sam. 17. 55. בן מי זה whoſe ſon is this? Not filius cujus, but filius qualis viri hic, what kind of mans ſon is this? as is noted there.

[f] It is a common elegancy of the Scripture, to uſe an affirmative and a negative together, to make out the ſame ſenſe, ſometimes the negative firſt, as Pſal. 118. 17. I ſhall not die but live, &c. ſometimes the affirmative firſt, as Eſay 38. 1. Thou ſhalt die and not live: but a negative between two affirmatives, as here, is for the greater emphaſis and expreſſion.

[g] I am not.] His anſwer is to their queſtion in their ſenſe: For although John were that Elias that was prophecied of to come, Mal. 4. 5. as our Saviour doth clearly expound it, Matth. 11. 14. and the Angel doth tell how it is to be underſtood, Luke 1. 17. yet was he far from being that Elias that the Jews looked for, and in their ſenſe, as ſee hereafter. The Scripture doth ſometimes title things not as they be really in themſelves, but as they be in mens apprehenſions, or to mens purpoſes: as when the Apoſtle calleth preaching, fooliſhneſs, 1 Cor. 1. 21. and when the Holy Ghoſt calleth Ahitophels counſel good, 2 Sam. 17. 14. &c. And ſo John giveth his anſwer here according to the apprehenſions of thoſe that ask him the queſtion concerning Elias.

23. He ſaid, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderneſs; Make ſtreight the way of the Lord, as ſaid the Prophet Eſaias.

24. And they which were ſent, were of the Phariſees.

25. And they asked him, and ſaid unto him, Why baptizeſt thou then, if thou be not that Chriſt, nor Elias, neither that Prophet?

26. John anſwered them, ſaying, I baptize with water, but there [h] ſtandeth one among you, whom you know not;

27. He it is who coming after me, is preferred before me, whoſe ſhoo latchet I am not worthy to unlooſe.

28. Theſe things were done in [i] Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing.

[h] The Syriack readeth it in the preſent tenſe, as doth our Engliſh, and ſo doth Beza and divers others, and ſo indeed might the Greek word very well bear it; but ſince it is ſaid, John ſaw Jeſus coming the next day, it is an argument that he was not preſent there now, and therefore it is moſt properly to be read in the time paſt, there hath ſtood one among you.

[i] The Syr. Arab. Vulg. Cyrill, and divers others, read it not Bethabara, but Bethania; conceiving belike this place to be Ænon, in Chapter 3. ver. 24. with the word Beth put before it (which is moſt common in the Hebr. Tongue with names of places.) For ענון & עינא are of ſo near affinity in the root, and of not ſo far difference in the ſound, that it is poſſible they may be confounded one with another, and it is probable they were ſo in theſe mens opinions.

But the uncontroulable warrant of Authentick copies of Antiquity doth read it Bethabara, and even reaſon it ſelf telleth, that it ought not to be read Bethania: For firſt the Scripture never mentioneth any Bethania near Jordan at all: for the Bethania that it ſpeaketh of, is many miles diſtant from Jordan. And ſecondly that Ænon and Bethania were not the ſame, we ſhall ſee elſwhere.

S. JOHN Chap. 1.

29. The next day John ſeeth Jeſus coming unto him, and ſaith, Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the [k] ſins [l] of the world.

30. This is he of whom I ſaid, After me cometh a man which is preferred before me, for he was before me.

31. And I knew him not but that he ſhould be made manifeſt to Iſrael, therefore am I come baptizing with water.

32. And John bare record, ſaying, I ſaw the Spirit deſcending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him.

33. And I knew him not, but he that ſent me to baptize with water, the ſame ſaid to me; Upon whom thou ſhalt ſee the Spirit deſcending, and remaining on him, the ſame is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghoſt.

34. And I ſaw, and bare record, that this is the Son of God.

35. Again, the next day after, John ſtood, and two of his Diſciples;

36. And looking upon Jeſus as he walked, he ſaith, Behold the Lamb of God.

37. And the two Diſciples heard him ſpeak, and they followed Jeſus.

38. Then Jeſus turned, and ſaw them following, and ſaith unto them, What ſeek ye? They ſaid unto him, [m] Rabbi (which is to ſay, being interpreted, Maſter) where dwelleſt thou?

39. He ſaith unto them, Come and ſee; they came and ſaw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day; for it was about the tenth hour.

40. One of the two which heard John ſpeak, and followed him, was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother.

[k] In the Greek it is ſin, in the ſingular number: which hath cauſed ſome to underſtand it of original ſin only, not minding, it ſeemeth, the common cuſtom of the Scripture to put one number for another, eſpecially by the word ſin in the ſingular number to underſtand all ſins whatſoever.

[l] Here is no ground at all for univerſal redemption; for the word World, ſtandeth here in oppoſition to the Jews, as this very Evangeliſt himſelf explaineth it, 1 Joh. 2.2. And he is the propitiation for our ſins, and not for ours only, of the Jewiſh Nation, but alſo for the ſins of the whole world; and of men of other Nations, and ſo he meaneth here, that Chriſt is the Lamb of God, a ſacrifice, not for the Jews only, but for the Gentiles, and other Nations alſo.

[m] Rabbi.] This and other titles of their Doctors, as Rab, and Rabban, and Ribbi, were but lately grown into uſe and requeſt among them, and ſprang up but very little before the birth of Chriſt. The Prophets, and the men of the great Synagogue, and all the generations till the times of Hillel, had been content with their bare proper names, as Sadoc, Baithus, Antigonus, Shammai, Hillel, Shemaja, Abtalion, and the like very frequent and common in mention in the Jewiſh Authors. But Simeon the ſon of Hillel, (he that took our Saviour in his arms, Luke 2.) was the firſt Doctor among them cum titulo, and he was called Rabban: From his times and forward, titles came exceedingly into requeſt and faſhion among them, and none more common than the title Rabbi, as appeareth frequently in the Goſpel, and infinitely in their own Writers. Now the reaſon why in theſe times, and not before, this titularity grew into uſe and cuſtom ſo much among them, may be gueſſed to be either one, or both theſe two: 1. Becauſe of the conteſtation that had been continually between the Schools of Shammai and Hillel, they commonly differing in opinion and judgment in every thing almoſt that came before them (like Scotiſts and Thomiſts) and very ſeldom or never having the luck to concur and conſent in any opinion: whereupon the Scholars of either took titles upon them, that they might, as it were, by their high ſwoln Epithets out-ſwagger one another. 2. Becauſe their learning, as they ſuppoſed, (at leaſt their pride) was come to its very apex, or perfection: that paſſage in the Talmud concerning the Scholars of Hillel, makes it ſeem no wonder, if they from thoſe times forward did ſwell into titles. Hillel, ſaith the Talmud, had 80 Scholars, 30 of them were fit that the Divine glory ſhould reſt upon them, as it did upon Moſes; 30 others were worthy that the Sun ſhould ſtand ſtill for them as it did for Joſhua; and 20 were of a Form between, &c. It was with the Jews now, as it proved afterward among the Chriſtian Doctors; who when piety, truth, and humility reigned among them, were content with their bare names, as Auguſtine, Ambroſe, Jerome, &c. but when pride and error were got aloft, then the titles of Divus, Seraphicus, Angelicus, and the like, came into faſhion and entertainment.

Theſe Jewiſh titles imported, Maſterſhip, Doctorſhip, or Principality; and were of higher dignity one than another: גדול מרב רבי וגדול מרבי רבן Aruch. in אבוי: Rabbi was a more excellent title than Rab; and Rabban more excellent than Rabbi: Rab was the more proper title of the Babylonian Doctors; Rabbi of the Judæan; and Rabban aſcribed to ſeven men only.

S. JOHN

S. JOHN Chap. 1.

41. He firſt findeth his own brother Simon, and ſaith unto him, We have found the Meſſias, [n] which is, being interpreted, the Chriſt.

42. And he brought him to Jeſus, and when Jeſus beheld him, he ſaid, Thou art Simon the ſon of Jona, thou ſhalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, Peter.

43. The day following, Jeſus would go forth into Galilee, and findeth Philip, and ſaith unto him, Follow me:

44. Now Philip was of Bethſaida, the city of Andrew and Peter.

45. Philip findeth [o] Nathaneel, and ſaith unto him, We have found him of whom Moſes in the Law and the Prophets did write, Jeſus of Nazareth the ſon of Joſeph.

46. And Nathaneel ſaid unto him, Can there any good come out of Nazareth? Philip ſaith unto him [p] Come and ſee.

47. Jeſus ſaw Nathaneel coming to him, and ſaith of him, Behold an Iſraelite indeed, in whom is no guile.

48. Nathaneel ſaith unto him, Whence knoweſt thou me? Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Before that Philip called thee, when thou waſt under the figtree I ſaw thee.

49. Nathaneel anſwereth, and ſaith unto him, Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Iſrael.

50. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Becauſe I ſaid unto thee, I ſaw thee under the figtree, believeſt thou? Thou ſhalt ſee greater things than theſe.

51. And he ſaith unto him, [q] Verily, verily, I ſay unto you; Hereafter you ſhall ſee heaven open, and the Angels of God aſcending and deſcending upon the Son of man.

[n] Which is being interpreted, Chriſt.] Theſe are the words of the Evangeliſt the hiſtorian, and not the words of Andrew: For it was needleſs for him to tell Peter, what was the meaning of Meſſias, and accordingly the Syriack Tranſlater hath omitted this clauſe: and that in Verſ. 42. which is by interpretation, Peter; and that alſo, Chap. 4. 25. which is by interpretation, Chriſt, as knowing it unneceſſary to tell an Hebrew, or a Syrian, what is meant by Meſſias, or Cephas.

[o] We find the name Nathaneel in the Old Teſtament alſo; as, 1 Chron. 15. 24. Ezra 10. 22. &c. But Philip, and Andrew, and Nicodemus, &c. were names of a latter edition, taken up into uſe ſince the Grecian power and language had overſpread Judea, and thoſe Eaſtern Countries. This Nathaneel was of Cana of Galilee, Joh. 21. 2. one of the firſt Diſciples called, and that continued with Jeſus to the very laſt, as it appeareth by that place in John: Now ſince all theſe that are mentioned in this Chapter by name, as Peter, and Andrew, and Philip, were made Apoſtles, it is ſomewhat ſtrange if Nathaneel miſſed the like place.

[p] Come and ſee.] A very common phraſe among Jewiſh Writers; תא חזי in the Talmud language; and בוא וראה in the common Hebrew. They uſe it when they are about to produce any demonſtration, or to declare a matter: and ſometime in ſtead of it they uſe תא שמע come and hear, and בוא ולמוד come and learn: as ſee Tauch. fol. 1. col. 2. and fol. 57. col. 1.

[q] Verily, verily.] Gr. Amen, Amen: This phraſe ſhall be opened in the explication of the Verſe: Here let the Reader only obſerve ſome peculiar uſe of the word Amen among the Jews: The Judges adjured a man, ſaying, We adjure thee by the Lord God of Iſrael, or by him whoſe name is Merciful, that thou haſt nothing of this mans in thy hand, and he anſwered, Amen. Or they ſaid N. the ſon of N. is curſed of the Lord God of Iſrael, or of him whoſe name is Merciful, if ſuch a mans goods be in his hand, and he diſcover it not; and he anſwered, Amen. Maymon. tract. Shevugnoth. ver. 11. And ſo he relateth concerning vows, That whoſoever vowed any holy thing, and bound it up with Amen, he was tied, &c. Vid. Sam. Petit. variarum Lect. lib. 1. cap. 7. who concludeth hereupon thus, Cum dicit Chriſtus, Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, idem eſt ac ſi diceret, Juratus vobis dico.

Reaſon of the Order.

THE Evangliſt John, of all the four, hath only given us an account of what paſſed from John the Baptiſt either in doctrine or action, from the time of Chriſts baptizing, till Johns impriſonment; yea, (ſet the temptation aſide) there is none of the four but he, that hath told us any paſſage concerning Chriſt himſelf in all that ſpace. For the very next thing that Matthew and Mark relate, after they have done with the ſtory of the temptation, is about Johns impriſoning, Matth. 4. 11, 12. Mark 1. 13, 14. And Luke, though he expreſs not that particular thing in clear terms, yet doth he in the very next ſtory after the temptation, ſpeak of paſſages that were not done till after that time, as will be ſeen in their due place. There is therefore in all the three a general ſilence of any actions of our Saviours, for the ſpace of above a whole twelve month together, namely from about the middle of our November when the temptation was ended, till about the latter end of November come twelve month, when Jeſus upon the report of Johns

Johns impriſonment, departs into Galilee, as we ſhall take up the time more particularly, when we come to Joh. 4. 35. Now why the three Evangeliſts ſhould be ſo unanimouſly ſilent in ſo great a matter, for ſo long a time, needs not be queſtioned, ſince the Holy Ghoſt hath provided that by a fourth, that ſhould be ſupplied what they had omitted. The Evangeliſt John therefore doth in this Section, and from hence forward to the end of the fourth Chapter, give us the ſtory of John the Baptiſt, and of our Saviour from the time of our Saviours being baptized by him, till his arrival in Galilee after Johns impriſonment: And whereas the other three had only mentioned the actions of John, and his teſtimony of Chriſt before his baptiſm, this Evangeliſt doth in this Section give us account of more actions of, and more teſtimonies concerning Chriſt after. Therefore it needeth not to breed any ſcruple to any intelligent Reader, to ſee in this Chapter Peter and Andrew following Jeſus before he call them, and that even while the Baptiſt is at liberty, and to ſee in Matth. 4. and Luke 4. Peter and Andrew called before they follow Jeſus, and the Baptiſt then ſhut up in priſon: I ſay, it needs not to breed any ſcruple, ſince theſe are relations of two ſeveral ſtories, done and acted at a great diſtance of time; that in this Chapter but a little while after Chriſt was baptized, and that in Matth. 4. a whole twelve month after.

Now this Section that is before us conſiſteth of ſeveral ſtories, and for the clearing and demonſtrating of their proper order, it will be requiſite to ſhew the ſubſequence of them one to another, and the ſubſequence of them all to the temptation of Chriſt, which was treated of in the Section before. For the evidencing of which, let it but be firſt obſerved, that all theſe paſſages here mentioned, came to paſs after Chriſt was baptized, as was ſaid before, and as it is apparent, Verſ. 15. 32, 34. and then to caſt the whole Section, or at leaſt the beginning of it, into an Hiſtorical paraphraſe, will beſt ſhew the order.

As ſoon therefore as Chriſt was baptized, and the Spirit was viſibly come down upon him, immediately, (as Mark expreſſeth it) the ſame Spirit driveth him, or catcheth him away from Jordan in ſome viſible rapture towards the wilderneſs; ſo that thoſe that were preſent could ſee it, as it is moſt probable, and take notice of it at the very inſtant and moment of his taking away, though they had not obſerved or taken notice of him before, nor ſaw him again at that time any more. And ſuch a ſodain rapture, and inviſible impulſion of the Spirit, ſeemeth to have given occaſion to John the Baptiſt, to cry out with vehemency, This was he of whom I ſpake: For it ſeemeth by thoſe words, that Chriſt had been there with that company to whom John ſpeaketh, but was not preſent at this time when he ſpeaketh to them: For had he been preſent, it had been more proper to have ſaid, This is he, than, this was: And had there not been ſome viſible demonſtration and pointing out of Chriſt, in the ſight, and to the knowledge of the people, they had been never the wiſer to underſtand, who it ſhould be that John meant by the word this; But when all the people preſent had ſeen one of the company rapt and taken away ſuddenly by a viſible catching of the Spirit from the midſt of them, and then heard John to cry out, This was he of whom I ſpake, all their thoughts would readily fix upon the proper object whom John intended, and they would underſtand then that that was the Meſſias, though they had not known, nor minded him whilſt he was amongſt them. And this ſeemeth to me to be the proper reaſon why the Evangeliſt uſeth the preterimperfect tenſe, (which Beza could ſee no reaſon why he ſhould) becauſe he ſpeaketh of Chriſt which had been with John at Jordan, and was but newly gone out of his ſight. So that the firſt verſe of this Section, according to this conſtruction, doth properly come in its order, in the time between Chriſts baptizing, and his getting into the wilderneſs; and accordingly it might have been laid after the very firſt verſe of the laſt Section, and there have made this ſerics of the Story, And immediately after the baptiſm of Jeſus, the Spirit driveth him into the wilderneſs; and when he was rapt away, and but newly out of ſight, John bare witneſs, and cried, ſaying, This was he of whom I ſpake; but I was unwilling to part that ſtory which lieth ſo joined, and it is timely enough to give notice of the order in this place.

Now the next ſtory in this Section, of the diſcourſe betwixt the meſſengers of the Jews and John, they queſtioning who he was, and what he meant to baptize, it was juſt in the time while Chriſt was under the laſt temptation, or as he was returning from the high mountain, whereſoever it was, to Jordan again: for the Text telleth expreſly, that on the next day after this diſpute, Jeſus appeareth at Jordan in the ſight of John, ver. 29. and from thence forward the connexion of the ſtories following is ſo clear, ver. 35. & 43. that it needeth no further demonſtration.

Ver. 15. John bare witneſs of him, and cried, &c.

THE Evangeliſt from the beginning of the Chapter to this place, and in it doth purpoſely go about to ſhew what declarations and demonſtrations were given of Chriſt, both before his coming in the fleſh and after: what before, we ſhewed in their proper place upon the Chapter to the fourteenth verſ. what after, is ſhewed in this verſe, and the next that follows: In the fourteenth verſe, he tells, that Chriſt declared himſelf to be the only begotten of the Father, by converſing among his Diſciples, full of grace and truth: And in this verſe he ſheweth how John declared and publiſhed him to all that came to be baptized, and in the next verſe, how his Diſciples received of his fulneſs, &c.

Now Johns manner of teſtimony of him, he expreſſeth by theſe two words, He beareth witneſs, and cried, words of different tenſes, as was obſerved before, and of ſome difference of ſenſe in that diverſity.

The word μαρτυρεῖ of the preſent tenſe, is properly to be underſtood, 1. Of Johns whole Miniſtery, Function, and Office, as verſ. 7. explaineth it, He came for a witneſs: not to be reſtrained to this or that particular, vocal and verbal teſtimony that John gave of Chriſt, no nor to all the vocal teſtimonies that he gave of Chriſt, but to be dilated to Johns whole courſe and miniſtry that he beareth witneſs to Chriſt, in that God raiſed up ſuch a one to be his fore-runner: And the word κέκραγε in the præter tenſe, is to be applied to the particular teſtimony that John gave of Chriſt in that his miniſtery: ſo that the former word referreth to Johns perſon, and his whole function, and the latter only to the manner of his executing of one particular of that function.

2. The word μαρτυρεῖ may alſo include Johns martyrdom for the truth, by which he beareth witneſs unto Chriſt even unto this time, as Abel being dead, yet ſpeaketh, as Heb. 11.4. And in this ſenſe ſhould I underſtand thoſe words of this ſame Evangeliſt in his firſt Epiſtle, Chap. 5. verſ. 6, 8. Jeſus Chriſt came by water and blood; and the Spirit beareth witneſs. And there are three that bear witneſs in earth, the Spirit, and the Water, and Blood; that is, the Spirit of Propheſie, Baptiſm, and Martyrdom: all three agreeing in one teſtimony of Chriſt, that he is he: The Prophets ſpeaking ſo jointly of him, Baptiſm bringing in ſo many unto him, and Martyrs ſealing unto him with their deareſt blood: The ſcores that have propheſied of him, the thouſands that have ſuffered death for him, and the many thouſands that have been baptized into him, bearing witneſs of him on earth; as the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt do in heaven.

§. He that cometh after me, is preferred before me.

We do not find that John had at any time before Chriſts baptiſm, given any ſuch teſtimony as theſe words. He had ſaid indeed, A mightier than I cometh after me, whoſe ſhoos I am not worthy to bear, and whoſe ſhoo latchet I am not worthy to unlooſe, as the other three Evangeliſts agree in the relating of it; but theſe words, He is preferr'd before me, for he was before me, we heard not of till now: Yet is it to be conceived that the Baptiſt ſpeaketh to the ſame ſenſe now that he did before, as verſ. 27. ſheweth his intention, though he have altered his expreſſions: For it is a very common cuſtom of Scripture, in alledging of former ſpeeches, to give the ſenſe, but not to keep exactly to the words. And yet it is not without its weight, that whereas Johns conſtant teſtimony of Chriſt before his baptiſm was, A mightier than I cometh, he ſhould as conſtantly after his baptiſm uſe this, He coming after me is preferr'd before me; as here, and verſ. 27. & 30.

Now the reaſon of this ſeemeth to be, becauſe Chriſt had now appeared, and no mighty work had been yet ſhewed among the people by him; no nor any thing done in their eyes or hearing, which might give them occaſion to conceive, that he was mightier or ſtronger than John. The appearance of the Holy Ghoſt, and the voice from heaven, they had neither ſeen nor heard; only his catching away from Jordan at this time, it is probable they ſaw, therefore John to clear their apprehenſions from any carnal miſconſtruction of his words, explains himſelf, that by ἰσχυρότερός μου, A mightier than I, they were not ſo to underſtand, as to look for any preſent viſible demonſtration of power or miraculouſneſs from him, but that they ſhould take notice that he of whom he ſpake thoſe words, was before him in rank and dignity, for he was before him in time and office, nature and qualifications, though he came after him.

Ἔμπροσθέν μου γέγονεν: which the Vulgar Latine hath dangerously translated, Ante me factus est, he was made before me; and accordingly the Arians in ancient time made use of this place in this sense, against the eternity of the Son. Whereas the word ἔμπροσθεν (as Beza well observeth it) in the New Testament, doth constantly refer to place, and not to time, as Mar. 1.2. Matth. 17.2. Luke 12.8. & 19.27, 28. and divers other places, and therefore our English hath well expressed it with an intimation of such a thing, is preferr'd before me: For ἔμπροσθέν μου & πρῶτός μου in this speech of the Baptist, must needs have a distinct and different sense, because the word ὅτι between them, doth shew that the one is made the reason of the other; He was before me in place and preheminence, because he was before me in time and being. Now the word γέγονε which seemeth to refer to the time past, (and which hath occasioned ἔμπροσθεν by some to be understood concerning priority of time) is to be construed in such a construction, as the word γενήσε is in Matth. 21.42. and γεγόνεν, Acts 4.11. words not of the present tense, and yet necessarily to be rendred in the present time, I become the head of the corner.

Ver.16. And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace.

I. These are the words of the Evangelist, and not of the Baptist, and so they are held to be by Cyrill, Chrysostom, Chemnitius, and some others; though there be that hold that they are the Baptists words; and some that think no matter whether's words they be taken to be, either the one, or the other.

They appear to be spoken by the Evangelist: 1. By their agreement with his words in ver. 14. for there he speaketh of Christs being full of grace and truth, and here, of their enjoying of his fulness. 2. By the agreement of the next following verse, which no question proceeded from the same speaker, with the 14 verse also. 3. By the agreement of vers. 18. which as doubtless proceeded from the same speaker likewise, with the same words of the same Evangelist, 1 Joh. 4.12. 4. Those that the Baptist was speaking to in the verse preceding, were as yet altogether ignorant of Christ, and unacquainted with his appearing, and therefore it was most improper for John to say of himself, and of them together, All we have received, when they had yet received little or nothing at all. 5. The very sense of the words will demonstrate them to be the speech of the Evangelist, and not of the Baptist, as will appear in taking them up.

II. The verse consisteth of two several and distinct clauses, and the word [and] in the middle of it, though it be a conjunctive particle, yet plainly forceth this distinction; for though it is not to be denied, that there is καὶ & ἡ ἐπεξηγητικὸν, very frequent in Scripture, that is, the word [and] very oft bringing on a latter clause, which speaketh but the very same thing, though in plainer terms, with the former, and in explanation of it, yet is this here unlikely to be such a one, though held by divers so to be; for I suppose it will be very hard to match or parallel this verse in all the Scripture with a καὶ that is of such a tenour: The verse therefore being thus two distinct and several clauses, it is inevitably and necessarily to be construed in such a kind of syntax and construction; Of his fulness we have received somewhat: and we have also received grace for grace: And this was well observed by Austine long ago, He saith not, saith he, of his fulness we have received grace for grace; but, of his fulness we have all received, and grace for grace; so that he would have us to understand, that we have received somewhat of his fulness, and grace over and above.

III. Although it be most true that all the Saints of God have received all their graces of the fulness of Christ, for so Chrysostom and Cyrill understand and interpret the word we; and though it be as true, that the holy Patriarchs and Prophets that were before John, received all their gifts and endowments from the same fulness; for so some others interpret that word we, as if John should mean them, and joyn himself with them, when he saith, We have all received, yet it seemeth that the meaning and intention of the Evangelist in this place, is neither the one nor the other, but that by the word we in this place, he understandeth himself only and his fellow Disciples: For 1. he had used the word in that sense, vers. 14. he dwelt among us, and we saw his glory; where the words us and we do necessarily signifie the Apostles or Disciples only, as was shewed there, and how can the same word we be taken in this verse, which is but two verses off, any way so properly as in the same sense as it was there. 2. The Evangelist is in this place shewing how Christ was declared and published by his Ministers, as well as he shewed himself in his own person: And as John the Baptist was the first, so we the Apostles and Disciples were next appointed to be Preachers and proclaimers of him, as we shall see by the scope of these verses that lye together, by and by.

IV. Now

IV. Now that the Apoſtles received exceeding much from, or of Chriſts fulneſs, there needeth no proving to thoſe that have read the Goſpel: They received of that, exceeding much favour, exceeding much ſanctification, exceeding much knowledge, exceeding much miraculous power, exceeding much of the Spirit, and over and beſide all this, they received grace for grace.

V. This latter clauſe hath almoſt as many ſeveral interpretations given of it, as there be words in the whole verſe, I ſhall not ſpare to preſent the Reader with the variety, becauſe I will not deny him his choice.

Auſtine in the place lately alledged, paraphraſeth it thus, *We received of his fulneſs, firſt grace, and then again we received grace for grace. What grace received we firſt? Faith; walking in faith we walk in grace. What meaneth grace for grace? By faith we * obtain God, juſtification, and life eternal.* * Promeremur.

Chryſoſtome in Homil. 14. on John, gives it thus, Grace for grace, which for which? The New for the Old; for as there is a righteouſneſs and a righteouſneſs, a faith and a faith, adoption and adoption, a glory and a glory, a law and a law, a worſhip and a worſhip, a covenant and a covenant, a ſanctifying and a ſanctifying, a baptiſm and a baptiſm, ſacrifice and ſacrifice, temple and temple, circumciſion and circumciſion, ſo is there a grace and a grace; but they as types, theſe as the truth: And much in the ſame tract goeth Cyrill, lib. 2. on John, cap. 21. comparing the Evangelical grace given by Chriſt, with the legal grace under Moſes; and of the ſame judgment is Beza. Phil. 3. 6. Rom. 1. 17. 2 Cor. 3. 11. Rom. 8. 4, &c.

Tolet on this place gloſſeth it thus, Grace is given to us becauſe of the grace that is in Chriſt, and we are made acceptable to God becauſe of him: or, as Camerarius that embraceth the ſame ſenſe doth expreſs it; We have received the favour towards us, becauſe of the favour of God towards the Son. Maldonat ſaith, Grace for grace is, that ſome have received one grace, ſome another. De Dieu taketh it, one grace becauſe of another, the latter becauſe of the former, the firſt grace is the cauſe of the ſecond, and the ſecond of a third, and ſo on. Some take for one grace upon another, or graces multiplied. Others, for grace in us agreeable to the grace in Chriſt, the like in kind, though not in degree: And for concluſion, there is that ſuppoſeth, that grace for grace, meaneth only grace freely beſtowed, and ἀντὶ χάριτος doth only interpret the Hebrew word חנם or gratis.

All which interpretations are Indeed true in regard of the matter contained in them, yet whether they are pregnant expoſitions of this place, the ſcope of the place, and the intention of the Evangeliſt in it, may give occaſion to doubt and ſcruple. For the Evangeliſt is apparently hitherto and here ſpeaking of manifold declarations that were of Chriſt, or of the ſeveral ways and means by which he was revealed, as hath been obſerved: and therefore it is the ſureſt way to interpret theſe words ſuitable to that ſcope and intention. And accordingly I cannot but apprehend and render theſe words ſo, as that the word grace in the firſt place ſhould ſignifie the grace of Apoſtleſhip, and grace in the latter place, mean grace in the hearts of the hearers, and the word ἀντὶ, or for, ſhould denote the final cauſe, which conſtruction being taken up in this paraphraſe, will more eaſily be underſtood. And of his fulneſs all we his Diſciples have received exceeding full and eminent gifts: and withal we have received the grace of Apoſtleſhip for the doctrine of the free grace of God, and for the propagating of grace in the hearts of others: And as the ſcope of the Evangeliſt draweth the verſe unto ſuch a ſenſe, ſo doth the force and vertue of the language juſtifie it. For firſt, the word χάρις is ſometime in Scripture applied to ſuch a conſtruction, as we put upon it in the firſt part of the clauſe, as Rom. 1. 5. Ἐλάβομεν χάριν καὶ Ἀποστολήν, We have received grace, (the very word uſed here) and Apoſtleſhip, which Beza well gloſſeth, Gratiam & Apoſtolatum, id eſt, gratiam Apoſtolatus, that is, the grace of Apoſtleſhip: Beneficium eximiæ plane liberalitatis, quod alibi vocat, χάρισμα, 1 Tim. 4. 14. 2 Tim. 1. 6. And in the ſame ſenſe the Apoſtle ſpeaking, 1 Cor. 15. 9. I am the leaſt of the Apoſtles, which am not worthy to be called an Apoſtle, he addeth, χάριτι δὲ θεοῦ εἰμὶ ὃ εἰμὶ, καὶ ἡ χάρις αὐτοῦ ἡ εἰς ἐμὲ, &c. But by the grace of God I am what I am, and his grace on me was not in vain, &c.

Secondly, The Propoſition ἀντὶ doth ſometimes, and very properly denote the end and intention of a thing, and hath regard to the final cauſe, as 1 Cor. 11. 15. Hair is given to a woman, ἀντὶ περιβολαίου, that it may be a covering, Heb. 12. 2. ἀντὶ τῆς προκειμένης, Becauſe of the joy that lay before him, Matth. 20. 28. Λύτρον ἀντὶ πολλῶν, A redemption in behalf of many, &c. And ſo among prophane Authors it is not ſeldom uſed in the ſenſe of Gratia, or for the ſake, as ἀνθ' ὅτου, cujus gratia, ἀντὶ μηδενὸς, non nullius gratia: ἀντὶ τούτου τοῦ διδάγματος, hujus doctrinæ gratia, &c. And ſo may it very fitly be interpreted in this place, we received grace becauſe of, or for the ſake of grace, or, in behalf of grace; that is, that it may be advanced in the thoughts, and propagated and wrought in the hearts of others.

Ver. 17. For the Law was given by Moses, &c.

He had in the verses preceding treated concerning the declaration of Christ before his coming, and after it; both in the Law, and under the Gospel: And in the three last verses before, he had handled this latter head, viz. how he was declared in the Gospel after his coming.

1. In his own person and converse, vers. 14. The Word became flesh, and dwelt in us, full of grace and truth, and we saw his glory, &c.

2. In the Ministery of John the Baptist, ver. 15. John bare witness of him, and cried, saying, &c.

3. In the Ministery of the Apostles, ver. 16. Of his fulness we have all received, &c.

And now he cometh to weigh the tenor of the Law and of the Gospel; in both which Christ was thus declared, and to compare them together, and the two persons that were the chief Ministers in the exhibition of them, Christ and Moses: the two persons in regard of their Ministery of the doctrine of salvation: and the two things in regard of their tenor, clearness, and exhibition of that doctrine.

The word For in the beginning of the verse, joyneth this verse, and that that went before together, and it pieceth either to the whole verse, to make up this sense, We received the grace of Apostleship for the preaching of the Gospel, as Moses did the Law; or rather to the last word grace, to the result of this sense, we received Apostleship for the propagation and advancement of grace, whereas Moses gave the Law for the advancement of works: for so the opposition that is in this verse, doth hold it out; as may be observed.

§. But grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.

These two words grace and truth stand here in Antithesis or opposition to the moral and ceremonial Law, which was given by Moses; For though Christ was the giver of the Law, as well as of the Gospel, and though the giving of the Law was a work of grace, and the doctrine of the Law, a work of truth, yet if the tenor of the Law and the Gospel be compared together, they will be found to differ mainly in these particulars, though there be a grace and truth to be found in either of them.

First, The Law indeed held out the doctrine of Salvation, and taught of good things to come, but it was so darkly and obscurely, and in such vailed types and shadows, that it was rather groped after, than seen; and therefore those things are called darkness at the fifth verse of this Chapter: and the Jews that lived under them, yea and gained salvation from the knowledge of them, yet are said to be, not perfect without us, Heb. 11. 40. that is, imperfect in the knowledge of the doctrine of Salvation, till the Gospel brought us Gentiles in. But the Gospel revealed Christ, and the way of salvation so clearly, and in so evident and plain a manner, that all those types, shadows, predictions, and representations, received their equity, accomplishment, and fulfilling, and it shewed apparently, what was the substance and intention of them; so that what the Law held out in figures, the Gospel did in truth.

Secondly, Although the Law were in the spirit and marrow of it a Doctrine of Faith, yet in the letter and outward administration of it, it was but a messenger of Death, 2 Cor. 3. 7. challenging exact performance, which no man could yield, and denouncing a curse upon him that performed it not, and so concluded all men under sin and a curse; but the Gospel cometh and preacheth to another tune, and to a more comfortable tenor, promising remission to the penitent, though they had not performed what the Law required, and assuring salvation to the believer, though he had no works nor righteousness of his own to own; and thus it speaketh grace and pardon, whereas the other did a curse and condemnation: And therefore is it divinely thus opposed by the Evangelist, betwixt the Law and the Gospel in these two particulars, according to the two parts of the Law Moral and Ceremonial, and according to the two main Doctrines of the Gospel, Repentance and Believing.

For the Moral called for obedience, and challenged them under condemnation that obeyed it not: but grace and pardon came by Christ, and was offered in the Gospel to those that should repent for their not obeying.

The Ceremonial Law preached Christ under obscure representations, and difficult to grope him through, but the truth of what those obscurities involved, and what those representations figured, came by Christ, and the Gospel holds it out, and calls for faith in him that hath accomplished them: And thus is grace and truth said to come by Jesus Christ, and these to be the tenor of the Gospel in opposition to the Law, not as grace opposeth ungraciousness, but as it opposeth condemning, nor as truth opposeth falshood, but as it opposeth shadows.

Verſ. 18. No man hath ſeen God at any time.

This is ſpoken from Exod. 33. about Moſes his deſiring to ſee the Lord.

The foregoing verſe made a difference between Moſes and Chriſt, which this verſe purſueth; Moſes deſired to ſee God, but could not ſee him, Exod. 33. 20. for no man hath ſeen God, or can ſee him, and live, but Chriſt hath been in his boſom, hath ſeen him, and revealed him. Moſes beggeth to know the way of God, and God promiſeth him the company of his preſence, verſ. 13, 14. He beggeth again to ſee his glory, and God anſwereth him, that he will ſhew him his goodneſs, verſ. 18,19. and more of God he ſaw not, and ſo much of God hath none ſeen beſides him, but only the begotten Son which is in the boſom of the Father. The ſtory of Moſes is divinely alluded to in this place; for as concerning the preſence of God, the Evangeliſt ſaith, he dwelt among us. As concerning his glory, he ſaith, that they beheld it; and as concerning his goodneſs, he concludeth, he was full of grace and truth, verſ. 14. And though no man hath ſeen God at any time, yet Chriſt imaged him forth among his Diſciples, with a glory agreeing to the only begotten Son of God, and he hath declared him plainly in the doctrine of the Goſpel, a doctrine full of grace and truth.

§. He hath declared him.

It is apparent by this clauſe, that the Evangeliſts main intention hereabout, is to ſpeak of the doctrine and declaration of God, Chriſt, and the Goſpel, and the publication of all unto the world; He ſpeaks of Johns publiſhing of this, ver. 15. and of Johns publiſhing of this again, v. 19. and of Moſes publiſhing of this in his kind, ver. 17. and of Chriſts doing it in his kind, ver. 18. and therefore certainly it cannot but be unconſonant to the ſcope of the place, and to the purpoſe of the Penman, to interpret the 16 verſe clean to another tune, about receiving grace of remiſſion and ſanctification, and this is that that hath mainly induced me to interpret it as I have done, becauſe I ſee it plainly that the Evangeliſt applies himſelf in the whole context to treat concerning the witneſſes, and the publication and declaration of Chriſt and the Goſpel.

Verſ. 19. The Jews ſent Prieſts and Levites.

The Baptiſm and Miniſtery of John was of ſo ſtrange a tenor, as was obſerved before, [viz. that whereas the Law preached for works, he ſhould call for repentance, and whereas Baptiſm had been uſed hitherto for admiſſion of heathens to the Religion of the Jews, he ſhould now uſe it to admit the Jews to a new Religion] it is no wonder if that Court who were to take notice and cognizance of matters of this nature, were very inquiſitive and ſcrutinous after the buſineſs, to know Johns authority and his intention. It is rather to be wondred at, that they had let him alone all this while, and never had him in examination yet. John had now followed this courſe and calling, about eight months together, and ſix of theſe eight had he ſpent in Judea, in their own country, and yet for ought we read, they had never quarrelled with him till this very time: now what the cauſe of their long-forbearing ſhould be, is hardly worthy the inquiring after, only this we cannot but acknowledge a chief reaſon of it, namely, God ſo diſpenſing and diſpoſing, that his Miniſtery might run interrupted, or without any let, till Chriſt ſhould begin to ſhew himſelf in his Miniſtery; which the very next day after this diſpute he did: And ſo the Goſpel might have no ſtop in this beginning of it, but while Chriſt preached not, John ſhould preach without trouble, and when John began to be troubled, Chriſt ſhould then be ready to preach.

The ſcrutiny and judging of a Prophet, belonged only to the Sanhedrin or great Council at Jeruſalem; and ſo is the Talmudick tradition, in the Treatiſe Sanhedrin Perek. 1. They judge not a Tribe, nor a falſe Prophet, nor the High Prieſt, but in the judicatory of Seventy and one; and to this law and practiſe of theirs, thoſe words of Chriſt relate in Luke 13.33. It cannot be that a Prophet periſh out of Jeruſalem: becauſe a Prophet could not be judged upon life and death in any place but there.

This Court and Councel ſent theſe meſſengers to John to make enquiry after him, and after his authority; and ſo is the word, the Jews, to be underſtood in this verſe, for the repreſentative body of the Jews in the great Judicatory. And they ſend Prieſts and Levites to examine him, as men of the greateſt knowledge and learning in the Law, and men of the likelieſt abilities to try him, and to diſpute and diſcourſe with him according to that in Mal. 2. 7. The Prieſts lips ſhould keep knowledge, and they ſhould ſeek the Law at his mouth.

Verſ. 20. But confeſſed I am not the Chriſt.

We do not perceive by the Text, that this queſtion, whether he were the Chriſt, or no, was propoſed to him at all, yet he giveth ſatisfaction to this firſt: partly, becauſe the time of Chriſts appearing was now generally thought by the Nation to be at hand, Luke 2. 26, 38. & 19. 11. & 24. 31. Joh. 4. 25. &c. and partly, becauſe the eminency of John had made the people look upon him, with ſome queſtioning whether he were not the Chriſt, Luke 3. 15.

Verſ. 21. Art thou Elias?

When he hath reſolved them that he is not the Meſſias, they preſently queſtion whether he be not Elias, Meſſias his fore-runner: for their expectation was of the fore-runners bodily coming, as well as of Chriſts. Their opinions concerning Elias his firſt coming, and who he was then, and of his latter coming, and what they look for from him then, it is not impertinent to take up a little, in their words and Authors.

Some of our Rabbins of happy memory (ſaith Levi Gerſhom) have held, that Elias was Phinehas; and this they have held, becauſe they found ſome correſpondency betwixt them. And behold it is written in the Law, that the bleſſed God gave him his covenant of peace. And the Prophet ſaith, My Covenant was with him of life and peace: And by this it ſeemeth that God gave to Phinehas length of days to admiration: And behold we find that he was Prieſt in the days of the Concubine at Gibeah, and in the days of David we find it written, And Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar was ruler over them of old, and the Lord was with him, 1 Chron. 9.20. And he was the Angel that appeared to Gedeon and to Jephthah, and the Spirit of the Lord carried him like an Angel, as we find alſo of Elias. And for this it is ſaid, They ſhall ſeek the Law at his mouth, for he is the Angel of the Lord; and for this cauſe alſo he ſaith, Before time, and the Lord was with him. And behold we find Elias himſelf ſaying unto the Lord, Take now my life from me, for I am no better than my fathers: meaning, that it was not for him to live always in this world, but a certain ſpace after the way of the earth, for he was no better than his fathers: We find alſo that he died not, after he was taken away from the head of Eliſha, for there came afterward a writing of Elias to Jehoram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat, as it is mentioned in the book of Chronicles. Thus Ralbag on 1 King. 17. And thus the Jews hold Phinehas and Elias to have been but one and the ſame man.

And what they held concerning Elias his ſingular eminency for Propheſie whilſt he lived, it appeareth by R. Samuel Lanjado, in his Comment on 2 King. 2. Elias, ſaith he, was ſo indued with Propheſie, that many of the children of the Prophets propheſied by his means: Our wiſe men of happy memory, ſay, Whilſt Elias was not laid up, the Holy Ghoſt was in Iſrael, as it is ſaid, the children of the Prophets that were at Bethel ſaid to Eliſha, To day God will take thy Maſter from thy head: they went and ſtood afar off, and they paſſed over Jordan: It may be becauſe they were but a few: the ſenſe telleth, that there were fifty men of the ſons of the Prophets. It may be they were private men: The text ſaith, Thy Maſter: It is not ſaid, our Maſter, but thy Maſter; ſhewing that they were wiſe men like Elias: When Elias was taken up [ונגנז treaſured up] the Holy Ghoſt departed from them, as it is ſaid, And they ſaid, Behold there is with thy ſervants fifty men, men of ſtrength, let them go and ſeek thy Maſter, &c.

And concerning the departure of Elias, and his eſtate after, the ſame Author giveth the opinion of his Nation, a little after in theſe words: I believe the words of our wiſe men of happy memory, That Elias was taken away in a whirlewind in the Heaven, that is, in the air, and the Spirit took him to the earthly paradiſe, and there he abideth in body and ſoul: therefore they ſay that Elias died not, and they ſay moreover that he went not into the firmament: And they ſay that ſome have ſeen him in the School [בבית המדרש] And that he ſhall come before the great and terrible day of the Lord come.

Now his coming before the day of the Lord, they hold to be twofold, one inviſible, as that he cometh to the circumciſion of every child, and therefore they ſet him a chair, and ſuppoſe he ſitteth there, though they ſee him not: And the Angel of the Covenant which you deſire, behold he cometh, Mal.3.1. The Lord ſhall come to his Temple, this is the King Meſſias, who alſo is the Angel of the Covenant, or he ſaith, The Angel of the Covenant in reference to Elias: And ſo it is ſaid, That Elias was zealous for the Covenant of Circumciſion, which the Kingdom of Ephraim reſtrained from themſelves, as it is ſaid, I have been exceeding zealous for the Lord God of Iſrael, for the children of Iſrael have forſaken thy Covenant. He ſaith unto him, Thou waſt zealous in Shittim, [Phinehas in Numb.25.] and art thou zealous here concerning Circumciſion? As thou liveſt, Iſrael ſhall not do the Covenant of Circumciſion, till thou ſeeſt it with thine eyes: From hence they have appointed to make an honorable Chair for Elias, who is called the Angel of the Covenant. Thus Kimch. on Mal.3.1.

Of

Of this matter, and of the Jews preſent expectation of Elias at every circumciſion, learned Buxtorfius giveth an ample relation, in his Synagoga Judaica, cap. 2.

On the eighth day in the morning, ſaith he, thoſe things that are requiſite for the Circumciſion are duly prepared. And firſt of all two ſeats are ſet, or one ſeat ſo made, as that two may ſit one by another in it, covered with rich coverings, or cuſhions, according as every ones ſtate will bear: In the one of theſe ſeats, when the child cometh to be circumciſed, ſitteth the Sponſor, or Godfather of the child, and the other ſeat is ſet for Elias. For they conceive that Elias cometh along with the Infant, and ſitteth down in that ſeat, to obſerve whether the Circumciſion be rightly adminiſtred: and this they conceive from Mal. 3. 1. And the Meſſenger of the Covenant whom ye ſeek, behold he cometh: when they ſet that ſeat for Elias, they are bound to ſay in expreſs words, This is the ſeat of the Prophet Elias: That ſeat is left ſtanding there, three whole days together. Rabbi Juda the holy, once perceived that Elias came not to one Circumciſion, and the reaſon was, becauſe the child circumciſed ſhould once turn Chriſtian, and forſake his Judaiſm. They uſe to lay the child upon Elias his cuſhion, both before and after his Circumciſion, that Elias may touch him. Thus he, and more largely, about their fancy of Elias his inviſible coming upon that occaſion. And in the thirteenth Chapter of the ſame book, he relateth how they expect him viſibly at the other Sacrament even every Paſſover; when among other rites and fooliſh cuſtoms, they uſe over a cup of wine, to curſe all the people of the world that are not Jews as they are: and that they do in this prayer, Pour out thy wrath upon the Nations which have not known thee; and upon the Kingdoms that have not called upon thy name; Pour thine anger upon them, and let the fury of thy wrath lay hold of them, &c. Which while the Maſter of the houſe is praying, one runs to the gate, or door of the houſe, and ſets it wide open, in ſign of their deliverance, and in hope of Elias his coming to tell them of the approach of the Meſſias: And preſently in comes one cloathed in white, that their children may believe that Elias is now come among them indeed.

And in the eleventh Chapter of the ſame book, he relateth, that every Sabbath day at night, they call hard upon Elias, and ſince he vouchſafed not to come among them on the Sabbath, which is now paſt, they earneſtly intreat him, that he would come the next Sabbath day. And their Rabbins and Wiſemen have taught them, that Elias every Sabbath day, ſitting under the tree of life in Paradiſe, takes account of, and writeth down the good works of the Jews in their keeping of the Sabbath.

I ſhall treſpaſs too much upon the Readers patience, if I trouble him with any more ſuch traſh and ridiculous ſtuff, as this is about this matter: I have been the bolder with him, that I might the more fully ſhew the earneſt and fooliſh expectation of that blinded Nation in this particular: I ſhall only crave leave to alledge ſome few expreſſions more out of their own Authors upon this ſubject, that here once for all, their doctrine and opinion of the coming of Elias, [which cometh in mention now and then in the Evangeliſts] may be handled, and may trouble us no more.

Their ſecond and greater expectation then of Elias, is, that he will come viſibly and bodily before the coming of the Meſſias; and that he will do great things when he cometh. The Diſciples well knew and ſpake the common opinion of the Nation, when upon our Saviours diſcourſe concerning his own reſurrection, they make this reply; Why then ſay the Scribes that Elias muſt firſt come? Matth. 17. 10.

And ſo are their Authors full of aſſertions to ſuch a purpoſe.

The four Carpenters in Zechary [ſaith Rabbi Simeon] are Meſſias ben David, Meſſias ben Joſeph, Elias, and the Prieſt of righteouſneſs, vid. Kimch. in Zech. 1.

Elias ſhall reſtore three things in Iſrael, [ſaith Rabbi Tanchuma] the pot of Manna, the cruſe of the anointing oyl, and the cruſe of water. And as ſome ſay alſo, Aarons rod with its bloſſoms and almonds, Tauch. on Exod. 1.

The Talmudiſts in Erubhim, Perek. 4. are diſcourſing of this coming of Elias, and inquiring the time; and they have this concluſion, That Iſrael is aſſured that Elias will not come but on the evening of the Sabbaths, or on the evening of Feaſtival days: and when he cometh, they ſhall ſay to the great Sanhedrin, He is come, fol. 43.

And in the Treatiſe of the Sabbath, they intimate, that one work of Elias when he thus cometh, ſhall be to deſtroy. Every one (ſay they) that obſerves ſtedfaſtly three repaſts on the Sabbath, is delivered from three vengeances; From Meſſias his deſtroying, from the Judgment of hell, and from the war of Gog and Magog: From the deſtruction of Meſſias; It is written here, The day [viz. remember the Sabbath day] and it is written there, Behold I ſend unto you Elias the Prophet before the day come, &c. Perek. 16. fol. 118.

And in a common and current proverb among them, they hold that another work of Elias, when he cometh, ſhall be to reſolve doubts and ſcruples, and to unite doctrinal knots.

And that he ſhall purifie Baſtards, and make them fit to come into the congregation, ארול בי אליהו יטהר הממזרים וישבם בקהלה Vid. Kimch. in Zech. 9.

And

And that he shall be one of the seven Shepherds and eight principal ones mentioned, Michah 5. 5. Our Rabbins say, Who are the seven Shepherds? David in the middle, Seth, Enoch, and Methuselah on his right hand, and Abraham, and Jacob, and Moses on his left. And who are the Eight principal ones? Jesse, Saul, Samuel, Amos, Zephany, Ezekiah, Elias, and Messiah, Kimch. in Mich. 5.

And for this coming of Elias, doth Elias Levita so heartily pray, in Tisbi, in rad. Tisbi, Elias was in the days of Gibeah: So let it be Gods good will that he may be with us in this time, and let that verse be accomplished upon us, Behold I send you Elias; So is the prayer of Elias the Author.

By these and divers other speeches of the like nature, which might be produced out of the Hebrew Authors, shewing the common opinion of that people concerning the coming of Elias bodily before the coming of Christ, it is no wonder, if when the Jews saw so eminent a man as John the Baptist come in so powerful a way of Ministry, so great a change of a Sacrament, and so strict austerity of life, they question with themselves, and with him, whether he be not the Messias, and when he denies that, then whether he be not Elias. But it is some wonder, [and that the rather, because our Saviour hath long ago resolved what was meant by that place of the Prophet, Behold I send Elias, and hath plainly told that John the Baptist was the Elias that was to come] I say, it is a wonder [this considered] that ever this Jewish opinion of Elias coming before the coming of the Messias, should be so transplanted into the hearts of Christians, under this notion of Elias his coming before Christs second coming, as that so many understand it as literally, personally, and really, as ever the grossest Jew in Judea did.

It were endless to reckon their names, both Ancient and Modern, that have verily believed, and as boldly asserted, that Enoch and Elias shall come visibly and bodily to destroy Antichrist, to convert the Jews, and to build up the elect in the faith of Christ. He that desires names, may see enow in *Bellarmine de Roman. Pontif. lib.*3. *cap.*6. where he proves that the Pope is not Antichrist, by this argument, that Elias and Enoch never came against him; in Cornel. a Lapide in Apocal. 11. where he holds the two witnesses to be these two men, Enoch and Elias.

It is somewhat beside our work, to take up this controversie in this place, but it may not be besides the advantage of the Reader, to take up two or three considerations upon this matter, and to ruminate and study upon them, towards the confutation of this groundless opinion.

1. That the great and terrible day of the Lord, before which Elias was promised to come, is exceedingly mistaken by those that understand it of the day of Judgment; for it meaneth only, the day of the destruction of Jerusalem; as might be proved at large by divers other places of Scripture, where the same phrase is used: And the like misconstruction is there of the phrase, in the last days, by taking it for the last days of the world, whereas it meaneth only the last days of Jerusalem.

2. Those two witnesses mentioned, Rev. 11. upon whom there are so various glosses, and different opinions, are pictured and charactered out like Moses and Elias, and not like Enoch and Elias, as is plain by the Text; for that speaketh of shutting up heaven, turning water into blood, and plaguing the earth, which had been the actings of Elias and Moses, and none but they, and no mention of Enochs ever doing such a thing at all. We have therefore from that place, as little warrant to look for Elias his bodily coming before the end of the world, as we have for the bodily coming of Moses.

3. The proper meaning of that Propheſie concerning the two Witnesses, is to set forth the state of the Church towards the end of the world, when the Jews shall be called, and knit together into one Church with the Gentiles; shewing that God will raise up a powerful Ministery among either people, which the Holy Ghost characters, by Moses the first Minister and Prophet of the Jews, and Elias the first Minister and Prophet of the Gentiles: These two people, and this double Ministery are as two olive trees and two candlesticks, standing before the Lord of the whole earth: This Ministery shall be opposed by Antichrist, and almost destroyed and brought to nothing: And as Antichrist hath caused a general defection and apostasie already in the world, having even slain Religion, and the preaching of the Truth, till in the age last past they revived again: So shall he cause a defection and falling away for a season in the Church of the Jews after their calling, so that Religion and the truth shall be in a manner extinguisht among them, that Antichrist may make the measure of his iniquity full. And as Rome in her heathenish power, did first destroy the old Jerusalem, and then persecute the new: so must she do in her Antichristian power and mischievousness: first undo the Christian Church consisting of Heathens only, as it hath done already in the dark time of Popery over all the world; and then undo the Church consisting of Gentiles and Jews united together; but God shall revive it; and then the true Religion and the Ministery of the Truth shall live again by the power and Spirit of God put into them.

That

That this is the aim of that prophecy in the eleventh of the Revelation, might be shewed, if it were seasonable, by many arguments, and consequently that the expectation of Enoch and Elias to come bodily, and to fight with Antichrist, &c. hath not the least colour or ground from thence at all; but this is not a place to dispute that Text.

§. Art thou that Prophet?

There is some question whether to read it in the force of the Article, or no; there are some that do read it so, and some that do not. The Syriack and the Vulgar Latine take no notice of the Article at all, but read it as if it were without, Art thou a Prophet? And so doth the margin of our English Bible: But others, with our English Text, do interpret the words as speaking of some peculiar Prophet, which was neither Christ nor Elias, but some other pointed at and intended by that prediction, Deut. 18, 15. Vid. Cyril and Chrysost. &c.

It is hard to guess at the mind of these Jews that speak these words we have in hand, for both the Greek expression in this Text, and the Jews exposition of that in Deuteronomy, do so indifferently carry it either to a Prophet in general, or to some singular Prophet in particular, that it may be an equilibrious case, whether to take it the one way, or the other. I rather take it the former, and cannot but apprehend that their questioning of the Baptist in these words, ὁ προφήτης εἶ σύ, is indefinitely meant, art thou a Prophet? Not this or that Prophet, but art thou a Prophet at all? For prophesie had been long decayed amongst them, and when they saw one appear now of so prophetical a character, as the Baptist was; and when he had resolved them he was neither Christ nor Elias, their properest question then was, art thou then any other Prophet come after so long a time as there have been no Prophets among us? And he answers, No; that is, not in their sense, not a Prophet of the same Ministery with those in the Old Testament, but of another nature; or not one of those Prophets of the Old Testament revived, as Matth. 16. 14. but a Minister foretold of by one of those Prophets, as Esay 40. 3.

The reason that I refuse the strict interpretation of this question, [Art thou that Prophet, as if they spake of some particular man] is, partly, because the article ὁ is not always to be construed in such a strictness, as pointing out a particular thing or person, but is very commonly, nay, most commonly of a more large and general signification. But chiefly, because I find not in the Jewish Writers any particular Prophet mentioned, whom they expected to come as they did Christ and Elias: and for ought I find, they do not interpret that place in Deut. 18. 15. of any such a particular person, but of the succession of Prophets in generall; It is true indeed, that Aben Ezra understands it of Joshua, and Rab. Sol. on Jer. 1. understands it of Jeremy, but this was of Joshua, and Jeremy in their times: but of any such singular person that they expected in the last times, I find no mention, unless the Priest of righteousness spoken of a little before, or Messias ben Joseph, should be reduced under this notion and name of That Prophet.

Ver. 25. Why baptizest thou then?

It is observable, that they never question what he meant by his baptism, but what he meant to baptize: they inquire not concerning the thing, but concerning his person and authority: And in all the time of his course and ministery, we never find that they made the least scruple what his Baptism was, or what it meant, but only they look on him, and wonder and question what he hath to do to baptize: And the reason of this was, because the rite and custom of baptizing, had been in common and ordinary practice and use among that Nation many hundreds of years before John ever appeared among them; And as this common and known custom of Baptism used among them continually and ordinarily so long before, and then, made them that they never wonder, nor question, nor make strange of Johns baptizing, as to the thing it self; so the consideration of this very thing may give us much light and satisfaction in that controversie that is now afoot among us, concerning the baptizing or not baptizing of Infants. It is urged by those that deny Infants baptism, that there is neither command for it, nor example of it in the Scripture, as there was for Infants circumcision. Now this consideration giveth one ready answer, if there were no other to be given; If baptism, and baptizing of Infants had been as strange, and unseen, and unheard of a thing in the world till John Baptist came, as circumcision was till God appointed it to Abraham, there is no doubt but there would have been a command or example expresly given for the baptizing of Infants, if God would have them to be baptized, as there was for the circumcising of Infants, because God would have them to be circumcised: But when the baptizing of Infants had been a thing as commonly known, and as commonly used long before John came, and to his very coming, as any holy thing that was used among the Jews, and they were as well acquainted with Infants baptism, as they were with Infants circumcision; it doth not follow, that there needed so expres and punctual command or example, to be given for the baptizing of Infants, which was well enough known already, as there needed for Circumcision of Infants

Infants or others, which was a thing that till its inſtitution had never been heard of, nor dreamed of in the world.

I ſhall crave a little leave of the Reader for ſo much digreſſion, [for ſo I know he cannot but account it] as from the Jews Authors and Antiquities, to give him ſome account of theſe two particulars, which it may be, may prove of ſome uſe in the point in mention, viz. 1. The ancient uſe and practice of baptiſm among the Jews, before the Goſpel began to be preached by John the Baptiſt. And 2. The common uſe and practice of baptizing of Infants in thoſe times.

1. Of the antiquity, and long and ancient uſe of baptiſm under the Law, we have firſt this teſtimony in Maimonides, the great regiſter of the Jews cuſtoms and antiquities, in his treatiſe Iſſure Biah perek. 13.

By three things (ſaith he) Iſrael entred into Covenant, by Circumciſion, Baptiſm, and Sacrifice:

Circumciſion was in Egypt, as it is ſaid, No uncircumciſed perſon ſhall eat thereof: Moſes our Maſter circumciſed them, for they had all forſaken the Covenant of Circumciſion in Egypt, but only the tribe of Levi, as it is ſaid, And they keep thy Covenant.

Baptiſm was in the wilderneſs, before the giving of the Law, as it is ſaid, And thou ſhalt ſanctifie them to day and to morrow, and let them waſh their garments.

And Sacrifice, as it is ſaid, And he ſent the young men of the children of Iſrael, and they offered burnt offerings, they offered them for all Iſrael.

And ſo in after times, when a heathen will enter into the Covenant, and be gathered and joyned under the wings of the divine Majeſty, and take upon him the yoke of the Law, Circumciſion and Baptiſm, and a freewil offering is required; and if it be a female, Baptiſm and an offering, as it is ſaid ככם כגר As it is with you, ſo ſhall it be with the ſtranger. How is it with you? With Circumciſion, and Baptiſm, and a free offering: So alſo the ſtranger for ever, with Circumciſion, and Baptiſm, and a free offering, &c. But at this time, when there are no offerings, Circumciſion and Baptiſm are neceſſary, but when the houſe of the Sanctuary ſhall be built, then ſhall he alſo bring an offering. A ſtranger that is circumciſed and not baptized, or that is baptized, and not circumciſed, is not a proſelyte till he be both circumciſed and baptized. Thus Maimonides; and to the ſame tenor the Talmud alſo in Jebammoth perek. 4.

A ſtranger that is circumciſed and not baptized, Rabbi Eliezer ſaith, Behold he is a proſelyte, for ſo we find by our fathers, which were circumciſed and not baptized.

He that is baptized and not circumciſed, Rabbi Jehoſhua ſaith, Behold he is a proſelyte, for ſo we find by the Maids that were baptized, but not circumciſed: but the Wiſemen ſay, Is he baptized and not circumciſed, or is he circumciſed and not baptized? He is not a proſelyte, until he be both circumciſed and baptized.

It is neceſſary, ſaith Maimonides again, that he be baptized before a triumvirate, or before a conſiſtory of three: If a man come and ſay, I was proſelyted in ſuch a conſiſtory, and they baptized me, he is not truſted to come into the Congregation till he bring witneſs: As they circumciſe and baptize proſelytes, ſo they circumciſe and baptize ſervants taken from heathens. And a little after he mentioneth the place and manner of baptizing, and what multitudes were proſelyted, in the days of David and Solomon, and baptized, before private perſons: becauſe the Sanhedrin would not then admit proſelytes ſolemnly as at other times, ſuſpecting they might be proſelyted either for fear of the power, or for love of the pomp of Iſrael in thoſe times; yet he concludes, that Whoſoever was circumciſed and baptized though only before private perſons, and though for ſome by-reſpect, yet being circumciſed and baptized, he was come out of the ſtate of Heatheniſm. Much more might be produced out of their own Authors, [men, enemies to our Baptiſm, and the teſtimony of an enemy is a double teſtimony] but this enough to ſhew the antiquity, common uſe, and ordinary knownneſs of Baptiſm under the law, long before the times of John the Baptiſt, ſometime uſed ſingle without circumciſion, but moſt commonly joyned with it; by which we may obſerve, that Baptiſm was no ſtrange thing when John came baptizing, but the rite was known ſo well by every one, that nothing was better known than what baptiſm was: and therefore there needed not ſuch punctual and exact rules about the manner and object of it, as there had needed, if it had never been ſeen before: what needed it in the Goſpel to tell, that ſuch or ſuch perſons were to be the objects of baptiſm, when it was as well known before the Goſpel began, that men, and women, and children were the objects of baptiſm, and were baptized, as it is to be known that the Sun is up when it ſhineth at noon day?

Theſe two things therefore are obſervable about our Saviours inſtituting baptiſm for a Goſpel Sacrament.

1. That he took up Baptiſm which was uſed as an additional to circumciſion, inſtead of circumciſion: And ſo did he alſo in the other Sacrament of the Lords Supper. For after the Paſchal Lamb was eaten, it was the common cuſtom of the Nation, that the Maſter of the the family brake a piece of bread, and diſtributed it among the company, and after it he diſtributed a cup of wine: now our Saviour took up this which was an additional to the Paſſover, to be a Goſpel-ſacrament in ſtead of the Paſſover.

2. That he took up baptiſm as it was in common and known uſe, and in ordinary and familiar practiſe among the Nation, and therefore gave no Rules for the manner of baptizing, or for the age or ſex of the perſons to be baptized, which was well enough known already, and needed no rule to be preſcribed.

Now for the ſecond thing propoſed, and about which there is the greateſt difference and controverſie among Chriſtians in the matter of baptiſm, which is about the baptizing of Infants, the Jews uſed it alſo in as common and ordinary practice, as they did to baptize any others, as appeareth alſo by theſe their own teſtimonies.

In the Talmud in Cetuboth perek. 1. they have theſe words, Rab. Hona ſaith, a little one they baptize by the appointment of the Conſiſtory קטון מטבילין איתו על דעת בית דין. The Hebrew gloſs upon that place, ſaith, If he have not a father, and his mother bring him to be proſelyted, they baptize him, becauſe there is no proſelyte without Circumciſion and baptiſm. And there muſt be three at his baptiſm [as three are neceſſary at the baptiſm of every proſelyte] and they become a father to him, and he is made a proſelyte by their hands.

The Talmud Text proceedeth thus, מאי קמ"ל דזכות הוא לו ובין לאר שלא נפניו What do we learn hence? That he hath benefit by it; and they priviledge a man, even though he knew it not, for ſo doth the Gloſs interpret the words לא בפניו not to his face, that is, ſaith he, לא מדעתו not to his knowledge, and a little one is not בר דיעה capable of underſtanding.] תנינא ובין לאך שלא בפניו אין חבין לאדם שלא בפניו : It is a tradition, that they priviledge a perſon though they know it not, but they do not diſpriviledge a perſon without his knowledge. And thus do they anſwer that objection that is now afoot againſt Infants baptiſm, viz. that it is not fit that they ſhould be baptized, becauſe they have no underſtanding: they make it a non ſequitur, for ſay they, a priviledge may be put upon a perſon, though he himſelf know not of it. And in the very place out of which theſe words are cited, even a little before them, the Talmudicks ſpeak of a proſelyteſs and a captiveſs, and a maid, redeemed, proſelyted, and manumitted, being leſs than three years old and an half, and they have a caſe upon it about contracts and dower.

And Maimonides in the treatiſe Abadim, or concerning Servants, Chap. 8. at the very concluſion of the Chapter, hath this ſaying, וישראל שתקף בגוי קטן או מצא תינוק גוי והטבילו לשם גר הרי הוא גר An Iſraelite that takes a little heathen, or that finds an heathen Infant, and baptizeth him into the name of a proſelyte, behold he is a proſelyte. And in the treatiſe Iſſure biah in the Chapter cited erewhile; he ſaith, A woman proſelyted and baptized, when ſhe is great with child, her child needeth not then to be baptized when he is born: otherwiſe it was requiſite that he ſhould be baptized. By theſe and other teſtimonies which might be produced, it is apparent that baptiſm, and baptiſm of Infants was in common uſe before John appeared. And it doth not only ſhew a reaſon why the Jews never queſtion him what baptiſm meant, [but by what authority he didbaptize] but alſo it ſheweth a reaſon why the New Teſtament is ſo ſparing in expreſſing the object and manner of baptiſm, namely, becauſe both baptiſm it ſelf, and thoſe things were commonly and ordinarily uſed and known before.

Verſ. 28. In Bethabara beyond Jordan.

It is but as labour loſt to go about to ſhew how many tranſlators and expoſitors approve this tranſlation, Beyond Jordan, ſince there is not any to be found, that ever took this word πέραν in other ſenſe till Beza found a new. Now he tranſlates it ſecus Jordanem, not beyond but beſides Jordan, and ſo doth he likewiſe, Matth. 4.15. & 19.1. and indeed with ſome probability at the firſt appearance: But when the ſignification of the word πέραν, and the hiſtory, and hiſtorical ſenſe of theſe places alledged, is better viewed; we ſhall find his interpretation contradicted by both. For firſt, the word πέραν doth moſt properly and genuinely ſignifie ultra or trans, and not juxta or ſecus, beyond and not beſides; as might be evidenced by moſt copious examples both in Scripture and Heathen Writers, we ſhall not be tedious in allegations in which we might be even endleſs, take but theſe two pregnant ones for a pattern, Matth. 8.18. Joh. 6.1. & 17. 25. & 18. 1. Mark 4. 35. & 5.1. &c. And divers places in the LXX. and it will be hard, if not impoſſible to ſhew where ever πέραν ſignifieth ſecus. To which may be added the ſignification of ſeveral words derived from this, as περάω, περάω and others, which all carry in them the ſignification of going beyond, over, or to the other ſide.

Secondly, Conſider but the progreſs of John in his baptizing. He firſt beginneth in Judea, and coaſteth on that ſide Jordan within the land of Canaan, Matth. 3. 1. and kept not fixed to this or that place, but moved up and down at a large diſtance, and had diſciples come to him to be baptized from a very large circuit, as is evident by thoſe expreſſions of Luke and Matthew, He came into all the country about Jordan, Luke 3.3. And there went out to him all the regions about Jordan, Matth. 3.5. And withal Luke ſaith, that all the people were baptized by the time that our Saviour came to his baptiſm, Luke 3. 21. which I cannot ſee how it ſhould be underſtood otherwiſe, than that John had made all his harveſt, and finiſhed all the Miniſtery that he ſhould uſe on that ſide the River which he had now coaſted upon a whole half year together, now therefore he was to remove to the other ſide.

Thirdly, It cannot but be an impropriety to talk of Johns baptizing beſides Jordan, as if when he baptized in Bethabara, he baptized in Jordan it ſelf, as Beza himſelf denieth not.

Fourthly, The people in Cap.3.26. ſay to John, Rabbi, he that was with thee, πέραν Ἰορδάνου baptizeth. Now if this be to be rendred beſides Jordan, how needleſs will this appear, ſince John all the half year that he baptized, was hardly any where elſe? And this impropriety it is very like cauſed Beza to tranſlate it there ad trajectum Jordanis, by what warrant of the Greek, I cannot ſee. And as for thoſe two places that he alledgeth to confirm his ſenſe, namely *Matth.*4.15. & 19.1. the ſhortneſs of the language that the Evangeliſt hath uſed in both places, was that that drove him into this interpretation: For the Text of Matthew 4.15. cited from Eſay 9. 1. doth ſo plainly ſpeak to the 2 *King.*15.29. that it is paſt all doubting, as will be cleared there: Now in that Text of the Kings there is evident expreſſion of affliction of Iſrael on both ſides Jordan, which Eſay ſpeaking to, doth utter it very ſhort, as it is uſual with the Scripture to do, when it ſpeaketh from known ſtories: And as for that in *Matth.*19.1. The Harmonizing of the Evangeliſts will ſhew it moſt undoubted; that Jeſus in that ſtory did go over Jordan indeed, as may be ſeen, *Joh.*10.40. & 11.7. which ſpeak in reference to this very ſtory; but both Matthew and Mark have given the ſtory in ſo ſhort terms, as breedeth ambiguity to him that ſhall look no further than their Texts for the expoſition one of another. For they only ſay thus, He departed from Galilee; and came into the coaſts of Judea beyond Jordan: but their meaning is this, that he came into the coaſts of Judea, and ſo beyond Jordan; for the ſtory of that one verſe comprehendeth as much ſtory, as is contained from *Joh.*7. *ver.*10. to *Joh.*10. *ver.*40. And whereas thoſe Evangeliſts ſay only thus much briefly, He came into the coaſts of Judea, the ſtory at length was this, He came to Hieruſalem, and there he ſtayed from the feaſt of Tabernacles, Joh.7.2, 10. which was in September, till the feaſt of Dedication, which was in December, *Joh.*10.22. Then he goeth to the other ſide of Jordan, ver. 40. as ſhall be cleared paſt denial, by Gods aſſiſtance, when his providence and goodneſs ſhall bring us thither: So that in both theſe Texts alledged, the Ellipſis or want of the conjunction And, which is moſt common in the Scripture ſtile, hath brec this difficulty, and that being added [as the very nature and truth of the thing it ſelf requireth it to be underſtood] the doubt had been removed: the places being read thus, The way of the Sea beyond Jordan and Galilee of the Gentiles: And he came into the coaſts of Judea, and beyond Jordan.

Now where this Bethabara was beyond Jordan, is ſtill under ſcruple; it is very commonly apprehended to be בית עברה The place of paſſage, either where Iſrael came over when they entred the Land, or the common Ford that the people went over from one ſide to another, from Judea to Perea at the Fords of Jericho.

Now as for the firſt, it is a very uncertain ſcantling; ſeeing that the ſpace of Iſraels paſſage, as was obſerved on Luke 3. 21. was very many miles: And as for the ſecond, it carrieth great probability with it, if it can but be ſatisfied, how Chriſt and his Diſciples, could travail from thence to Cana in Galilee in three days, nay to be there at a feaſt on the third day. The 10 Chapter of John, and the 40 verſe, muſt help us to ſome light in this obſcurity. It is ſaid there, that Jeſus went again beyond Jordan, into the place where John at firſt baptized; upon which Texts let us take up theſe obſervations:

1. That Jeſus in this ſtory, went ultra, or trans Jordanem, over the River, and not only aſide of it: for in *Joh.*11.7. he ſaith unto his Diſciples, let us go into Judea again; Now had he not gone over Jordan, he had been in Judea already.

2. That he went to the place where John at firſt baptized, that is, where he firſt baptized beyond Jordan; this was Bethabara.

3. That he went over Jordan at the Fords of Jericho, for he went the common rode from Jeruſalem to Perea; or at the leaſt, moſt certainly he came back again at that paſſage: compare Luke 18.31,35.

4. That Bethabara was not adjoyning to Jordan at that paſſage, but at ſome diſtance from it: For if we look into this ſtory of his journey beyond Jordan in the other Evangeliſts, we ſhall find that he had ſome journies beyond the River, as *Mar.*10. 17. One came to him when he was gone forth upon his journey, whilſt he was beyond Jordan.

The opinion therefore of Jerome cannot be current, that holdeth Bethabara to be buildings at the paſſage of Jericho, on either ſide Jordan, one over againſt another, on the Rivers brink; for then how could Chriſt, having paſſed over at that paſſage, travail travail when he was beyond Jordan, and yet go but to Bathabara? But it ſeemeth rather to me, that this place was far more northward up Jordan, and lay over againſt Galilee; and that Chriſt going over at the paſſage of Jericho, coaſted up a good way on the left hand, many miles before he came to Bethabara. And I ſhould rather ſuppoſe, that it was called Bethabara, or the place of paſſage, as being the landing place on the other ſide of the point of the lake Genazareth, over againſt Galilee, than the landing place on the other ſide of Jordan, over againſt Jericho.

And the Reaſons that induce me to place it there, are theſe:

1. Becauſe John had coaſted up and down Jordan on Judea ſide for a long time together, and there he had gathered up all the Converts that were to be had: what then would it avail him to go on the other ſide the River, juſt oppoſite to the places where he had been ſo long? The River was not above twenty or thirty yards over, or grant it twice or thrice ſo much, nay, grant it fifty, as Baal haleurim on Numb. 10. and the time that he had ſpent on Judea ſide, was all the Summer, and why ſhould it be thought that converts were now to be had on the further ſide, which might with as much facility have come thirty or forty yards further to him to the other ſide Jordan, eſpecially in Summer it being no great water to get over?

2. Becauſe of the quickneſs of Chriſts journey from Bethabara unto Cana; which was travailed by him in far leſs than three days. The firſt night he came to Capernaum, the City of his abode, verſ. 39. as we ſhall ſhew there; and that two hours before night, which from the Fords of Jericho was impoſſible to do, unleſs he had ſhewed a miracle, which in this we know he did not.

3. It is a great perſwaſive to believe, that John was now baptizing near Galilee, becauſe of the Galileans, Peter and Andrew converſing with him.

Verſ. 29. Behold the Lamb of God.

This is the firſt time that John pointeth out Chriſt perſonally, or demonſtrateth to the people, This is the man: He had hitherto ſpoken of him, and born witneſs to him continually, to all that came to be baptized by him, both before Chriſts baptiſm and ſince, but till now he could never ſhew them who it was of whom he ſpake ſo much, and ſo much honour. When Chriſt came to be baptized, the Holy Ghoſt had no ſooner come upon him, but he was rapt away into the wilderneſs: and then John ſends this honorable teſtimony after him, This was he of whom I ſpake, &c. But then it was too late for the people to obſerve who he was, for he was gone out of ſight. Since that time till now, he had been in the wilderneſs among the beaſts, and this is his firſt revealing of himſelf among men again, and now it is ſeaſonable and neceſſary for John to demonſtrate him.

The title that he giveth him, the Lamb of God, plainly referreth to the Lamb of the daily ſacrifice; and it is ſo called, according to the common ſtile and phraſe by which things devoted to God were expreſſed, as, The bread of God, Lev. 21. 21. The night of the Lord, Exod. 12. 42. A Nazarite of God, Judg. 13. 5. The candle of God, 1 Sam. 3. 2. Now that Lamb was ſo familiar, common, and conſpicuous a lecture of Chriſt, and it was the firſt conſpicuous lecture of Chriſt that was in the world, Revel. 13. 8. that John could not have choſen an Epithet that would ſpeak him out better, than to uſe an expreſſion from the morning and evening Lamb that was offered at Jeruſalem. For beſides that, 1. John had had newly to deal with Prieſts and Levites whoſe chief employment was about that Lamb. And 2. beſides that it was about ſacrifice time on the ſecond day when John uſeth theſe words, between three and four a clock in the afternoon, ver. 39. And beſides that 3. the Lamb repreſented the innocency and purity of Chriſt, in his being without ſpot; and the death of Chriſt in being offered up. Σημαίνει τὸ πάθος διὰ τῆς ἄμωμου ἐσφαγῆς, Ignat. Mart. Epiſt. ad Tarſenſes. It was 4. moſt proper and pertinent to the doctrine and preaching of John which he had uſed before, to uſe now ſuch an Epithet for Chriſt when he came in ſight: For he had ſtill ſpoken of remiſſion of ſins, and remiſſion of ſins ſtill, to all that had come to be baptized, Mar. 1. 4. a doctrine not uſual among them that ſtood upon their own righteouſneſs and performance of the Law: and therefore when Chriſt firſt appeareth, he from an alluſion to the daily Lamb, upon whoſe head the ſins of the people were confeſſed and laid, ſheweth how remiſſion of ſins cometh indeed, namely, by the ſacrifice of this Lamb of God, Chriſt, who ſhould bear and take away the ſins of the world, as that Lamb did in figure, the ſins of the Jews.

Verſ. 31. And I knew him not.

The clauſe is ſpoken to, and explained in the Notes on Matth. 3. 14.

§. But that he might be made manifeſt to Iſrael, therefore am I come baptizing.

The baptiſm of John did tend to the manifeſting of Chriſt, eſpecially two ways: 1. Becauſe by the ſtrangeneſs of his Miniſtery, and the wonder of ſuch a baptiſm as his was, the eyes of all the people were drawn to look after what he meant by it: For though his baptiſm for the manner of it, was ſuitable to the baptiſm ſo well known among the Jews, as was obſerved before, yet was the doctrine and end of it ſo ſtrange to them, that it put the whole Nation to an enquiry what was in it. And 2. then did John preach Chriſt [as ready to come] to every one that came to be baptized.

Verſ. 39. They came and ſaw where he dwelt.

It is queſtionable whether μένω here doth intimate, his Inn, or his habitation, but I rather underſtand the latter, and that the place was Capernaum; where Chriſt had an habitation, and was a member or Citizen of that City: For though he was a Nazarite in regard of his mothers houſe and reſidence, yet it is very probable he was a Carpernaite by his father Joſephs. For,

1. Obſerve that Capernaum is called his own City, *Matth.*9.1. compared with *Mar.*2.1.
2. There he pays tribute, as the proper place where he ſhould pay it, *Matth.*17.24.
3. When he is refuſed at Nazaret his mothers Town, he goeth down to Capernaum his fathers, Luke 4.31.
4. His reſort to Capernaum was very frequent, and his abode there very much, John 2. 11. Luke 4.31. John 6.17. Luke 10.15.
5. That his father and mother are very well known there, John 6.42.
6. That in regard of this frequency of Chriſts being in this Town, and its intereſt in him as an inhabitant and member of it, Capernaum is ſaid to be lifted up to Heaven.

Now Capernaum ſtanding upon the banks of Jordan, and on the very point of the lake of Genazaret, as Jordan began to ſpread it ſelf into that lake, he, and theſe diſciples that go with him, paſs over the water before they come thither, for now they were on the other ſide Jordan where John baptized.

Verſ. 40. One of the two was Andrew, Simon Peters brother.

Who the other was, it is uncertain and undeterminable; poſſibly it might be the Evangeliſt John himſelf, but there is no fixing on him, or any other particular man: but this may be obſerved, that Peter was not the firſt that came in for a Diſciple to Chriſt, but his brother Andrew and another. And it was well he was not the firſt, that ſo much of the Romaniſts boaſtings may be ſtopped.

Andrew ſpeaketh, 1. In reference to the expectation of the Nation, that looked ſo much, and ſo earneſtly for the coming of Chriſt, and for his coming at this time. 2. In reference to the opinion of the Nation, that held that when Chriſt came, none ſhould know whence he was, *Joh.*7.27. And 3. in reference to the common and conſtant teſtimony of John, that ſpake ſo much of Chriſt to come after him.

The word Meſſias doth ſolely and ſingularly betoken Chriſt, as it is interpreted moſt pertinently by the Evangeliſt here, and Chap. 4. 25. For though the word משיח in Hebrew, in the Scripture, ſignifieth any anointed one whatſoever; yet in this Greek form, Meſſias, it never ſignifieth but only Chriſt. Nor is the Hebrew word משיח uſed in Hebrew Authors, but in the ſame ſenſe, and ſo it is uſed infinitely among them: ſometimes ſet ſingle without any other addition, and very often with this addition מלך המשיח The King Meſſias; as he that is never ſo little verſed in Jewiſh Authors, will find in great variety. In this propriety the word is uſed, Dan. 9. 25, 26. and ſo was it confeſſed by the Ancient Jews, though the Modern would elude it. The Jews of the Talmud age, ſay, that the end of the Meſſias was ſpoken of in the Book of Cetubbim, aiming at this place; but how the latter generations turn off ſuch a ſenſee, ſee in R. Saadias, and Rab. Sol. in loc. &c.

Verſ. 42. Thou art Simon.

Chriſt nameth him at the firſt ſight, and hereby ſheweth that he was the Meſſias, in that he could thus name Simon and his father, with whom he had had no converſe before.

Simon,

Simon, or Simeon, as the Syriack renders it, [for they are all one, as Acts 15. 14.] was a name that was exceeding much in uſe among the Jews at this time, as *Matth.*27.32. Mark 3.18. Luke 2.15. Acts 8.9. & 13. 1. &c. And it was very frequent in uſe in their Schools in putting of caſes, as, Reuben borrowed ſuch a thing of Simeon, &c.

The Jews themſelves ſeem to have brought the Hebrew word Simeon, into this Greek manner of pronouncing, Simon; for their own Authors ſpeak of one Rabbi Simon.

Bar Jona in the Syriack, *Matth.*16.17. and Simon Jona in the Greek, *Joh.*21.15,16,17.

There are that conceive a corruption to be in the writing of this word; for [ſay they] it ſhould be Joanna. And of that mind is Jerome, the Vulgar Latine, Eraſmus, at *Joh.*21. 15. and of that writing is Eraſmus his Greek copy there, and ſome others here: But upon what ground this facil and moſt general reading, of Jona, [for ſo the Syrian, Arabick, moſt and beſt Greek Copies, and moſt tranſlations utter it] ſhould be forſaken, and one ſo far fetched and ſtrained as Joanna be imbraced, and taken for the right, I cannot yet underſtand or apprehend.

Certainly Jona is the Genitive caſe of Jonas in the LXX, Joh. 4. 8. and in the New Teſtament, Matth. 12. 21, 39. And why the father of Peter, ſhould not be thought to be Jonas, as well as Joannas, I believe it will be very hard to ſhew a reaſon; We have mention of Rabbi Jona among the Jewiſh Doctors; which ſheweth that the name was given to others beſides the old Prophet, and there is no reaſon why a private man might not carry it as well as a Doctor. Sure it is that the very word Jona, applied thus to Peter, doth give a very good hint, to compare him and the old Prophet together: For they were both preachers to the Gentiles, both of them declined that employment: and both of them declined it at Joppa. Compare Jona 1. and Acts 10.

I. Change of names in Scripture is frequent, and moſt common for the better, as Abrams into Abraham, Jacobs into Iſrael, Hoſheas into Jehoſhua, and Solomons into Jedidiah; though ſometimes there is a change for the worſe, as Jerubaal into Jeruboſheth, 2 *Sam.*11.22. Sychem into Sychar, Joh. 4.5. &c.

II. Chriſt changeth the name of three Diſciples only, Peter, James, and John, Mark 3. 16,17. as God had changed the names of three men only in the Old Teſtament, Abram, Jacob, and Solomon.

III. Now as concerning the name Cephas, which Simon carried hence-forward, 1 *Cor.*1. 12. & 15.5. *Gal.*2.9. it is a Syriack word, framed into an adjective, and into a Greek utterance, by addition of s in the latter end.

Ceph indeed is uſed ſometimes in the Hebrew, as *Jer.*4.29. Job 30.6. But Cepha ſoundeth of the Chaldee idiom, and is uſed very frequently by the Paraphraſts; moſt commonly to render the Hebrew word סלע as D. Kimchi noteth in Michol, and as may be obſerved in *Numb.*20.8,10,11. Judg. 20. 45, 47. & 21. 13. 1 Sam. 23.28. and divers other places: and ſometime to expreſs the word לשון when it ſignifieth, a point of land, or ſea, as Joſh. 15. 2. חלשון הפנה נגנרה the Chaldee renders it: כיפא דמתפנו לדרומא meaning, as ſaith Kimchi on the place, the point of a Rock that looked South-eaſt. But it will eaſily be agreed upon about the ſignification of Ceph and Cepha, namely, that it denoteth a Rock, in the moſt proper and moſt common meaning of it: But the ſcruple is whether Cephas be the very ſame with Cepha in ſignification, yea, or no, and whether the letter s added in the end, do change the ſound of it only, and not the ſenſe.

To me it ſeemeth, that Cephas is of an adjective ſignification, and betokeneth not a Rock, but Rocky, not Petra, but Petroſus, or belonging to the Rock: and I am induced to this opinion upon theſe grounds and arguments:

1. Becauſe it is uttered Cephas, and not Cepha; for although it is ordinary with the language of the New Teſtament to add s in the latter end of ſome words, to make them ſound of a Greek pronunciation, as Ezekias, Manaſſes, Meſſias, Barnabas, &c. and though I think it doth ſo here, yet do I not conceive it doth ſo here for that end only, but for ſome other further purpoſe and intereſt.

As 1. To mark it for a proper name, and to take it off from being taken otherwiſe: and ſo Barnabas, Barſabas, and Elymas, are marked with the ſame mark, for the ſame end.

2. To change its ſenſe, as well as its nature, and to alter it from a ſubſtantive ſignification to an adjective, as well as from a common noune to a proper: For as the Evangeliſt maketh a clear diſtinction between Petros and Petra, Matth. 16. 18. as all orthodox Expoſitors upon that place grant; ſo certainly is the like to be made betwixt Cephas and Cepha; for theſe Syriack words our Saviour uſed when he uttered that ſpeech.

And

And to this purpose it is also to be observed, that the word Petros is not used for a Rock in all the Scripture: It is in use indeed in that sense among Heathen Authors, but in the LXX. and in all the New Testament it is scarcely to be so found: Now if the Evangelist meant to tell us, that Cephas signifieth a Rock, it is wonder that he would use the word Petros, which never occurreth in that sense in all the Bible, and refuse the word Petra, which signifieth so in the Scripture hundreds of times; Nay, say some of our Greek Dictionaries, πέτρα κοινῶς, πέτρος ἀττικῶς: Petra is the common name for a Rock, even in the Heathen Greek Language, but Petros, is but the Attick dialect. And therefore I cannot but wonder that Petrus in this place should be translated Petra, as Beza in Latin, and Brucioli in Italian render it; and our English to the same sense, Thou shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, a stone.

For the taking up therefore of the sense and meaning, and of the reason and occasion of this name given to Simon, these particulars are to be taken into consideration.

I. That Christ called him Cephas, totidem literis, and not Cepha: and that he was commonly so called among the Disciples, Cephas, with the s sounded in the latter end. I know it is a common opinion to the contrary, as Beza on *Matth.*16.18. utters it Dominus Syriace loquens, nulla usus est agnominatione, sed utrobique dixit Cepha: and accordingly the Syriack translater every where expresseth it.

But let it be observed, 1. That as the Jewish Nation was full of Greek names, which were Greek names indeed, as Andreas, Nicodemus, Alexander, &c. so did they frame many of their Jewish names, which were Jewish names indeed, into a Greek pronunciation, and so pronounced them among themselves, as Theudas, Baithus, and others in the Talmud; and Herandes for Herod in the Syriack translater, &c. And why Cephas should not be so used among them and other Greek-sounding Syriack names in the New Testament, I have not yet met with any reason that giveth any satisfaction, nor indeed with any Author that giveth any reason.

And let it be observed, 2. That whereas generally common nouns in the Syriack tongue, do end in a, as Aceldama, Abba, Gabbitha, Talitha, Acts 1.19. *Gal.*4.6, *Joh.*19.13. *Mar.*5.41. when they are to be framed into proper names of men, it is done by putting s to the end of them, as Barabbas, Elymas, Barnabas, &c. And of the same nature is Cephas here: Now since this change of nouns from common to proper was made among the Jews, what reason can be given why this letter that made the change should not be reserved among the Jews also? Did the Greeks only call Simon, Cephas, and not the Jews? And did the Greeks call the other men Barnabas and Barabbas; but the Jews Barnaba and Barabba?

Consider, 3. How common the Greek Bible or the LXX. was in use among the Jews at this time, and how much mixture of Greek words was used in their common language at this time, as appeareth by the Syriack translater, the Chald. Paraphrasts, the Talmuds and others the most ancient Jewish Writers, and then we have good cause to think, that they that used the whole Bible in Greek, and that used to speak so much Greek mingled with their Syriack language continually, would not stick to utter one letter that sounded of the Greek, when that letter was only and properly added to denote a proper name.

But you will say, that the New Testament writeth, Ezekias, Josias, Jonas, and the like, with s in the end, as these words are written, and yet there is none that can think that the Jews uttered those words so, but as they are written in the Old Testament, Ezekiah, Josiah, Jonah. It is true, that it is most like they did so, but the difference betwixt them and these words that we have in hand, is so apparent, that it is hardly needful to shew it: those were proper names originally, these were common names made proper: those had s added in the end, not to shew that they were proper names, but to supply the Hebrew h or ה, which the Greek in the end of a word cannot utter; but these have s added in the latter end, purposely and intentionally, to make them proper names, and to shew that they are so.

And 4. let it be observed, How it could be possible for the Disciples in those words of our Saviour, Tu es Petrus, & super hanc petram, Math. 16.18. to understand them otherwise than that Peter should be called the Rock, if Christ used Cepha in both places: Thou art Cepha, and upon this Cepha; Thou art a Rock, and upon this Rock will I build my Church: let any one but judge what interpretation they could make of it, by his own construing and interpreting it, according to the propriety, as the words lie before him. Therefore it is more than probable, that Christ called his name Cephas, uttering and sounding the s in the latter end; and that the addition of that letter was not from the Evangelist, but from Christ himself; and that in the speech mentioned, he thus differenced the words, Thou art Cephas, and upon this Cepha will I build my Church.

II. Now the reason why our Saviour giveth him this name Cephas or Rocky, was not so much for that he was built upon the Rock, for so were all the rest of the Apostles except Judas, but because he had a special work to do about that building which Christ was to found upon the Rock. For in those words, upon this Rock will I build my Church he meaneth meaneth the Church of the Gentiles, which was now in founding, and in that building Peter had this ſpecial and ſingular work and priviledge, that he was the firſt that preached the Goſpel to the Gentiles, Act. 10. & Acts 15.7.

For ſo ſhould the word be rendred, and not as our Engliſh hath it, which is by interpretation a ſtone. This is a paſſage like that in the verſe preceding, Meſſias, which is by interpretation, Chriſt; and that Acts 9.39. Tabitha, which is by interpretation, Dorcas: where our Tranſlaters have very properly obſerved and followed the intention of the Evangeliſts, which is, to give theſe proper names out of one language into another, and not to give them out of proper names into common nouns: And here they ſhould have followed the ſame courſe, which they have done in the margin, but have refuſed it in the Text: The Arabick and Vulgar Latine, and divers others, tranſlate it Petrus according to our ſenſe: but the Syriack tranſlateth not the clauſe at all.

Verſ. 43. The day following.

Janſenius dare not ſuppoſe this to be the next day after that Andrew and the other Diſciple followed Jeſus to his own home; but he thinks it was the day after Chriſt had named Simon, Cephas. The cauſe of his doubting is this, becauſe it being late towards night, when Jeſus and Andrew, and the other Diſciple came to the place where Jeſus dwelt, ver. 39. he cannot ſuppoſe how Peter ſhould be found and brought to Chriſt before the next day: and yet he confeſſeth Epiphanius to be of opinion againſt him. But it being obſerved that Peter and Andrew were brethren, that they dwelt together, Mar. 1.29. that they fiſhed together, Matth. 4.18. &c. it will be no difficulty to conceive how Andrew might find out Peter upon a ſodain, and bring him to Jeſus that very night that they came into Capernaum, though it were late; and accordingly there is no ſcruple to expound this, day following, of the very next day after.

Verſ. 44. Bethſaida.

This was a Town that ſtood beſide the lake of Genneſaret, changed by Philip the Tetrarch into the form or ſtate of a City, and named by him Julia, after the name of Cæſars daughter: ſo Joſephus witneſſeth, Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 3. Κώμην ὁ Βηθσαϊδὰν εἰς λίμνη ὁ τῇ γεννησαρείτιδι πόλεως ἀξιόχρεων ἀξίωμα, πλήθει τε οἰκητόρων, καὶ τῇ ἄλλῃ δυνάμει Ἰουλίᾳ συγάτηρ τῇ Καίσαρος ὁμώνυμον ἐκάλεσεν. The Town Bethſaida by the lake of Genneſaret, he brought to the dignity of a City, both in multitude of inhabitants, and in other ſtrength, and called it after the name of Julia the daughter of Cæſar.

Bethſaida, ſignifieth the houſe, or place of hunting; and it ſeemeth to have been ſo called, becauſe it ſtood in a place where was ſtore of Deer or Veniſon. And to this ſenſe is that paſſage of Jacob to be underſtood, Gen. 49.21. Nephthali, a Hind let looſe, that is, Nephthali ſhall abound in Veniſon, as Aſher with bread and oyl, ver. 20. and Judah with wine, ver. 11. view the places in the original. Now Bethſaida ſtood either in, or very near the tribe of Nephthali, as ſhall be ſhewed elſewhere.

§. The City of Andrew and Peter.

Andrew and Peter after this removed and dwelt in Capernaum, Mark 1.21,29. becauſe they would be near Chriſt whoſe reſidence was there, as was obſerved before: And there Peter pays tribute for himſelf, as in proper place, Matth. 17.27.

§. We have found him of whom Moſes in the Law, and the Prophets did write, &c.

Now to inſiſt upon the ſtudiouſneſs of Philip and Nathaneel in the Law and Prophets, as ſome collect it out of this expreſſion; there are theſe things moſt obſervable out of theſe words: 1. That the whole Scriptures of the Old Teſtament are comprehended under theſe two heads, the Law and the Prophets. And ſo again, Matth. 11.13. Luke 16.29. For though indeed the Law and the Prophets only were read in the Synagogues every Sabbath day, as Acts 13.15. yet the third part of the Old Teſtament called Cetubhim or Hagiographa, did propheſie of Chriſt, as well as the other two, and ſo muſt of neceſſity be included here: For what book of Scriptures is more full of propheſies of Chriſt, than the book of Pſalms? And what hath more clear prediction concerning Chriſt, than the book of Daniel? And yet neither of theſe are taken in among the books of the Prophets as the Jews did did commonly divide them in their Bibles, and read them in their Synagogues, but they come under the third part, Cetubhim. And therefore as by the Law here, is to be underſtood all the Books of Moſes; ſo by the Prophets, is to be underſtood all the Old Teſtament beſide: And ſo what is ſpoken in a Pſalm, is ſaid to be ſpoken by a Prophet, Matth. 13.35. and Daniel is called a Prophet, *Matth.*24.13. And ſo the Penman of the book of Job, Eſther, Chronicles, &c. deſerve the ſame name. And this very conſideration were argument enough, if there were no more, to plead Solomons ſalvation.

2. That Chriſt is the general and chief ſubject of the Law and the Prophets. And here are we got into a very large field, if we would but traverſe it, to ſhew how Law and Prophets in types and propheſies did ſpeak before of Chriſt: but this conſideration, and particulars of it will be continually occurring and emerging as we go along.

3. That when Nathaneel ſaith, That we have found him of whom Moſes and the Prophets did write, Jeſus of Nazaret, he meaneth not, that either Moſes or the Prophets had ſo articulately named him, but that Jeſus of Nazaret proved to be he of whom they had written and ſpoken ſo much.

Verſ. 46. Can there any good thing come out of Nazaret?

This ſeemeth to be ſpoken by Nathaneel, not only as referring to the poorneſs and obſcurity of the City Nazaret, [as that it is neither mentioned by the Prophets to be a producer of any good, nor likely in it ſelf to be ſo, being a place of an inferior and contemptible rank] but as referring rather to the wickedneſs and prophaneneſs of the place, that it was ſo wretched and ungodly a City, that it was unlikely that any good thing ſhould come out of it? The wickedneſs of the people of this place appeareth, Luke 4.29. when they are ſo deſperate as to go about to murder Chriſt at his firſt appearing among them.

Verſ. 47. compare Jer. 9. 4, 5, 6. Behold an Iſraelite indeed, &c.

Although this be the character of every true Chriſtian, as Eſay 65.8. and it be accordingly conceived almoſt generally by Expoſitors, that our Saviour aimeth only at ſuch a thing here, namely, that this is one that ſerveth God ſincerely, and with a good heart, and this is ſuch a one as God requireth a man to be in the profeſſion of Religion, yet can I not apprehend this to be the ſole and proper meaning and intention of theſe words; for why might not the ſame have been ſpoken of, and to Peter, Andrew, and Philip? Certainly they were very ſincere and upright towards God, and were Iſraelites indeed, without guile or hypocriſie in matter of Religion, as well as Nathaneel; their fetching one another to Chriſt, and the readineſs of them all in imbracing of Chriſt, confirmeth this paſt all denial: and it is hard and harſh to think that Chriſt ſhould give that for a ſingular Encomion to Nathaneel, which might generally be given to any of his Diſciples: when he nameth Simon Peter, it was for ſome ſingular and peculiar reſpect, and ſo when he nameth James and John, Boanarges; and doubtleſs when he paſſeth ſuch a character as this upon Nathaneel, it was for ſome regard and reſpect in which he was differenced from other men.

The cauſe and occaſion therefore of this deſcription of him by our Saviour, I conceive rather to be Nathaneel's uprightneſs and deceitleſneſs towards men, than towards God, though his uprightneſs and ſincerity towards God is by no means to be denied. And it ſeemeth that this was a common name and title which Nathaneel had got among his neighbors, and thoſe that knew him, for his very honeſt, upright, and exemplary dealing, converſe and integrity amongſt them, that he was commonly called the guiltleſs Iſraelite, as that Roman was called veriſſimus, for his exceeding great truthfulneſs. And truly to me it is very probable, that the great variety of names that we find divers men in Scripture to have had, [as ſome to have two names, ſome three, ſome more] proceeded in very many of them from this very cauſe and occaſion, namely, their neighbors and acquaintance obſerving ſome ſingular quality in them, and action done by them, gave them ſome denomination or other agreeable to that action or quality: So Gedeon came by his name Jerubbaal, Judg.6.32. and Jerubeſheth, 2 Sam.11.21. So Shemaiah the falſe Prophet came to be called the Nehelamite, or the dreamer, Jer.29.31. and divers others mentioned in Scripture, and in Joſephus, ſome of which will be taken up in their due places: Now it being a common title that Nathaneel had got among all that knew him to be called the Iſraelite without guile; our Saviour when he ſees him come towards him, calls him by the ſame name; and thereupon Nathaneel queſtions him how he came to know him, that he could ſo directly hit upon his common denomination.

Verſ. 48. When thou waſt under the figtree, I ſaw thee.

This ſeemeth to refer, not only to his being under the figtree, but to ſome private and ſecret action that he did there; and for which he went thither: And as our Saviour convinceth the woman of Samaria that he was the Meſſias, by telling her of her evil actions that ſhe did in the dark and ſecret, ſo doth he Nathaneel, by hinting ſome good things that he did from the eyes of men under a figtree, before Philip light on him there, as praying, vowing, or ſome other action which none knew of but himſelf: And this appeareth rather to be the matter that Chriſt aimed at; and that worketh in Nathaneel for his conviction, becauſe that it was poſſible that Chriſt might have been near the figtree himſelf as well as Philip, and he might ſee Nathaneel, and Nathaneel not ſee him, and ſo might Nathaneel have ſuppoſed; but when he telleth of ſome ſecret action that paſſed from him under the figtree, which his conſcience told him that no mortal eye could be conſcious to but himſelf, then he crys out, Thou art the Son of God, &c.

Verſ. 49. Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Iſrael.

This he ſpeaketh from 2 Sam. 7. 14. Pſal. 2. 6, 7. & Pſal. 89. 26, 27. Where God ſetteth his own and only begotten Son upon his hill of Zion, and throne of David, and to rule over the houſe of Jacob for ever, Luke 1. 33.

Verſ. 51. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you.

In the Greek it is Amen, Amen:] Now becauſe this manner of expreſſion is exceeding uſual in the ſpeeches of our Saviour through the Goſpel, ſometimes ſingle Amen, as in the reſt of the Evangeliſts, and conſtantly doubled in John, Amen, Amen; and becauſe this is the firſt place according to our Harmony-order and method, that we meet with the word at all, it will be pertinent here to take up the meaning of it once for all, and to conſider theſe two particulars concerning it: 1. What our Saviour doth properly intend and mean by Amen, when he uſeth it ſo oft: And 2. Why John the Evangeliſt doth conſtantly uſe it doubled, when the other three never uſe it ſo at all.

1, As to the firſt, it is to be obſerved, [and that is well enough known] that the word Amen is an Hebrew word, and is very commonly uſed in the old Teſtament; but this withall is to be obſerved [which it may be is not ſo commonly noted] that it is never uſed in the Old Teſtament, but by way of wiſhing or apprecation, (the ſixteenth verſe of Eſay 65. only excepted, of which anon) As when it cometh ſingle, as Deut. 27 twelve times over, where the LXX render it γένοιτο, be it done. 1 Kings 1. 36. where the LXX have it γένοιτο ὥτως, ſo be it, Nehem. 5. 13. Jer. 28. 6. Pſal. 106. 48, &c. Or when it cometh double, Numb. 5. 22. Pſal. 41. 13. & 72. 19. & 89. 52. which the LXX expreſs γένοιτο, γένοιτο, be it done, be it done, or ſo be it, ſo be it. In all theſe places it is uſed by way of prayer or imprecation, according as the ſubject matter was to which it was applyed, as David Kimchi expreſſeth it in Micol in the root אמן: It is ſpoken, ſaith he, עלדרך תפלה או הוא על דרך קבלה שקבלו על עצמם קללה אם יעבורו either by way of prayer, or by way of undertaking, as that they take upon them a curſe if they tranſgreſs.

But in theſe utterances of our Saviour the ſenſe of it is altered from precatory to aſſertory, or from the way of wiſhing, to the way of affirming: for what one Evangeliſt expreſſeth, Amen I ſay unto you, This poor widdow, &c. Mar. 12. 43. another uttereth Ἀληθῶς λέγω, Of a truth I ſay unto you, &c. Luke 21. 2. Mathew ſaith, Amen, I ſay unto you, That ſome that ſtand here, &c. which Luke giveth Λέγω ἀληθῶς, Of a truth I ſay unto you, Luke 9. 27. So Ἀμὴν in Matth. 23. 36. is rendred Ναὶ, truly, Luke 11. 51. &c. For indeed the word Amen doth properly betoken and ſignifie truth, at is apparent by the conſtruction of that verſe forementioned, Eſay 65. 16. He who bleſſeth himſelf in the earth, ſhall bleſs himſelf באלהי אמן in the God of truth; and he that ſweareth in the earth, ſhall ſwear באלהי אמן by the God of truth: as not only our Engliſh, but alſo R. Sol. and David Kimchi do well render it; and the gloſs of Kimchi upon the place is worth the citing; He ſaith in the earth, ſaith he, becauſe in all the world there ſhall be one truth, and that ſhall be the truth of אלהי אמן the God of truth.

Now Chriſt is called Amen, Rev. 13. 14. as being not only the faithful and true witneſs, but even he in whom all the promiſes of God are yea and Amen, 2 Cor. 1. 20. and even truth it ſelf.

Therefore when he cometh to publiſh the Goſpel, which is that one truth that ſhould be in all the world, (for the prophet Eſay ſpeaketh there apparently concerning the times of the Goſpel) he ſpeaketh of his own (as he ſaith the Devil doth when he ſpeaketh a lye, Joh. 8. 44.) and uſeth a different ſtile from the Prophets, (which uſed to authorize thorize their truths with, Thus ſaith the Lord,) and ſpeaketh Αὐτοπίστως, upon his own Authority, as the God of truth: Amen, I ſay unto you. In this word therefore is included two things, namely, the truth ſpoken, and the truth ſpeaking it; and the expreſſion doth not only import the certainty of the things delivered, but alſo recalleth to conſider that he that delivers it is אלהי אמן Amen the God of truth, and truth it ſelf. And this conſideration will help to give a reſolution to the ſecond ſcruple that was propoſed, and that is, why John alone doth uſe the word doubled, and none other of the Evangeliſts.

I am but little ſatisfied with that gloſs that is given by ſome upon this matter, namely, that John doth conſtantly double this word, becauſe the matters ſpoken by him are of a more celeſtial and ſublime ſtrain, than the matters ſpoken by the other Evangeliſts, and therefore the greater attention is challenged to them by this gemination; for neither can I ſee, nor dare I think of any ſuch ſuperiority and inferiority in the writings of the Evangeliſts.

Nor do I ſuppoſe that Chriſt uſed this gemination himſelf, (for it is very ſtrange that in thoſe ſpeeches that this Evangeliſt mentioneth he ſhould do ſo, and in the ſpeeches that the others mention he ſhould not do ſo, when it may be ſometimes it was the very ſame ſpeech) but I conceive that the Evangeliſt hath doubled the word, that he might expreſs the double ſenſe which the ſingle word in our Saviours mouth, and in the other Evangeliſts includeth. And ſo he addeth nothing to what Chriſt ſpake, but explaineth his ſpeech to the utmoſt extent. He ſaith in the other Evangeliſts Amen ſingly, but he meaneth thus doubly, This is truth, and I am truth that ſpeak it: Now John that he might clear this double meaning, doth double the word Amen, Amen, the one whereof doth refer to the thing that is ſpoken, and the other to the perſon that ſpeaketh it. But the queſtion propoſed, is not yet reſolved, why John ſhould do thus, rather than any of the other; but the ſame anſwer that reſolveth why John ſhould relate ſo many things that none of the other three do ever mention, will reſolve this: namely, that it was Gods will and diſpoſal that there ſhould be four that ſhould write the Goſpel, and that ſome writing one thing, and ſome another, ſome after one manner, ſome another, the Story ſhould be divinely made up to its full perfection. Now John wrote laſt, and he had warrant and opportunity to relate what the others had omitted: And as for the particular in hand, he ſaw that the other had only produced this word ſingle, as Chriſt indeed had continually uttered it, and that they had ſome of them expounded it in a place or two Ἀληθῶς & Ναί, to ſhew that it was to be taken in theſe ſpeeches in a meaning different from that precatory ſtrain in which it was conſtantly uſed in the Old Teſtament: but yet that there was ſomething more included in the word, and therefore he is warranted by the holy Ghoſt to explain it to the full in two words, Amen, Amen: And thus the counſels of the Lord of old, uttered and revealed by the Prophets, do in the preaching of the Goſpel by our Saviour prove אמונה אמן Truth, truth, Eſay 25. 1.

Obſerve the manner of our Saviours anſwer; the text ſaith, he ſaith to him, but his words are aimed at them all, Amen, Amen, I ſay to you, Ye ſhall ſee, &c. He applyeth his ſpeech to all in general, though he ſpake more ſingularly, (as the Text telleth) to Nathaneel in proſecution of the diſcourſe that had been betwixt them before.

Now the main difficulty of this ſpeech lyeth in this, in what ſenſe to underſtand, the opening of the Heavens; and where and how theſe Diſciples ſaw the Angels aſcending and deſcending upon Chriſt: The words are capable of a double conſtruction, and ſome give them the one, and ſome the other: ſome underſtand them literally, that the Diſciples did at ſome times ſee the Heavens opened indeed, as John the Baptiſt had done, Luke 3. and the Angels aſcending and deſcending upon Chriſt indeed, though never a one of the Evangeliſts mention it. And fair arguments and probability they ſhew for this, which I ſhall not ſpend time to mention.

But others conceive the words are to be interpreted in a Metaphorical and borrowed ſenſe, and not according to the letter, and ſo taken, ſome interpret them one way, ſome another.

I confeſs that I have ſtood at this place, tanquam in bivio, a very long time, and can hardly tell which way to take: both the interpretations of the thing, both the literal and the tropical, carrying ſo fair a colour and appearance with them. But I cannot but incline to the latter, namely, to conceive that Chriſt here ſpeaketh in a borrowed ſenſe, and by the opening of Heaven, and the aſcending and deſcending of Angels, that he meaneth not hiſtorically, that that very thing was to be done, but myſtically meaneth ſome thing elſe, which he thought good to expreſs by theſe borrowed phraſes. And that which mainly ſwayeth me that way is, [beſides the ſilence of all the Evangeliſts, that never mention ſuch a thing really done] the force and ſignification of the word Ἀμήν. Our

Engliſh

Engliſh and Eraſmus render it hereafter; and ſo have left the time at a very large and uncertain ſcantling. But the Syriack and the Vulgar render it, from this time, or henceforward, and ſo it is moſt properly and naturally meaneth: For it ſignifieth not only a date of time, and ſome one action done after that date at a time uncertain; but a continuance of ſuch actions or things from that date forward.

Now our Saviours meaning in this phraſe is, that from this very time forward he would declare and ſhew himſelf in his Miniſtery glorioufly and with power, and henceforward ſhould his Diſciples ſee and perceive ſo much by glorious demonſtrations of him, that they might know that he was the Chriſt.

His expreſſions of the Heavens opened, and the Angels aſcending and deſcending, refer and allude to Ezekiels viſion at Chebar, Ezek. 1. 1. and to Jacobs at Bethel, Gen. 28. two as glorious revelations of Chriſt, as any viſion the Old Teſtament mentioneth.

His meaning may be given in a paraphraſe, thus; Nathaneel doſt thou think it ſo great a matter, that I could ſee thee though thou wert ſo cloſe, and private, and ſecret under the figtree? thou ſhalt ſee far greater things than theſe; for I tell you all: From this time forward I muſt begin to preach the Goſpel, and ye ſhall perceive that I have ſuch knowledge of things, as if heaven it ſelf were open to me: and ſuch power of miracles and doing wonders, as if the Angels were continually going on errands for me, and doing my will. And accordingly the Evangeliſt relateth that on the very next day he ſhewed a miracle at Cana in Galilee, and manifeſted forth his glory: and in the latter end of the ſame Chapter, he ſpeaketh of his miracles at Jeruſalem, and his knowledge of all men, ver. 24.

So that henceforth Chriſts Miniſtery in preaching and doing miracles doth begin; the place, Cana: the time, ſome two months after his Baptiſm, or thereabouts, for ought is to be perceived from the Evangeliſts to the contrary.

§ The Son of Man.

This title of Chriſt, which is ſo frequent in the Evangeliſts, [and yet which is obſervable, never but in his own words] meaneth not only to expreſs a man, according to the Syrian Dialect then uſed, בר נשא Bar noſho, nor only to expreſs Chriſts humanity, or that he was truly man, in all things like unto us, ſin only excepted; nor doth it only intimate his humility, when he doth not diſdain to call himſelf ſo oft by this humble name, though it may have ſome aim at all theſe things: but it ſeemeth to be uſed ſo oft by our Saviour concerning himſelf, as intimating him to be the ſecond Adam, and referring to that promiſe that was made to Adam inſtantly after his fall, of the ſeed of the Woman that ſhould break the Serpents head: And to this very purpoſe, as we obſerved in its place, the Evangeliſt Luke, at the ſtory of his Baptiſm, when he was to be inſtalled into his Miniſtery, and had that glorious teſtimony from heaven, deriveth his pedegree up to the firſt Adam, to draw all mens eyes to that firſt promiſe, and to cauſe them to own him for that ſeed there promiſed, and for that effect that is there mentioned, of diſſolving the works of Satan: And as that Evangeliſt giveth that hint, when he his now entring this quarrel with Satan, even in the entrance of his Miniſtery, ſo doth he himſelf as he goeth along in it, very frequently and commonly by this very phraſe, give the ſame intimation for the ſame purpoſe. Nathaneel had proclaimed him the Son of God, he inſtantly titles himſelf, the Son of Man; not only to ſhew his humanity, [for that Nathaneel was aſſured of by the words of Philip, who calls him, Jeſus of Nazeret, the ſon of Joſeph] but to reſolve the thoughts of the hearers to the firſt promiſe, and to lead them to look for reſtoring of that by this ſecond Adam which was loſt in the firſt. To him was heaven ſhut upon his fall, and he loſt his former converſe and attendance of Angels, but ye ſhall ſee heaven open, and the Angels aſcending and deſcending upon the Son of Man, that you may know that the ſecond Adam is here.

It is true indeed that Ezekiel and Daniel are called either of them Son of Man, Ezek. 2. 1. &c. Dan. 8. 17. and that all men in general are called the ſons of Man, בני אדם Pſal. 62. 9. as nomen naturæ, and ſo we deny not but this title doth denote and ſhew Chriſts humanity, and may tell us to what honour God raiſed our nature in him: But when he doth often ſtile himſelf by the title with ſuch an Emphaſis, it draws the eyes and thoughts of all to meditate alſo and conſider upon this further thing.

SECTION XIII.

S. JOHN. CHAP. II.

Christs first miracle, changing of forms.

His first Passover.

AND [a] the third there was a marriage in [b] Cana of Galilee; and the mother of Jesus was there.

2. And both Jesus was called, and his Disciples to the [c] marriage.

3. And when [d] they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus saith unto him, They have no wine.

4. Jesus saith unto her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? mine hour is not yet come.

5. His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it.

[a] The third day.] There is much difference whence to date this day; whether from Johns last testimony of Christ, or from Christs coming into Galilee, or from his conference with Nathaneel: and this difficulty hath the rather risen, because this is another Chapter: for certainly if this verse had been in the Chapter before, they that date this third day, from Christs coming into Galilee, would more readily have inclined to another date, namely, from the testimony of John. And truly for all it is a new Chapter, yet I see not why it should not be linked to that chain of time that is in the Chapter before. Now there it is said, John stood and two of his Disciples, and he testified of Jesus, and they followed him. And the day following Jesus would go into Galilee, and meeteth with Philip and Nathaneel: and the third day there was a marriage: what doubt can there be of those three days thus linked together, especially it being considered that the Holy Ghost doth here date the time of Christs first acting and moving in the Ministery of the Gospel, and will shew how soon he wrought miracles after he began?

[b] The Syr. readeth, In Catna of Galilee, and so doth it again, Chap. 4. 6. & 21. 2. And so doth the Hebrew Map of Canaan, mention קטנא בגלול Catna in Galilee: for into this name, it seems it was grown in after times; and the Syrian calleth it by the name it bare in his time, as we find it common with the Chaldee Paraphrast to do by names of places in the Old Testament, as he calleth Kadesh-barnea, constantly Reham; he calleth Argob, Trachona, or Trachonitis, Deut. 3. 4. and so might be instanced in exceeding many.

[c] Syr. משתותא i. e. the marriage Feast: for a Feast ever attended a marriage, see Gen 29. 22. Judg. 14. 10.

[d] Ὑστερήσαντος οἴνου:] Some by the tense would collect that the wine was but now failing, and was not utterly spent, and upon this collection would interpret those words, mine hour is not yet come, to this sense that Christ would not work the miracle till the wine was clean gone; but neither is the tense of so strict a signification, nor are those words of such a meaning; as might be shewed at large for the former, and shall be touched upon for the latter by and by: see those instances about the tense, Matth. 26. 26. εὐλογήσας ἔκλασε. 27. εὐχαριστήσας ἔδωκε. 30. ὑμνήσαντες ἐξῆλθον: which to spare more, do clearly intimate the action past; as Christ brake not the bread, nor gave the cup, while he was blessing and giving thanks, but after, &c.

S. JOHN, Chap. II.

6. And there were set there [e] six water pots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three [f] firkins apiece.

7. Jesus saith unto them, Fill the waterpots with water; and they filled them up to the brim.

[e] Hydriæ: The same word is used by this same Evangelist, Chap. 4. 28. And the very notation of the word in this place, conduceth to the heightning of the miracle, and the confirming of the truth of it. For these Vessels were Hydriæ, water-vessels, destined and used only for holding of water, and therefore no bottom or dregs of wine could be conceived in them, as by which some colour or taste might be given to the water to resemble wine. The vessels which women used to fetch water in from the wells, were also called Hydriæ, as is apparent by the place lately alledged, Joh. 4. 28. these in Hebrew were called כדים Gen. 24. 14. &c. which the three Targums express by three ſeveral words מורא לגיבא קולתא: but thoſe veſſels were either earthen or wooden, or of leather, or ſome ſuch light and portable matter, but theſe here ſpoken of were of ſtone, becauſe they were not to be carryed from place to place, but ſtood conſtantly in their dining rooms, or thereabouts, to have water ready for them to waſh againſt they came to meat.

What this meaſure μέτρον contained, ſhall be examined in the explanation of the verſe.

[g] Ἀρχιτρικλίνῳ.] There are three words couched and compacted in this one, and every one of the three refers and draws us to look upon three ſeveral things of the cuſtoms and faſhions of thoſe times; 1. κλίνῳ from κλίνη, a bed, becauſe it was their manner of old to ſit upon beds as they ſate at meat, Eſther 7. 8. The King returned to the place at the banquet of wine, and Haman was fallen upon the bed where Eſther was. Ἀνεπέπτωτο ἐν κλίνῃ ἐν ᾗ ὁ Ἐδέσπυνε τῇ ἐμῇ ἐγκλίνῃ, Plat. in Sympoſ: He reſted on the bed on which he had ſupped, which was near to mine. 2. τρι-κλίνῳ; it intimateth three beds, for that was the common number that they had in their dining-rooms, and from whence that room was commonly called by the Latins Triclinium, or the room with three beds: But of theſe things they ſpeak at large, that write of the Jewiſh and the Roman antiquities, whither the Reader is referred. And 3. as for the Ἀρχι-triclinus, or Governor of the Feaſt, who he was, ſhall be ſeen anon.

[h] Joſephus calleth this Town Capharnome. For in his relation of his own life, he tells, that he had a fall from his horſe, and got a bruiſe, and was carried into the Town called Capharnome; ἐκομίσθην εἰς κώμην Καφαρνάμην λεγομένην.

Now this proper name is compounded of two words, Cephar and Naum: Now that Cephar ſignifieth a village, it is undoubted, for the word occurreth ſeveral times in that ſenſe in the Old Teſtament, 1 Samuel 6. 18. 1 Chron. 27. 28. Nehemiah 6. 2. &c. But whether the latter word Naum were written נעום or נחום is ſome doubtfulneſs: The Hebrew Map of Canaan writes it כפר נחום The Town of Nahum, or the Town of Conſolation, which name ſuited very well with it, now when Chriſt had his habitation in it, but it is commonly ſuppoſed that it was called כפר נעום or, the Town of Beauty, becauſe of the pleaſant ſituation of it on the banks of Genneſaret, and becauſe of the beauty of the buildings of the Town it ſelf.

[i] Ὠκοδομήθη.] This word may be conſtrued two ways; either was in building, or hath been built. And there may be ſome doubtfulneſs whether way to fix the conſtruction, in regard of the doubtfulneſs of whether Temple the Jews ſpeak here, whether of that that was built by Zorobabel upon the return of the people of the Jews out of captivity, or that that was built by Herod the great. When we come to explain the verſe, it will appear how fairly the word may be conſtrued and underſtood either the one way or the other, and how fitly in theſe ſeveral conſtructions it may be applyed to theſe ſeveral Temples that have been mentioned: And there if we can, we will fix it to its proper meaning, and to the Jews meaning and intention in theſe words.

Reaſon of the Order.

THERE need not any words, nor much pains to confirm the order and connexion of this Chapter with that that went before, nor the conjunction of theſe ſtories of this Chapter one to another. For the words, on the third day, uſed in the very front of the Chapter, do ſo plainly tye it to the preceding, that there needeth no more to be ſaid of it. And the tranſition of the ſtory from Cana to Capernaum, and from Capernaum to the Paſover at Jeruſalem, is ſo clear, that he that runneth may read the connexion, and none can make any doubt or ſcruple at all of it: Only when it is ſaid in verſ. 12. After this he went down to Capernaum; it is to be underſtood, with ſome ſtay made before in Galilee, as ſhall be ſhewed at the explanation of the verſe.

Verſe 1.

NOT to be too curious in finding out reaſons why Chriſt ſhould work his firſt miracle at a marriage, and why by transforming water into wine, about which buſineſs ſome Expoſitors have been needleſly induſtrious; theſe particulars cannot be paſſed over without obſervation, they are ſo obvious and emergent out of the thing it ſelf: 1. That as marriage was the firſt inſtitution that God ordained, ſo at a marriage was the firſt miracle that our Saviour wrought. 2. That as he had ſhewed himſelf miraculous but a little while ago in an extraordinary faſt, ſo doth he now by an extraordinary proviſion for a feaſt. 3. That though he refuſed to turn ſtones into bread, to ſatisfie his own hunger, becauſe it would have been for the ſatisfaction of Satan, yet doth he not refuſe to turn water into wine, to make up the full feſtivity at a marriage, becauſe it would be for the ſhewing forth of his own glory. 4. That as the firſt miracle that was wrought in the world by man was transformation, Exod. 7. 9, 20. ſo is the firſt miracle that was wrought by the Son of man; and he worketh no more of the ſame nature. 5. That as the firſt time you hear of John Baptiſt in his publick Miniſtery, ye hear of his ſtrict diet, and that he cometh neither eating nor drinking; ſo the firſt time ye hear of Chriſt towards his publick Miniſtry, ye hear of him at a marriage feaſt, and turning water into wine. 6. If any will obſerve from his being at this marriage feaſt, that he honoured marriage, and allowed of moderate and ſober feaſting: Or, 7. if from this, and his turning water into wine, any will think of the marriage of Chriſt and his Church, and of things changed into a better condition under the Goſpel, and of the Elements of the Goſpel-Sacraments, water and wine, he hath liberty, if he can find any profit in ſuch obſervations. But how Chriſts being preſent at this marriage, ſhould diſcharge marriage of the diſorders where-in it was before by divorces, re-marriages, polygamies, and ſo make Chriſtian marriage a Sacrament, as the Rhemiſts note upon this place, is a thing ſo far fetcht, that it is an argument only fit for Papiſts that have ſuch an implicit faith, as to believe any thing. And if one ſhould have queſtioned the Rhemiſts, did not Chriſt by being preſent at this and other feaſts, diſcharge feaſts alſo of their diſorders, of drunkenneſs, exceſs, and vanity, and make Chriſtian feaſting a Sacrament too? No doubt we ſhould have ſome very learned diſtinction to ſhew the difference.

and

§ In Cana of Galilee.

Expoſitors even generally do ſpeak here of a Cana the great, and Cana the leſs, the greater near Sidon; the leſs, they agree not where: the one, as Maldonate tells us, called, Cana Sidoniorum, or, Cana of the Sidonians; and the other, Cana of Galilee. I cannot track this diſtinction further back, than to Hierom in locis Hebraicis: and withall I cannot ſee why it ſhould be ſo currently and generally entertained as it is, unleſs he had given better grounds for it than I find any. It is true indeed, that the Scripture ſpeaketh of a double Cana, one in the tribe of Aſher, Joſh. 19. 28. and the other in the tribe of Ephraim, Joſh. 16. 8. & 17. 9. That in the tribe of Aſher is mentioned indeed with great Sidon, not with any inference that it lay ſo very near it, but that the lines of Aſhers coaſt went up towards Sidon, for of that, and not of Cana's being near Sidon, is that place to be underſtood: Now this Cana was certainly in Galilee paſt denyal [for Aſher was in Galilee;] and where to find another Cana in Galilee, I believe it will be impoſſible to tell: This therefore I cannot but conclude to be the place, and that it is called Cana of Galilee, to diſtinguiſh it from the other Cana in the tribe of Ephraim which was Cana of Samaria: And thus ſuppoſing this our Cana to be in the tribe of Aſher, as the Scripture ſheweth it us, thoſe words of Jacob may not unfitly be applyed to this preſent occurrence there, that now Aſher yeeldeth royal dainties indeed, Gen. 49. 20. when Chriſt turneth water into wine.

Joſeph once reſided in this Town, as he teſtifieth himſelf, In vita ſua, Διετριβον ὁ ΧΓ τὸν καιρὸν ἐκεῖνον ἐν κώμῃ τῆς Γαλιλαίας ἡ μετωνομάσται Κανὰ, I was at that time in the town of Galilee called Cana; and he relateth, that having a ſudden occaſion to go from thence to Tiberias, he marched all night, and came thither early in the morning.

§ And the mother of Jeſus was there.

His Father Joſeph, it is like, was now dead, for there is no mention of him any more in the Goſpel; and when Chriſt dyed, then it is apparent that Mary was a widdow, for he commendeth her to his Diſciple John, and he taketh her to his own houſe, Joh. 19. 26. &c.

Now Mary had very near kindred in this town of Cana, namely, Mary the wife of Alpheas, or Cleopas, and all that family by that relation. For 1. Mary the wife of Cleopas is called her ſiſter, Joh. 19. 25. and that ſame Mary is called the mother of James and Joſes, Matth. 27. 56. which were undoubtedly the ſons of Alpheus, Mark 3. 18. So that Alpheus and Cleopas were but one and the ſame name, and Mary his wife was very near allyed to the Virgin Mary. 2. Alpheus and his family lived in Cana, as may be collected by this, that one of his ſons, namely, Simon, is called a Canaanite, to diſtinguiſh him from Simon Peter, Mark 3. 18. & 6. 3. And he is called a Canaanite, as meaning and importing that he was a man of Cana.

That this marriage therefore was in Alpheus his houſe, may be ſuppoſed upon this; That 1. Mary and Jeſus their near kindred are invited, and all Jeſus Diſciples for his ſake. 2. That Mary the mother of Jeſus is ſo careſull about the wine, leſt the feaſt ſhould be ſpoiled, and the Bridegroom and his family ſhould be diſgraced by it. And 3. in that the Evangeliſt preſently after the ſtory of this feaſt, ſpeaketh of brethren of Jeſus, that is, his kinſmen, that went with him to Capernaum, ver. 12. whereas he had no kinſmen in his company before this feaſt at all: Now theſe kinſmen or brethren were James, and Judas, and Simon, and Joſes, Mark 6. 3.

Ver. 3. The mother of Jeſus ſaith unto him, They have no wine.

As it is apparent by the very frame of theſe words, that the Virgin looked after a miracle; ſo it is ſomething ſtrange, upon what ground ſhe doth expect it. Had ſhe ſeen any miracle done by him heretofore? Some conceive ſhe had; as that, in the poor and indigent eſtate of Joſeph, he had ſometimes ſupplyed neceſſaries by miracle when he lived there as a private man: but this hath not ſuch certainty in it ſelf, or ground in Scripture, as to be a ſufficient reſolution that this was the ground upon which his mother now deſires a miracle. But this is undoubted, that ſhe knew him to be the Meſſias, and the Son of God; this ſhe had had ſo many evidences and aſſurances of, that that was paſt all denial with her, and it may be that was it that ſhe built upon, when ſhe propoſeth to him, to povide wine in a miraculous way. It is true, no queſtion, that her eye was upon that, that, and upon that power that was lodged in his being the Son of God, as knowing that he was able to do such a thing if it pleased him; but what warrant had she to urge the acting of that power, since for ought we find, she had never seen him do any miracle before; nay, where, or whence had she intimation of his doing any miracle at all? Yes, she had intimation of such a thing, and of such a thing to be begun ere long, from those words of Christ spoken but the day before: From henceforth ye shall see the Heavens opened, and the Angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man. From those very words I conceive she took the rise of her demanding a miracle from her son. For in them he had plainly told his Disciples then present with him, (and there is very good ground to suppose her then to be in the company too) that they should see, ἀπ' ἄρτι, from that time, some divine and heavenly manifestation of him, though he were the Son of man, yet to be the Son of God; and that now he would begin to shew himself in his actings and working of wonders, agreeable and suitable to one that had Heaven and Angels at his will and attendance: Upon this it is that she builds her request and proposal at this time, and her words are words of faith, for she believeth what Christ had spoken, and therefore she speaketh; and although she receiveth some check in Christs answer to her, for her going about to limit and determine the hic & nunc of those his miraculous actions, yet was the proposal it self a fruit of her faith, and Christ seeth so much in her, and refuseth her not.

Ver. 4. Woman what have I to do with thee?

There is exceeding much ado among the Romish party, to mince and to qualifie these words, that they may not be a reprehension; for they cannot endure that any one should think, that the Virgin Mary ever did any thing worthy of reproof. The Rhemists gloss upon the words, shall serve to shew their industry in this matter, to spare the alledging of more, which might be done exceeding abundantly, and (when all is alledged) but to little satisfaction. Christ then may mean here, say they, What is that woman to me and thee being but strangers, that they want wine; as some intepret it: or (which is the more proper use of that kind of speech in holy Writ) what have I to do with thee? that is, why should I have respect to thy desire in this case? In matters touching my charge, and the commission of my Father for preaching, working miracles, and other graces, I must not be tyed to flesh and blood. Which was not a reprehension of our Lady, or signification that he would not hear her in this or other things pertaining to Gods glory, or the good of men, for the event sheweth the contrary; but it was a lesson to the company that heard it, and namely to his Disciples, that respect of kindred should not draw them to do any thing against reason, or be the principal motion, why they do their duties, but Gods glory. And a little after, Our Lady knew it was no check to her, but a doctrine to others. Now quorsum hoc? Why do these men, and generally all the Expositors of the same school keep such ado to clear this from a reprehension? why, because the Virgin Mary must have no check by no means: but if it had been any woman in the world but she, or any man in the world but Peter, it is a question whether we should have had all this ado to carry these words out of a reprehension.

The manner of the expression they cannot deny to be of a reprehensive nature, the common use of it in Scripture is so apparent, Judg. 11. 12. 2 Sam. 16. 10. Ezr. 4. 3. Matth. 8. 29. and divers of the most ancient Fathers have understood it here in such a sense; as Irenæus, Chrysostome, Augustine, Athanasius, produced by Beza upon the place. It is more pertinent, and to the purpose therefore, to examine the reason why our Saviour giveth his mother such a check, than to seek evasions and arguments to discharge it from being such a thing.

There be that have conceived that our Saviour that knew all hearts, did perceive a little pride and vain-glory breathing in these words of his mother, as if she sought for, and was tickled with some desire of esteem and glory, which would redound to her upon these actions of her son: But upon what ground they have built so uncharitable a gloss as this is far from apparency. Although we hold not the Virgin Mary free from sin, as the Papists do, (for upon Mark 3. 31. we cannot but lay a very foul sin to her charge) yet do I not know any cause for which to charge her with pride, especially here where the respect and care of her kinsmans credit in whose house she now was, did move her to propose this to her son, rather than any respect of her own. But others more charitably somewhat have construed it so, as if Christ should check her for going about to keep him still under her maternal correction and commands, when he was now come to so full an age, as that he might very well be guide of his own actions, and accordingly they have read the latter clause by way of question, What is not mine hour yet come? that I may be at mine own disposal, but still must be at the mothers command? but besides the quaintness of this interrogative reading, hardly warranted by any Copy extant, it may very well be supposed poſed that there was ſomething more that our Saviour looked after in the matter, than his own priviledge and immunity from his mothers command, or elſe as the former expoſition laid ſome aſperſion of pride upon the mother, this doth very nearly do it upon the Son: The mind of Chriſt therefore in the uttering of theſe words, may beſt be underſtood by thoſe that he ſpeaketh with them, Mine hour is not yet come, as he being the beſt Expoſitor of himſelf, if we can rightly expound thoſe.

§ Mine hour is not yet come.

Not to trouble my ſelf and the Reader to ſhew that ὥρα, an hour, in Scripture is not allways taken in that ſtrict ſenſe, as an hour properly is taken with us, but that it very commonly and often is uſed to ſignifie time in general, and of an undefined meaſure; theſe words of Chriſt ſeem to have this aim. He had told the day before, that ἀπ' ἄρτι, From thenceforth they ſhould ſee the Heavens opened, &c. that is, that now he began to be revealed, and from henceforward he muſt declare himſelf in his Publick Miniſtery and in power. Mary taketh occaſion of her propoſal to him for this miracle from his own words, as was obſerved before; But Chriſt ſays no, upon this reaſon, becauſe his working miracles was to confirm his doctrine, and therefore it were fit he ſhould firſt preach and ſhew his firſt miracle rather upon a Sermon than upon a feaſt: And that this is his mind in this clauſe, may be concluded by his condeſcenſion, and in that he doth accompliſh what the Virgin his mother doth deſire, although he ſeem to deny her deſire: He firſt gives her a mild reprehenſion, for that ſhe will be medling ſo with his Miniſterial actings, as that when he hath but told that he muſt do miracles, ſhe will offer to preſcribe the time and occaſion. This he doth in thoſe words, Woman, what have I to do with thee? He then rectifies her in the doctrine concerning his miracles, namely, that they were not to be acted upon all offers and occaſions, but to confirm his Doctrine among thoſe uncredulous ones, that unleſs they ſaw a ſign or wonder would not believe: This he doth in this clauſe, Mine hour is not yet come: And then he acts the miracle that ſhe did deſire, becauſe he knew it would have the fruit here that his miracles aimed and looked after, namely, belief in thoſe that ſaw it; and ſo it had, for his Diſciples that he had choſen before in the former Chapter, beleived on him; ver. 11. and there were new ones added, of his own kindred: So that though the former part of Chriſts ſpeech in this verſe be a flat reprehenſion of his mother, yet is not the latter part a flat denial of her requeſt, but an expoſition of the moſt proper meaning of his former words. Now if it be queſtioned when that hour came of which he ſpeaketh, it is anſwered by ſome when John Baptiſt was laid up in his priſon, for that then it is ſaid, Jeſus began to preach, &c. but it is more than apparent that Jeſus both preached very much, and did miracles very many before that time, and therefore thoſe words, From that time Jeſus began to preach, are to be conſtrued in another ſenſe, than in an antitheſis to what he had done before, as ſhall be ſhewed when we come there. And this hour that he ſpeaketh of here, is to be underſtood of the firſt time of his publick Miniſtery and Miracles after this; which the text at the furtheſt gives account to have been at Jeruſalem at the Paſsover, ver. 23. For Jeruſalem was the chief City, and the place where Meſſias was eſpecially looked for, and therefore the Evangeliſt doth properly refer us thither for the miracles after this; and to obſerve his hour there come.

The ſtrangeneſs of Chriſts ſeeming to deny to do this miracle, and yet doing it, hath put ſome upon this manner of reconciling of the matter, namely, that while there was any wine remaining, he refuſed to do it, leſt the miracle ſhould not be apparent enough, but ſome ſuſpition might have been that there was ſome remnant of, or ſome mixture with the old wine; but when that was all gone, then he wrought the miracle, and then it was undeniable, and accordingly they underſtand the tenſe in the Greek, ὑστερήσαντος οἴνου, not when the wine was clean gone, but when it was in failing. But beſides that the Greek word will not make this out, the ſame cavil might have been now, if they would have cavilled, as before: for the croſs-grain'd unbelievers that would have ſaid before, that there was ſome mixture of the water with the wine that remained; might ſay now as well, that there was ſome mixture of the water with ſome wine that was concealed.

Ver. 5. His mother ſaith unto the Servants, Whatſoever he ſaith unto you, do it.

Here is a ſcruple, that Mary ſhould be denyed as ſhe was in the verſe before, and yet be ſo confident of the thing to be done, as ſhe is in this. Divers anſwers are given to it, as 1. That ſhe doubted not but that he would begin to work miracles the ſooner for her ſake. 2. That ſhe was aſſured of his power, and of his benignity towards all. 3. By her familiarity with him, and acquaintance with all his manner of ſpeeches, ſhe knew it was no repulſe. 4. The ſtrength of her Faith would not ſuffer her to doubt. 5. It may be after his check given her for inſtruction, he ſhewed ſome evidence that he would do this thing, either by word or geſture, which the Evangeliſt hath concealed. 6. There is negatio probationis, ſometimes uſed in Scripture, as Gen. 19.2. the Angels ſay unto Lot, Nay, but we will lodge in the ſtreets, and Mat. 15.26. It is not meet to take the childrens bread, and caſt it to dogs. Not that the Angels were fixedly reſolved to lie in the ſtreets all night, but that they would try and put on Lots importunity: Nor that Chriſt was determinately reſolvedly not to help the woman of Canaan, but that he would try and exerciſe her faith: So may we underſtand the denyal here, and ſo did Mary underſtand it. Not that he did hereby totally and irreverſibly gainſay her deſire and propoſal, [the ſequel ſhews the contrary] but that he would inſtruct her and inform her underſtanding, and prove and ſtrain her Faith, to ſee how it would act upon ſuch a denyal. And it acted ſtrongly, and as ſhe asked in faith, ſo ſhe goes on in Faith, and according to her faith it was done unto her.

Ver. 6. And there were ſet there ſix water-pots of ſtone, after the manner of the puri-fying of the Jews.

By purifying here, is not meant thoſe ſprinklings and waſhings that were commanded by the Law for the cleanſing of the unclean, [for that uncleaneſs laſted till even, and what to do with thoſe waſhings at a feaſt?] but thoſe traditional and Pharaſaical waſhings of the hands, mentioned Matth. 15. 2. which the Jews uſed before they ate bread, and of Tables, and cups, and platters, mentioned Mar. 7. Now there is a ſpecial tract in the Talmud, concerning this waſhing of their hands, called ידים Jadaim, which may give ſome light to this matter in hand. There is diſcourſed, firſt, concerning the quantity of water neceſſary for one mans hands, or the minimum quod ſic, the leaſt meaſure that may be uſed, and ſuch as if there be leſs, the waſhing is not right; their rule for that is this, מי רביעית נותנין לידי לא אף לב' מחציות לוג לג או לד מלוג לחמשה ולעשרה ולמאה: that is, they allow the fourth part of a Log of water to the hands of one man, yea, of two, half a Log to three or four, a whole Log to five, or to ten, or to an hundred: Now this meaſure called a Log, mentioned Lev. 14. 12. we ſhall conſider of by and by.

Then they diſcourſe concerning the veſſels in which water is to be put for this purpoſe, and that matter they determine thus, בכל הכלים נותנים לידים אפילו בכלי גללים בכלי אבנים בכלי ארמה: That water for the hands may be put in any veſſell, yea, even in a veſſell of oxe dung. [for ſo the Hebrew gloſs upon the place explaineth גללים, viz. [את בקר] or, in a veſſel of ſtone, [ſuch were thoſe veſſels we have in mention here] or, in a veſſel of Earth: Then they ſpeak of the manner of waſhing, that it is by pouring of water upon the hands out of a veſſel, and they diſpute what water this muſt be, which will be more proper to conſider of upon Matth. 15. if the Lord bring us thither: And there alſo may be produced the prayer they made when they waſhed their hands.

But for our preſent purpoſe, it appeareth by the rule they give about waſhing the hands, that theſe veſſels mentioned here by the Evangeliſt, were not the veſſels out of which they poured water upon their hands when they waſhed, for theſe were too heavy for ſuch a purpoſe, but they ſtood here with water in them, to take out from thence either into the veſſels that they poured out of upon their hands, or for waſhing of their cups and tables as occaſion ſerved. Now the number of ſix was not either the ſet and conſtant number of ſuch veſſels at ſuch occaſions, nor is there any myſtical buſineſs in it, but the number of veſſels was now ſuted to the company of gueſts, and occaſion of much waſhing; and their number is mentioned for the ſetting forth of the miracle the more, when not only ſo much water was made wine in an Inſtant, but alſo in ſo many ſeveral veſſels.

§ Containing two or three firkins apiece.

In ſearching after the quantity and contents of theſe veſſels, we may very fitly preface the words that Camerarius uſeth upon them, De menſuris atque nummis cum non potuerint a diverſorum populorum & temporum hominibus, niſi diverſa tradi, conſequens eſt eſſe incerta de his rebus nobis omnia; Diverſity of coins and meaſures, in divers times and places, muſt needs breed an ambiguity, if not an impoſſibility of punctually determining and deciding what any meaſure or value of coin was of old, almoſt in any place that can be named.

The preſent difference of the names of meaſures, and of meaſures themſelves in our own Land, may be evidence and argument enough for one of theſe, and we need go no further. And therefore we ſhall not be ſo bold as to go about abſolutely to tell the Reader what a Metreta was, which is the meaſure here ſpoken of, but only to preſent him with ſome conjectures and opinions about this matter, and leave him to his own choice and judgment.

The

The Syriack expoundeth Μετρητὰς by רבעין fourth parts: but of what, it is uncertain: unleſs he allude to the meaſure alledged even now out of the Talmud, the fourth part of a Log, which was the leaſt meaſure that might be uſed in waſhing of their hands. The Arabick hath almoſt reſerved the very Greek word, and ſo he helpeth nothing to the underſtanding of it.

We obſerved before, that the LXX uſe it to expreſs בת & סאה by: Now if theſe two were of the ſame quantity and capacity, we might here take a riſe to aim at what a Metreta was; but they were not ſo. Certain it is that a Bath and an Ephah, were one and the ſame meaſure. The Ephah for dry things, and the Bath for liquid. This is plain, Ezek. 45. 11. The Ephah and the Bath ſhall be of one meaſure, that the Bath may contain the tenth part of an Homer, and the Ephah the tenth part of an Homer. But Seah was but the third part of a Bath; and ſo the Talmud in Erubbim ſaith, that a Bath containeth שלש סאין three Seahs: and ſo the Caldee Paraphraſt on that place of Ezekiel מקום חד יהוי לכון סכום תלת סאין: The Ephah and the Bath ſhall be of one meaſure, to contain three Seahs. And Rabbi Solomon on that place ſpeaketh the very ſame ſenſe, when he ſaith, an Homer containeth thirty Seahs; for then a Bath and Ephah which are the tenth part of it, contain three. And this both the Caldee and the Septuagint mean, when they render an Ephah, by תלת סאין and τρία μέτρα, Exod. 16. 36. & Eſay 5. 10. And this he helpeth to conſtrue that phraſe, Gen. 18. 6. Make ready three meaſures of meal; שלש סאים three Seahs, that is, an Ephah; and Matth. 13.33. A woman hid leaven in three meaſures of meal, εἰς ὰλα τρία, in three Seahs, that is an Ephah. By which difference of meaſure, and yet the Septuagints uſing but one and the ſame word to expreſs both, we ſee that they uſe the word μέτρητὴς in a general ſenſe, for this or that meaſure, and they ſettle us but little in the determination of what certain and fixed meaſure a Metreta was.

I will not trouble the Reader with curioſity to examine what meaſure this was among the Greeks, or among the Romans, for there is mention of it as being in uſe among both thoſe Nations, but as the ſtory we have in hand lyeth among the Jews, ſo will it be not only the eaſieſt and plaineſt for the Reader, but alſo the likelyeſt and neareſt way for reſolution of the thing, to look for this meaſure only among the meaſures of the Jews, by which they meaſured liquid things, for of ſuch things is the meaſure here in ſtory.

For the beſt diſcovery of which thing that we ſeek for, it will not be impertinent to ſuch a purpoſe, [certainly, it will not be unprofitable to the Reader] that we go by theſe two ſteps: 1. To reckon up in brief what meaſures were in uſe amongſt the Jews, eſpecially thoſe that were to meaſure liquid things. 2. To chooſe and pick out of all them as near as we can, which was the μετρητὴς that is here intended.

Firſt therefore to take a note of the Jewiſh meaſure in uſe among them:

1. The greateſt of all was the Homer, mentioned Levit. 27. 16. Numb. 11. 37. Eſay 5. 10. Hoſ. 3. 2. Ezek. 45. 11. derived either from Humor, which ſignifieth an Aſs, as being an Aſs-load, or rather meaning an heap, for ſo the word ſignifieth, Exod. 8. 14. Heb. 3. 15. as containing ſo much as would make a good heap. חומר

This meaſure is alſo called Corus, 2 Chron. 2. 10. Ezra 7. 22. 1 King. 5. 11. For that an Homer and a Cor were all one, is not only apparent by the LXX who tranſlate Homer by Κόρος, Levit. 27. 16. Numb. 11.32.&c. And by the Caldee Paraphraſt, who doth the like, Ezek. 45.11. and by the conſent of the Jews, but alſo by the expreſs text of Scripture it ſelf, Ezek. 45. 14. Ye ſhall offer the tenth part of a Bath out of the Cor, which is an Homer of ten Baths, &c. כור

2. Their ſecond meaſure was Lethech, mentioned Hoſ. 3. 2. and not elſwhere; this was half the Homer, or Cor, as the Greek and Hebrew interpreters there do generally agree, and as the very ſenſe of the place it ſelf doth inforce to conſtrue it. For the Prophet in that place is plainly deſcribing the value of all the ages of the males of Iſrael, as they were rated, Lev. 27. and this verſe expounded and conſtrued by that Chapter, doth of it ſelf tell, that a Lethech of barly was half an Homer, as our Engliſh hath well rendred it. לתך

3. Their third meaſure was the Bath and Ephah, the one for liquid things, and the other for dry, as was ſaid before; and either of them was the tenth part of an Homer, or a Cor, Ezek. 45. 11. The Jews on 1 King. 7. 26. apply the Bath in one kind, to meaſure dry things, for whereas it is ſaid there that the brazen Sea contained 2000 Baths, and in 2 Chron. 4. 5. that it contained 3000 Baths: they generally reconcile it thus, that it held only 2000 Baths of liquid things, but 3000 of dry, becauſe thoſe might be heaped above the brims, even to the quantity as to make up a third part; ſee the Chald. Paraph. R. Sol. R. Lev. & Kimchi there. בת איפה

4. Their fourth meaſure was Seah, which was the third part of an Ephah, of which before. And a fifth meaſure in uſe among them for liquid things, was the Hin, of which is mention, Exod. 29.40. & 30.24. Numb. 5.4,5. &c. This Aben Ezra on Exod. 29. holdeth to be an Egyptian meaſure, and his fellow Jews conclude that it contained 12 Logs; ſo סאה הין

Kimch. in Michol, and to the ſame ſenſe R. Sol. on Exod. 29. when he expoundeth the fourth part of a Hin, שלשה לוגין three Logs: The proportion that we read of betwixt flour and liquid things in their offerings, helps us but little to underſtand the quantity of this meaſure, when a Hin is proportioned to an Ephah, Ezek. 45. 24. and half a Hin to three tenth deals, which was not fully the third part of an Ephah, Numb. 28. 12, 14.

לוג 5. A fifth meaſure in uſe among them was Log, named inſtantly before, and mentioned Lev. 14. 12. and no where elſe, and there tranſlated by the LXX κοτύλην, Cotylam.

עמר 6. There was alſo the Omer mentioned Exod. 16. 36. This עמר Omer was the tenth part of an Ephah, as an Ephah was the tenth part of an Homer חמר This is called therefore עשרון a tenth part, as our Engliſh expreſſeth it, a tenth deal, Numb. 15. 6. & 28. 13, 14. becauſe it was the tenth part of an Ephah.

קב 7. There is alſo mention of a Kab, 2 King. 6. 25. in that ſad and ſtrange ſtory of the famine in Samaria, when the fourth part of a Kab of Doves dung was ſold for five pieces of Silver.

ξέστης 8. There is alſo mention of ξέστης, Mark 7. 4. or Sextarius, as it is well tranſlated by Beza, and that tranſlation backed out of Galen, and the ſenſe, as it ſeemeth, conſented to by the Syriack, who retaineth the very Greek word: but ſince this was plainly a Roman meaſure, we ſhall not inſiſt upon it.

And now if we come to the ſecond thing that was propoſed, that is, to pick and chooſe out of all this number of Jewiſh meaſures the μετρητὴς that our Evangeliſt mentioneth here, I ſhould as ſoon fix upon the Bath to be it, as any other whatſoever, and that upon this reaſon: Becauſe the Bath was the very ſtandard of all liquid meaſures, as the Ephah alſo was of the dry: The Homer and the Cor was meaſured out by the Bath and the Ephah, as our Quarter is by the Buſhel, Ezek. 45. 14. and all inferiour meaſures were fitted in their ſeveral proportions to the Bath and Ephah, Ezek. 45. 10, 11. And therefore the Evangeliſt mentioning a Metreta, or the Meaſure, as the very word ſignifieth with a kind of Emphaſis; I ſee not to what meaſure poſſibly it can be applyed ſo properly as to this ſtanding meaſure and ſtandard meaſure of the Bath. It is true indeed, that the Hin is made a ſtandard meaſure with the Ephah, Lev. 19. 36. but the reaſon is, becauſe it was ſo indeed for holy things, as for oyl or wine that were to be offered, and with other things than holy we never read it mentioned: but for things meaſured for common uſe, the Bath was the ſtandard for liquids, which there and in ſome other places is concluded under the word Ephah, with which it was equal: and therefore as amongſt us in England, where our Buſhel is the ſtandard meaſure for dry things, [and by which our Quarter is meaſured, and to which our half Buſhel and Peck are proportioned] we commonly by the word Meaſure underſtand a Buſhel, and when we ask, How is Corn ſold a meaſure? we are readily apprehended ſo to mean: So was the word μετρητὴς uſed both in Greece, where it was native, and in other places where the word was borrowed: and it was underſtood in thoſe places of that meaſure that was moſt ſtanding and indeed a meaſure to other meaſures, as the Bath was among the Jews to all liquid meaſures, and therefore I cannot but underſtand the Bath by μετρητὴς here.

Now to give account of the contents, and quantity of this and of the other meaſures mentioned before, as it is not a thing of facility, ſo ſhall we not be too curious in it, and as it is not a matter for this time and place, ſo ſhall not much time be ſpent upon it, but the Reader left to the peruſal of thoſe Authors that have purpoſely ſet themſelves to ſuch a work. Only theſe few particulars let him take up for the preſent.

Firſt, the Jews themſelves upon their own meaſures mentioned, ſet theſe gages.

1. רביעית Quadrans, or, the Fourth part: which they ſometimes mention without any more addition, but which meaneth, the fourth part of a Log, containeth ביצה ומחצה one egg-ſhell full and an half; ſo the Hebrew comment on Miſhneh. Jadajim perek. 1. thus much water was enough for the waſhing of two mens hands if there were no more water.

2. לוג a Log containeth four Quadrants, והוא שיעור ששה ביצים And it is the meaſure of ſix egg-ſhells full, Kimch. in Michol.

3. קב a Kab is four Logs; it containeth 24 egg-ſhells full, Alphef. de Paſc. cap. 5.

4. חין a Hin is twelve Logs, or three Kabs, containing 72 egg-ſhells full. Idem.

5. סאה Satum, is 2 Hins, 6 Kabs, 24 Logs, 144 Eggs; Idem. & Kimch. ubi ſupra.

6. איפה and בת an Ephah and Bath, is three Seahs or Sata, 6 Hins, 18 Kabs, 72 Logs, and 432 eggs-ſhells full, Idem.

Secondly, now upon theſe accounts which are generally current among the Jews, the meaſure of theſe Water-pots will fall exceeding ſhort of that gage that ſome give them, as that every Metreta ſhould contain a hundred weight of wine: and that Chriſt by this miracle afforded two Tun of Wine within 200 weight: The Jewiſh Bath was far from ſo great a reception, as if there were no other argument to prove it, might be cleared by this, that an Ephah, which was the ſame meaſure with it, was ſuch a quantity of Corn as would ſerve about ten men for bread for one day, and was little or nothing more.

This

This appeareth by Exod. 16. where the conſtant proportion of Manna for a man a day was an Omer, which was the tenth part of an Ephah: And by the Chaldee Paraphraſts ſuppoſal upon Ruth 3. 15. where according to his traſlation, which ſeems to be very proper, Ruth carryeth two Ephahs, or ſix Seahs of barly in her skirt. And certainly in the Septuagints account the Bath was not of ſo vaſt a meaſure as to hold 100 pound weight of water, when they tranſlate it κεράμιον ἕν, one Pitcher-full, Eſay. 5. 10, where theſe words, Ten acres of vineyard ſhall yeeld one Bath, and the ſeed of an Homer ſhall yeeld an Ephah, are thus tranſlated by them: Where ten yoak of oxen work, it ſhall yield one Pitcher-full, and he that ſoweth ſix Artabæ, ſhall have three Meaſures, meaning three Seahs: Where, and in other places of them, I cannot but obſerve that they call the Seah, which was an exceeding common meaſure, μέτρον, the meaſure, and I cannot but conceive that the Bath an Ephah which were the ſtandard to it, are called μετρηταί, the meaſures. Their exact receipt I will not go about to determine, that requires a ſet and intentional diſcourſe, but I ſhall leave the matter for the Reader to conjecture at, by what hath been ſpoken.

Ver. 8. The Governour of the Feaſt.

There is mention among the Heathen Authors of the Sympoſiarchus, the Governour or Moderator in their Feaſts, of which Plutarch diſcourſeth largely in Sympoſ. lib. 1. quæſt. 4. out of whom it may not be impertinent to character him a little; that ſo we may the better skan and try whether our Architriclinus here, and their Sympoſiarchus there, were the ſame, yea or no.

He was one choſen among the gueſts, τῶν συμποτῶν συμποτικώτατος, μήτε τοῦ μεθύειν ἐνάλλος, μήτε τοῦς τὸ πίνειν ἀφαιρούμενος: that was moſt feſtivous of all the company, and that would not be drunk, and yet that would drink freely. He was to rule the company, and to prohibit their being diſorderly, yet not prohibiting their being merry. He was to obſerve the temper of the gueſts, and how the wine wrought upon them, and how every one could bear his wine, and accordingly to apply himſelf to them, to keep them all in a harmony, and an equilibrial compoſure, that there might be no diſquiet nor diſorder. For the effecting of this, he uſed theſe two ways, firſt to proclaim liberty to every one to drink what he thought good. Ἐμαυτὸν αἱρεῖμαι συμποσίαρχον ὑμῶν, κἀκέλευω τοὺς μὲν ἄλλους ὡς βούλονται πίνειν ἐν τῷ παρόντι, I am Sympoſiarchus, ſaid he, and I licenſe every one to drink at this time as they will. And ſecondly, upon obſerving who among the gueſts was moſt ready to be touch'd and diſtempered with wine, to mingle the more water with his wine thereby to keep him in an equal pace of ſobriety with the other: And ſo the work and office of this Sympoſiarchus, or governour of the Feaſt, was eſpecially double, to take care that none ſhould be forced to drink, and to take care that none ſhould be drunk though unforced. Of ſuch another office might the Architriclinus be conceived here; namely, ſomeone that was ſpecially appointed to give entertainment, and that had ſpecial employment about the diſtributing and diſpoſing of the wine. And this might ſeem to appear the rather, becauſe our Saviour directeth the Servitors to bring the miraculous wine to be taſted firſt by him: But I ſhould underſtand rather by Architriclinus here, the chief gueſt at the feaſt, than ſuch a Sympoſiarchus, which it may be ſome queſtion, whether he were in uſe among the Jews, or no: For, [not to go about to give account of their manner of ſitting at their Feaſts, in this place, [it will be more proper elſewhere] though from thence might be ſhewed ſomething toward the proof of this my ſuppoſal] let it but be conſidered, that the Architriclinus in mention, was a meer ſtranger to the buſineſs of the wine, and knew not how it went. Had Plutarchs Sympoſiarchus been here, he would readily have known what quantity of wine, and what variety there was in the houſe, he would have well known that all the wine was gone, and that they were at a loſs for more, for the Yeomanry of the wine was his office at that time, above all other things, and above all other men: but this Architriclinus knew none of theſe things; but thought the Bridegroom had uſed a friendly deceit to reſerve the beſt wine to make up their mouths, whereas others uſed to reſerve the worſt: And he ſpeaks as a gueſt, and not as a Yeoman of the Feaſt: And our Saviour ſends the wine to him, as to the chiefeſt man at the Table, and as the fitteſt from whom the taſte of the wine, and the taſt of the miracle wrought might be diſtributed and diſperſed throughout all the company of the Feaſt.

Verſ. 12. After this he went down to Capernaum, and continued not there many days.

Capernaum was his own City, as was ſaid before, and his return is ſtill thither; as Samuel after his circuit, his return was ſtill to Ramah, for that was his own City, 1 Sam. 7. 17. ſee Matth. 4. 14. & 8. 5. Matth. 9. 1. compared with Mark 2. 1. Matth. 17. 24. John 6. 17. &c. Now his ſtay was but a little there, becauſe the Paſſeover calls him up to Jerusalem. And thus when the Passeover comes, there is half a year passed since he was baptized; forty days of which he spent in the Wilderness in his fast before the Tempter came to him, beside what time was spent in the threefold temptation, and in his going to, and coming from the Wilderness. Three days you have account of him, at Jordan, and going into Galilee, John 1.ver. 29,35,43. and the next day after he is at Cana at a Feast; this was the fourth day from his first appearing from the Wilderness, but the third from his saving and entertaining any Disciples. So that we have but the account of six weeks, or thereabouts upon record, of all the time he spent betwixt his Baptism and his first Passeover. The rest is concealed, and much of it was spent in his peragration and preaching through Galilee, to which he addresseth himself, John 1. 43.

Vers. 14. And the Jews Passover was at hand, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem.

There are none other of the Evangelists that mention any Passover at all after Christs Baptism, but that at which he suffered: but John reckoneth not only that, but three before; and so still amongst all the four Evangelists the story is made up and compleated, that there is nothing wanting. Three of his Passovers John nameth plainly and expresly by name, viz. this here; and another, Chap. 6. 4. and his last, Chap. 18.39. but a fourth he hath not so openly named, but meaneth it in Chap. 5. 1. as shall be cleared by Gods permission when we come there: And now hath Christ three years to his death, and he hath had half a year since his Baptism, and so is his time from his anointing by the Spirit for the work of the Gospel, till his offering up upon his Cross, three years and an half; see the notes on Luke 3. 21.

Now whereas the Evangelist calleth the Passover, the Passover of the Jews; Jansenius is of opinion that he doth it for distinction of it from the Easter of the Christians, which saith he, was observed by them throughout all Asia, when John wrote his Gospel, And Baronius yet goes further, and would prove it from John's calling the Christian Sabbath, the Lords day, Rev. 1. Annal. ad annum 159. It is not worth the labour, at least not in this place, to look after the antiquity and originall of the celebration of Easter amongst the Christians in the Primitive times: the quarrel about the day between the Eastern and Western Churches is famous in Ecclesiastical Stories; but that this is not the intention of the Evangelist in this place, we need to go no further to prove, than to his own expression of the same thing in another, where he calleth it, The Passover, a Feast of the Jews, Chap. 6. 4. and so sheweth that in this short Phrase, The Jews Passover, he meaneth not so much to distinguish it from any festival of the Christians, as to shew what it was to Jews, and to distinguish it from other festivals of theirs.

And Jesus went up to Jerusalem.

1. In obedience to the Law, of the males appearing before the Lord, Exod. 23.17. from which none were excepted, but for some infirmity or incapacity. All are bound to appear, but only the deaf, fools, little ones, the man that is bruised in his genitals, Hermophrodites, women, servants that were not set free, the lame, blind, sick and old; thus the Tradition in the Talmud, Hagigah, per. 1.

Christ came no doubt to the Passover every year before this all the while he lived a private man, though only one of his journeys then is mentioned, Luke 2. but now he comes upon some reason and cause, besides that that brought him then: He came then in observance of the Passover only, and of that institution that did ordain it, and so he doth likewise now, but he doth it not only upon that reason. But 2. he cometh now up to the Passover also, that he might take the opportunity of the concourse of the people to shew himself, and to work his miracles. This was the first Festival that came since he was baptized, [the Feast of Dedication we reckon not with the great solemnities] and this was the greatest Festival of all the three, and now was the greatest concourse of people there to be expected, and therefore this was the fittest time for Christ to begin to shew himself, when he would shew himself in the most publick manner, and this had been enough to have brought him up thither, had not the religiousness of the Feast obliged him, and he owned the obligation.

The Ceremonial Law of the Jews obliged them, either as single and particular men, or as members of the Congregation and people of Israel: The Passover and the other Festivals were of the latter form; for in them all the males of Israel were together, as imbodied into one society, and the meeting it self was to teach them so much: Now though our Saviour did not so punctually set himself to perform the parts of the Ceremonial Law, that concerned men singly, and as particular men, for we do not find that he offered sacrifice, or that he was ever be-sprinkled with the water of Purification, or the like; yet was he constant in those things that referred to men, as joynt members of the Church of Iſrael; eſpecially in the Sacraments, Circumciſion and the Paſsover, which aimed mainly at that communion. Let Separatiſts ſtudy upon this.

Verſ. 15. And he found in the Temple.

The whole mountain of the Houſe, [as the Jews do commonly call it] was called the Temple, that is, all that ſpace of ground, which with a wall about it, was diſtinguiſhed מחול from the prophane, or from the common ground, Ezek. 42. 20. This plot of ground thus incloſed, was 500 cubits long, and 500 cubits broad: Ezekiel in his dimenſions that he giveth, retaineth this number of 500 and 500, though inſtead of a cubit he ſpeaketh of a reed of ſix cubits and an hand breadth, Ezek. 42. 20.

Out of this ſpace of ground were taken theſe ſeveral meaſures: 1. The Court of the women, which was 135 cubits long, and 135 cubits broad. 2. The Court of Iſrael, the Court of the Prieſts, and the place of the Temple, all which took up 187 cubits in length, and 135 in breadth; the length from Eaſt to Weſt, the breadth from North to South: Now the length was thus diſtributed, דריסת ישראל אי עשרה Iſraels treading was 11 cubits; the Prieſts treading 11 cubits; the compaſs of the Altar 32 cubits; betwixt the Altar and the Porch 12 cubits; the length of the Temple it ſelf 100 cubits; and beyond the Oracle Weſtward 11 cubits, Thus doth the Talmud meaſure in Maſſecheth Middoth, perek. 2. & 4. 1. So that from the entrance of the Court of the women, to the wall that parted between the holy and prophane at the Weſt end of the Temple, were 322 cubits, and the breadth of all the Courts was the ſame, viz. 135 cubits. Now by this account the ſpace that lay without theſe Courts, and yet within the great wall that parted 'twixt holy and prophane, was 178 cubits broad at the Eaſt end, or before the Court of the women, and 365 cubits broad along by the ſides of all the Courts, as they ran along from Eaſt to Weſt; ſave what was taken up with the buildings which were at the corners of theſe ſeveral Courts, which took up forty cubits in this outward compaſs on either ſide. This outward compaſs by Chriſtian Writers, is moſt commonly called Atrium Gentium, or the Court of the Gentiles, becauſe into this the Gentiles might come to worſhip and bring their gifts: but the Jewiſh Writers do ſometimes expreſs it by הר הבית The mountain of the Houſe, when they ſpake of it in contradiſtinction to the Courts and Temple. This is called, The Court without the Temple, Rev. 11. 2. and yet commonly alſo called the Temple in Scripture, as the Temple, or the holy ground of it, is ſet in oppoſition to the City: This outward Court or ſpace lay on every ſide the other Courts either more or leſs: And this the Talmud ſeemeth to aime at when it ſaith, The mountain of the Houſe was חמש מאות אמה על חמש מאות אמה: five hundred cubits upon five hundred cubits, or 500 cubits ſquare: And the greateſt ſpace of it was on the South, a ſecond part of it on the Eaſt, a third part on the North, and the leaſt on the Weſt, and the place where was the greateſt ſpace there was the moſt ſervice: This Court or Atrium Gentium, had five gates into it, two on the South-ſide called שערי חולדה The gates of Huldah, which ſerved to go in and out at: One gate on the Weſt called קיפונוס Cephunus, this was alſo to go in and out at; and one gate at the North, which ſerved not for any uſe, which was called טדי Tadi; and one gate on the Eaſt, which had Shuſhan the Palace Pictured on it, Middoth, per. 1. For ſaith the Hebrew Gloſs, When they came up out of Babel, the King of Perſia commanded them to Portray the Picture of Suſhan the Palace upon the gates of the Houſe, that the fear of that Kindom might be before them.

The entring into this Court was not at the Eaſt-gate, for at that only the High-Prieſt went in and out to the burning of the red Cow, and they that aſſiſted him in that work went in and out with him, but the coming in for all that came to worſhip was on the South-ſide, where the two gates were, where they went in at the one of them, and came out at the other. Into this outer Court, came not only the Heathens that were proſelyted, but even Mourners, Lepers and Excommunicate Perſons.

A mourner was prohibited to waſh whilſt he was in his mourning, אבל אסור לרחוץ Beracoth, per. 2, yet might a mourner come into this place to worſhip; and he diſcovered himſelf to be a mourner, by coming in and going out a different way from other people: And when it was queſtioned of him, why he did ſo, he anſwered, I am a mourner: And it was replyed, Now he that dwelleth in this Houſe comfort thee: Or he ſaid, I am excommunicate שאני מנודה and it was replyed, Now he that dwelleth in this Houſe, put into their heart that they may fetch thee in again; or He that dwelleth in this Houſe, put into thine heart, that thou mayſt hearken to the words of thy fellows, and they draw near to thee again.

This Court was parted from the Court of the Women, with a wooden grate 13 hands breadth high. In the Northweſt corner of which womens Court, namely, in the very angle of the Court of the Prieſts, was a parcel of building called לשכת מצורעים the Chambers of the Lepers, who came thither, and were there as in a manner of an Hoſpital, while the Prieſts were about the try'al of them. The Heathens, Mourners, Lepers, Excommunicate communicate perſons came to the publick ſervice of the Temple, and had the freedom of this outer Court; and hither were oxen and ſheep now got alſo, for in this Court it was that Chriſt found theſe cattle and the Mony-changers at this time.

§ Thoſe that ſold oxen, and ſheep, and doves.

Theſe were ſold for ſacrifices, lambs for the Paſsover, and bullocks for the feſtival after, and doves for the offerings of thoſe women, and thoſe Lepers cleanſed, that were not ſo rich as to reach to a Lamb, Lev. 12.8. & 14.21. And it may be ſparrows were in this Market too for the cleanſing of the Leper: and to that it may be our Saviour alludeth, Matth. 10. 29. Are not two ſparrows ſold for a farthing, and five for a half-peny? Luke 12.6. The Jews have a tradition, That the burnt-offerings on feſtival days were מן חולין of common ſheep, or oxen, but their peace-offerings were of the tithes, Chagigah per. 1. Now this tradition joyned with the matter of conveniency againſt ſuch times as there was like to be great ſtore of ſacrifices, cauſed a Market to be kept at Jeruſalem, of beaſts and fowls for that purpoſe; that thoſe that came from far to the Paſsover, or to the other Feſtivals, as our Saviour did at this time, and his company with him, might not be forced to bring their Paſsover lamb, or bullock, or ſacrifice lamb or bullock along with them, but might have ſuch things for ready mony when they came to Jeruſalem. And now too much love of convenience had brought this market into the Temple Court.

There is the like ſtory to this a little before Chriſts laſt Paſsover, when he came riding triumphantly to Jeruſalem, Matth. 21.12. Mark 11.15. Luke 19.45. where he caſt the buyers and ſellers out of the Temple, as he did here, and it is like with the ſame courſe of whipping them, though it be not expreſſed, and with ſharper words, for here he calls them but merchants, [this was the firſt admonition] but there he plainly calls them theeves.

There the Evangeliſts Matthew and Mark uſe the word κολλυβισταὶ, for Mony-changers; here the Evangeliſt John uſeth both that and κερματισταὶ too. The Syriack in all the places retaineth but one word מערפנא and the Arabick doth the like. Now what theſe argentarii and nummularii were, [for by both theſe expreſſions do Latine tranſlaters call them] requires ſome inquiſition to find out: We find mention of ſuch kind of men frequently among the Romans, and one famous inſtance may be produced to ſerve for many, and that is what Suetonius reports concerning Auguſtus, namely, that ſome reviled him with the baſeneſs of his deſcent, as that he was Nepos nummularii, The grandchild of a Mony-changer, the deriſion is this, in an Epiſtle of Caſſius Parmenſis; Materna tibi farina; ſiquidem ex crudiſſimo Ariciæ priſtino, hanc finxit manibus collybo decoloratus Nerulenſis menſarius: Of ſuch a meal art thou by thy mothers ſide; for Nerulonenſis a Mony-changer, having his fingers blackt with changing Mony, did mold her in a poor Mill at Aricia, Suet in Auguſto cap. 4. for Auguſtus was ſaid to be a Millers grandchild: Here is mention of Collybus, from whence cometh the word κολλυβισταὶ, in the Text before us; and the Collybiſta, or Mony-changer, is called Menſarius, a man of the Table; becauſe their profeſſion was practiſed telling mony upon a table: As the ſame Suetonius giveth us another famous example in the life of Galba, Chap. 9. Nummulario non ex fide verſanti pecunias, manus amputavit menſæq; ejus affixit: He cut off (ſaith he) the hands of a Mony-changer for cheating, and nayled them to his Table. A man of this trade was called שולחני Shulchani among the Jews, Menſarius, or a man of the Table; for in the tract Kiddußhin, or concerning eſpouſals, Per. 3. this caſe is determined; A man ſaith to a woman, I will ſhew thee two hundred Zuzim, (this was the common ſum of mony undertaken by the Bridegroom upon eſpouſal) if thou wilt be eſpouſed to me; if he ſhew it her, the eſpouſal is made, but if he ſhew it upon the Table, ſhe is not eſpouſed: And the Gloſſary upon the place gives this reaſon היה שולחני ומחליף מעות של אחריהם It may be he is Menſarius, a Mony-changer, and changeth the mony of other mens, and ſhews her none of his own. And ſo it is apparent, that the שולחן the Table, is not to be underſtood for a common or ordinary table in every mans houſe, but the table of this trade τραπέζα κολλυβιστῶν, as the Evangeliſts calls it, The Table of the Mony-changers.

Now it is hard to tell what was the myſtery of this trade, whether change or brokage: It is generally held, that they ſate there to change great Mony into leſſer coin, with ſome profit upon the change: and ſo the words κολλυβισμὸς & κέρμα, doth more properly intimate; for κόλλυβος is rendred by the Greek Etymologiſts to be ἀργυρέου ἀλλαγὴ, change of Mony, and κολλυβιστὴς ἀργυραμοιβὸς, a Mony changer; κέρμα doth properly ſignifie ſmall Mony, λεπτότατόν τι, of the ſmalleſt value.

Camerarius

Camerarius out of a nameleſs Greek Author gives this account of this matter; ἡ λίτρα ἔχει ὐγγίας ιβ, &c. A pound containeth twelve ounces: But the Hebrews dividing the ounce have called it by other names. For half an Ounce they call a Stater, becauſe half an Ounce being put in either ſcale, the ſcales ſtood even. Now a Stater, or the half Ounce containeth two Shekels; and the Shekel which is half the Stater, and the fourth part of an Ounce, contained twenty Lepta, which ſome call Obolos, or half pence. Now one gave two half pence, and received for it bread, or ſome other thing for food; therefore there ſate in the Temple at Jeruſalem mony-changers, which are called Collybiſtæ, which changed the ſilver Coin that was ſtamped with the Emperors picture, into leſs mony: For wheras that Coin [it was called argenteus] contained an hundred pence, and this was too high a rate for the buying of bread, pot-hearbs, and ſuch like things, it was brought to the Mony-changers, and they gave leſs coin for it, namely, pence and half pence, and the like.

Ver. 15. And when he had made a ſcourge of ſmall cords, &c.

This action of our Saviour at his firſt appearing in his own Temple, did fulfill that prophecy of Malachi, Chap. 3. 1, 2, 3. The Lord whom ye ſeek ſhall ſuddenly come to his Temple: but who may abide the day of his coming; and who ſhall ſtand when he appeareth? for he is like refiners fire, and like fullers ſope. And he ſhall ſit as a refiner and purifier of ſilver, and he ſhall purifie the Sons of Levi, &c.

There was an Officer that uſed to walk up and down this Court, and the others to ſee that every one ſtood to his charge, and did his duty. He was called איש חר בית The man of the mountain of the Houſe. He went about from ward to ward, and candles lighted before him, and whereſoever any man ſtood not upon his charge, the man of the mountain of the Houſe, ſaid, Peace be upon thee, and if it proved that he was aſleep, he ſtruck him with his rod: and he had authority to ſet fire on his coat: and they ſaid, What noiſe is that in the Court? Why, it is the noiſe of a ſon Levi that is beaten, and his cloaths burnt, becauſe he was aſleep upon his guard, Maſſecheth middoth per. 1.

A greater than this man, nay, a greater than the Temple it ſelf is now come; and Chriſt by this paſſage doth not only ſhew his zeal moſt divine and fervent, but he acteth in the authority of a Prophet, and as one come from God, and ſo the Jews underſtand that he took upon him to do, when they propoſe to him as for the tryal of a Prophet, that he would ſhew a ſign, and work a miracle. The cords of which he maketh his whip, it is like he found lying up and down the floor, which had tyed ſome ſacrifices, or ſome other things, and after that uſe of them were caſt there: Now he uſeth a whip rather than a ſtaff, becauſe there were no ſtaves brought into the Temple. A man may not come into the mountain of the Houſe with his ſtaff, nor with his ſhooes, with his purſe, nor with the duſt upon his feet; Maſſecheth Beracoth per. 9.

Our Saviour ſeemeth to allude to this, when he bids his Diſciples as they go to preach, To take neither ſtaves, nor ſhooes, nor gold, nor ſilver, nor braſs in their purſes, and to ſhake off the duſt of their feet. Mat. 10. 9. 10. No mony in their girdles כפונך ות Gloſſ. אזור חלול שמשימים בו המעת עוברי דרכים A hollow girdle in which travellers put their mony. Compare this zealous action of our Saviour, with Nehem. 13. 25.

Verſ. 16. My Fathers Houſe.

He uſeth the ſame phraſe in the ſame place, viz. in the Temple, when he was found there among the Doctors at twelve years old: Why ſought you me? know you not where to find me? know you not that I muſt be in my Fathers Houſe? Luke 2. 49.

And he cometh off thus openly and plainly with the Jews, as to call God, his Father, 1. To aſſert himſelf for the Meſſiah, and to diſtinguiſh him from other Prophets, who at the utmoſt could but call God, my God; There is no peace to the wicked, ſaith my God, Eſay 57. 21. but he can, and doth call him Father, and doth ſo from his firſt appearing here in publick, that he might reveal himſelf to the full, and leave the obſtinate without excuſe. 2. He ſeemeth to have ſpecial reſpect to that paſſage, 2 Sam. 7. 12, 13. where when God is promiſing to David, Chriſt to ſit upon his Throne for ever, and Solomon to ſit upon his Throne for a while; he ſaith, He ſhall build an Houſe for my Name, and I will eſtabliſh the Throne of his Kingdom for ever. I will be his Father.

Verſ. 18. What ſign ſheweſt thou?

The power of miracles had never been ſeen in the Land, ſince their return out of captivity, nay, nor the Spirit of Prophecy, ſince the death of Zachary and Malachi, by their own Authors confeſſion, and therefore the reſtoring of miracles and prophecy, was as the opening of heaven, and Angels aſcending and deſcending. When they were ready to depart, into Babylon, Habakkuk prayeth that God would keep alive his work of the power of miracles in that midst of years while they were in Babylon, and that they might not lose it now they went into a strange Land. And there he continued it among them in the hands of the three Children, as they are called, but more especially in the hands of Daniel: Daniels tying up the mouths of the Lions, was the last miracle that had been done by man, till water was turned into wine at Cana in Galilee: They had Prophets indeed came with them out of their captivity, and these saw visions, and had strange things done to them by God, but none ever since they came up till now, had done any miracles or strange things from God. And after that first generation after their return, their Prophets were ceased and gone, and they had no more, בחגי וכריה ומלאכי פסקה נבואה In Haggai, Zachary, and Malachi Prophecy ceased, D. Kimch. on Zech. 5. And therefore besides the constant unbelief of the Jew that would be still requiring a sign, it is no wonder if they demand one of one that now appeared and acted under the notion of a Prophet, when signs and Prophets had been so long strangers amongst them: Nor was this all that strained this question from them, but it is like that his calling God in such singularity his Father, did move them to demand some thing from him as from a singular man, which thing might be suitable to such a relation as he owned: In John 5. 17. they are ready to fly in his face, because he calleth God his Father; for there was scandalum acceptum, an offence taken at him, though none was given: they were moved at him, for that he had broken the Sabbath, as they interpret it, and then they are ready to catch at every word that fell from him, for they had entertained prejudice against him: but as yet he hath done here nothing that should cause them to be offended, the driving of the market out of the Temple was a thing so reasonable, and so Religious, that they could not open their mouth against it: and his calling of God his Father, is yet without offence, if he can answer both his action and his word, by doing something agreeable to them.

1. Christ giveth them not a sign, otherwise then by telling them of that great sign, that he should once shew, which would mightily declare him to be the Son of God, and that is the raising of his body from the dead; which very thing he also meaneth, though somewhat more be included in it, when he giveth them afterward the sign of Jonas, Matth. 12. 39. He did many miracles instantly at Jerusalem, as is apparent, ver. 23. yet would he not do one miracle for the satisfaction of this the Jews curiosity and quære; partly because he would first give them some word of doctrine; and partly, because for his shewing of miracles, he would take his own time and moving, and not theirs. In all the Gospel Christ doth no miracle, where some necessity went not along with it.

2. In these words, destroy this Temple, he commandeth them not to do the thing, but he foretelleth that they should do it, as Esay 8. 9,10. John 13. 27. &c. yeeld examples of the like nature, Associate your selves, and ye shall be broken in peeces; take counsell together, and it shall come to nought. And what thou dost do quickly, &c.

3. His answer is very suitable to the present occasion: For as he had purged the Temple which they had defiled, for which they question his authority; so saith he, go yet further, and even destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it.

4. But he spake of the Temple of his body, vers. 21. Now he used not any such gesture or action as it seemeth, as that the Jews could perceive that he spake in that sense, but they make a double misconstruction of his words, namely, ignorant and wilfull. Ignorant, conceiving that he spake of the very material Temple; wilfull, in that whereas he only saith, do you destroy it, they accuse him for saying that he would destroy it himself, Mat. 26. 61.

5. Now he speaketh so closely to them, and to the matter or occasion before them, partly, because of the neareness of relation that is between the thing signifying, and the thing signified, as Mat. 26. 26. and partly because he would speak to them in parables and dark things, as Matth. 13. 34,35.

§ This Temple.

Meaning the Temple of his body, as the Evangelist himself explaineth it; which may be understood, either because his body was the Temple of the Godhead, as Col. 2. 9. or because it was represented by the material Temple in which God dwelt presentially, as the Godhead did in Christ bodily. The Temple was a glorious figure of Christ, in Gods dwelling there amongst men. In giving his Oracles there; in the services tendred and accepted there, &c. And therefore it was that whersoever the Jews were in any part of the world, they were in all their prayers to turn their faces towards the Temple, 1 King. 8. 38, 42,44,48. Dan. 6. 10. And thereupon it was that when the Jews destroyed Christs body, the Temple rent from the top to the bottom, in one of the choicest parts of it.

Vers.

Verſ. 20. Forty and ſix years was this Temple in building.

Although all that ſpace of time and ſtate of the Jews that paſſed betwixt the return out of Babylon, and the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, be generally and indeed properly ſaid to be under the ſecond Temple, yet in exact ſtrictneſs and reality there were two Temples in that ſpace, namely, that that was built by Zorobable, and that that was built by Herod: Of the former we have the relation in Ezr. 3. & 6. Of the latter we have the ſtory in Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 15. cap, 14. Expoſitots upon this place, take no notice of this duplicity, becauſe they account that Herod did not build, but only repair the Temple: and they generally underſtand this 46 years building, of the time and ſpace that the Temple was getting up in the days of Zorobable, or inſtantly after the return from the Babylonian captivity: The parcels of which ſum every ſeveral Expoſitor almoſt doth caſt and reckon up by ſeveral counters. It were endleſs to alledge, much more endleſs to examine them. I ſhall ſpare that labour, ſince I have given my thoughts concerning the reigns of the Perſian Kings of thoſe times in another place, and I cannot but hold ſtill unto that account, as conceiving it to be the very account of Scripture: namely, that Cyrus reigned 3 years, Artaxerxes Ahaſhueroſh after him 14 years, and Artaxerxes Darius 32 years, when Nehemiah went back to him, having finiſhed Jeruſalem ſtreet and wall: 49 years in all, or 7 weeks, as Dan. 9. 25. Out of theſe 49 years, if you ſeclude the two firſt of Cyrus, [for in his ſecond the Temple was begun] and the thirty ſecond of Darius, as years only current, you have exactly 46 compleat years, from the beginning of the founding of Zorobables Temple, to the finiſhing of the city, and compleating of the buildings and ſervice-diſpoſal of the Temple with it.

And reckoning alſo after ſuch a maner of reckoning, [namely, by caſting out years that were only current] it was exactly 46 compleat years ſince Herod began the building of the Temple, to this very time that Chriſt and the Jews have this diſcourſe: For Herod fell upon that work in the eighteenth year of his reign, as Joſephus relateth in the place fore-cited, and he reigned 37 years, even till Chriſt was two years old, as we have proved in the firſt part of the Harmony, at Sect. 7. or Matth. 2. And Chriſt at this time of his diſcourſe was in the thirtieth year of his age, or juſt twenty nine years old and an half. All which ſums if the Reader caſt up, and count as we did in the account before, he will find how fitly [if one will ſo take it] theſe words may be applyed to the Temple of Herod, forty and ſix years hath this Temple been built.

Verſ. 22. They believed the Scripture, &c.

The Scriptures whatſoever had ſpoken of Chriſts death and reſurrection, the Diſciples are ſaid here to have believed after his reſurrection. But did they not believe them before? It is undoubted they did, with a general hiſtorical belief, but after the reſurection they made uſe of thoſe texts and words with a more ſpecial and peculiar application and experience.

Verſ. 23. Now when he was in Jeruſalem at the Paſsover, &c.

It was the cuſtom of the Nation to come to Jeruſalem ſome ſpace of time before the Feſtival, that they might purifie themſelves againſt the Feſtival came: Now Chriſt in this ſpace was purifying the Temple, by caſting out buyers and ſellers, and driving out the cattle; and when he was then asked for a miracle, he would do none, but when the Feaſt was come, he beginneth to work miracles abundantly, and many believed on him. Now beginneth he moſt plainly and publickly to ſhew himſelf being now in the chief City, in the general concourſe of all the Nation, and in the greateſt ſolemnity of all the year.

Verſ. 24. But Jeſus did not commit himſelf unto them.

Some underſtand this of his not-committing and imparting the whole and full doctrine of the Goſpel to them; but the very carriage of the Text ſheweth, that it is to be underſtood of not-truſting his perſon with them, becauſe he knew their heart, and ſaw that there was miſchief and rottenneſs in ſome of them againſt him.

MDCLXXXII.

To my very much, and very worthily Honoured Friend and Patron
WILLIAM COTTON Esq; of Bellaport in Salop.

SIR,

I Have alwaies, and that not without very juſt cauſe, eſteemed it one of the choiceſt advantages that ever accrewed to me, that it was my hap, and happineſs at my firſt ſetting out into the Study of the Scriptures and Divinity, to be ſettled in the houſe, and to come under the tutorage and inſtructing of your Noble and Heroick Uncle Sir Rowland Cotton; A Gentleman of ſo rare qualifications, and reſpondent worth, that (let the word be without offence) his Country and his times produced not a man beyond him, and I wiſh the Nation and ſucceeding times may ſhew his equal.

With much care, tenderneſs, and condeſcenſion did he guide and lead on my ſtudies in the ſame way that he himſelf had been trained in, by that choice and incomparable Oracle of Learning Mr. Hugh Broughton: under whoſe inſtillings he had been ſo ſeaſoned with skill in the Hebrew Tongue, and knowledge in the Scriptures, that even a Child he ſpake and underſtood that language as it had been his Native, and in grown years he proved ſo exact, expedite, and ſolid a textualiſt, as few his equals.

He was alike tranſcendently ſingular in all accompliſhments: His activity of body, experimented to be without its parallel in the Nation; His hoſpitality generous, unto the admiration of all that knew it; and his wiſdom equally to be admired, that managed his eſtate ſo as to maintain ſuch hoſpitality; His Patriotſhip even till now fragrant in the memory of his Country, whoſe heart he had, and it had his; His tenderneſs to his Tenants ſo fatherly, that before his death he took care that all their leaſes ſhould be renewed, that they might be certainly provided for, when he was gone; His affection to, and his proviſion for his ſervants, may be exemplary, as it was not ordinary; for in one morning a little before his end, he ſealed nine or ten leaſes to them of handſom eſtates for their lives, and that ſo freely that he alſo paid liberally for their ingroſſing; His activity of mind was ſutable to the activity of his body, for he was a ſtranger to no kind of learning, ſingularly languaged both in the learned, and in the Weſtern Tongues; and of ſo deep a judgment in all affairs, that there was hardly any concernment, occaſion, or imploiment, in which he was not able to have given Counſel. And that which crowned all, ſo cordial and ſincere was his integrity, virtuouſneſs and piety, that a very few minutes before his expiring, he breathed out this fragrant teſtimony of a good conſcience in my hearing, and to my great rejoycing, Lord thou knoweſt that I have loved honeſty, virtue, and goodneſs for it ſelf.

Sir, This radiant worth of your gallant Uncle, as it was an attractive of the affections of all that knew him (for he was a man wholly framed to deſerve men and to gain hearts) ſo is it a moſt fair, beauteous and ſublime pattern and copy ſet before you to write after: and I have ſpoken thus much the rather, not as if I would inform you of him what you knew not before, but becauſe I know you delight to look upon his example, and to hear the founding of his name and virtues, not only for his honor, but alſo for your own imitation of him. And daily may his example of worth worth and nobleneſs provoke your emulation and ſtriving after, that you may be his heir every way, namely of his virtues, as of his inheritance.

Beſides this accompliſht bravery of his in himſelf, which was enough to challenge eſteem from any one that knew what worth was; he laid ſuch doubled and redoubled obligations upon me, by the tender affecti-on, reſpect and favour that he ſhewed towards me, as have left ſo indeli-ble an impreſſion upon my heart, of honour to his dear name, and ob-ſervance to his houſe of Bellaport, that length of time may not wear it out, nor diſtance of place ever cauſe me to forget it. I might relate particu-lars of his kindneſs, but when I have ſaid all I can, I ſhall ſpeak too little.

As it is my rejoycing to have ſeen and heard what I have done, of your care to lay his Copy before you for your imitation, and your deſire to tread in his ſteps, ſo have I cauſe to acknowledge with thankfulneſs, your writing after that Copy in your favours expreſſed towards me, even as he did before you.

And as I ſtand in an hereditary obligation to your Family for his ſake, ſo have I found an hereditary affection from your ſelf, which doth double my obligation, and pleadeth your claim alſo. It is my unhappineſs that my tenuity is able to make no better a return for what I have received, than this poor paper Monument and Memorial, which I have preſumed to devote to your name, and betake to your patronage, that you might have this token of my gratitude and obſervance laid up with you, and by the peruſal of it, I might, though remote and out of ſight, yet ſome-time obtain the turning of your thoughts and remembrances towards

SIR,

Your moſt cordial and humble Servant

John Lightfoote.

To

To the READER.

IT was my promiſe in the Preface to The firſt Part of the Harmony of the Evangeliſts, that at the Publiſhing of the third, I would alſo ſet forth A Chorographical Deſcription of the Land of Canaan, and thoſe adjoining places that we have occaſion to look upon as we read the Goſpels: which task I undertook accordingly when I began the working up of this third part which is now publiſhed, and ſpent very much time and pains upon it, though it hath not found the hap to come forth with this part, as was my promiſe.

My deſign was (and I had made ſome reaſonable progreſs upon it) to have deſcribed the Land of Iſrael, in a way ſomething new indeed, and untrodden, and I believe unattempted (and ſo much the more difficult becauſe it was ſo) but yet which I ſuppoſed might be of very good uſe and advantage for the fuller underſtanding of the ſituation and ſtory of that Land. In reading of the two Talmuds, and other of the Jewiſh Authors of the greateſt Antiquity, I have obſerved, and that not without much delight and content, that as to the ſubject that we are ſpeaking of, namely, the deſcription of the Land of Canaan, theſe things may be picked up out of them diſperſedly in their writings to very good profit.

1. In exceeding many paſſages, when they come to ſpeak of places of the land, that are mentioned in the Scripture, they either deſcribe them, or ſhew their ſituation, or diſtance from ſuch and ſuch places, or all theſe together, which might be of ſingular uſe, to compare with the deſcriptions, ſituations, and diſtances that are given of ſuch places in Chriſtian writers.

2. They give us abundance of names of Cities, Mountains, and other places in that Land, which names are neither to be found in Scripture, nor Joſephus, nor in the Heathen or Chriſtian Records that ſpeak of the places of that Country, but in theſe Judaick writers only: and yet which carry with them ſo fair a probability and rational evidence, that there were ſuch names and places, that the looking after them might be exceeding pertinent to a Canaan ſtory.

3. They relate many choice, eminent and remarkable ſtories occurring in ſuch and ſuch places, which are not to be found in any records but their own, and of ſingular illuſtration, both of the ſituation, and of the Hiſtory of the Land and Nation: and eſpecially of the ſcholaſtical Hiſtory of their learned men and Doctors.

I ſhall ſpare examples here (though I could produce them by multitudes of all theſe particulars.) He that doth read the two Tracts of mine about The Temple and The Temple Service, will find ſo much falling in obiter of this nature, as may give him a taſte of the reſt, and ſome gueſs what uſe might be made of ſuch like antiquities, well weighed and examined in a Geographical and Hiſtorical deſcription of the Holy Land.

It hath been my courſe and my care for many years together, as I have had occaſion to read theſe Talmudick writers, to obſerve and take notice of paſſages of this nature as I have met with them, and to be gathering ſuch ſtock of theſe rarities, as I thought might be convenient for my Chorographical work, when I ſhould fall upon it.

When I began to draw together my thoughts, notes, and notions, for the compiling of this third part of the Harmony of the Evangeliſts, I began to do the like for the compiling of that work alſo with it, that as my promiſe was of their publiſhing together, ſo their growing up might be together, till they ſhould come to be ſo jointly publiſhed. I went on in that work a good while, and that with much cheerfulneſs and content, for me thought a Talmudical ſurvey and hiſtory of the Land of Canaan, (not omitting Collections to be taken up out of the Scripture and other writers) as it would be new and rare, ſo it might not prove unwelcom nor unprofitable to thoſe that delighted in ſuch a ſubject: But at laſt I underſtood that another Workman, a far better Artiſt than my ſelf, had the Deſcription of the Land of Iſrael, not only in hand, but even in the Preſs, and was ſo far got before me in that travail, that he was almoſt at his journies end, when I was but little more then ſetting out: Here it concerned me to conſider what I had to do. It was grievous to me to have loſt my labour if I ſhould now ſit down: and yet I thought it wiſdom not to looſe more in proceeding further, when one in the ſame ſubject, and of far more abilities in it, had got the ſtart ſo far before me. And although I ſuppoſed, and at laſt was aſſured even by that Author himſelf (my very learned and worthy friend) that we ſhould not thruſt nor hinder one another any whit at all, though we both went at once in the perambulation of that land, becauſe he had not meddled with that Rabbinick way that I had gone, yet when I conſidered what it was to glean after ſo clean a Reaper, and how rough a Talmudical penſil would ſeem after ſo fine a pen; I reſolved to ſit down, and to ſtir no more in that matter, till time and occaſion did ſhew me more incouragement thereunto, than as yet I ſaw. And thus was my promiſe fallen to the ground not by any careleſneſs or forgetfulneſs of mine, but by the happy prevention of another hand, by whom the work is likely to be better done.

Yet was I unwilling to ſuffer my word utterly to come to nothing at all, though I might evade my promiſe by this fair excuſe, but I was deſirous to pay the Reader ſomething in purſuance of it, though it were not in the very ſame coin, nor the very ſame ſum that I had undertaken. Hereupon

I turned

To the READER.

I turned my thoughts and my endeavours to a deſcription of the Temple, after the ſame manner and from the ſame Authors that I had intended to have deſcribed the Land; and that the rather, not only that I might do ſomething towards the making good of my promiſe, but alſo that by a trial in a work of this nature of a leſſer bulk, I might take ſome pattern and aſſay how the other which would prove of a far larger pains and volume, would be accepted, If I ſhould again venture upon it.

But here by the way I cannot but mention, and I think I can never forget a handſom and deſerved check, that mine own heart meeting with a ſpecial occaſion did give me upon the laying down of the other task and the undertaking of this, for my daring to enter either upon the one or the other. That very day whereon I firſt ſet pen to paper to draw up the Deſcription of the Temple, having but immediately before laid aſide my thoughts of the Deſcription of the Land, I was neceſſarily called out toward the Evening, to go to view a piece of ground of mine own, concerning which ſome litigiouſneſs was emerging and about to grow. The field was but a mile from my conſtant reſidence and habitation, and it had been in mine owning divers years together, and yet till that very time had I never ſeen it, nor looked after it, nor ſo much as knew whereabout it lay. It was very unlikely I ſhould find it out of my ſelf, being ſo utterly ignorant of its ſituation, yet becauſe I deſired to walk alone for the injoying of my thoughts upon that task that I had newly taken in hand, I took ſome directions which way to go, and would venture to find out the field my ſelf alone. I had not gone far but I was at a loſs, and whether I went right or wrong I could not tell, and if right thither, yet I knew not how to do ſo further; and if wrong, I knew not which way would prove the right, and ſo in ſeeking my ground I had loſt my ſelf. Here my heart could not but take me to task, and reflecting upon what my ſtudies were then and had lately been upon, it could not but call me Fool, and me thought it ſpake as true to me as ever it had done in all my life, but only when it called me ſinner. A Fool that was ſo ſtudious, and had been ſo ſearching about things remote, and that ſo little concerned my intereſt, and yet was ſo neglective of what was near me both in place, and in my particular concernment. And a Fool again, who went about to deſcribe to others places and buildings that lay ſo many hundred miles off, as from hence to Canaan, and under ſo many hundred years ruines, and yet was not able to know or find the way to a field of mine own that lay ſo near me.

I could not but acknowledge this reproof to be both ſeaſonable, and ſeaſoned both with truth and reaſon, and it ſo far prevailed with me that it not only put me upon a reſolution to lay by that work that I had newly taken in hand that morning, but alſo to be wiſer in my bookiſhneſs for the time to come, than for it, and through it to neglect and ſink my eſtate as I had done. And yet within a little time after, I know not how I was fallen to the ſame ſtudies and ſtudiouſneſs again, had got my laid-by task into my hands again before I was aware, and was come to a determination, to go on in that work, becauſe I had my notes and collections ready by me as materials for it, and when that was done, then to think of the advice that my heart had given me, and to look to mine own buſineſs.

So I drew up the Deſcription of the Temple it ſelf, and with it the Hiſtory of the Temple Service, both of them partly from the Scriptures, and partly from the Talmudical records of the Jews Traditions and Antiquities: both which if the Reader will but look upon, as tendred in lieu of that which was promiſed concerning the deſcription of the Land, he will charitably judge I hope, that I have not been a wilful violator or neglecter of my promiſe, though I have not been ſo very punctual a performer.

The Tract of the Temple Service hath been in publick ſome ſpace of time already, and as for the other about the Temple it ſelf, I had thought to have kept it in ſuppreſſion till I could have obtained the graving of a Map of the Temple, which I drew alſo together with it, that they might have both come out together: But I am hopeleſs of obtaining that, even to this very moment, and yet have I been perſwaded to let the book forth though the Map be wanting, partly through importunity of ſome friends, and partly becauſe of my promiſe referring to this third part of The Harmony of the Evangeliſts now publiſhed.

I have been more tedious about this buſineſs, than either was needful in ſuch a trifle, or hath been pertinent in the enſuing diſcourſe. I muſt caſt my ſelf upon the Readers gentleneſs for excuſe, both of the failing of my promiſe, and of my troubleſom diſcourſe about that failing. I ſhall ſay nothing concerning the enſuing Tract of The Harmony of the Evangeliſts, nor of its fellow Tract of The Deſcription of the Temple, I ſhall refer them both to the Readers peruſal and charity, and commit him to the keeping and goodneſs of the Almighty.

THE HARMONY OF THE Four EVANGELISTS

Among themſelves, and with the OLD TESTAMENT.

SECTION XIV.

St. JOHN Chap. III.

THERE was a man of the Phariſees named Nicodemus, a Ruler of the Jews.

2. The ſame came to Jeſus by night, and ſaid unto him, Rabbi we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do theſe miracles that thou doeſt except God be with him.

3. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Verily verily I ſay unto thee, Except a man be born [a] from above, he cannot [b] ſee the Kingdom of God.

Verſ. 3.

[a] BORN from above.] The Greek word Ἄνωθεν is variouſly rendered here by Tranſlators and Expoſitors.

The Syrian read it מן דרש, by which very expreſſion, he tranſlateth πάλιν ἄνωθεν, Gal. 4. 9. which words of his Tremelius hath rendred Ab integro: and in the margin, Ab eo quod eſt caput. Beza paralleling it to the French derechef, expounds it by recapitatio, or reinitiatio, that is, ſaith he, a mans returning to his head and beginning, becauſe a man is reſtored in Chriſt, returning to that loſt Image in which he was at the firſt created, to which ſenſe it may be, the word Ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι aimeth, Epheſ. 1. 10.

Chryſoſtome ſpeaks of ſome that interpreted Ἄνωθεν by ἐξ Ἀρχῆς From the beginning: with which the Arabick ſeemeth to agree: but what ſenſe to make of it, is hard to tell, unleſs it be the ſame with that mentioned before.

The Vulgar Latine and all that follow it, namely the Roman party, read it, by Denuo; the Proteſtant party, moſt general by Iterum, Again, and they make, Ἄνωθεν γεννηθῆναι here and Ἀναγεννηθῆναι in 1 Pet. 1. 3. 23. to be but one and the ſame thing, and to bear but one and the ſame ſenſe, namely to ſignifie to be born again, as our Engliſh utters it in both places: And ſo Chryſoſtome and ſome others of the ancient have alſo underſtood it: Eraſmus and Brucioli have rendred it, the one e ſuperne, the other di ſopra, or from above, as our Engliſh margin alſo hath it, and which I have rather inclined to follow upon theſe two reaſons: 1. Becauſe the word Ἄνωθεν doth moſt commonly and generally ſignifie from above, both in Scripture and prophane Authors: as ver. 31. of this chapter. ὁ ἄνωθεν ἐρχόμενος, He that comes from above, Chap. 19. 11. Thou ſhouldeſt have no power over me, if it were not given thee Ἄνωθεν from above, Jam. 1. 17. Every perfect gift is Ἄνωθεν from above, Jam. 3. 17. Ἡ σοφία Ἄνωθεν, The wiſdom from above: See alſo what was noted on Luke 1. 3. on the word there.

And this ſenſe of it is ſo current in prophane Authors, that Camerarius having inſtanced in ſome examples to that ſenſe, comes off with an ut verum fatear, a conceſſion hardly ſtrained, that here it may ſignifie and be tranſlated, Again. 2. Now as to the matter it ſelf it is not much material whether it be rendred in this place, Again, or from above, for be it either way, the ſenſe is the ſame; for to be born from above, meaneth to be born again, and to be born again, is nothing elſe but to be born from above, but this latter interpretation doth make make the more fair, eaſie and proper conſtruction in this place: as ſhall be ſhewed in the expoſition of the verſes. And this is the ſecond reaſon why I have fixed upon it.

Now whereas the anſwer of Nicodemus, Can a man enter into his mothers womb a ſecond time and be born, is taken up as a moſt undoubted argument to prove, that our Saviour uſed ſome ſuch Syrian word as ſignified Again, without all queſtion or ambiguity; I ſee not, why Nicodemus might not give the very ſame anſwer that he doth, if Chriſt uſed a word that as unqueſtionably did ſignifie from above: For might he very well ſay [ſince he underſtood the myſtery ſpoken of no better] What? Doſt thou ſpeak of being born from above? Why, how can that be? Muſt a man have a ſecond birth of his mother, to conduce to it? For if Chriſt did uſe an undoubted word to ſignifie from above, and Nicodemus did undoubtedly underſtand him to ſpeak of being born from above, yet certainly he could not underſtand it of being born from Heaven locally, any more, than when he ſaith, that Chriſt was ſent from God, he underſtood that locally too, which none will ſay he did: And then if he did not underſtand this birth from above locally, his anſwer [though indeed improper in it ſelf] yet is as proper to that phraſe of being born from above, as to the other of being born again.

[b] To ſee the Kingdom of God, is to enter into it, verſ. 5. or to partake of it: as to ſee corruption, Pſal. 16.10. to ſee Death, Luke 2. 26. Joh. 8. 51. to ſee evil, Pſal. 90. 15. to ſee ſorrow, Rev. 18.7. to ſee good, Eccleſ. 6.6. &c. is to be in theſe eſtates, or to partake of them: See verſ. 36. To ſee life is to have life.

St. JOHN Chap. III.

4. Nicodemus ſaith unto him, How can a man be born [c] being old? Can he enter the ſecond time into his mothers womb and be born?

5. Jeſus anſwered, Verily verily I ſay unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.

6. That which is born of the fleſh is fleſh: and that which is born of the Spirit is Spirit.

7. Marvel not that I ſaid unto thee [d] Ye muſt be born again.

8. The [e] wind bloweth where it liſteth, and thou heareſt the ſound thereof, but canſt not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the Spirit.

9. Nicodemus anſwered, and ſaid unto him, How can theſe things be?

10. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Art thou a maſter of Iſrael, and knoweſt not theſe things?

11. Verily verily I ſay unto thee, we ſpeak that we do know, and teſtifie that we have ſeen, and ye receive not our witneſs.

12. If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not: how ſhall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?

13. And no man hath aſcended up into Heaven, but he that came down from Heaven, even the Son of man which is in Heaven.

14. And as Moſes lifted up the Serpent in the wilderneſs: even ſo muſt the Son of man be lifted up.

15. That whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh but have eternal life.

16. For God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.

17. For God ſent not his Son into the

[c] Being old.) So is the Greek verbatim: and being ſo rendred, it leaveth the matter leſs ſcrupulous, than being expreſſed when he is old, for that might ſeem to reſtrain the new birth ever till a man be old: The Syrian hath kept cloſe to the ſenſe given, Can an old man be born? דנת יליד גברא סבא.

[d] Except a man be born in ver. 3. is here explained, Ye muſt be born: And ſo doth not only ſhew a command included in a doctrinal leſſon, but alſo that the words We and Ye are ſometimes to be taken indefinitely though they ſeem only to ſpeak of a fixed number: And ſo in verſ. 2. We know that thou art a Teacher: the word we muſt be ſo taken; compare Matth. 5.3, 4, 5. &c. where it is ſaid bleſſed are they, with Luke 6.20, 21. where bleſſed are ye.

[e] The word πνεῦμα here uſed, hath been underſtood by ſome for the holy Spirit, which word indeed is uſed conſtantly for it in the Scripture: and ſome of that opinion have ſtrengthened themſelves in it by this, becauſe a voluntary action is aſcribed unto it; It bloweth where it liſteth, which cannot be aſcribed, ſay they, unto the wind.

The word indeed in the Greek is of various ſignification, as is the word רוח in the Hebrew; and as it doth very commonly and very properly ſignifie the eternal Spirit, the Holy Ghoſt, and the created Spirits, Angels and the ſouls of men, ſo doth it alſo the ſenſible Spirits, the breath of our mouths and the wind of Heaven. In this laſt ſenſe, which is the ſenſe that we have in hand, it is taken by the Septuagint Gen. 8.1. Καὶ ἐπήγαγεν ὁ θεὸς πνεῦμα ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν: The Lord brought a wind over the Earth. And 1 King. 18. 11. Πνεῦμα μέγα κραταιὸν &c. οὐκ ἐν τῷ πνεύματι κύριος: Behold a mighty ſtrong wind, &c. but the Lord was not in the wind, &c.

And ſo doth Ariſtotle confeſs that Ἄνεμος καὶ πνεῦμα λέγεται, lib. de Mund. And in that

St. JOHN Chap. III.

world to condemn the world: but that the world through him might be saved.

18. He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not, is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the Name of the only begotten Son of God.

19. And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.

20. For every one that [g] doth evil hateth light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved.

21. But he that [h] doth truth, cometh to the light, that his deeds might be manifest, that they are wrought in God.

22. ¶ After these things came Jesus and his Disciples into the [i] country of Judea, and there he tarried with them and baptized.

23. And John also was baptizing [k] in Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came and were baptized.

24. For John was not yet cast into prison.

25. [l] Therefore there was a question of Johns disciples with the Jews about purifying.

26. And they came unto John, and said unto him Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou barest witness, behold the same baptizeth, and all men come to him.

27. John answered and said, A man can receive nothing except it be given him from Heaven.

28. Ye your selves bear me witness that I said; I am not the Christ, but I am sent before him.

29. He that hath the bride, is the bridegroom: but the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him, rejoyceth greatly because of the bridegrooms voice: This my joy therefore is fulfilled.

30. He must increase, but I must decrease.

31. He that cometh from above, is above all: he that is of the earth is earthly, and speaketh of the earth; he that cometh from above, is above all.

32. And what he hath seen and heard that he testifieth, and no man receiveth his testimony.

33. He that hath received his testimony, hath set to his seal, that God is true.

34. For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the spirit by measure unto him.

35. The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand.

36. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him.

sense do Cyrill, Chrysostome, Theophylact his mouth, and other of the Fathers take it here: For 1. otherwise here would be no comparison, which the word ὥτ⊖, So, doth shew there is: And to take the word πνεῦμα for the holy Spirit, in the beginning of the verse as well as πνίυματ⊖ in the latter end is to be taken in that sense, would make a very harsh and rugged construction. 2. It is very improper to say that Nicodemus now had heard the sound or voice of the Holy Ghost, being as he was yet, so far to seek in the things of Salvation. And 3. whereas it is said the πνεῦμα bloweth where it listeth, as if a voluntary action were ascribed to it, it is but such another speech as when the Sun is said to know his going down, Psal. 104. 19. Now there is as little knowledge in the Sun, as there is voluntariness in the wind (unless with the Jews we will hold the Sun, Moon, and Stars to be intellectual creatures) and yet such an expression is used of it for elegancy and fulness of expression.

[f] Gr. φωνὴν αὐτοῦ, The voice thereof: For even ἄψυχα φωνὴν διδόντα: Things without life are said to yield a voice, 1 Cor. 14. 7, 8. As blood, Gen. 4. 10. waters, Psal. 93. 3. miracles, Exod. 4. 8. thunder, Rev. 19. 6. &c. And whereas the Hebrew word קול doth indifferently signifie either an articulate voice or any other sound, the Greek word φωνὴ is also used very commonly in the Scripture to the same signification and extent.

[g] By this he expresseth the Hebrew phrase so common in the Old Testament עשה רע and which is used generally of all the Kings of Israel, and of too many of the Kings of Judah. He did evil in the sight of the Lord.

[i] Εἰς τὴν Ἰουδαίαν γῆν. That is, into Judea country, meaning in opposition to Judea City. For the story next before (of the conference with Nicodemus) came to pass and was acted in Jerusalem, and there had Christ kept the Passover, and done divers miracles; and stayed some time and after these things mentioned before saith the Evangelist, Jesus leaveth the City and goeth into the Country, leaveth the chief City of Judea, and goeth into the Country of Judea: for to this sense do the Evangelists words mean if they be taken up at large. And therefore I see no reason why Beza should confine this place to the country that lay near Jerusalem, translating it Judeæ territorium, and expounding it to that sense. Nor do I see that it is any such great matter as he makes it to give a reason of this unusual phrase Ἰουδαία γῆ.

[k] Ænon.) The Syriack and Arab: read it in two words עין נון which some would have to mean the Well of the Greeks; as if in the times of the Grecian and Syro-Grecian Monarchies, ſome Greeks had digged and laid up theſe waters: we ſhall enquire after this place in the expoſition of the verſe.

Reaſon of the Order.

THE ſubſequence and jointing of this ſtory of Nicodemus, unto that which is recorded in the latter end of the ſecond Chapter (of Chriſts doing many miracles at Jeruſalem at the Paſover) is ſo apparent out of Nicodemus his own words ver. 2. and out of the words of the Evangeliſt ver. 22. that it needeth no proof and evidence, but only to point at theſe verſes for the proving of it. Yet that we may obſerve both the connexion of this Chapter with the former, and alſo the times and juncture of this Chapter within it ſelf, let us view it a little at large, and take our proſpect from the three and twentieth verſe of the ſecond Chapter. Now when Jeſus was in Jeruſalem at the Paſover on the Feaſt day, many believed in his name when they ſaw the miracles that he did. This feaſt day at the Paſover, may beſt be conceived to be the firſt day of the feſtival week, or the day after the Paſover was eaten; for on that day was the appearance of the people in the Court of the Temple, as the Law appointed, that thrice every year they ſhould appear before the Lord. For that appearing mentioned in the Law, (ſaith Rambam) was that every one appear in the Court, the firſt holy day of the feſtival, and bring an offering. In Hagg. per. 1. On that day therefore, the concourſe of the people being the greateſt, it is moſt proper to ſuppoſe that Chriſt began to ſhew himſelf in his miraculous power, as he had done a day or two before in his Prophetick zeal, in driving the market out of the Temple.

What miracles they were that he wrought is not mentioned; it is moſt rational and moſt agreeable to his workings afterward; to hold, that it was healing of diſeaſes and caſting out Devils: but whatſoever the miracles were for particular and diſtinctive quality, the power ſhewed in them was ſo great, that it made Nicodemus confeſs and others acknowledge that none could do ſuch, but a teacher come from God: and it made the Galileans who were ſpectators now, to receive him when he came amongſt them afterward, Joh. 4. 45. Such works had never been done in their ſight till now, and they had never had ſuch miraculous ſpectacles at their appearances before: and ſo he ſhewed them at once that it is not in vain to wait upon God in his appointments, and that the great Prophet was come among them: and yet on that very day come three years they put him to death.

Nicodemus undoubtedly was a ſpectator and witneſs of what was done, and ſo the Syriack tranſlator ſeemeth to conclude, when he rendreth the beginning of this Chapter thus, Now there was one of the Phariſees named Nicodemus there: and ſo his own words ſeem to argue, as ſpoken not upon hearſay, but upon ocular witneſs, we know thou art a teacher come from God, for none can do ſuch miracles, &c. He having ſeen thoſe wondrous workings by day came to Jeſus that night, as may in moſt probability be conjectured and the word Νυκτὸς very properly rendred in ſuch a definite and determinate conſtruction: For there can be no doubt but he would come with the firſt conveniency he could, being taken with thoſe miracles, and deſiring to have ſome communication with Chriſt, and not knowing how ſoon he might be getting out of Town: However, if he did not come that night, yet doubtleſs he would delay as little as he might, and if he came any time before Chriſt left Jeruſalem, as it is paſt all controverſie he did, it is of force enough, to prove and clear the connexion of this ſtory of Nicodemus, to that of Chriſts working miracles at the Paſover, in the Chapter before.

Now how long our Saviour ſtayed at Jeruſalem, before he went into the country of Judea, which is the next ſtory that is related, and of which the two and twentieth verſe ſpeaketh, is ſomewhat uncertain. The next intimation that we have of a fixed time, in the following ſtory, is in Chap. 4. 35. where when Chriſt is fleeing out of Judea for his own ſafety, upon the report of Johns impriſonment, and how the Phariſees were informed that he made more Diſciples than John, he himſelf ſaith, that it was then four months to harveſt: that is, to the next Paſover, for then did their harveſt begin, as we ſhall ſhew when we come to that verſe: Now that paſſage will help us to take up the times of this Chapter the better: though we cannot ſo undoubtedly fix the actions and abode of our Saviour in this or that place, to their certain times; Four months before harveſt, fell out to be about the latter end of our November, and till that time had Chriſt remained at Jeruſalem and in Judea, ſometimes in the one place and ſometimes in the other, from the Paſover before, which was the ſpace of about eight months: What time he ſpent in either place is not attainable to know, nor much material to enquire after: certain it is that feaſt of Pentecoſt, and the Feaſt of Tabernacles came between, and it is very probable that he was at Jeruſalem at thoſe Feaſts, according as the Law appointed, howſoever he was in the Country both before and after.

And

And now to look a little after the times and progreſs of the Miniſtery of the Baptiſt alſo, of whoſe preaching and walking at liberty, you hear the laſt in this Chapter: his ſtaying and baptizing, is confined eſpecially to three places: to the country of Judea, Luke 3. 3. Bethabara beyond Jordan, Joh. 1. 28. and Ænon near Salim, Joh. 3. 23. In the firſt place he ſpent about half a year, namely from his beginning to baptize, which was about Eaſter, till he had baptized Chriſt, about the Feaſt of Expiation or of Tabernacles: For John being half a year older than Chriſt, Luke 1. 26. &c. is to be ſuppoſed to have entered into his Office of Preaching and Baptizing, ſuch a ſpace before Chriſt entered into his publick Miniſtery, which was at his Baptiſm, and which was in September as we have proved before. All that time therefore John continued in the country of Judea upon the coaſts of Jordan coaſting up and down there as he ſaw occaſion, and as it ſerved beſt for his imployment. When Chriſt is baptized by him, the next tidings that we hear of him is at Bethabara, but when he flitted thither, and how long he continued there, it is uncertain. When Chriſt returned out of the wilderneſs after his temptation, he finds him there, namely, about ſix weeks after his Baptiſm, but it is ſomewhat probable that he had removed thither preſently after our Saviour was baptized: for it ſeemeth by Luke Chap. 3 21. that even all the people that John had to gather on Judea-ſide of Jordan, were come unto him, before Chriſt came to his Baptiſm: So that having no more to do on that ſide of the River, he removes to Bethabara on the other. But how long ſtaid he there? It was now half a year to the next Paſſover or thereabout, and it may be that he ſpent this half year on this ſide Jordan as he had done the other on the other. And then hath he about half a year more, or ſomewhat above, to walk at liberty, and poſſibly he ſpent that time in Ænon, dividing his time of publick Miniſtery and liberty into three parts ſomewhat equally in theſe three places: but we need not to be ſo curious in ſearching after the very fixed times; it is enough to have the right account of the whole ſum of his time, and to carry his removals in the right Series of their ſtory.

Harmony and Explanation.

Verſ. 1. There was a man of the Phariſees named Nicodemus, &c.

THERE is a famous mention of one נקדימון Nicodemus in the Talmud: of whom they relate this ſtrange ſtory. That when all Iſrael were come up to Jeruſalem at one of the three Feſtivals, and there was no water for them to drink, Nicodemus borrowed twelve wells or ponds of water from ſome great man, to be repaid again ſo much water, or twelve talents of ſilver on ſuch a ſet day. Before the day that he had appointed came, there were no rains at all, and therefore it was unlikely he ſhould repay water for water again according to his ingagement: Upon the day ſet, the great man ſends for his water or for his money; Hereupon Nicodemus ben Gorion (for ſo they call him) went into his Divinity School, and vailed himſelf and prayed, and the Heavens were preſently covered with clouds, and there came down a great rain, in ſo much that the twelve ponds were filled with water and to ſpare. Then the great man cavilled, and ſaid, The Sun was ſet, and his day was paſt. Nicodemus went in again, vailed himſelf and prayed, and preſently the winds blew, the clouds ſcattered and the Sun appeared: And therefore ſay they, he was called Nicodemus: מפני נקדרה לו חמה בעבורו becauſe the Sun appeared ſo in his behalf: And they ſpeak high things alſo of his Daughter, as that ſhe had a bed made up of 12000 denarii of gold, &c. Talm. bab. in Cetuboth fol. 66. and Taanith fol. 19. Avoth Rabbi Nathan per. 6.

Now it is not worth debating either the truth of theſe ſtories, or whether this Nicodemus in the Talmud and he in the Goſpel were one and the ſame man. Certainly their times are concurrent, and why they might not be the ſame, as there is no danger to hold, ſo ſee I no reaſon to oppoſe, ſo ſtrong as this, becauſe the Talmudiſts make ſo honourable mention of him. The Author of Juchaſin yoketh him in the ſame time and the ſame ſociety with Rabban Jochanan ben Zacchai, who flouriſhed in the times of Chriſts being upon earth, and till after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: and of them two together he telleth this ſtory, That Nicodemus ben Gorion was once invited to a Circumciſion Feaſt with Rabban Jochanan ben Zacchai, and after the Feaſt Rabban Jochanan, and his Scholars went up into an upper room to expound the Law, and the houſe began to be all of a fire about, like mount Sinai (compare Act. 2.) Juchaſin fol. 23. & 51.

If our Nicodemus that we have in hand were the ſame with him in the Talmud, and that ſtory there have any thing of truth in it, we might ſay he was a Prieſt, and bare the office of the ממונה על המים Overſeer of the waters, for the peoples accommodation at the feſtivals: for ſuch an office one of the Prieſts had, Maymon. in Keli Mikdaſh per. 7.

But whether he were the ſame man and of that Office or no, the Evangeliſt hath ſet this this double character upon him, that he was a man of the Phariſees, and ſo principled clean contrary to the doctrine of the Goſpel, and that he was a Ruler of the Jews, or one of the great Sanhedrin, *Joh.*7.5. and ſo had power in his hands to act in oppoſition of the Goſpel, according to his principles: It was not therefore an ordinary converſion, when Nicodemus is converted as it was in the converſion of other ſinners, but it was a work of a more ſingular wonder, when he and ſuch as he were brought home to the obedience of the Goſpel, who were not only under the power of corruption, and domineering of ſin as others alſo were, but under religious principles as they held them, clean oppoſite and contramilitant to the Goſpel. And thus in the converſion of Nicodemus a man of power, and of ſuch principles, at Chriſts firſt coming up to Jeruſalem in his publick Miniſtry, the power of the Goſpel and of the work of grace is demonſtrated, and a Patron for the riſing Goſpel is provided.

Verſ. 2. The ſame came to Jeſus by night.

This his coming by night is ſpoken of again by this ſame Evangeliſt, Chap.7.50. & 19. 39. and commonly is interpreted to be becauſe of the weakneſs of his faith, as not daring to own Chriſt in the ſight of the Jews. Which although we will not wholly deny, yet may there ſome other reaſons be given alſo of his coming by night, beſides fear and weakneſs of faith only: As 1. If his coming to Chriſt, was, to be inſtructed and ſatisfied by Chriſt in diſcourſe concerning the Kingdom of God, and whether he were the Meſſias or no, &c. as it may be well ſuppoſed it was, in that concourſe of people that was then at Jeruſalem, and eſpecially about Chriſt, all day long after they had once ſeen his miracles, it was not poſſible for him to have any privacy with him, but by night. 2. If he came the night after the day of the Feaſt, on which Chriſt did his miracles it ſhews his as much willingneſs toward the Goſpel in coming ſo ſoon, as it ſhewed weakneſs that he came by night. 3. The traditions of the Jews did ſet a ſingular eſteem and value upon the ſtudy of the Law and Divinity by night. Although the command, ſay they, be to learn by day and by night, yet a man learns the moſt of his wiſdom by night, &c. Therefore whoſoever will obtain the Crown of the Law, let him ſtudy every night, and not loſe one. The wiſe men ſay The ſong of the Law is not but in the night: as it is ſaid, Ariſe, ſing in the night: and he that ſtudies the Law by night, a thread of mercy is drawn out for him by day. Every houſe in which they hear not the words of the Law by night, fire devours it, Maym. in Talmud torah per.3.

§. Rabbi we know that thou art a Teacher come from God.

Rabbi, was the diſtinctive title of a man ordained, with which he was ſtiled when he received Ordination to be a Doctor, or a Judge; How is ordination? (ſaith Maymony) Not that they always lay their hands upon the head of the Elder that is to be ordained, but that they call him Rabbi, and ſay to him, Behold thou art ordained, and thou haſt power to judge, &c. Sanhedr. per. 4. But the word came into more inlarged uſe among them, ſo as to be given in compellation to any of learning, rank or Religion: And whether Nicodemus do ſo title Chriſt in the proper or in the common uſe of the word, it is not much material to look after: It is like he doth it, becauſe he acknowledgeth him a Teacher, and a Teacher come from God, as John is ſaid to be a man ſent from God, Joh. 1.3. and called Rabbi, *Joh.*3.26. Now theſe phraſes come from God and ſent from God, do ſtand in contradiſtinction, to teachers coming from men, and ſent from men. Which way of emiſſion of Teachers and Preachers by Ordination, though it were according to the Ordinance and way of God, yet becauſe the action was done immediately by the hands of men, it was of a very great difference from theirs, whoſe immediate commiſſion was from the Lord by revelation, inſpiration, or ſome ſuch Divine warrant of the Spirit of Prophecy. Nicodemus therefore when he calleth Chriſt a Teacher come from God, he meaneth ſome more ſpecial miſſion from God, than the ordinary and mediate one by ordination: and he acknowledgeth him to be a Prophet at leaſt immediately ſent from God, as the Prophets had been of old, by the word of the Lord, with the power of miracles in their hand: if he do not in the term acknowledge him more than a Prophet, of which hereafter.

But whom doth Nicodemus join with himſelf in this acknowledgment, when he ſaith We know in the plural number? Were there any of his Scholars with him now with Chriſt when he ſpeaketh theſe words? Or did he mean that himſelf and his fellows of the Sanhedr. were convinced of Chriſts being a Prophet? Truly were it not, that I knew the phraſe is otherwiſe taken and conſtrued, then always in a definite ſenſe, or fixed to a certain number, I ſhould as ſoon underſtand it ſo, as any other way, applied to any particular company or number of perſons. For do but imagin, upon the appearing of the great and wondrous miracles of Chriſt, after that the working of miracles had been out of date and uſe for ſo many ages together, what a ſerious recogniſance, and ſolemn debate

muſt the great Sanhedrin needs take up about this matter, whom it concerned to look after things of that nature? It is paſt all doubting that they would ſadly canvaſs the caſe amongſt themſelves, whether Chriſt were a true Prophet yea or no: and it can be but little doubted neither, that when they fully skanned the caſe, and weighed the miracles that he did, they could not but in heart conſent that he was a Teacher ſent from God, for that no man could do ſuch miracles as he did, unleſs God were with him: which thing indeed in action, and in their demeanour towards him they always denied, ſcorning, oppoſing and perſecuting him, as it appeareth all along in the ſtory, yet certainly they could not in heart deny it, and ſo their ſin in acting ſo, was ſo much the greater. If one ſhould therefore underſtand the word we know, in this ſtrict conſtruction, as if Nicodemus having been in the Sanhedrin all day, (and it in debate about Chriſt, and not able to gainſay his Divine miſſion becauſe of his wondrous workings) he ſhould come at night and tell Chriſt, how he and his fellows of the Sanhedrin were convinced that he was a Teacher ſent from God, it might not be contrary either to truth or to good ſenſe ſo to conſtrue it: But the phraſe We know is often taken to import, that ſuch a thing is commonly and certainly known, not ſo much with regard to ſuch or ſuch particular or definite perſons knowing of it; but with regard to the thing it ſelf, that it is well known, and of open cogniſance: and ſo it is cleareſt to underſtand it here; ſee the phraſe, Joh. 4.22. & 9.31. 1 Joh. 5.18. &c.

Verſ. 3. Except a man be born.

Expoſitors do uſe great variety of piecings to tie theſe words of our Saviour, to thoſe of Nicodemus before, in ſome ſutableneſs or conformity together. Chryſoſtome thus, Thou holdeſt me for a Prophet only: here thou comeſt exceeding far ſhort of the full truth, and art not come ſo much as into the utmoſt porch of a right knowledge: Verily I ſay unto thee, except thou partake of the Spirit by the laver of regeneration, thou canſt not have a right judgement concerning me. And much in the ſame ſteps treadeth Theophylact. Cyrill thus: Nicodemus thought he had done enough in coming to Chriſt, and confeſſing him, but this is not enough ſaith Chriſt, but thou muſt alſo be born again: And much after the ſame manner goeth Toletus. Auguſtine thus, Nicodemus thou comeſt to me as to a Teacher come from God, but I tell thee there is no truſting my ſelf and the Goſpel with thee, unleſs thou be born again. Beza conceiveth that Chriſt ſaw that it was in Nicodemus his thoughts to enquire of him about the Doctrine of Regeneration, and he prevents his queſtion. Janſenius, that he did inquire concerning the way to eternal life, but the Evangeliſt hath not mentioned it: and divers more like offertures of connexion between the words of Nicodemus and our Saviours might be produced which are tendered by ſeveral expoſitors, but I ſhall ſpare more alleadging, and firſt take up the conſideration of what is meant by the Kingdom of God, and that underſtood, the connexion that appears ſo difficult will be made the better.

§. The Kingdom of God.

1. This phraſe, and The Kingdom of Heaven, are but one and the ſame in ſenſe, though they differ in a word, as will plainly and eaſily appear by comparing theſe places.

Matth. 4. 7. Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand.	Mark 1. 15. The Kingdom of God is at hand, Repent ye.
Matth. 5. 3. Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven.	Luke 6. 20. Bleſſed be ye poor, for yours is the Kingdom of God.
Matth. 19. 14. Suffer little children, &c. for of ſuch is the Kingdom of Heaven.	Mark 10. 14. Suffer little children, &c. for of ſuch is the Kingdom of God.
Matth. 19. 23. A rich man ſhall hardly enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.	Luk. 18. 24. How hardly ſhall they that have riches enter into the Kingdom of God?
Matth. 11. 11, 12. The leaſt in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he.	Luk. 7. 28. The leaſt in the Kingdom of God is greater than he.
Matth. 13. 11. To you it is given to know the myſteries of the Kingdom of Heaven.	Luk. 8. To you it is given to know the myſteries of the Kingdom of God.
Verſ. 3. The Kingdom of Heaven is like a grain of muſtardſeed.	Luk. 13. 18, 19. The Kingdom of God is like a grain of muſtardſeed.
Verſ. 33. The Kingdom of Heaven is like leaven.	Verſ. 20, 21. The Kingdom of God is like leaven.

And many more ſuch like parallel places in the Evangeliſts might be produced, in which by the indifferent uſe of theſe expreſſions, they ſhew abundantly, that, The Kingdom of Heaven and The Kingdom of God do mean and ſignifie but one and the ſame thing.

And

And the reaſon of this indifferent uſe of it is, becauſe the Jews uſually called God Heaven: as Dan. 4.25. Matth. 21.25. Luke 15.21. Joh. 3.27. and their Authors infinitely in ſuch paſſages as theſe מורא רבו כמורא שמים A man is to fear his Teacher as he is to fear Heaven. פולחנא רשמיא The ſervice of Heaven, פורק יראת שמים Such a one caſts off the fear of Heaven. יהא ירא שמים בסתר Let a man always fear Heaven in ſecret. מיתה ביד שמים Death by the hand of Heaven. נתחלל שם שמים The name of Heaven is blaſphemed, &c. And they call God Heaven (ſaith Elias Levita) becauſe Heaven is the place of his Habitation. In Tiſhbi.

The Talmudick writers do ſometimes uſe the term or phraſe of The Kingdom of Heaven in a wild ſenſe, for the ſtrictneſs, height and pompouſneſs of their Ceremonioufneſs in Religion, and moſt eſpecially about the buſineſs of their Phylacteries. Rabbi Joſhua the ſon of Korchah ſaith קבל עליו מלכות שמים תחלה ואחר יקבל עליו עול מצוה Let a man firſt take upon him the Kingdom of Heaven, and afterward let him take upon him the yoke of the command. Thus the Miſhneh of the Jeruſalem Talmud readeth in Beracoth per. 2. and ſo likewiſe doth R. Alpheſ. But the Babylon Miſhneh hath it, let him firſt take upon him the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven, &c. which ſaying meaneth but this, Let a man but firſt put on his Phylacteries, and then fall to his Devotions. And ſo the Gemara in the place cited doth expound it. Rabbi Joſhua ſaith, He that will take on him the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven, let him waſh his hands, put up his Phylacteries, rehearſe the ſentences of them over, ſay his prayer, and this is the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven complete. On whoſe words Alpheſi gloſſeth and deſcanteth thus, Since he reads, And thou ſhalt bind them for a ſign upon thine hand, and they ſhall be frontlets between thine eyes, If he put not his Phylacteries on, he is found bearing falſe witneſs againſt himſelf, for what he ſaith is not true. And although he perform the command (of ſaying his prayers) ſo as to diſcharge his duty of ſaying over his Phylactery ſentences, yet he tranſgreſſeth on the other hand, becauſe he witneſſeth falſly againſt himſelf. And Rabbi Jochanan meaneth that even the command is not perfectly done, if he take not on him the Kingdom of Heaven. And he is like to one that offereth a Thanks offering without a meat offering: becauſe he rehearſeth thoſe ſentences without taking on him the Kingdom of Heaven.

In the ſame place is another ſtory related and to be underſtood in the ſame ſenſe, concerning Rabban Gamaliel, who on his wedding day at night, ſaid over his Phylacteries: His Diſciples ſaid unto him, Sir, haſt not thou taught us that a Bridegroom is free from ſaying over his Phylacteries the firſt night? He ſaith unto them, I will not hearken unto you to lay from me the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven no not one hour. And the ſame conſtruction is to be made of that which the Author of Juchaſin records of Rabbi Akiba שנפטר בקבלת עול שמים That he died taking on him the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven, fol. 66. So that in theſe mens Dictionary, The phraſe of The Kingdom of Heaven, did ſignifie mainly, the height, zeal, and ſtrictneſs of their devotions joined with punctual Ceremonioufneſs and Phylactery rites. Zohar ſhall be our Lexicon for concluſion: What is the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven, (ſaith he) But as they put a yoke upon an Ox at firſt to produce by him benefit to the world, and if he take not the yoke upon him, he is unſerviceable: ſo alſo it behoveth a man to take upon him the yoke at firſt, and afterward to ſerve with it in every thing that is needful, and if he take not the yoke upon him, he cannot be ſerviceable: As it is ſaid, Serve the Lord in fear: what meaneth, in fear? Why what is written: The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom: And this is the Kingdom of Heaven. Zohar. in Levit. fol. 53.

But in the language of the Jews in the Goſpel, and in ſome of their writers elſewhere alſo, The Kingdom of Heaven ſignifieth the days of the Meſſias, and the glorious times and their Religion and condition that they expected would be then. When he ſhould reſtore the Kingdom of the houſe of David to its old glory, and build the Temple, and bring home all the diſperſed of Iſrael, and Iſrael ſhould be at reſt from the Kingdom of wickedneſs, to ſtudy the Law and the Commandments without diſquieture. Maym. in Melachim. per. 11. and in Teſhubah per. 9.

See theſe places and paſſages, expounding plainly the phraſe, of the days of Meſſias, both in the conſtruction of the Jews and alſo of Chriſt and the Goſpel it ſelf.

John Baptiſt preached ſaying, The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand, Matth. 3.2. So did Chriſt, Matth. 4.17. and ſo he bad his Diſciples to do, Matth. 10.17. by which was meant no other thing, but the time was near when the Son of man ſhould be revealed: for ſo our Saviour himſelf doth interpret it, Matth. 16.23.

Luke 16.16. The Law and the Prophets were till John, but from that time forward the Kingdom of God was preached: which John himſelf expounded thus, That Chriſt ſhould be manifeſt to Iſrael, therefore came I baptizing with water, Joh. 1.31.

Luke 17.20,21. The Phariſees asked him when the Kingdom of God ſhould come: And Jeſus anſwered, the Kingdom of God is among you. Which in the next verſe after is uttered by The days of the Son of man.

Luke

Luke 9. 27. There be ſome ſtanding here which ſhall not taſte of death till they ſee the Kingdom of God: which Matthew utters, till they ſee the Son of man come in his Kingdom, Mark 16. 28.

Matth. 21. 31. Publicans and Harlots go into the Kingdom of God before you: and the next verſe gives this reaſon, becauſe they believed not John, from whom the Kingdom of God, began to be preached, and by whom the Meſſiah was pointed out.

Matth. 21. 43. The Kingdom of God ſhall be taken from you. And the reaſon is given in the verſe before, becauſe they refuſed the corner ſtone when he was among them: to which the gloſs is agreeable „ that R. Solomon maketh on Jer. 13. 17. My ſoul ſhall weep in ſecret for your pride, that is, סִפְדִּי צְאוּתָה שֶׁל מַשׁ becauſe of the glory of the Kingdom of Heaven which ſhall be given to Idols, or to the Idolatrous Heathen.

And of the days and revealing of the Meſſias, which the Nation ſo much looked after, are thoſe paſſages to be underſtood; Luke 23. 52. Joſeph of Arimathea waited for the Kingdom of God: and Luke 19. 11. They thought that the Kingdom of God ſhould ſhortly appear. Sutable to which the Chaldee Paraphraſt interprets thoſe words, Say to the Cities of Judah, Behold your God, Eſay 40. 9. Say to the Cities of Judah, The Kingdom of your God is revealed, and Eſay 53. 11. They ſhall ſee the Kingdom of their Meſſias.

Now although our Saviour and the Evangeliſts, and Apoſtles did uſe the Phraſe. The Kingdom of God or of Heaven, for the days and affairs under the Meſſias as well as the Jews, yet in the expoſition of the things of thoſe days, they do as far differ as may be: For,

1. The Jews looked upon the appearance and days of the Meſſias, as things of incomparable earthly pomp, royalty and gorgeouſneſs, therefore they called it the Kingdom, becauſe they expected the reſtoring of the earthly glory of Davids throne. Act. 1. 6. Luke 24. 21. Mark 20. 20. and The Kingdom of Heavon, becauſe they imagined they ſhould be acquitted from under the power of an earthly Kingdom: For their wiſe men held that there ſhould be no difference betwixt this world, and the days of Meſſias, but only the oppreſſion of the Kingdoms. Talm. in Sanhed. per. 10. Maym. in Teſhubah per. 9.

But Chriſt profeſſeth, that his coming is not with obſervation: Luke 17. 20. that his Kingdom is not of this world, Joh. 18. 36. That the Kingdom of Heaven is of the poor, Luke 6. 20. and to be received as by little children, Mark 10. 15. &c.

2. They fancied a change in matters of Religion in the time of the Meſſiah, but all for the greater, and higher pomp of Ceremonies, and formal worſhip; that, the ſolemn Feſtivals, Sacrifices, Sprinklings, obſervations of carnal rites ſhould be in a higher force and eſteem, than ever yet, that their ſtudy and practiſe of the Law, according to ſuch a carnal manner, ſhould be incomparable both for zeal and diligence: And that there ſhould be a punctual exactneſs in all formalities about meats and drinks, converſe and worſhip.

But the Goſpel tells that, no coming into the Kingdom of Heaven, unleſs their righteouſneſs exceed this Phariſaical righteouſneſs, Matth. 5. 20. That the worſhip of God was to be in the ſpirit, Joh. 4. 23, 24. And that the Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt, Rom. 14. 17.

3. They conceited that the happineſs of the days of the Meſſias ſhall be appropriated only to them of that Nation, and that the Heathens ſhould have no ſhare nor intereſt in that felicity.

But the Goſpel tells, that there ſhould come from Eaſt and Weſt and North and South, and ſit down in the Kingdom of God, Luke 13. 29. And that that Kingdom ſhould be taken from them who took themſelves only to be the children of the Kingdom, and ſhould be given to another Nation, Mark 21. 43. & 8. 11, 12.

The meaning therefore of this expreſſion, The Kingdom of God or Heaven, which is ſo exceeding frequent in the New Teſtament, in the Goſpel acceptation, is to this extent.

1. It ſignifieth the revealing or appearing of Chriſt, as is apparent by the places cited before, not ſo much his firſt appearing in humane fleſh or when he was born, as his reveaking, coming and appearing in the demonſtration of his power and of his being the Son of God: And in reference to this matter, the Kingdom of Heaven, or of God, is dated by theſe two dates: ſometimes from his reſurrection and ſometimes from the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; from his reſurrection, whereby he was declared mightily to be the Son of God, Rom. 1. 4. as Luke 22. 18. I will not drink of the fruit of the vine till the Kingdom of God be come, meaning not till after his reſurrection; for then he eat and drank with them, Act. 1. 4. Luke 24. 43, 44. And from the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, Luke 21. 31, 32. Matth. 16. 28. becauſe then he triumphed over thoſe that had deſpiſed his rule, and he transferred his Kingdom to another people, Matth. 21. 40, 41, 43.

2. It ſignifieth the changed adminiſtration of the way and things of Salvation; from the Ceremonial and carnal rites which were appointed before, to a worſhip of God in ſpirit and truth. Not but that that ſpiritual ſervice was inwrapped under thoſe formalities, ties, if they could have found it out, but that now the change was ſo apparent and ſo great, that thoſe outſides of Ceremonies were to be laid aſide, and the internal ſubſtance only to be looked after. In this ſenſe, the Kingdom of Heaven is dated from the beginning of John Baptiſts Miniſtery, when this change did firſt begin, Luke 16.16. and that time called the beginning of the Goſpel, Mark 1.1. this change is called the regeneration, *Matth.*19.28. And new Heavens, and new Earth, Eſay 65.16.

3. It ſignifieth the planting of the Goſpel, and of the ſpiritual Kingdom of Chriſt, among the Gentiles, *Matth.*8.11,12. & 21.43.

4. It ſignifieth the work of the Goſpel, grace wrought in the heart, or the vertue and vigour of this ſpiritual Kingdom of Chriſt there, *Matth.*6.33. & 13.46. & 15.3, &c.

5. And ſometimes it ſignifies the ſtate of glory, Luke 18.18,24,25.

And now to return to that enquiry that we were about, concerning the connexion of our Saviours words to the words of Nicodemus; and concerning the meaning of the words themſelves, we ſhall obſerve only theſe three particulars.

1. That Nicodemus in his words in the verſe before, doth own ſome appearance and glimpſe of the Kingdom of God, or coming of the Meſſias, in the wondrous miracles that Chriſt had wrought. We ſhall not much diſpute whether when he ſaith that Chriſt was a Teacher come from God, he means, that he was the Meſſias, or that he was Elias his forerunner, or that he was ſome Prophet that was as the dawning to the days of Meſſias: certainly his argument from Chriſts miracles, doth ſpeak him as thinking thoſe days near at hand, and the Kingdom of God now beginning to appear: Such arguments we find elſewhere, producing ſuch a concluſion, and by the obſerving of them, we may the better judge of this. Nathaniel concludes Chriſt the King of Iſrael, becauſe he had wonderfully told him of ſome ſecret paſſage of his under a Fig-tree, John 1.49. And the woman of Samaria, becauſe he had told her of her ſecret villany, reſolves that he muſt needs be the Meſſias, *Joh.*4.29. So when he had filled the people with five loaves, and two fiſhes, they make this undoubted concluſion, Of a truth this is the Prophet; and they would have crowned him for Meſſias, John 6.14,15. And our Saviour himſelf makes this an undeniable argument, I by the Spirit of God do caſt out Devils, ergo, No doubt the Kingdom of God is come among you, Luke 11.20. for ſuch wonders cannot be expected but in the days of Meſſias. Such like arguments are thoſe, John 7.31. & 9.16. & 11.47, 48. & 15.24. The blaſphemous Jews of thoſe times found theſe ſo evincing and undeniable evidences toward ſuch a concluſion, that they could find no other way to evade the dint of them, but by that curſed tergiverſation, as ſenſleſs as it was impious; That Chriſt wrought theſe wonders by the power of the Devil, Luke 11.15. John 10.20. And as the blaſphemous Jews in times ſucceeding have ſought to evade them by this aſſertion, that when Meſſias ſhould come he would do no miracles. Talm. in Sanhedr. per. 10. Maym. in Melachim. per. 11, 12.

2. But this was Nicodemus his argumentation upon the miracles that he ſaw done: that undoubtedly this could be nothing but a token of the days of the Meſſias or Kingdom of God now approached; and ſo our Saviour eaſily reads his meaning; and ſo the alledged like arguments ſhew, that even any of the learned or obſerving ones of the Nation, would readily have conſtrued his words, though he ſpake not ſo much in thoſe very ſyllables; and therefore it is needleſs to ſay, that Chriſt knew it was in his thoughts to enquire about the Kingdom of Heaven, it was legible enough in theſe very words, that he acknowledged an undeniable evidence of the Kingdom of Heaven now demonſtrated, in thoſe wondrous miracles that Chriſt wrought; which reaſoning may be heightned by theſe two circumſtances, in that miracles had been ſo long ceaſed, and ſhould now ſo break forth; and that in the times when miracles were wrought, none were wrought ſuch as theſe.

3. The connexion therefore of our Saviours words to his, upon theſe conſiderations is of no difficulty or harſhneſs at all, but as direct and proper as was poſſible: For, as Nicodemus by theſe miracles could not but conclude upon the times of the Meſſias that they were now come; ſo by his Judaical and Phariſaical principles, he conceived that thoſe glorious times that they expected under Meſſias ſhould take the people as they were, and they without any inward change of mind or heart at all, ſhould be tranſlated into an outward changed condition of happineſs and earthly glory, as much as they could deſire or imagine: No, ſaith Chriſt, there is more required of and in him that deſires to ſee and partake of the happineſs of that Kingdom, and thoſe days; he muſt alſo ſuffer a changedneſs in himſelf, and in his principles, and be caſt into a new mold, and be as if he were born anew. And thus may we make out the connexion of this ſpeech of Chriſt to that of Nicodemus, and now there remains to examine the meaning of the ſpeech it ſelf

It is not much material, as to ſenſe of the thing it ſelf, whether to read it, Except a man be born again, or Except a man be born from above; either of the expreſſions will very very well carry the sense our Saviour intendeth in it; but to take it in the latter translation, from above, doth more properly and pertinently speak out the thing that is aimed at. It was the great confidence and boasting of the Jews that they were born and descended of the seed of Abraham; and upon this score and priviledge they relied so much, that they accounted that very thing to estate them exceedingly in a happy condition, as to the favour of God, and welfare of their spiritual estate. It were endless to shew out of Jewish Authors, how great matters they speak of, accrewing to them בוכות אברהם by the priviledge of their descent and extraction from Abraham: Insomuch that even upon that account, they doubt not to reckon כל ישראל יש להם חלק לעה"ב That all Israel is to have share in the world to come. Sanhedr. ubi sup. See *Matth.*3.9. John 8.39. Act. 13. 26. Now that fond reliance, doth Christ oppose and confute in this speech, and useth the very same method and matter of discourse with this Pharisee, that John the Baptist doth with those that came to him, Matth. 3.9. to take him off from leaning on that broken staff; and that whereas now he had spied some glimpse and dawning of the Kingdom of Heaven, in the great and wondrous workings of Christ, he should not think to slip into it, and enjoy the happiness of it without more ado, because he was an Israelite of the seed of Abraham, for that earthly priviledge and pedegree and birth would not serve his turn, but he must be born from above, by a new and supernal birth, or else he could not see the Kingdom of God. And that Christ referreth to this their descent and birth of Abraham, upon which they stood so much, it is to be confirmed not only by comparing this his method of teaching with that of Johns, but also by what is spoken by him in the sixth verse: That which is born of the flesh is flesh.

It is true indeed, that there were other principles in Nicodemus, that had need to be met with a confutation, as much as this, as his reliance upon his own righteousness, and legal performances, and his gross conceptions about the Kingdom of Heaven; but this was the first that lay in the way, and which was first to be removed, and upon which the other were not a little built: and when this hath been spoken to in the beginning of Christs discourse, he falls upon the other in the verses following.

Now whereas this construction of the words of Christ, which makes them to face their reliance upon their birth of Abraham, may seem to render them applicable only to the Jews and no nation else, because they alone stood upon that priviledge; it is easie to see by the rule of comparison, how they reach to every man and woman under Heaven, that desires to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; for if the Jews that had that priviledge and advantage of their birth, yet in this matter were nothing at all priviledged and advantaged by it, but must be born anew and from above; much more must they be concluded under the necessity of a new birth, that have not so much as that prerogative of birth at all, but are of the root of the wild olive.

Vers. 4. How can a man be born being old?

Among that Nation they had this Maxim and Tradition, נוי שנתגייר ועבד שנשתחרר הרי הוא כקטן שנולד That, A Gentile that is Proselyted, and a servant that is set free, behold he is as a child new born; for all the kindred which he had, whilest he was a Heathen and a servant, he now must know no more for his kindred. Maym. in Issure biah per. 14. Compare 2 *Cor.*5.6. Here is a new birth in a kind of a sense, with which it is likely Nicodemus was acquainted, but it is but low, terrene, and carnal about earthly affinity and relations; but to hear of a new birth from above, is a doctrine so new and strange in his ears, that even a child might have made as pertinent a reply upon it as doth this great Teacher of Israel: They were so satisfied with their birth from Abraham, that they never cared to hearken after other; and they were so taken up with earthly rites, that any other doctrine was but a paradox.

Vers. 5. Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit.

We first here meet with the question, whether water and the Spirit in these words, are to be taken distinctly for two several things, or whether they mean but one and the same thing. There be that hold this manner of speech to be but Ἐν διὰ δυοῖν, only one thing meant by two expressions, and that the conjunction [And] is only exegetical, and they give the sense of the clause thus, Except a man be born of water, that is, of the Spirit, which is compared to water: But others, and those not without good reason, and those also not the least among the learned, have made a clear distinction betwixt water and the Spirit, and by water do understand Baptism. Chemnitius pleads this distinction very earnestly and fully, and concludes, Tota Antiquitas semper simplicissime hæc verba Christi de Baptismo intellexit; that all Antiquity hath clearly understood these words of Christ concerning Baptism: I shall only produce two or three of the ancients, where I might produce produce a whole cloud of witneſſes. Chryſoſtome, Hom. 24. in Johan. ſo underſtands it, and he makes this Paraphraſe upon it. Ἔπλασα ἀπὸ γῆς καὶ ὕδατος, &c. I created man (ſaith God, whom he brings in ſo ſpeaking) of water and earth, and the Creature became unprofitable, and the veſſel was mard. I will no more create of water and earth, but of water and the Spirit. Cyrill Alexandrinus expounds the words ſo likewiſe, and alludes the matter thus; As man conſiſts of two parts, ſoul and body; διπλῆς αὐτῷ χρῆς ἀναγέννησιν ἐνδιδόναι θεραπείας; ſo will he need a twofold cure for his regeneration. His ſpirit is ſanctified by the Spirit, and his body by the water ſanctified, or ſet apart. And he follows it with this compariſon. As water in a caldron ſet to the fire receives the force of the fire: ſo the water of Baptiſm by the Spirit is raiſed to a divine and ineffable vertue. Auguſtine conſtrues water here alſo for Baptiſm, and addeth this gloſs; That as the bowels of the Mother do avail for the breeding of a child once, for the natural birth; ſo the bowels of the Church towards the ſpiritual birth, every one to be once baptized; I might be endleſs in alledging names and gloſſes upon this place and matter, all holding Baptiſm to be here meant; and ſome comparing the Water to the Mother, and the Spirit to the Father in the new birth; ſome paralleling betwixt our birth of water, by the power of the Spirit; and the birth of Chriſt of a Virgin, by the vertue of the Holy Ghoſt: And ſome making one alluſion or compariſon upon the matter, and ſome another; and all peremptorily concluding, and that not without very good ground, that Baptiſm muſt needs be here underſtood. For,

1. Chriſt was opening to Nicodemus in this anſwer, what was obſcure to him in his other words; and if he intended but one thing by water and the Spirit, he ſpake in obſcurity ſtill, and did but explain one difficulty with another.

2. In the like expreſſion, He will baptize with the Holy Ghoſt and with fire, Matth. 3. 11. though there be a Ἓν διὰ δυοῖν, confeſſed, and it be conſtrued Baptizabit ſpiritu igneo, yet was the fire there a viſible thing, and why ſhould not the water here be taken for a viſible thing alſo?

3. John Baptiſt obſerved this courſe in his Miniſtery, that he preached Baptiſm firſt, and then baptized, Luke 3. 3. &c. And how can we conceive more properly of the Miniſtery of Chriſt, than in the ſame divine method? It is ſaid afterward in this Chapter that Jeſus baptized, ver. 22. and did he not preach the doctrine of Baptiſm before he baptized? It cannot be doubted that he did; but if he did it not in this expreſſion, ye have not the leaſt mention of it in all the Chapter.

4. It is not improperly held by divers, that the Apoſtle calls Baptiſm The waſhing of regeneration, Tit. 3. 5. upon the warrant and ſtyle of theſe words of our Saviour.

5. It is true indeed, that water in divers places of Scripture is uſed to ſignifie the work and operation of the Spirit, but then under under the notion of cooling, purging, or refreſhing: but to be born of water, is a Phraſe ſo different from any of theſe, that the conſtruction of the word water, as meaning the Spirit, in ſuch places as are applicable to thoſe actions or effects, cannot be ſo proper a conſtruction in reference to this, eſpecially when the Spirit is alſo expreſly mentioned with it.

6. The queſtion in hand betwixt our Saviour and Nicodemus, was about his entrance and introduction into the Kingdom of God, or his coming under the days and benefit of Meſſias his appearing, which he was ſenſible was now come.

And therefore Calvin miſtakes and miſ-ſtates the queſtion in this place, which made him ſo reſolutely to refuſe the general expoſition of water for Baptiſm: Nullo modo adducor, ſaith he, ut Chriſtum de Baptiſmo verba facere credam: hoc enim eſſet intempeſtivum: I can by no means be ſwayed to think that Chriſt ſpeaketh of Baptiſm here: for that would have been unſeaſonable; And why unſeaſonable? Why, he gives this reaſon, Becauſe Chriſt was exhorting to newneſs of life. But that is not the prime and proper queſtion, or theme in hand. The matter in hand was about Nicodemus tranſlation into the days of the Meſſias (of which the Nation had ſo high thoughts) that is, as he thought, into a changed ſtate of happineſs; and as it was indeed, into a changed principling and profeſſion: to come under new grounds of Religion, and under a new manner of profeſſion different from what he was under before: Our Saviour tells him, He muſt not think to ſlip into the participation of this Kingdom, without any more ado than this, now the days of the Meſſias are come, I ſhall have my ſhare of the happineſs of them, and they will even drop into my mouth; but he muſt be newly molded, out of his reliance upon his birth prerogative, out of his legal righteouſneſs, out of his carnal performances, and ceremonious ſervices; and by a new birth, as it were, muſt be introduced into this new world and condition: Now even thoſe that deny that Baptiſm is ſpoken of here, yet cannot deny, that Baptiſm was the way which Chriſt had appointed for introduction into this new profeſſion; and if the introduction thereunto was the queſtion that was in agitation, as indeed it was, they can as little deny that Baptiſm is meant and ſpoken of here.

If Nicodemus were an Overſeer of the waters of which there was a touch before, then Chriſt ſpeaketh to him from his own element, when he ſpeaketh of being born of water: and and if Christ did any miracles at Bethesday waters at this Passover, as he did at the next, this speech of new birth by water, might have some allusion to the effect of those waters, where he that first went in after the Angels moving, was born as it were into a new healthy condition.

Now Christ addeth the mention of the Spirit, to water or Baptism, to difference Baptism from Pharisaical washings, and legal purifications; for those were carnal rites, the efficacy of which they placed in opere operato; but Baptism is of a more spiritual import, and the vertue of it did not consist so much in the outward washing, as in the inward efficacy of the Spirit, as 1 Pet. 3.21.

The Phrase the Kingdom of God, did primo intuitu, in the first, most common and most commonly known signification among the Jews, mean and betoken the state and œconomy of the times under the Messias, in opposition to the state and œconomy in the times that were before, as hath been shewed: and in this sense did Nicodemus look upon and for the Kingdom of God, and accordingly in that sense, first doth Christ apply his speech unto him: But yet withal, our Saviour and the Gospel-acceptation, hath raised the expression to a higher and more spiritual signification, than the Jews did take it in, and that is to betoken the state of Grace and Sanctification, in any person under this Oeconomy of the times of Messias or the Gospel: And as the word The Church doth not only express the whole Church Visible though it do most commonly express that, but also includes withal and speaks the Church invisible or those that are sanctified, which most properly are the Church indeed: so The Kingdom of Heaven, doth not only intend the visible Kingdom of the Messias in the altered state of the œconomy in his days and under the Gospel, though that be the first and most large and common sense of it: but also it denoteth the invisible Kingdom of Christ in the heart of his Saints, where he reigns by his Grace, which is most singularly and especially his Kingdom. Our Saviour therefore in these words, would drive the signification of the term, the Kingdom of God, to the head, and so he doth also the doctrine of Baptism: And as he speaketh of that Kingdom to the utmost extent, namely both the external dispensation, and the internal operation of Gods way of Salvation under the Messias, so likewise doth he, of the twofold birth from above, which refers to them both, namely an Ecclesiastical or new way of admission, as a birth from above, into that changed œconomy and administration, and that is by Baptism: and a spiritual and new way of introduction as a birth from above, into that blessed state of Grace and Sanctification, and that is by an effectual work of the Spirit. He would first inform Nicodemus of the outward way of admission into the Kingdom of Heaven, as that signified the changed state of administrations under the Gospel, and that saith he, is by being born of water: But then he would shew, both that there was more to be looked after in the Kingdom of Heaven, than only an outward change of dispensations, and more to be looked after in Baptism than only the external washing, and therefore he addeth and of the Spirit: He that will enter into the Kingdom of God, that is, into the state of the Gospel, he must be born of water, but he that will enter into the Kingdom of God, that is, into the state of Grace, must be born of the Spirit. Baptism is Gods Ordinance for the former purpose, and it is necessary for that end ratione præcepti, and we must obey God in it: The Spirit is Gods operation for the latter purpose, and it is necessary ratione medii, and we must attend on him in his way for it.

Vers. 6. That which is born of the flesh is flesh.

Christ in the former words had declared the manner of the New birth, and here he speaks of its dignity: comparing it with the birth-priviledge of descent from Abraham. For though, as to outward honour and prerogative, that had something, and that not a little in it, yet that birth was but according to the flesh, and what conduced it towards entring into the Kingdom of Heaven which was spiritual? But he that is born of the Spirit, is spiritual, &c. And thus he is still winding up Nicodemus higher from his gross and carnal apprehensions concerning the Kingdom of God, and days of Messias.

Vers. 8. The wind bloweth where it listeth, &c.

For the clearing of our Saviours argumentation here which is somewhat obscure, we are to observe these things. 1. That by this comparison, he goeth about both to confirm the truth of the doctrine of the New birth which he had delivered, and also something to clear the manner of its being or coming to pass.

2. The comparison seemeth not made between the wind and the new birth, but between the wind and one anew born, for observe the application, So is (not the birth of the Spirit, but) every one that is born of the Spirit: yet is the application to that work it self not to be excluded. The comparison therefore runneth thus. As the wind blowing at its own liberty: thou heareſt the sound of it, and so art sensible of the stirring of such a thing, but knoweſt not how it blows or what becomes of it: even so is every every one that is born of the Spirit: the Spirit worketh this product of the new birth in whom and when it pleaſeth: and he upon whom the thing is wrought, findeth by the change and effects in himſelf, that ſuch a thing is done, but he cannot tell how it is come to paſs and actuated, and to what progreſs and efficiency it will grow. And ſo doth Chriſt explain to the ſenſual and groſs underſtanding of Nicodemus, the truth of the things that he had ſpoken in as plain notions as they could be uttered. Firſt, He aſſerteth the truth and reality of the New birth, a thing to be as well perceived by the fruits and conſequences of it, as the wind by the ſound. 2. That the Spirit doth work this by as free an agency and unlimited activity, as the wind doth blow at its own liberty without confinement or reſtraining. 3. That this work is inſcrutable and paſt the ſadoming of humane reaſon, as is the way of the wind where it begins and where it terminates.

Talmud Torah, or the teaching of the Law in Iſrael was in ſo high eſteem amongſt them, and that moſt deſervedly, had they gone the right way to work, that they prized nothing at a higher value, nay nothing of an equal dignity with it: They eſteemed it the moſt precious of all the three Crowns that the Lord had beſtowed upon Iſrael, The Crown of the Kingdom, the Crown of the Law, and the Crown of the Prieſthood, They weighed it againſt any one of the Commandments, nay againſt all the Commandments and it out weighed them all. For they had this received poſition: אין לך מצוה בכל המצוות כולן שהיא שקולה כנגד תלמוד תורה אלא תלמוד תורה כנגד כל מצוות כולן Amongſt all the Commandments there is not one Commandment that is parallel to the learning and teaching of the Law, but that is equal to all the Commandments put together. Maym. in Talm. torah per. 3.

Now there were four ſorts of Teachers and teaching of the Law among them. 1. In every City and Town, there was a School where Children were taught to read the Law: and if there were any Town where there was not ſuch a School, the men of the place ſtood excommunicate till ſuch a one was erected. 2. There were the publick Preachers and Teachers of the Law in their Synagogues, *Act.*15.21. moſt commonly the fixed and ſetled Miniſters and Angeli Eccleſiæ, and ſometime learned men that came in occaſionally, as *Act.*13.14. 3. There were thoſe that had their Midraſhoth, or kept Divinity Schools, in which they expounded the Law to their Scholars or Diſciples: of which there is exceeding frequent mention among the Jewiſh writers, eſpecially of the Schools of Hillel and Shammai: Such a Divinity profeſſor was Gamaliel, Act. 22.3. 4. And laſtly, The whole Sanhedrin in its Seſſions, was as the great School of the Nation as well as the great Judicatory: For it ſet the ſenſe of the Law, eſpecially in matters practical, and expounded Moſes, with ſuch authority, that their gloſs and determination, was an ipſe dixit, a poſitive expoſition and rule that might not be queſtioned or gainſaid.

Of this company of the great Doctors and Teachers of the Sanhedrin, Nicodemus was one, and it may very well be conceived that he kept a Divinity School, as other of the great Doctors did, and ſo he was doubly a Teacher of Iſrael, and yet knew not theſe firſt principles of Religion. But whether he kept a Divinity School or no, as he was a member of the Sanhedrin, he was in place of the higheſt Teachers of the Nation, and this retortion that our Saviour puts upon him, is parallel to that that the Apoſtle uſeth, *Rom.*2. 21. Thou that teacheſt others, teacheſt thou not thy ſelf?

The Divinity of the Jews which they taught and heard in their Schools, was as far out of the rode of ſuch doctrine as Chriſt teacheth here, as it is from England to Jeruſalem: For though ſome of them ſtuck not to ſay that the Law might be expounded 72 ways, yet in all their Expoſitions the Doctrine of Regeneration and the work of Grace was little thought on or looked after. To omit their manner of expounding, by, Raſhe & ſophe tebhoth, Gematria, Notericon, Athbaſh, Kabbalah and ſuch wild kind of commenting as was ordinary among them: the beſt Divinity that was to be had with them, was but to inſtruct them in carnal rites, and to heighten their Spirits to Legal performances. They would ſpeak and teach indeed concerning repentance and mortification and ſuch kind of Doctrines, but all was, to promote their own Legal righteouſneſs in ſuch things and actions the more: Their Divinity that they taught and learned was generally to this tenour. To build upon their birth priviledge from Abraham, *Mat.*3.9. To reſt in the Law, Rom. 2.17. To rely upon their own works, Mark 19.20. Luke 18.11. *Gal.*4.21. & 5.4. To care for no other faith but hiſtorical, *Jam.*2.19. To patter over prayers as efficacious ex opere operato, Maym. In Tephilkah. To account the day of expiation, afflictions and their very death to be expiatory. Idem in Teſhubah. To expect Meſſias, and undoubted happineſs pineſs when he came, &c. How was it imaginable that ever the Doctrine of the New birth ſhould be dreamed of among them, who looked for ſalvation upon ſuch principles and terms as theſe? And therefore it is a ſcruple and quære not impertinently nor undeſervedly moved by ſome here, why Chriſt ſhould make ſuch a matter of Nicodemus his ignorance, in this point, ſince ſuch ignorance was epidemical to the whole Nation, and none of their great Doctors ever dreamed of ſuch Doctrines. They could tell you of traditions about carnal rites, of curious and quaint explanations of the Law, and ſwimming notions and Cabaliſms to fill the brain, and they would exhort to a ſtrict ceremonious life to make up a ſelf righteouſneſs, but the great things of Faith, Renovation, ſpiritualizedneſs, and ſuch kind of Divinity as this, was a mear ſtranger in their Schools, not once heard of or looked after. Our Saviour therefore in preſſing Nicodemus ſo hard about this his ignorance, 1. Would ſhew him the folly and fillineſs of that way of Divinity which was read among them, and which he undertook to teach, which was but as Mint, Anniſe and Cummin to the great things of the Law, droſs, traſh and nothing in compariſon of the ſound and ſaving doctrines of Salvation. 2. He would reprove him, as juſtly he might, for daring to be a teacher and leader of others, in things which concerned their ſouls, and eternal ſtate, and yet himſelf knew not the chief, choiceſt and firſt doctrines that concerned the one or the other.

3. Theſe very doctrines that Chriſt is ſpeaking of to him, are ſo copiouſly and fully taught in the Old Teſtament, that a Student and expounder of the Old Teſtament, ſuch as Nicodemus took himſelf to be, might deſervedly be blamed, and did fall under a moſt juſt reproof, when he proved ſo ignorant of them, and unſeen in them as he ſhewed he was. How Regeneration is taught in Ezek. 11. 19. and Pſal. 51. and other like Texts: and how a new birth by Baptiſm and the Spirit is taught in Ezek. 36. 25, 26. he and the reſt of his Nation might have learned, but they had eyes and ſaw not, &c. It was not the deficiency of the Doctrines, but it was the blindneſs of the Doctors, that was the cauſe that they were ſo ignorant of them.

4. If Nicodemus did queſtion only de modo, when he ſaith, How can theſe things be? Then that anſwer hath ſomething in it, which ſome do give to this objection, which is, that he being a Doctor, might have collected the poſſibility of this matter, (for all it ſeemed ſo wonderful) from the powerful works and miracles that he read of in the Law: But it appeareth by the words of Chriſt in the next verſe, Ye receive not our teſtimony, that he queſtioned, de ipſa re, or of the truth of the thing it ſelf.

Verſ. 11. We ſpeak that we do know, &c.

Here is firſt an oppoſition plainly ſet, between the ignorance of the Jewiſh Doctors, and their blindfold teaching they knew not what, (twitted and reproved in the verſe before, Art thou a teacher and knoweſt not theſe things, and ſpoken of 1 Tim. 1. 7.) and between the Doctrine and glorious teaching of Chriſt and the other, then Miniſters of the Goſpel, who taught nothing but what they knew and underſtood. And there is alſo a ſecret inſinuation of that oppoſite or contrary carriage, which indeed being regarded either nakedly and ſingly, or as it lay in oppoſition (one kind of carriage to another) was exceeding ſtrange and wonderful; and that was that the Doctors of the Jews, that taught for Divinity they knew not what, ſhould be believed, ſo much as they were, and that the preaching of Chriſt and his Diſciples, which taught nothing but what they knew and had ſeen, ſhould be believed ſo little. Where as this ſpeech is uttered by Chriſt, in the plural number, We ſpeak what we know, &c. it hath bred ſome debate among expoſitors how to underſtand and determine, whom he joyneth with himſelf in this word We: Some conceive, that he meaneth himſelf, and the Prophets: others that he meaneth himſelf and John the Baptiſt: others that he intendeth himſelf only, though he ſpeak plurally as of more: and ſome think that he meaneth himſelf, with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt. For the fixing of a ſetled and proper acceptation of the words, (though indeed any of theſe ways, they make a fair and harmleſs conſtruction) it is to be obſerved that there is a we and a ye, ſtand in oppoſition in the verſe, we teach, ye believe not, and they may help one to explain another: When Chriſt ſaith ye believe not, or ye receive not our teſtimony, it doth not ſo naturally argue, that there was company that came with Nicodemus, and that Chriſt ſpeaketh to them, (as Caietan conceiveth) as it doth properly lye to be conſtrued, that Chriſt meaneth the whole fry of the Phariſees, and of the other Jews that were carried away with their vain and fond opinions and traditions in matter of Religion, as oppoſite and contrarying the Doctrine of the Goſpel: And as Except ye be born again, verſ. 7. is but the ſame in ſenſe with Except one be born again, verſ. 3. ſo are the we and the ye, in this verſe to be rendred in ſuch another kind of conſtruction; and they mean but thus, The Goſpel is preached among you, and the Doctrine of it, is of things certainly known, and throughly underſtood, but the people among you are ſo carried carried away with your Divinity, which is, you know not what, that this Doctrine becauſe ſo different from yours is not believed, and the teſtimony of it is not entertained: And ſo the we and the ye do not ſo punctually aim at any particular perſons of this contrary acting, as they do at the very acting of theſe contrary things themſelves.

But if the we muſt be confined to any peculiar perſon or perſons, I ſhould underſtand it, of Chriſt himſelf, ſpeaking of himſelf in the plural number, (as he doth the like Mark 4. 30. when he ſpeaketh of his preaching of the Goſpel, becauſe all that ſhould preach it, ſhould but preach his words) and ſo this we is but I and whoſoever ſhall preach theſe things: and particularly the called Diſciples that were now preſent with him, may be joyned with him in this word, and that not only becauſe they were to be the eminent preachers of the Goſpel hereafter, but even becauſe as it may be ſuppoſed they had begun in ſome ſort to do ſo now: for though their deputation for that function were more viſible and punctual afterward, yet can I not conceive them to be altogether dumb and ſilent now in that matter, eſpecially ſince the very next ſtory tells us that Chriſt ſet them to baptize, verſ. 22. compared with Chap.4.2. They had now been with Chriſt near upon half a year, ſeen his miracles, heard his Doctrine and never been from him, and therefore it is not imaginable but that they had learned exceeding much concerning Chriſt and the Goſpel, and it cannot be conceived but they would be uttering and publiſhing thoſe things. And ſo the whole verſe may be underſtood in much facility to this ſenſe. I and theſe my Diſciples that do, and whoſoever ſhall preach theſe things of the Kingdom of God, ſpeak things known, and tried (not as your Doctors do that teach, you know not what) and yet thou and the reſt of thy judgment and opinion will not intertain and believe our Doctrine.

Chriſt and his Diſciples, had known̄ and ſeen (he al-knowing, and they in experience,) the reality and truth of the New birth, and divers other myſteries of the Kingdom of God, but how is his taxation of the others unbelief proper upon this ground; when they were as ignorant or knew as little that he and they had known and ſeen theſe things, as they were ignorant of the things themſelves?

Anſw. 1. He ſpeaks this in that ſtyle of oppoſition that was mentioned before: Ye are believed though ye teach ye know not what, and yet will not ye believe us that know and have ſeen what we teach.

2. He ſeemeth to allude to that that was taken for a competent witneſs, before any of the Judicatories, (for he is ſpeaking to one that was a Judge in the higheſt Court) and that was this, that the witneſs ſaw and knew the fact, Lev. 5.1. And is a witneſs, whether he hath ſeen or known of it: if he ſpake upon certain knowledge or ſight, his witneſs was intertained, but we ſpeak what we know and teſtifie what we have ſeen, but ye receive not our witneſs.

3. Nicodemus had confeſſed Chriſts miracles to be moſt admirable and divine, and therefore Chriſt might very well conclude that he would alſo give weight unto his words, and acknowledge the truth of this that he ſpake, though he knew not the certainty of it upon his own knowledge and experience.

Verſ.12. If I have told you earthly things and ye believe not, &c.

By earthly things, divers underſtand diverſly: Some conceive Chriſts ſpeech to look ſo far back as to his diſcourſe with the people at Jeruſalem at the Paſsover, about building up of the Temple in three days, and that his words do reſult to this ſenſe, It is no wonder that thou doſt not believe this high myſterious doctrine of Regeneration, when the Jews could not entertain that more facil and plain Doctrine of the Reſurrection of the Meſſias on the third day. Others retaining the ſame opinion that heavenly and earthly things, do ſignifie the difference of more ſublime and more facil doctrines, do expound it thus: If ye believe not theſe plain and firſt rudiments of the Doctrine of the Goſpel, namely about Regeneration, how will you believe thoſe high and ſublime myſteries, about the eternal generation of the Son, the proceſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, &c? But the moſt received conſtruction of theſe words is this, If ye believe not when I ſpeak to you in a plain and low ſtyle, and explain things by earthly compariſons, as *Gal.*3.15. How will you believe if I ſhould teach the great things of ſalvation, in their own abſtract and ſimple notions, lingua Angelorum, as Grotius expreſſeth it: (for דברה תורה בלשון בני אדם שיבינו השומעים as is the common Rabbinick Maxime, The Lord ſpeaketh in the Scripture in ſuch expreſſions as beſt ſuit with the capacity of the hearers that they may underſtand; for the ſimple abſtract Doctrines of Divinity are too hard for dull apprehenſions.) Chriſt is diſcourſing with Nicodemus about the nature of the Kingdom of Heaven or the Goſpel ſtate, He firſt teacheth him about denying of his birth priviledge from Abraham, and about the Doctrine of Baptiſm, by which a man is brought into that viſible Goſpel-ſtate: And now, ſaith Chriſt, If you believe not when I tell you of the earthly things of the Kingdom of Heaven,

Heaven, that is, thoſe things that are moſt viſible and apparent to be underſtood, how will you believe if I ſhould ſpeak of the high things of the Kingdom, the incarnation, righteouſneſs by Faith, peace and joy in the Holy Ghoſt, &c?

To clear the conjuncture of theſe words with the preceding, is of ſome difficulty, and that hath cauſed variety of gueſſes upon it: Some tie them, not to the laſt words of all, but to ſome that lie a great way off, namely to Nicodemus firſt words to our Saviour in verſe 2. Whereby he ſheweth that he took Chriſt only for a Prophet. Now theſe words of this verſe, ſatisfie him (ſay they) againſt that bare opinion when Chriſt telleth him, that he is not as the Prophets were, who indeed were ſent of God, but never were off the earth but lived continually upon it, but he himſelf came down from Heaven, &c. Others that do tie them to the very laſt words preceding, do give them in this ſenſe and juncture: How will you believe if I ſpeak unto you heavenly things? And yet if I ſhould ſpeak ſuch things I deſerve to be believed, becauſe I came down from Heaven: and though none ever preached ſuch things before me, nor though I can produce no witneſſes with me of what I ſpeak, yet am I to be believed, becauſe though no man had been in Heaven, yet I have been there, for I came thence, &c. Others conceive that they fall in with the laſt words thus, that whereas in the former verſe, he had ſpoken of uttering heavenly things, he comes on now and doth ſpeak of ſome ſuch things, as namely of his two natures in this verſe, and of Salvation by his paſſion and Faith in him, in the next: Other conjectures at this matter might be alleadged which are ſeverally made, but they ſhall be ſpared, and we will fall upon the words themſelves, and hearken after their meaning and connexion with the former by the obſervation of theſe three things.

1. That in all the words of Chriſt following, to the end of his ſpeech, viz. to verſ. 22. his main aim is apparently this, namely to ſhew that he is ſet up as the object of Faith, or he who is to be believed, and to be believed in, and by believing in whom everlaſting life is to be obtained, as this ſcope is moſt plain in verſe 14, 15, 16. 18.

2. That by the phraſe, No man hath aſcended, his meaning is, No man can aſcend into Heaven, as No man hath ſeen God at any time, Joh. 1. 18. meaneth No man hath ſeen him, or can ſee him; 1 Tim. 6. 16. Who hath known the mind of the Lord, Rom. 11. 34. meaneth his ways are unſearchable, and his Judgments paſt finding out, ver. 33. and who can know them, &c.

3. That, Aſcending into Heaven is intended to the ſame purpoſe and ſenſe with that in Deut. 30. 12. that is, who ſhall aſcend into Heaven to fetch the knowledge of the Word from thence, or the Doctrine of the Goſpel, the Word of Faith, Rom. 10. 6, 7, 8.

And ſo upon the obſervation of theſe three things thus laid down, the connexion of this verſe that we have in hand with the former, and the ſenſe of it in its ſelf doth eaſily and evidently ariſe to this ſenſe. Ye believe not when I ſpeak to you but the familiar and viſible things of the Kingdom of Heaven, and how then will you believe if I ſhould ſpeak of the higheſt and moſt heavenly myſteries of it? And yet from me alone are thoſe things to be learned and known, for none can go up to Heaven to fetch the knowledge of them from thence, but I came down from Heaven to reveal the will of God, and to declare the Doctrine and Myſteries of Salvation: and therefore if you believe not what I ſpeak unto you, you will never attain to the knowledge of the things of the Kingdom of Heaven. And thus doth Chriſt tax Nicodemus and the Jews for a double unbelief: 1. As in reference to him the Teacher, whom they believed not, though he alone was he, who could and who was come, to teach and reveal the great myſteries of the Goſpel: 2. As in reference to the things now taught, which they believed not though they were the moſt viſible and facil things of the Kingdom of Heaven: And withal he holdeth out unto them a double inſtruction, 1. That they ſhould believe him about theſe heavenly things becauſe he came down from Heaven: And 2. That if they would not believe him in theſe things, they muſt never expect to know them, for none could go up to Heaven to fetch them thence: The very ſame thing in ſenſe with that in Chap. 1. 18.

5. But he that came down from Heaven.

Here doth Chriſt ſpeak one of thoſe ἀπροσδόκητα ſpoken of in the verſe preceding, a moſt heavenly point of the doctrine of the Kingdom of Heaven, and that is, about his own incarnation: and he doth clearly ſhew the diſtinction of his two natures in one perſon: his humane nature intimated in the title The Son of man: the Divine Nature, in that he ſaith he came down from Heaven: and the union of theſe two, when he ſaith that the Son of man is in Heaven.

Now

Now Christ is said to come down from Heaven, as *Joh.*6.51. first, to intimate his Divine Nature, and to shew that he was more than a meer man: and so the Apostle interprets and applies the phrase, 1 *Cor.*15.47. The first man is of the earth earthly, The second man is the Lord from Heaven: And so likewise, when it is said of Christ that he was the Manna that came down from Heaven, *Joh.*6.58. it sheweth and meaneth that he was a bread of a more high and eminent nature than the Manna that the Israelites eat in the wilderness, and yet that was rained from Heaven too, *Neh.*9.15. but Heaven here and in that place admitteth of a differing construction: Secondly, It is the usual speech of Scripture, when it is relating the appearing of any of the persons in the Trinity in a visible evidence, to say that God came down, *Exod.*3.8. *Exod.*19.18. the Holy Ghost came down, Luke 3. 22. &c. And so may it be used of Christ in humane flesh; when the Son of God appeared so visibly amongst men, as that he conversed with them in their own nature, it may very significantly be said of him that he came down from Heaven: Not that the Godhead can change places, which filleth all things, nor that Christ brought his humane nature locally out of Heaven, as hath been erred by some, nor yet only becaus he was conceived by the Holy Ghost, as it is construed by others, but becaus he being the invisible God did appear visibly and in humane nature among the Sons of men.

§. The Son of man which is in Heaven.

Here is the truth and reality asserted both of his manhood and of his Godhead, his manhood, in that he is called The Son of man: His Godhead in that he is said to be in Heaven: And this doth not only confute those Heresies that have maintained, that either Christ had not a real humane body, or that he had not a real humane soul, or that he consisted not of two distinct natures, or that he was two distinct persons, but this doth also set a plain and large difference between the appearing of Angels in humane shapes, and the appearing of Christ in humane flesh: They were indeed in the shape of men, but they were not the Sons of men, but Christ was: they when they were apparent upon earth in such shapes were not then in Heaven, but he was.

Now how the Son of man may be said to be in Heaven, whilest he was now speaking to Nicodemus on Earth, may be resolved with a double answer. 1. Becaus his conversation all the while he was upon the earth was intirely in Heaven: For so is the conversation of the Saints of God on Earth said to be, Phil. 3.20. Et quanto magis Christi qui semper inspexerit Patris intima? And how much more, saith Grotius, was the conversation of Christ there, who always beheld the very bosom of the Father? As Joh. 1.18. And so doth Cajetan understand it, that Christs humane soul did enjoy the beatifical vision of God continually, and therefore he may well be said to be in Heaven even whilest he was on Earth.

But secondly this may properly be understood per communicationem idiomatum as Divines express it, that is in such a sense as the Scripture intends, when it applies the several properties of the two distinct natures in Christ, indifferently to the whole person: For the understanding of which and for the construing of this and divers other places of this nature, these things may be taken into consideration.

1. That as in the blessed Trinity there is distinction of persons, but not distinction of natures, so on the contrary, in our blessed Saviour there is distinction of natures, but not distinction of persons: His Divine Nature one thing, his Humane another, but the person but one; as in the constitution and being of our selves, the soul is one thing and the body another, and yet they constitute and make up but one man.

2. That these two distinct natures in our Saviour had their distinct and several properties which were not communicable from the one to the other essentially, as the manhood did not rise to infinity like the Godhead, nor to those properties that are essential to infinity: nor the Godhead descend to infirmity like the manhood, nor to those properties that are essential to the infirmity of manhood.

3. That though there were in Christ these really distinct natures, and really distinct properties of these natures, yet in regard of their union in his one person, the Scripture doth not seldom speak of these properties indifferently without restriction of them to the one nature or the other.

4. That when it doth so speak of them, it doth it not in abstracto, as ascribing the properties of the Godhead to the manhood, or of the manhood to the Godhead: but in concreto, and in reference to the whole person, as ascribing the properties of the one nature, not to the other, but to him that carried the other nature and under the title that related to that nature: As it is never said, that the glorious Godhead was crucified, for that is nothing short of blasphemy, and that were to ascribe to the Divine Nature a property or infirmity of the Humane which it is utterly uncapable of, but it is said that the Lord of Glory was crucified: applying the property of the manhood not to the Godhead, but but to the perſon that was God, and under that title that refers to the Godhead, as meaning that he that was the Lord of Glory, was crucified: So it were meer blaſphemous to ſay that the Godhead with its own blood did purchaſe the Church: but it is divinely ſaid, that God with his own blood did purchaſe it, Act. 20. 28. To have and to ſhed its blood was proper only to the manhood, and not to the Godhead, and yet it is aſcribed, not to the Godhead in the abſtract, but perſonally and in concreto, to him that was God. And according to this ſenſe is this place in hand to be underſtood. The Son of man which is in Heaven: He ſaith not the manhood which is in Heaven, for that was not there till Chriſt aſcended bodily, but he meaneth, that he that was man or the Son of man, was alſo in Heaven whileſt he was talking with Nicodemus upon earth.

In the former verſe Chriſt ſheweth that he is to be believed, becauſe none could fetch the heavenly Doctrine of the Kingdom of Heaven from Heaven but himſelf: In this verſe and forward he ſheweth that he is to be believed in, and that not only the believing him was to be the ground of knowledge, but that believing in him is the only way of Salvation: And this Doctrine he illuſtrates by that type of the brazen Serpent in the wilderneſs, where the very looking upon the Serpent lifted up, was healing to any that were ſtung, nay as the Rabbins upon that ſtory will have it, to any that was wounded or hurt by any beaſt whatſoever. The ſtory is in *Numb.*21. and the occurrence was in the laſt year of their travail in the wilderneſs; and the biting of the fiery Serpents was the laſt viſible means that God uſed for the cutting off of the remnant of that Generation upon which he had paſſed a decree and ſworn in his wrath that they ſhould not enter into his reſt: For we have no more related of them till they be paſſed over the river Zared, but only that they removed to Oboth, to Iie Abarim, and ſo over that River, Numb. 21.10,11,12. And by that time, all the Generation of the men of War were conſumed, as the Lord had ſworn, Deut. 2.14. And this miracle wrought in the matter of the Brazen Serpent was the laſt miracle that was done in the hand of Moſes whileſt he lived; And ſo his firſt and laſt miracle was about ſerpents, compare *Exod.*4.3.

That Chriſt when he ſpeaketh here of his lifting up, intendeth his being lift up upon his croſs, is apparent, not only out of Joh. 8. 28. and *Joh.*12.32,33. where the ſame expreſſion is uſed, clearly to that ſenſe, but alſo out of this very compariſon that he doth propoſe, from the Brazen Serpent, for he ſaith as that was lift up, ſo muſt he be lift up: now that was lift up על הנס, which R. Sol. interprets על הכלונס upon a pole, or upon a poſt, and ſo is Chriſts lifting up here to be underſtood, upon his Croſs.

It is the general obſervation of the Jews upon that ſtory שעשו מעשה נחש שהציאו לשון רע that they were plagued by Serpents, becauſe they had done the actions of the old Serpent in uſing an evil tongue, againſt God, and Moſes, and Manna: R. Tanch. and Baal Turim, &c. Let the Serpent come (ſaith God) who was curſed for an evil tongue, and be avenged on them for their evil Tongue, R. Solomon. How ever there was ſuch a parallel betwixt their preſent ſin, and the old ſin of the Serpent, certainly there is a moſt ſweet Harmony and parallel between the manner of their cure, and the fruit of Chriſt crucified. The Brazen Serpent was lifted up, ſo was Chriſt: that was the likeneſs of a curſed creature, ſo Chriſt in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh was made a curſe for us, that by Faith in him we might be cured of the wounds given us of the ſpiritual Serpent, as theſe by looking upon that were healed of the venemous bitings of thoſe corporal ones: what a Doctrine of Faith was in that ſtory and occurrence? The Talmud in Roſh haſhanah applies it thus. What? Could that Serpent kill or recover? But at what time Iſrael looked upward and humbled their hearts before their Father which is in Heaven, they were healed, but if not, they were brought low: Per. 3.

Verſ. 15. That whoſoever believeth in him, &c.

This is a new and ſtrange doctrine to Nicodemus, to hear of obtaining everlaſting life by believing in another, whereas he had been taught all his life, to expect it by the works of the Law and by performances of his own: But for this, Chriſt giveth him ſo plain a demonſtration and argument from that ſtory and effect of looking upon the Brazen Serpent, that he cannot find wherewithal to gainſay it: And ſo is the other part of Chriſts Doctrine ſomewhat new to Nicodemus alſo, to hear tell of whoſoever believing ſhould obtain Salvation, and that God did ſo love the world that he gives his only Son, &c. For he had dreamed with the reſt of the Nation, of Salvation only belonging to the Jews, and of the Meſſias only coming to the Jews: and as for the reſt of the world that it was utterly unregarded and neglected of God, and the people of the Nations but dogs and ſwine.

Verſ. 16. For God ſo loved the World.

Some Expoſitors are of a mind that theſe are the words of the Evangeliſt and not a continuation of the Speech of our Saviour; which is not much material, whether they be apprehended for the words of the one or of the other: but they appear rather to be a continuation of our Saviours ſpeech, their connexion with the words before it ſo cloſe, and their ſenſe ſo near, and making up the ſenſe of the former. The verſe calls for a hearty meditation upon it, rather than for a verbal explication of it: for as there is no difficulty in the words, but their ſenſe is eaſily underſtood, ſo is there abundance of ſweetneſs in their ſenſe, which doth deſerve and may require our ſerious and feeling thoughts and meditations: If any one will find a knot in a bulruſh, and thinks he hath found a ground for the opinion of univerſal Redemption, out of this Word, the World, which our Saviour uſeth all along; let this ſame Evangeliſt give him an anſwer out of 1 *Joh.*2.2. where he plainly ſhews that the World is not to be underſtood de omnibus & ſingulis of all and every ſingular perſon in the World, but of all Nations, and that the Gentiles come within the Compaſs of Chriſts reconciliation for ſin, as well as the Jews: And our Saviour uſeth the word here the rather, that by the full ſenſe of it he might meet with the various miſpriſions and miſconceptions of Nicodemus and the reſt of the Nation, about theſe matters that were in diſcourſe: They conceived that the Lord only loved that Nation and none elſe, that the Meſſias ſhould only come for the good of that Nation and none elſe, nay that he ſhould deſtroy other Nations for the advancement of that Nation alone; but Chriſt informeth him here, that God loved the World, the Gentiles as well as the Jews, that he gave his only begotten Son to the World, to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews, and that God ſent not his Son Meſſias into the world to deſtroy and condemn it, but that it might be ſaved, the Gentiles as well as the Jewiſh Nation.

Verſ. 18. He that believeth not is condemned already.

Not that every one that heareth the Goſpel, and at preſent believeth not, is irrevocably damned, (for he that believeth not now, may yet believe hereafter and be ſaved) but 1. He that believeth not in Chriſt is yet in the State of Damnation, for out of Chriſt, out of Salvation. And 2. he is already judged (for ſo the Greek word is) as deſerving damnation, and one that ſhall fall into it if he continue in his unbelief, not only by God, but even by the thing it ſelf: for he that will not believe in the only begotten Son of God, and that will chooſe darkneſs rather than light, ex reipſa he is already judged, convicted and condemned, as not only out of the way of Salvation, but as deſerving to be damned, and ſo ſhall be, if he thus continue: Theſe are the two emphatical things in this ſpeech of our Saviour that aggravate the unbelief and that juſtifie the condemnation of the Unbeliever. 1. Becauſe he believes not in the Son of God: And 2. Becauſe light came into the world, and men choſe darkneſs rather than light: If we apply the ſpeech to the times in which Chriſt appeared, here was the condemnation of the unbelieving Jews, that they would take upon them to believe Moſes and the Prophets, and yet they would not believe him that ſent them: nay they would believe their own fooliſh Doctors and traditions, and any one that came among them in his own name, and yet they would not believe in the name of the Son of God: They walked in a double darkneſs, as namely not only in a want of the guidance of the ſpirit of Prophecy and of faithful Teachers, but alſo in the leading of moſt blind guides, and of moſt dark Doctors, and yet when Light it ſelf came among them, they loved and imbraced this darkneſs, and refuſed the Light. And much in the like kind may the matter be applied to unbelievers of what time ſo ever.

Verſ. 21. But he that doth truth, &c.

As there is an oppoſition here of light and darkneſs, that is of the truth and error, of a true doctrine and falſe, (for ſo it is apparent enough that the terms are to be underſtood) ſo is there an oppoſition of doing evil, and doing the truth: and the one may the better be underſtood by the other, φαῦλα πράσσειν which is the phraſe uſed here, and Ἁμαρτίαν ποιεῖν which phraſe is uſed by this ſame Evangeliſt 1 *Joh.*3.8. doth not nakedly ſignifie to ſin, for the Saints of God do ſin, *Jam.*3.2. 1 Kings 8.46. and cannot do otherwiſe, Rom. 7.15.17,18. and yet John ſaith, that whoſoever is born of God, ἁμαρτίαν οὐ ποιεῖ, 1 *Joh.*3.9. but theſe phraſes to do evil and commit ſin, do ſignifie a ſetting of a mans ſelf to do evil, Dare operam peccato, as Beza tranſlates it: ſo on the contrary To do truth is dare operam veritati, as he alſo renders it here, when a mans bent and deſire is to do uprightly: when gracious deſires of doing truth and uprightneſs lie in the bottom, though the ſcum of many failings ſwim aloft in heart: when to will is preſent, as *Rom.*7.18. and when the mind is to serve the Law of God, as Rom. 7. 25. whosoever is so composed declineth not the light, but delighteth to come to it, and to the touchstone of the truth that his works may be made manifest.

§. That they are wrought in God.

That is, either by the power of God, for so the particle ἐν may import, which very commonly signifieth By, as might be exemplified numerously, or In God, is as much as to say, as in the way or fear of God: as to marry in the Lord, 1 *Cor.*7.39. is to marry in his way or according to his will: and to die in the Lord, *Rev.*14.13. is to die in his fear, or in his acceptance.

And thus hath Christ opened to Nicodemus the great Doctrines of the New birth Baptism, free Grace, Faith, obedience, and the love of the Truth: and made him a Disciple, as appears *Joh.*19.39. and yet he keeps his place and rank in the Sanhedrin, and there doth what good offices he can, *Joh.*7.50.

Vers. 22. After these things came Jesus and his Disciples into the Country of Judea, &c.

It is not determinable, in what part of Judea, Christ fixed, and made his abode, nor indeed is it, whether he fixed in any one place, or removed up and down here and there in the country; It appeareth by the story in the following chapter, that when he had occasion to set for Galilee, he was then in such a part of Judea, as that his next way thither, was to go through or close by the City of Samaria: and so it seemeth that he was in that part of Judea that lay Northward of Jerusalem: Gibeon lay much upon that point of the compass, and the waters there might be a very fit conveniency for his baptizing, see 2 Sam. 2. 13.

§. And there he tarried and Baptized.

Yet Jesus himself baptized not, but his Disciples, Chap.4.2. It is ordinary both in Scripture phrase and in other languages, to ascribe that as done by a man himself, that is done by another at his appointment, as Act. 7. 21. Pharaohs daughter is said to nurse Moses, 2 King. 6. & 7. Solomon is said to build the Temple and his own house, 1 *Sam.*26.11,12. 14. David took the Spear and cruse: meaning Abishai by Davids appointment: 2 King. 22.16. The Book which the King of Judah hath read, that is, which they have read before him, as 2 *Chron.*34.24. explains it, &c.

Jesus himself baptizeth not, 1. Because he was not sent so much to Baptize as to preach, as Paul also saith of himself, 1 Cor. 1.17. 2. Because it might have been taken as a thing something improper, for Christ to have baptized in his own name. 3. The baptizing that was most proper for Christ to use, was not with water, but with the Holy Ghost, *Act.*1.5. 4. Because he would prevent all quarrellings and disputes among men about their Baptism, which might have risen if some had been baptized by Christ, and others only by his Disciples.

It is no doubt but these Disciples of Christ that baptized others, were baptized themselves: Now who baptized them? Not Christ; for he Baptized none; but they were baptized by John the Baptist, for it is apparent that some of them were baptized by him, Joh. 1. 35.37.40. and that teacheth us also to judge so of the rest. And by this very thing it is evident, that the Baptism of John and the Baptism of the Apostles was but one and the same whatsoever the Schoolmen have said to the contrary, unless the Disciples baptized others with a better Baptism than they themselves were baptized with.

Observe that the administration of the Ordinances of Christ by his Ministers, according to his institution, is as his own work: The Disciples baptizing is called his baptizing.

Vers. 23. And John also was Baptizing.

His Sun is now ere long to set, and the Evangelist here giveth you account of his last actions and Ministery whilest he was abroad and at his liberty. If his imprisonment were but a little before Christs departure into Galilee, mentioned in the next chapter, as it is like it was, he had been a publick preacher and baptizing near upon twenty months.

1. I cannot hold that this Salim was a City near Sichem, as the moſt general opinion doth from *Gen.*33.18. where the LXX and divers others, render as our Engliſh doth. And Jacob came to Salem a City of Sichem: For, 1. It is Salem there, and not Salim. 2. It may be as well, and is generally by the Jews rendred, Jacob come ſafe to the City Sichem: for till then he had no miſcarriage in his family, as he had afterward. 3. The Scripture in all the Chorography of Ephraim, never nameth any ſuch place as Salim. 4. The ground that Jacob bought, *Gen.*33.19. was before Sichem, and not before a Salem, *Joh.*4. v.5,6.&c. 5. If Salem and Ænon were near Sichem, they were in Samaria: and what had John to do among the Samaritans? See *Matth.*10.5. & 15.24.

2. Salim and Ænon appear to be on this ſide Jordan weſtward, from v.26. They came to John and ſaid to him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bareſt witneſs, behold he baptizeth, &c. Now 1. Bethabara beyond Jordan was the only place that the Evangeliſt had mentioned before, of Johns Baptizing, and he ſpeaketh according to his own ſtory: and ſo in Chap.10.40. he calleth it the place where John firſt baptized: ſpeaking ſtill according to his own ſtory, for that was the firſt place that he had named. And 2. at Bethabara had John pointed out Chriſt and born witneſs to him, ſo that Diſciples there began firſt to follow him: therefore it appeareth by their ſpeech that came to John, ver.26. that Bethabara and Ænon were on the two ſeveral ſides of Jordan, Bethabara beyond, and Ænon on this ſide.

3. I ſhould as ſoon look for Ænon and Salim in Galilee, as in any other place that I have found mentioned by thoſe that expounded this place: For, 1. Since Chriſt was firſt to appear in Galilee, why ſhould not his forerunner appear there alſo before him? How much more proper is it to hold, that as John baptized in Judea, and there Chriſt was baptized of him, and in Peræa, or beyond Jordan, and there Chriſt was pointed out by him, ſo that alſo he baptized in Galilee, and there Chriſt ſucceeded him; then of all places to let him miſs Galilee, where Chriſt did firſt ſhew himſelf? How could Herod (whoſe reſidence and place was in Galilee) and John come into ſo great converſe and acquaintance, as the Goſpel giveth evidence they did, Mark 6. 20. if John reſided not in Galilee as well as Herod? 3. The Septuagint mention a Salim in Galilee in the Tribe of Iſſachar, *Joſh.*19.22. differing indeed from the Hebrew Text, but naming the place (as may be ſuppoſed,) as it was called in their time, as the Chaldee Paraphr. alſo uſe to do: Shaalim, in 1 *Sam.*9.4. in ſome Editions of the Septuagint is written Saalim, which whether it may not be the ſame with their Salim in *Joſh.*19.22. and whether the Evangeliſt here refer not to that word and place. I leave it to be diſcuſſed by others: and whether Ænon in the Septuagint, in *Joſh.*15.61. can be to our purpoſe here.

4. There is one ſtumbling block lies in the way of this mine opinion (which holds Ænon and Salim to be in Galilee) and that is, in that Joſephus ſaith, ὁ μὲν ἰωάνης τῇ Ἡρώδε δόξαντι εἰς τὸν Μαχαιρῶντα πεμφθείς. John Baptiſt upon Herods ſuſpition was ſent Priſoner to Macherus, Antiq. 18. *lib.*7. Now Macherus Caſtle was in Peræa, or beyond Jordan on the North-eaſt part of that Country, and confining upon Arabia, (which was a great diſtance from Galilee,) as the ſame Author averreth, *De Bel. lib.*3. *cap.*4. to which ſcruple ſatisfaction may be given alſo from the ſame Author: For it appeareth by him, that the pretence of Herods impriſoning John, was, fear of innovation in regard of the peoples high eſteem of him, though the true cauſe indeed was about Herodias: That Macherus was a frontier garriſon between the territory of Herod, (for he had land there, though ſo far from Galilee, but upon what title, here is not a place to inſiſt to ſhew) and of his Father in Law Aretas King of Arabia, whoſe daughter he put away when he took Herodias, upon which occaſion there was long and ſad war betwixt Aretas and him: therefore that he might ſecure John far enough from the people amongſt whom he had ſo high repute, and ſure enough from reſcue, and tumult about him, he got him into that ſtrong hold ſo remote: and whether he lay not there with his Army, when John was beheaded, it will be a more ſeaſonable place to examine at the ſtory of his beheading, when the Lord ſhall bring us thither.

5. I ſhould rather take Ænon for the name of ſome large and ſpacious compaſs of ground, full of freſh ſprings and waters, than for any one particular Town, River or City. As Sharon was a large champaign from שרר to let looſe, becauſe of the cattel turned out there: and Lebanon was a large hilly Country from לבן To be white, becauſe of the ſnows that lay upon it: ſo ſeemeth Ænon to mean a fountainous place, or ſome compaſs of ground full of ſprings from עין a fountain. And ſo the words there were many waters there, may be conſtrued as giving the Etymology of the word Ænon; John was baptizing in Ænon, a place ſo called becauſe there were many waters there. (There is mention of Abel Majim, or The plain of waters, a part of Galilee, 2 *Chron.*16.4.) And ſuch another another manner of ſpeech is that in 2 Chron. 20. 26. They aſſembled in the valley of Berachah, for there they bleſſed the Lord: i.e. the valley ſo called becauſe they bleſſed the Lord there.

Now becauſe this Text, is commonly alledged for the proof of dipping in Baptiſm, and the words Becauſe there was much water, expounded as giving the reaſon, rather of his baptizing there, than giving the Etymology of the word, as that John could not baptize, but where there was much water, for the dipping of the many people that came unto him; It may not be amiſs a little to look upon the words with reference to ſuch a conſtruction, and to examine, firſt, what was the manner of baptizing among the Jews, before John Baptiſt came. And, ſecondly, how far the Baptiſt did imitate them in their manner.

Concerning the firſt: We obſerved upon the firſt Chapter of this Goſpel of John at ver. 25. that the rite of baptizing was in uſe amongſt the Jews, and for that very end, that it is amongſt us, namely for admiſſion of perſons into the Church, many years before the Goſpel began to be preached, or John Baptiſt appeared, and this was ſhewed from the Jews one writings and teſtimonies, though they be enemies to our baptiſm: And now it may not be impertinent, from the ſame Authors, to give ſome account of the manner of the adminiſtration of that rite amongſt them, or in what manner they uſed to baptize.

Towards that, we muſt firſt take up that traditional maxime, mentioned by Maymony, in Iſſure Biah, per. 13. במקוה הכשר טבילת נדה שם מטנילים את הגרים: In ſuch a gathering of waters, as is fit for the waſhing of a woman from her ſeparation, there they baptize Proſelytes. Now the waters fit for ſuch a waſhing they deſcribe thus: A man that had an iſſue, was not purified but in a Fountain, but a woman that had an iſſue, and all other unclean perſons, or things were waſhed in a gathering of waters. For this was the Law, that in any waters that are gathered together, thy waſh in, as it is ſaid, A gathering of waters, even in any place: Now it muſt be ſo, that there be therein ſo much water, as amounts to the waſhing of the whole body of a man at one dipping. The wiſe men have meaſured this preportion to be a cubit ſquare, three cubits deep. And this meaſure contained forty ſeahs of water. Id. in Mikvaoth per. 1. & 4. & Talm. in Mikvaoth per. 2. & 3. &c.

As for the manner of their waſhing it was thus. כל טובל צריך שיטבול כל גופו כשהוא ערום בבת אחת Every one that was waſhed or baptized muſt dip his whole body as he was naked, at one time. And whereſoever in the Law, waſhing of the fleſh or waſhing of garments is ſpoken of, it is no other than waſhing of the whole body: For if a man ſhall waſh himſelf all over, the tip of his little finger only excepted, he is yet in his uncleanneſs: And if he be a man of much hair, he muſt dip all the hair of his head, for that is as his body. And though they were in their cloaths, yet their waſhing was good, becauſe the water went through them and they hindred it not, Maym. ubi ſupr.

Now when there came a Proſelyte or a Proſelyteſs to be admitted into the Jews Church and Religion, they enquired of them whether they entred not into that Religion, for riches, or preferment, or fear. And of a man they inquired, whether he had not ſet his eyes upon ſome maid of Iſrael, and of a woman, whether ſhe had not ſet her eyes upon ſome young man of Iſrael: And if no ſuch matter were found out, then they acquainted them with the weight of the yoke of the Law, and the labour of performing it. If they ſaw that they came out of love to the Law, they receive them as it is ſaid, When ſhe ſaw that ſhe was ſtedfaſtly minded to go with her, then ſhe left ſpeaking unto her, Ruth 1.18.

When they receive a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, and have enquired of him, and find none of the cauſes mentioned, they ſay unto him, What ſaweſt thou that cauſed thee to become a Proſelyte? Knoweſt thou not that Iſrael is at this time poor and oppreſſed, and many calamities are upon them? If he ſay I know it: I am one unworthy; They receive him out of hand, and acquaint him with the fundamentals of the Law, namely the Unity of the Godhead, and the prohibition of Idolatry, and they are large in diſcourſe upon this matter. Then they rehearſe to him ſome of the leſs and ſome of the greater commandments in the Law, but they are not large upon that. Then they do acquaint him with the fault of a mans gathering what he had left, Deut. 24.19. and the corner of the field, Lev.23.22. and about the ſecond tithing.

Alſo they acquaint him with the penalties of the Law, ſaying thus to him: Know that before thou comeſt into this Law, if thou eateſt fat, thou waſt not puniſhed with cutting off, and if thou didſt prophane the Sabbath, thou waſt not puniſhed with ſtoning: but now after thou art proſelyted, if thou eateſt fat, thou muſt be puniſhed with cutting off, and if thou prophaneſt the Sabbath, thou muſt be ſtoned. And they add no more, for they are not too punctual with him, leſt it cauſe him to ſtart and decline from the good way to the bad: For at the firſt, they draw not a man but with gentle words, as it is ſaid, With the cords of a man will I draw them. Therefore as they acquaint him with the penalties of the commandment, ſo they acquaint him with the reward thereof, and ſhew him that by keeping of theſe commandments he ſhall obtain the life of the world to come: and that there is no perfect righteous man, but he that knoweth theſe commandments and doth them. Moreover Moreover they say unto him, Know thou that the world to come, is not reserved but for the righteous, that is, for Israel: And therefore though thou see Israel in affliction in this world, yet there is good laid up for them: for they cannot receive much in this world among the Nations, lest their heart should be lifted up, and so they err and spoil their reward in the world to come, as it is said, Jesurun waxed fat and kicked. Nor doth the blessed God bring upon them much vengeance lest they should perish: for all Nations shall fail, but they shall remain. And upon this matter they discourse largely to make him to love the Commandments. If he turn back and will not imbrace them, he goes his way: but if he imbrace them they delay him not but circumcise him out right. And if he were circumcised before, (as Ishmaelites and Midianites and other children of Abraham were) they fetch from him a drop of the blood of the Covenant, and they stayed for him till he was perfectly whole, and then they baptized him. And the Triumviri (or the three) stand by him, and tell him of some of the great and small Commandments a second time over, as he standeth in the water. And if it be a woman, women set her in the water up to the neck, and the Judges (the Triumviri) stand at distance, and tell her of some of the small and great Commandments, while she standeth in the water, and there she dippeth herself forward: Then they turn their faces and go away lest they should see her as she cometh forth of the water. So the *Babylon Talmud in Jebamoth per.*4. & Maym. in Issure Biah, per. 14.

Thus was the use and manner of baptizing among the Jews, before the Gospel, with which if we come to compare the Baptism of John, we shall find them agreeing in these particulars.

1. The Jews baptized only those that turned to them from Heathenism and became proselytes: they baptized not Jews who were born and brought up in the Jewish Religion, but only those who were and had been always strangers from it, and were now come unto it: And herein the Baptism of John and of the Apostles in the New Testament did agree with them: for those that they baptized, were such as had been born and brought up either in Judaism or Heathenism, and they did induct them by Baptism into a new Religion. For though Judaism was not so vastly different from the tenor of the Gospel as Heathenism was, yet was it so far different, both in regard of the Ceremoniousness as also of the Legal righteousness and traditions that the Nation stood upon, that the Gospel and it were two several Religions and Professions.

2. Those of age that the Jews baptized were taught and instructed before their Baptism, in the grounds of their Religion, and in the concernment and import of the thing that they went about: And herein did John the Baptist and the Apostles agree with their custom: for they first taught, and then baptized, as dealing with persons of years and understanding, and which had been brought up in another Religion: But the Jews also baptized children and infants, that were not capable of instruction, namely a Proselites little children as well as himself; and what reason can be shewed why John and the Apostles did not the like? Especially when it is expresly said, that such and such were baptized and their whole house: I am sure the Hebrews would construe little children to be in the number; and why we should not do so too, there is no reason nor ground that can be given.

3. Baptism was not administred among the Jews, by any whomsoever, but only by men of some authority, and in orders, and appointed thereunto: A Beth din or Consistory or triumvirate, was orderly and properly to administer it, and not every one that would take it upon him: So also was the administration of this Ordinance in the New Testament, by ministerial men, and men appointed and impowered for such a work. For Mechanicks, and private men to baptize, wanteth the warrant and example, both of Scripture and Antiquity.

4. The Baptism of the Jews was, by dipping, as is apparent by the Records alledged: and herein, how far the manner of baptizing in the New Testament went along with them, may be some question. There are some passages that seem to carry a colour of conformity of the one to the other: as *Matth.*3.6. *They were baptized of John in Jordan, Matth.*3.16. Jesus came straight out of the water: Act. 8. 38. The Eunuch went down into the water: And the words in hand, John baptized in Ænon, because there was much water: But there are some passages and circumstances again that seem to leave it at more indifferency, then such conformity in its strictness, and that argue that this manner of baptizing in its preciseness was not to be imposed upon the Church for all succession. As 1. If Paul were baptized within the house, as the story seemeth plainly to carry it, Act. 9. 17, 18. or if any other in the New Testament were either baptized in houses or Synagogues, as see Act. 10. 47, 48. they could not be baptized after this manner of the Jews baptism, for they had an expres Maxime against dipping in any vessel: Unless it were the Priests bathing themselves in the brazen Sea. But was not that a vessel? (say the Gemarists in the Jerusalem Talmud) Yes, but R. Joshua the son of Levi saith, A pipe of water ran into it out of the well Etam: and so it was as a spring of water, because fresh water was running into it it continually. In Joma per. 3. Aruch in מכנה Maym. in hiath Mikdaſh. 2. Dipping among the Jews was a National cuſtom, and if baptizing were uſed in the ſame manner among them by the Apoſtles and Diſciples, it was becauſe among the Jews they became Jews, as Paul ſaith of himſelf, that they might gain the Jews: But bathing for purification was a meer ſtranger among the Gentiles, and uſed by none but by the Idolatrous Prieſts, and it is very queſtionable whether the Apoſtle in Baptiſm would put the Gentiles upon it, eſpecially ſince baptiſm was not for the purifying of the fleſh, 1 Pet. 3.21. as the Jews held their dippings and purifyings to be. 3. Though men of age among the Jews were baptized by dipping, as their Records do evidence, yet it is hard to find that infants among them were ſo dipped, and yet they ſpeak it out plainly that infants were baptized. 4. Were it our undertaking to diſpute this point, but our task is of another nature) it might be ſhewed how ſome things were in common and honourable uſe among the Jews, and ſo were continued and uſed by the converts to the Goſpel in Judea, which yet afterward, and in other places were laid aſide, or changed. And it were eaſie to ſhew, that ſprinkling or pouring of water upon a perſon is called Baptiſm as well as dipping, and that the change of ſuch a circumſtance is no change or violation of the Original inſtitution.

Verſ. 25. Then there aroſe a Queſtion.

1. The ſubjectum quæſtionis was περὶ καθαρισμοῦ, concerning purification: a word of the ſame latitude with the word טהרה in the Hebrew Authors, namely comprehending all kinds of Religious waſhings and purifyings that were amongſt them. Now there were four ſorts of purifyings gotten a foot, and in uſe at this time in the Nation. 1. The purifyings, waſhings, and ſprinklings, appointed by Moſes. 2. The Phariſaical waſhings brought in upon tradition. 3. The Baptiſm of John. 4. The Baptiſm of Chriſt: for theſe two though they were not different in themſelves, yet were looked upon as different, by the people.

2. About the diſputants upon the queſtion, the language of the Text is ſomewhat curt and hard, It ſaith there was a Queſtion, ἐκ τῶν μαθητῶν Ἰωάννου μετὰ Ἰουδαίων of or by the Diſciples of John with the Jews, and it ſeems to intimate a ſubdivided controverſie: For ἐκ doth argue a doubt amongſt Johns Diſciples themſelves (and ſo the vulgar, French, and Italian carry it) as if they were the men that began the diſpute: and the word μετὰ doth ſet them both in an oppoſition, and conjunction with the Jews in this queſtioning.

3. Their divided controverſie was partly about the preheminence of the Judaical waſhings and the Evangelical Baptiſm, and here the Jews and they were at oppoſition; and partly about the preheminence of Johns Baptiſm and Chriſts, and here the Jews would hiſs them on in the conteſtation.

4. This queſtioning aroſe upon the occaſions, related immediately before; Chriſt began to baptize, and John alſo was ſtill baptizing, Therefore there aroſe a Queſtion. Johns Diſciples ſtarted at it, that another Baptizer ſhould appear, beſides their Maſter, and he more followed than their Maſter was, as verſ. 26. And the Jews would flie upon them with indignation, as cauſers and abettors of innovation; You ſee what you have done to forſake the ſtated and ancient Waſhings and Rites of Moſes, and the traditions: for there is now another riſen up that ſets up a new Baptiſm, and ſo will there be novellizing ſtill in infinitum.

John gives an anſwer to his Diſciples, that took it ill that Chriſt was ſo followed (and as they thought, to their Maſters prejudice) to ſatifie them, both on the one hand and on the other. Is he ſo much followed? Why, it is given him from Heaven. Do I decreaſe? Why, a man can receive nothing unleſs it be given him from thence.

Verſ. 29. He that hath the bride is the Bridegroom, &c.

The Baptiſt in this borrowed ſpeech, 1. Aſſerteth Chriſt, to be that Lord of Hoſts, who was the husband of the Church, Eſa. 54.5. Jer. 3.14. Hoſ. 2.19,20. And 2. that he himſelf in his miniſtery was but an attendant upon the Bridegroom and Bride as the Bridegrooms friend.

The words φίλος τοῦ Νυμφίου, do tranſlate the Hebrew word שושבין Shoſhebin, which is a word exceeding common in their uſe and Authors. In a general ſenſe, it ſignifies any ſpecial or ſingular friend whatſoever: and ſo, whereas it is ſaid in 2 Sam. 13.3. that Amnon had a friend, the Chaldee hath rendred it לאמנון שושבינא Amnon had a Shoſhebin, but more peculiarly and properly it ſignifies the ſpecial friend and attendant of a Bridegroom at at the time of his marriage נוהגים אנחנו לקרא לריעי החתן שושבינין we uſe (ſaith Elias Levita) to call the friends of a Bridegroom Shoſhebenin, ſo whereas it is ſaid in *Judg.*14.20. Samſons wife was given to his companion, whom he had uſed as his friend, the Chaldee expreſſeth it דהוה שושבניה To his companion who had been his Shoſhebin: that is, his Paranymphus or his ſpecial friend and attendant at his marriage.

With the Bride, and Bridegroom at a marriage, there were alſo בני חופה & שושבנין the friends of the Bridegroom, or Paranymphi, and the children of the Bride-chamber or wedding gueſts, as *Matth.*9 15. And ſo they are mentioned all together in that tradition: חתן וכלה שושבנין ובני חופה פטורים מן הסוכה A Bridegroom, and the Bride, the Paranymphi, and the children of the Bridechamber, are freed from keeping the Feaſt of Tabernacles. Maym. in Succah per.6.

Theſe שושבנין Shoſhebinin were commonly two, one of the kindred of the Bridegroom, and one of the kindred of the Bride: מעמידין שני שושבנין אחד משל בית חתן ואחד משל בית כלה *Toſaph. ad cetuboth, per.*1. They appointed two Paranymphi one of the Bridegrooms kindred, and the other of the Brides: Theſe two are now reſembled amongſt us by thoſe that we call the Bridegrooms men.

Now by this expreſſion and compariſon, John ſheweth how far he was from that jealouſie and indignation, that his Diſciples had, and which they would have kindled in him, at Jeſus his honor, and the reſort that was made of all ſorts unto him: No, ſaith John, I envy not his honour and growth: but as a near and true friend of a Bridegroom envieth not, but rejoyceth at the Bridegrooms happineſs and honour, and that all obſerve and ſerve him at his Marriage, and is well pleaſed to hear his voice and pleaſantneſs, even ſo is it my rejoycing to hear of the honour, growth, ſplendor, and advancement of Chriſt, For he is the Bridegroom, &c.

Verſ. 30. He muſt increaſe, but I muſt decreaſe.

It is eaſie to ſee the meaning of the Baptiſt in theſe words, that he intendeth them concerning his miniſtery and glory compared with the miniſtery and glory of Chriſt: that his ſhould be as the Stars, and Moon are, when the Sun appeareth, ſwallowed up and eclipſed by that light: The latter part of the verſe, if it be alſo taken, as a prediction of John, of his own impriſonment and death, we ſhall ſee it made good and accompliſhed in that next Section. But that expoſition that applies this, to the days increaſing from Chriſtmas when Chriſt was born, and decreaſing from Midſummer when John Baptiſt was born, ſeems to have looked more on an Almanack than on the Scripture.

Here is another argument whereby the Baptiſt would convince his Diſciples againſt thoſe thoughts of emulation that they had of John, compared with Chriſt: when they thought not well of it, that Chriſt ſhould Baptize and that ſo many ſhould come to him, which did or would eclips the honour of John: why, ſaith John, he comes from above, and therefore he deſerves to be preferred before me and before all others. The Baptiſt doth herein aſſert the Divinity of Chriſt, and that he was more than he appeared to the eyes of theſe Diſciples that were ſpeaking of him.

§. He that is of the earth is earthly, and ſpeaketh of the earth.

In the Greek it is He that is of the earth, is of the earth: which the vulgar Latine hath rendered ſo verbatim, and ſo the Syriack, but the Arabick, Eraſmus, Beza, the Italian, &c. read it as our Engliſh doth, He that is of the earth is earthly: The French inlargeth it thus, He that proceeds from the earth is of the earth, and ſpeaks as one proceeding from the earth: The intention of the Baptiſt in the words is to character himſelf, and all other men, as he had charactered Chriſt in the words preceding, and doth ſo forward in the words following: He ſpeaketh eſpecially three things of Chriſt, and three things of himſelf and other men. 1. That Chriſt came from Heaven: but he and others are but earthly men. 2. That Chriſt was above all men and all things, (for ſo the Greek word may indifferently be rendred) but himſelf and others were but of earthly, and low eſteem and glory. And 3. that Chriſt ſpake the words of God, the things which he had heard and ſeen, but himſelf and others ſpake of the earth, and could not reach to Divine things: So that the firſt clauſe ὁ ὢν ἐκ τῆς γῆς ἐκ τῆς γῆς ἐστι. He that is of the earth is of the earth, may be underſtood, He that is of an earthly original is of an earthly temper and glory, as verſ.6. He that is born of the fleſh is fleſh: And the latter clauſe, He ſpeaketh of the earth, may be underſtood two ways, and the better underſtood by laying it in oppoſition to Chriſt. 1. Chriſt ſpeaketh the words of God, for he could do no other, the purity of his his nature could not utter a vain, idle or earthly word, but all Divine: But he that is a meer earthly man cannot ſpeak but earthly things altogether, and not heavenly things at all, as 1 Cor. 2. 14. & 2 Cor. 3. 5. And herein it ſeemeth the ſtrength and ſenſe of this Antitheſis betwixt Chriſt and meer mortals lieth, and that this is the proper meaning of the Baptiſt: for as he holds out this clear difference betwixt Chriſt and mortals in regard of their Original, that Chriſt is from Heaven, they from earth; ſo doth he as clear a difference in regard of their conſtitution, that Chriſt could not naturally but ſpeak the words of God, but they cannot naturally ſpeak any ſuch words, but of the earth. And 2. If the men here ſpoken of, be of the Prophetick rank, as John Baptiſt himſelf was, then the Antitheſis lies in this, that what Revelation they have of Divine things, is but obſcure in compariſon of what Chriſt hath, for he witneſſeth what he hath ſeen and heard: and he hath not the Spirit by meaſure, and what they ſpeak of Divine things is but low and ſlender and by earthly expreſſions, in compariſon of the high and ſublime Doctrines that he uttereth. But I take the former interpretation to be the more genuine.

Verſ. 33. Hath ſet to his Seal that God is true.

Chriſt ſpake and teſtified nothing, but what he had ſeen and heard of the Father, as Chap. 1. 18. & 5. 20. (as Moſes law and heard from God what he delivered to Iſrael:) And no man receiveth his teſtimony, that is, very few, (as, All ſeek their own and none the things of Chriſt) when neither the Jews, no nor Johns Diſciples would entertain it: But thoſe few that did or do, they ſeal to the truth of God, for whoſoever believeth the Word of God doth as it were ſubſcribe and ſet to his ſeal that the Word is true, and God true that gave it: And ſo they that received the teſtimony of Chriſt did both ſeal to the truth of his Words, and alſo to the truth of all the promiſes that God had made concerning Chriſt, ſee 1 Joh. 5. 10. and thus is there a mutual ſealing to the covenant of Grace betwixt God and man, God ſealeth the truth of it by the Sacraments and man by believing.

Verſ. 34. For God giveth not the Spirit by meaſure.

Thoſe tranſlations that add the words, To him, as divers do, do readily fix the ſenſe of it upon Chriſt, that God poured the Spirit upon him above meaſure: but that expreſſion To him is not in the Original, and therefore ſome do underſtand it generally of all the Prophets whom the Lord ſent, that they ſpake the words of God every one of them, for God had abundance of Spirit to pour upon them, had they been never ſo many: and he meaſured not out the ſame ſtint of the Spirit to every one of them, but what meaſure ſeemed good to his good pleaſure: And to bring it up to the drift and ſcope of Johns ſpeech in this place, they apply it thus, Think not much of the honour of Chriſt, which troubles you becauſe it ſeems to eclipſe mine: Although I have much of Gods Spirit, why may not he have more? For God giveth not the Spirit by meaſure. But the Baptiſt ſeemeth to aim the ſpeech concerning Chriſt alone.

SECTION XV.

St. LUKE Chap. III. Verſ. 18.

AND many other things in his exhortation preached he unto the people.
19. But Herod the Tetrarch being reproved by him for Herodias his brother Philip's wife, and for all the evils which Herod had done,
20. Added yet this above all, that he ſhut up John in priſon.

Reaſon of the Order.

NOW that John is no more to appear in publick being committed cloſe priſoner by Herod, as this Section relateth, the very looking back to the preceding Section which concludeth with a ſolemn ſpeech of Johns; and the caſting forward that there is not one ſpeech more of his to be found henceforth in all the Evangeliſts, this doth ſufficiently prove and aſſert the proper order and ſubſequence of this Section to the former: eſpecially this being added and obſerved, that all the Evangeliſts do unanimouſly relate that our Saviours journey into Galilee, which is the very next thing that any of them do mention, was not till after John was ſhut up in priſon. John ſpeaks it the leaſt plain, and and yet he ſpeaks it plain enough, as ſhall be obſerved at the next Section. Now if it be ſcrupled or wondred at, why Luke ſhould mention Johns impriſonment before the mention of Chriſts being baptized by him; the conſiderate obſerving of Lukes method will give an anſwer to that doubt, for there the Evangeliſt in one ſtory comprehendeth the whole Miniſtery of John, having no more to ſpeak of it, in all his Goſpel: He relateth what John preached to all that came to be baptized by him, and what particularly to the Phariſees, what to the Publicans, and what to the Souldiers: and divers other things ſaith he (beſides thoſe particulars mentioned) He preached to the people: And he was alſo as plain and round with Herod, as he had been with the reſt of the people, ſo that Herod at laſt ſhut him up in priſon. And ſo he compileth and wrappeth up the ſtory of the tenour and ſucceſs of Johns Miniſtery in general, to all ſorts of people in that brief relation, and then he cometh to the particular relation of his baptizing Chriſt.

And if it be ſcrupled again why I take not in the very ſame ſtory with this of this Section, which is related in Matth. 14.3,4,5. and Mark 6.17,18,19.20. as moſt Harmoniſts of the Evangeliſts do, it is becauſe that relation will fall and come in very pertinently and methodically, as the ſtory of a thing paſt in the place where it lies: and ſeeing that this Section tells the ſtory very full, the bringing of thoſe Texts of Matthew and Mark hither, would inevitably cauſe a chaſma or hiatus in the ſtory there, when we come to it, through the want of them, which would be very improper, or would cauſe a repetition of them there, which would not be very proper.

Harmony and Explanation.

Verſ. 18. And many other things he Preached, &c.

WHoſoever ſhall read the latter part of the former Section, and this verſe together as a continued Narration, he will ſee how fitly and cloſely they joyn together, and he is to take this as an Epiphonema to the whole ſtory of Johns Miniſtery; that beſides thoſe particular ſpeeches of his, mentioned by the Evangeliſts, he preached many other things, and uſed divers exhortations to the people, whileſt he was abroad and at liberty, which he was not very long after that occurrence mentioned in the former Section.

Verſ. 19. But Herod the Tetrarch being reproved for Herodias, &c.

Becauſe we are fallen upon a ſtrange and moſt unlawful match in Herod the greats family, will the reader have the patience, before he come to look on this particular act of Herod the Tetrarch (his marrying his brothers wife) to take a view a little, of old Herods whole family, and divers ſtrange marriages in it, as they may be picked up in ſeveral places in Joſephus, and to acquaint himſelf in brief with the pedegree of that ſtock, which may be ſome light for the underſtanding both of this and of ſome other places in the New Teſtament, which relate to the ſtory of that houſe.

We will begin with Antipater Herods Father, the firſt of the Family that came to honour.

This Antipater being an Edomite, had by his wife Cyprus an Arabian, theſe four ſons, Phaſaelus, Herod, Joſeph, Pheroras, and one daughter named Salome, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 14. cap. 12.

Herod, the ſecond ſon of Antipater, commonly called Herod the Great (the King of the Jews, Luke 1.5. the murderer of the Sanhedrin at Jeruſalem, Joſeph. Antiq. l. 14. *cap.*17. *Juchaſin fol.*19. and murderer of the children at Bethlehem, Matth. 2. and of his own children, as we ſhall ſee anon) had nine wives, and by ſeven of them he had children, Joſeph. de bell. lib. 1. *cap.*18.

1. He married Doris a woman of Jeruſalem before he was King, and by her he had a ſon called Antipater: but this wife he put away, after he came to the Kingdom, that he might marry another, *Ibid. cap.*17. and this his firſt born ſon Antipater, he cauſed to be ſlain, but five days before his own death, *Id. Antiq. lib.*17. *cap.*10.

2. His ſecond wife was Mariam or Mary the beautiful: the daughter of Alexander, the ſon of Ariſtobulus, and of Alexandra the daughter of Hyrcanus, Antiq. 15. cap. 2. by her he had three ſons Alexander and Ariſtobulus, Antiq. 16. cap. 8. and Herod, de bell. 1. 18. which Herod died young at Rome, whither he was ſet forth for his education.

And he had alſo by her two daughters, Salampſio, and Cyprus, Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 7.

His

His wife Mariam he ſlew upon the accuſation of his ſiſter Salome, and ſome diſcontent, Antiq. 15. *cap.*11.

Her two ſons that lived, he married thus; Ariſtobulus to Bernice the daughter of Salome his own ſiſter, by whom he had three ſons, Herod, Agrippa (he that is called Herod, Act. 12.) and Ariſtobulus: and two daughters Herodias and Mariam: this Herodias is ſhe that we have here in hand. Alexander he married to Glaphyra the daughter of Archelaus a forain King, and by her he had two ſons Tigranes and Alexander, De bell. 1. cap. 18.

Theſe two ſons of Mariam, Ariſtobulus and Alexander, their Father cauſed to be ſlain as well as he had ſlain their Mother. Antiq. 16. *cap.*17. But his two daughters he married to their near kinſman Salampſio to Phaſaelus her nephew, and Cyprus to Antipater, her couſen german the ſon of Salome Herods ſiſter, *Antiq. lib.*18. *cap.*7.

3. A third wife he had which was called Malthace a Samaritan, and by her he had two ſons Antipas and Archelaus, and one daughter called Olympias, De Bell. lib. 1. *cap.*18. Archelaus is he of whom there is mention, *Matth.*2. Antipas is that Herod, that we have in hand: Archelaus married Glaphyra his brother Alexanders widow, *Ant. lib.*17. *c.*15. Olympias was married to her Fathers own Nephew, Joſeph. De bell. lib. 1. *cap.*18.

4. His fourth wife Cleopatra of Jeruſalem bare him Herod and Philip. *Ibid. & Antiq.*17. *cap.*1. this Philip was Herodias her husband till Herod his brother took her from him: not this Herod born of the ſame mother, but Antipas the ſon of Malthace, who was alſo called Herod as was ſaid before.

5 He had another wife called Pallas, by whom he had a ſon called Phaſaelus. Ibid. and this Phaſaelus had a ſon of his own name to whom Salampſio was married, mentioned before.

6. A ſixth wife Phædra bare him a daughter called Roxana, Ibid.

7. And a ſeventh called Helpis bare him a daughter named Salome. Ibid.

And two wives beſides theſe he had, which bare him no children, whoſe names Joſephus hath not mentioned, but hath left this mark upon the matches, that the one of thoſe wives was Ἀνεψιὰ and the other Ἀδελφιδῆ both his neeces or his very near kindred. Ibid.

And to look a little further into the ſtock: Salampſio his daughter, had by Phaſaelus his Grandchild three ſons and two daughters, Antipater, Herod, Alexander, Alexandra, and Cyprus. Alexandra married to a Cypriot, but died childleſs. Cyprus was married to Agrippa the ſon of Ariſtobulus the ſon of Mariam, (this was that Herod in Act. 12.) by whom ſhe had two ſons, Agrippa and Druſus, and three daughters, Bernice, Mariam, and Druſilla, *Act.*18. *cap.*7. Such marriages as theſe were in old Herods family, the father of this Herod, that we have in diſcourſe. And now let us look upon the marriage that we have before us, between Herod and Herodias:

1. Herodias was neece both to Philip and Herod, both to her former husband and her latter, for ſhe was daughter to their brother Ariſtobulus, whom their father had ſlain, as was ſaid before. Joſephus muſt here be corrected by the Evangeliſt, for he ſaith, Herodias was the wife of Herod, Herod the Tetrarchs brother, but not by the ſame mother, *Antiq. lib.*18. *cap.*7. There was indeed a Herod which was Philips brother of the ſame mother, Cleopatra, but this Herod the Tetrarch (called alſo Antipas) was the ſon of Malthace

2. He might not have married his brothers wife (though he had been dead) he having had ſeed by her, for ſo is it very generally held that Herodias daughter that daunced off John Baptiſts head was the daughter of Philip. If brethren dwell together (as heirs to one poſſeſſion) *and one of them die and have no child, then her husbands brother ſhall go in unto her, &c. Deut.*25.5. בן או בת או בן הבן או בת חבן או בת הבת But if her husband leave either ſon or daughter, or ſons ſon, or ſons daughter, or daughters daughter, behind him, (as R. Sol. explains it) then might not he marry his brothers wife. Lev. 18.16. Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy brothers wife: it is thy brothers nakedneſs. Lev. 20.21. If a man ſhall take his brothers wife, it is an unclean thing: he hath uncovered his brothers nakedneſs, they ſhall be childleſs. Whereupon Aben Ezra giveth this note, That none of the unlawful marriages mentioned are called נדה or an unclean thing, but only the marrying of a brothers wife: And the Jews do make this one of the thirty ſix offenders that deſerve cutting off, הבא על אשת אחיו He that goeth in to his brothers wife: Kerithuth per. 1.

3. It was ſtill worſe to marry her, as he did, whileſt his brother Philip was alive: for Philip died not till the twentieth year of Tiberius Ceſar, and John was impriſoned in the ſixteenth or thereabout. *Joſeph. Ant. l.*18. *c.*6.

4. And which was yet worſe, he divorced his lawful wife the daughter of Aretas King of Arabia, that he might marry Herodias: and he had baſely violated the laws of Hoſpitality in coming to lodge with his brother Philip, as a friend and gueſt, and tempting and winning his wife from him. Joſephus giveth us the ſtory thus, Ἡρῴδης ὁ τετράρχης γαμεῖ τὴν Ἀρέτα θυγατέρα, &c. Herod the Tetrarch married the daughter of Aretas, and lived a good while while with her: But being ſent for to Rome, he lodged in his brother Herods houſe, (here Joſephus miſtaketh Herod for Philip) And falling in love with Herodias his wife (now ſhe was the daughter of Ariſtobulus their brother and ſiſter of Herod) Agrippa the great (Act. 12. 1.) he dared to make the motion of a marriage, which ſhe imbracing, they agreed that he ſhould take her home to himſelf when he returned from Rome: and it was alſo contained in the Articles of agreement that he ſhould put away the daughter of Aretas: And ſo he did, which cauſed a war betwixt him and Aretas. Idem, ibid. cap. 7.

What other evils Herod committed, we cannot give ſo particular account of, becauſe they are rarely if at all recorded: but by theſe two deſperate facts of his, in his wretched marriage, and in his bloody murther of the Baptiſt, we may well gueſs the temper and converſation of the tyrant: a wretch ſtrong in wickedneſs and ſtrong in power, and yet not ſpared by the Baptiſt, but reproved and told home by him of his villanies, as he deſerved. And here we may fitly parallel this ſecond Elias reproving Herod and Herodias, and ſuffering for it, with the firſt Elias doing the like by Ahab and Jezabel.

Verſ. 20. He ſhut up John in priſon.

As deſperate as he was in wickedneſs, yet the Evangeliſt tells us, that he reverenced John, and heard him gladly, and did many things after his admonition, Mark 6.20. but when John comes ſo home to him about his abominable marriage, then Herodias another Jezabel ſtrikes in and ſtrikes the ſtroke for Johns ſilencing: for ſhe had had a quarrel againſt him, Mark 6.19. ſeeing this his doctrine tended to her divorce: Yet durſt not the cruel couple for ſhame impriſon John upon the plain terms of the proper cauſe of his impriſonment, which was becauſe he ſpake againſt their curſed marriage, but they uſe another colour as Joſephus relateth, namely, becauſe Johns popularity was dangerous towards ſome inſurrection or innovation. He relates the ſtory thus, Herod ſlew John called the Baptiſt, being a good man and one that injoyned the Jews, to follow virtue, and to uſe uprightneſs one towards another, and devotion towards God, and to knit together by Baptiſm, &c. And divers being converted to him, (for they were well pleaſed with the hearing of his words) Herod fearing that this his perſwaſiveneſs with the people, might tend to a revolt, (for they were ready to do any thing upon his counſel) he thought it beſt to lay hold upon him and kill him, before any inſurrection were: rather than repent too late when a change came: And ſo was John upon this ſuſpition of Herod ſent priſoner to Machærus caſtle and there killed, Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 7. where he alſo relateth, that Aretas (the Father of her whom Herod had put away that he might take Herodias) and Herod (upon this and other quarrels) having pitched a ſet field and battel, all Herods army was cut off, πολὺ ὃ ἦν Ἰουδαίων ἐδόκει ὀλωλέναι τὸν Ἡρώδου στρατὸν ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ, καὶ μάλιστα δικαίως τιννυμένου κατὰ τὸν Ἰωάννην τὸν ὀνομαζόμενον Βαπτιστήν. And ſome of the Jews thought that Herods Army was deſtroyed by God, and he moſt juſtly puniſhed for the murder of John the Baptiſt.

And thus hath this bright and burning lamp ſhone abroad, till the Sun of righteouſneſs appeared and began to eclipſe him: The time that he had preached and baptized had been ſome twenty months or thereabouts: from about Eaſter, to about November, twelvemonth after: The time of his impriſonment, was ſome months alſo above a twelvemonth, namely from November or thereabout, very near unto Eaſter twelvemonth after, as will be conſpicuous in the inſuing progreſs of the ſtory.

WHEN therefore [a] the Lord knew how the Phariſees had heard that [b] Jeſus made and baptized more Diſciples than John,

St. JOHN Chap. IV.

5. Then cometh he to a City of Samaria, which is called [e] Sychar, near to the parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his ſon Joſeph.

6. Now Jacobs well was there: Jeſus therefore being wearied with his journy ſate [f] thus on the well. And it was about the ſixth hour.

7. There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water, Jeſus ſaith unto her, Give me to drink.

8. For his Diſciples were gone away into the City to buy meat.

9. Then ſaith the woman of Samaria unto him, How is it that thou being a Jew askeſt drink of me which am a woman of Samaria? (For the Jews have no dealing with the Samaritans.)

10. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, If thou knoweſt the gift of God, and who it is that ſaith unto thee, Give me to drink, thou wouldſt have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water.

11. The woman ſaith unto him, Sir, thou haſt nothing [g] to draw with, and the well is deep, from whence then haſt thou that [h] living water?

12. Art thou greater than our Father Jacob which gave us the well and drank thereof himſelf and his children and his cattel?

13. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, Whoſoever drinketh of this water ſhall thirſt again.

14. But whoſoever drinketh of the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall never thirſt; but the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall be in him a well of water ſpringing up into everlaſting life.

15. The woman ſaith unto him, Sir, give me this water that I thirſt not, neither come hither to draw.

16. Jeſus ſaith unto her, Go call thy husband and come hither.

17. The woman anſwered and ſaid, I have no husband: Jeſus ſaid unto her, Thou haſt well ſaid, I have no husband.

18. For thou haſt had five husbands, and he whom thou now haſt is not thine husband, in that ſaidſt thou truly.

19. The woman ſaith unto him, Sir, I perceive that thou art a Prophet.

20. Our Fathers worſhipped in this mountain, and ye ſay that in Jeruſalem is the place where men ought to worſhip.

21. Jeſus ſaith unto her, woman believe me the hour cometh when ye ſhall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jeruſalem worſhip the Father.

22. Ye worſhip ye know not what: we know what we worſhip: for ſalvation is of the Jews.

23. But the hour cometh and now is, when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in ten Tribes reſidence there: but now there was no City of that name at all: for Sichem was now the chief City of the Samaritans, as Joſeph. Antiq. 11. cap. 8. teſtifieth. Here therefore it is to be underſtood of the Country.

[e] Sychar) It is read in ſome copies and by ſome expoſitors, with y in the firſt ſyllable, as in the Text of Chryſoſtome, Montanus, the Arabick, the Ital. of Brucioli, Chemnitius, Grotius, &c. And by ſome with i, Sichar, as the Vulgar Latin, Beza, Deodates Ital. the Spaniſh, French, Dutch: and ſome Greek copies which theſe followed. Be it read whether way it will, Sychar or Sichar, (as ſuch changes are not ſtrange) the place and City apparently was the ſame with Sichem, ſo famous in the Old Teſtament: And that appeareth plain by this, that it is ſaid, there was the portion of land which Jacob gave to his ſon Joſeph; which plainly was Sichem, Gen. 33. 18, 19. & 48. 22.

[f] Sate thus, that is, in a weary poſture, or after the manner as tired men uſe to ſit down. De Dieu taketh it only for an elegancy in the Greek which might well be omitted: and accordingly the Syriack hath omitted it and not owned it at all: But ſee it Emphatical in other places alſo, 1 *Sam.*9. 13. Samuel is come this day to the City, for the people have a ſacrifice in the high place, and when you are come into the City כן תמצאון you ſhall So find him: that is, newly come to Town and going to a ſacrifice: 1 *King.*2.7. Shew kindneſs to the ſons of Barzilla, &c. for So they came to me: that is, they came kindly to me. Act. 7. 8. he gave him the covenant of circumciſion, and ſo Abraham begat Iſaac, that is, he begat him in circumciſion, &c.

[g] Ἀντλήμα) Camerarius out of Plautus Latins this Situlam, Beza out of Auſtin Hauritorium, דלי in Hebrew. *Eſa.*40.15. Numb. 24.7. כלי ששאבין בו ſaith Kimchi in Michol, A veſſel where withal they drew water: the Septuagint in the former place cited renders it Cadus, and in the latter they tranſlate the metaphorical ſenſe. It ſeems they brought their buckets with them to draw with, as well as their veſſels to carry water in: unleſs they made the ſame veſſel ſerve for both uſes, by letting it down to draw with a cord.

[h] Springing or running water was called by the Hebrew living water, *Gen.*26.19. Iſaacs ſervants digged in the valley and found there a well of living water. The Chaldee renders it מין בבעין ſpringing water for the bubbling of the ſpring is like the lively beating of the heart or pulſe. And hence it was that this woman did ſo readily miſtake our Saviours meaning: He ſpake of the lively waters of grace, that ſpring up in him that hath them, to eternal life: but ſhe ſpirit and in truth: for the Father ſeeketh ſuch to worſhip him.

24. God is a Spirit, and they that worſhip him muſt worſhip him in ſpirit and truth.

25. The woman ſaith unto him, I know that Meſſias cometh [*] which is called Chriſt: when he is come he will tell us all things.

26. Jeſus ſaith unto her, I that ſpeak unto thee am he.

27. And upon this came his Diſciples, and marvailed that he talked with [i] the woman: yet no man ſaid, What ſeekeſt thou? Or why talkeſt thou with her?

28. The woman then left her water pot, and went her way into the City, and ſaith to the men,

29. Come ſee a man which hath told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Chriſt.

30. Then they went out of the City and came unto him.

31. In the mean while his Diſciples prayed him ſaying, Maſter eat.

32. But he ſaid unto them, I have to eat that ye know not of.

33. Therefore ſaid the Diſciples one to another, hath any man brought him ought to eat?

34. Jeſus ſaith unto them, My meat is to do the will of him that ſent me, and to finiſh his work.

35. Say ye not, there are yet four months and then cometh harveſt? Behold, I ſay unto you, lift up your eyes and look on the fields: for they are white already to harveſt.

36. And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto eternal life: that both he that ſoweth and he that reapeth, may rejoyce together.

37. And herein is that ſaying true, One ſoweth, and another reapeth.

38. I ſent you to reap that whereon ye beſtowed no labour: other men laboured, and ye are entred into their labours.

39. And many of the Samaritans of that City believed on him, for the ſaying of the woman which teſtified, He told me all that ever I did.

40. So when the Samaritans were come unto him, they beſought him that he would tarry with them: and he abode there two days.

41. And many more believed becauſe of his own words.

42. And ſaid unto the woman, Now we believe, not becauſe of thy ſaying, for we have heard him our ſelves, and know that this is indeed the Chriſt the Saviour of the world.

interpreted him according to the propriety of the language as if he had ſpoken only of waters out of a ſpring: And ſo had Nicodemus miſinterpreted another expreſſion in the former Chapter מים חיים or living waters were taken in oppoſition to מקוה מים a gathering of waters, as Rambam evidenceth, ſaying thus: כל המימות כשרים לקידוש בין מים חיים בין מי מקוה Any waters (ſaith he) are fit for the purifying (of the Prieſts hands and feet) whether living (ſpringing or running) waters, or waters gathered together, In biath hammikdaſh, per. 5. By waters gathered together he meaneth, ponds or ciſterns gathered of rain water, or any waters that did not ſpring or run: The Latiniſts alſo uſed the like expreſſion to the Hebr. for ſpringing or running water, as in the Poet, Donec me flumine vivo Abluero. Virg. Æneid. 2.

[*] Theſe are the words of the Evangeliſt interpreting the word Meſſias to the reader: and not the words of the woman interpreting it to Chriſt: the Syriack tranſlater hath omitted theſe words, as not neceſſary to a Syrian reader.

[i] Μετὰ γυναικὸς) The various conſtruction of the word, either with the ſtrength of the article or without, hath cauſed various cauſes to be conceived of the Diſciples wondring at his talking with her: Some read it without the force of the Article thus, they marvailed that he talked with a woman, as unfit (ſay ſome) and uncapable of his ſerious and divine diſcourſe, but others aſcribe their wonder to this, that he was thus entred into diſcourſe with a ſtrange woman, alone, and no company near. And they that ſo underſtand it are confirmed by this, becauſe they think, it was no more to be wondred at that he ſhould talk with a Samaritan woman, than it was that they ſhould go into a Samaritan City to buy proviſion: for why might not he as well talk with a woman, as they with the men or women of whom they bought meat, if her being a Samaritan were all the matter? But the caſe was not the ſame: for the Jews might buy meat of them and ſell meat to them with whom they might not otherwiſe enter into familiar converſe and communication אין נשאין ונותנין עם המוחרם ואין מתעסקין עמו אלא מעט עסק כדי פרנסתו For they might not uſe any commerce, nor any converſe with a perſon excommunicate (as the Samaritans were to the Jews) but only ſo much as for the providing of meat. Maym. in Talm. torah. per. 7. And therefore though the article in the Greek be not expreſſed, yet it ſeemeth that in the ſenſe that it is to be underſtood, and that the Diſciples marvailed that he would fall into diſcourſe with a woman that was a Samaritan: which was ſtrange to the woman her ſelf, verſ.9.

SECTION.

43. Now after two days he departed thence and went into Galilee.
44. For Jeſus himſelf teſtified, that a Prophet hath no honour in his own country.
45. Then when he was come into Galilee, the Galileans received him, having ſeen all things that he did at Hieruſalem at the feaſt: for they alſo went unto the feaſt.
46. So Jeſus came again into Cana of Galilee, where he made the water wine. And there was a certain Nobleman; whoſe ſon was ſick at Capernaum.
47. When he heard that Jeſus was come out of Judea into Galilee, he went unto him and beſought him, that he would come down and heal his ſon: for he was at the point of death.
48. Then ſaid Jeſus unto him, Except ye ſee ſigns and wonders ye will not believe.
49. The Nobleman ſaith unto him, Sir come down ere my child die.
50. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Go thy way, thy ſon liveth. And the man believed the word that Jeſus had ſpoken unto him, and he went his way.
51. And as he was now going down, his ſervants met him and told him ſaying, Thy ſon liveth.
52. Then inquired he of them the hour when he began to amend: and they ſaid unto him, Yeſterday at the ſeventh hour the Fever left him.
53. So the Father knew that it was at the ſame hour in which Jeſus ſaid unto him, Thy ſon liveth; and himſelf believed and his whole houſe.
54. This is again the ſecond miracle that Jeſus did, when he was come out of Judea into Galilee.

Reaſon of the Order.

ABOUT the proper time, place, and order of this ſtory of Chriſt and the Samaritan woman, there is ſome difficulty and diverſity of opinion: None queſtioning whether it do naturally follow the ſtory of the third Chapter: but ſome doubting whether this journey of our Saviour into Galilee was after Johns impriſonment, yea or no: but conceiving it rather to have been before, and ſuppoſing that this voyage is not the ſame with that in Matth. 4. 12. Mark 1.14. (where it is ſaid that when Jeſus heard that John was caſt into priſon he departed into Galilee) but it was before that, and before John was committed unto priſon. Ammonius among the Ancients appeareth to be of this opinion, and Grotius among the modern, to mention no more. But Auguſtine, Janſenius, Alapide, Chemnitius, and divers others do rank this ſtory and voiage after Johns ſhutting up, and that immediately after (old Tatianus only hath placed it a good while after,) and ſo have undoubtingly made this journey into Galilee, and that in Mat. 4.12. but one and the ſame. And indeed if the ſtory, and time of it be preciſely weighed, it will not only be clear, that this journey into Galilee is the very ſame mentioned by Matthew and Mark in the places cited, but it will alſo give ſome illuſtration to that ſtory in them, and ſhew the occaſion and proceeding of that his journey.

For, 1. Whereas thoſe two Evangeliſts have laid Chriſts journey into Galilee upon Johns impriſonment the very next thing to the ſtory of his Temptation, John hath told us of a journey thither, betwixt the temptation and Johns commitment, and that Chriſt continued there in Galilee ſome ſpace: Now to imagine another journey thither again, and that a twelvemonth after the former, and this alſo before John be impriſoned, will make that place in Matthew and Mark exceeding hard, if not impoſſible, to be understood. 2. If this voiage in John and that in them be not the ſame, and both after Johns impriſonment, in what time and place will it be poſſible to bring that ſtory in thoſe two Evangeliſts into being? Let it be ſuppoſed, as ſome will have it, that John was yet abroad and not yet impriſoned when Jeſus undertaketh this journey into Galilee: well: this Chapter bringeth him to Galilee and the next, to Jeruſalem again: and then when, and where, and how ſhall we take in Johns impriſonment after? It is true that there are, that have found a place to thruſt it in, but we will not ſpend time in that diſpute, let but the preſent ſection and the ſubſequent till the next Paſover be ſeriouſly obſerved, and I ſuppoſe there will be evidence ſufficient by their very contexture to clear this order.

2. The words of John that relate the occaſion of Chriſts journey into Galilee, compared with the words of Matthew and Mark, ſpeak but the very ſame thing, though the terms and expreſſions do ſomewhat differ. Thoſe two Evangeliſts ſay, the one of them, That when Jeſus heard he was put in priſon, the other, That when Jeſus heard that John was put in priſon, he departed into Galilee: And what can the words of John (when the Lord knew that the Phariſees had heard, &c. he departed into Galilee) mean elſe but the ſame occaſion? For what matter was it, though the Phariſees heard of the multitude of Chriſts Diſciples never ſo much? Why ſurely becauſe he had heard, that

John

John had ſuffered becauſe of the multitude of his Diſciples, and was ſhut up in priſon: and ſo might he himſelf be in danger, if he ſtayed in Judea, to be quarrelled by the Phariſees for the ſame buſineſs. And let it be but conſidered why John and the numerouſneſs of his Diſciples ſhould be mentioned here, but that they are of concernment, and have ſome relation to this ſtory.

So that theſe things being well weighed together, the order and texture of the ſtory appeareth to be natural and genuine as we have laid it.

Only one ſcruple and objection may lie in the way about it, and that is this: why Chriſt ſhould go into Galilee even into Herods mouth, for there he reſided, if Herod had but newly impriſoned John, this was to flee from one danger into another, from an uncertain danger from the Phariſees who had never wronged John, to a certain danger by Herod who had newly impriſoned him: Anſwer, Herods quarrel againſt the Baptiſt was not ſo much in regard of his doctrine, as meerly a perſonal quarrel about Herodias, and as was mentioned before, for fear of innovation. It is ſaid that Herod heard John gladly, and did many things according to his doctrine, Mark 6.20. and therefore there was no danger of preaching the Goſpel never ſo near Herod, if the matter of Herodias be not medled withal, and many Diſciples be not gathered; and what our Saviour ſhould do in thoſe particulars, his Divine Wiſdom needed no inſtructor to inform him: And as for the danger of being ſuſpected of innovation by gathering Diſciples as John was, his diſperſing his Diſciples and his flitting from place to place, would make their number the leſs ſenſible, whereas Johns abode in one place, cauſed all his Diſciples to reſort unto him, and ſo their multitude was the more viſible. When our Saviour ſees his time, he collects his Diſciples and is followed by the multitudes, and let Herod the Fox frown and fret and plot and ſpare not.

Harmony and Explanation.

THE ſubject of the ſtory in the firſt part of this Section, is the firſt converſion of any, that were aliens to the Congregation of Iſrael, by the preaching of Chriſt, unto the Goſpel. And in this ſtory, that of the Prophet Hoſea, ſeemeth to be fulfilled to the very letter, Chap. 2.15. I will give the valley of Achor for a door of hope. For howſoever the maps of Canaan do moſt of them lay the valley of Achor and Sichem at a very great diſtance, yet if it be obſerved in Joſh. 7. & 8. how near to the hills of bleſſing and curſing (whereof Gerizim that lay over Sichem was one) the ſtoning of Achan was, as the current of the Text there doth carry it, and how Joſephus ſpeaketh of the great valley by Samaria, Ant. lib. 20. cap. 5. it will not ſeem improbable that the valley of Achor ran along between Gerizim and Ebal, and by the City of Sichem. And when our Saviour firſt beginneth to preach to ſtrangers and to convert them, it is in this very valley, and ſo he makes it a door of hope of converſion of the Gentiles, whereas it had been a door of deſpair and offence to Iſrael at their firſt entrance into the land.

The Style and tenour of this Section, ſo far as it relates the ſtory of Chriſts being among the Samaritans, is ſo very agreeable to the tenor of the Prophecy of Hoſea, that it ſeemeth to ſpeak to that all along: and our Saviour to an adulterous woman here, openeth many things, that that parabolical husband of an adulterous wife had ſpoken there. Compare but theſe places amongſt others.

Verſ. 4. And he muſt needs go through Samaria.

Ἔθος ἦν τοῖς Γαλιλαίοις (ſath Joſephus) ἐν ταῖς ἑορταῖς εἰς τὴν ἱερὰν πόλιν πορευομένοις διὰ τῆς Σαμαρέων χώρας. It was the cuſtom of the Galileans as they went to Jeruſalem to the Feſtivals, to go through the country of the Samaritans. Antiq. lib.20. cap.5. And he that would go ſoon-eſt thither muſt go that way, and it is three days journey that way from Galilee to Jeruſalem. Idem, in vita ſua. Joſephus helpeth us here how to underſtand the word Samaria in this ſtory in hand, namely for Σαμαρέων χώρας the Country of the Samaritans, and not any City of that name, for there was no City called Samaria at this time: for Sichem was now the chief City of the Samaritans, as the ſame Joſephus witneſſeth, Antiq. lib. 11. cap. 8. This Country of Samaritans lay between Judea and Galilee, and he that would go from the one to the other muſt paſs through that, ſee Luke 9. 51, 52. although there was ſo great a fewd between the Jews and Samaritans, as we ſhall ſee by and by. This way it ſeems grew dangerous at the laſt and near unpaſſable either becauſe of the enmity mentioned, or by reaſon of the many theeves and robbers wherewithal the land of Canaan abounded towards the time of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: and by reaſon of the Roman Souldiers that were ſtragling abroad: For ſo Maimony in Kidduſh hodeſh, witneſſeth where ſpeaking of the meſſengers that uſed to be ſent abroad through the Country, to give notice of the fixing of the new Moons he tells how ſoon they might get to ſuch a diſtance, unleſs there was חורום בדרך war and rapine in the way כדרך שהיה בין יהודה לגליל בימי חכמי משנה as there was in the way between Judæa and Galilee in the days of the wiſe men of the Miſhneh, pereh. 5.

Verſ. 5. A City of Samaria called Sichar near the parcel of ground, &c.

The ſtory, concerning the parcel of ground which Jacob gave to his ſon Joſeph, is in *Gen.*33.19. & 48.22. but there is difference betwixt this name uſed here and that mentioned there, and there is difference in the relation there between one place and another: There the place is called Sichem, here Sychar, there in one place, it is ſaid that Jacob bought it, and in another, that he got it with the ſword and bow. Sichem is a word of much like conſtruction as Netſer is in Eſa. 11. 1. & Matth. 2.23. for as that ſignifieth both the branch Chriſt, and the Town Nazareth where he ſhould ariſe, ſo doth this, both a portion of ground, and the place, or ſituation, where it lay. I have given thee (ſaith Jacob to Joſeph) שכם אחד Shechem echad, above thy brethren, that is one portion, (as the Chaldee Paraphraſt and other Jews render it) and that portion, the place or portion of Sichem, (as the Septuagint tranſlate it,) of that City there is mention in *Gen.*34. and in divers other places of the Scripture: and whether it took that name from Sichem the ſon of Hamor, that raviſhed Dinah, it is not much uſeful or material to look after, certainly it keepeth that name all along the Scripture but only in this place: for that Sychar here is the ſame place with Sichem, the circumſtance added, that it was near the parcel of ground that Jacob gave his ſon Joſeph, makes the matter paſt denial: It is a very general cenſure upon this word both by expoſitors that write upon this Chapter, and others that mention the word occaſionally, that it is written wrong and corruptly, for it ſhould be written and read Sychem: But 1. their very ſo ſaying doth ſhew and argue that it is generally read Sychar in all copies, and are all corrupt? 2. It is hard to imagin, how any Scribe ſhould ſo miſwrite or miſread, as to write χαρ for χεμ ſeeing there is ſo little affinity between the letters in the Greek: And 3. any ſcribe that was a Scripture man, could not eaſily ſo miſtake, ſeeing there is ſo frequent mention of Sichem in the Bible, but of Sichar never. Therefore to me it is paſt all doubting, that the word is written and read in our copies exactly and to a letter, as it was written by the Evangeliſt himſelf: And it may be conceived that he wrote it, as it was ſometimes (and it may be commonly) called among the Jews. The hatred and diſſention between the Jews and Samaritans was exceeding bitter, as ſhall be ſhewed anon, and it is no ſtrange thing if the Jews uſed this as a nickname for the Samaritans chief City, to call it Sychar inſtead of Sichem. The people of the Kingdom of Samaria are called the Drunkards of Ephraim, Eſay 28.1. Wo to the Crown of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim: &c. Now the word Sychar importeth and ſignifieth Drunkenneſs, and it may very well be conceived, that ſeeing the Jews abhorred the Samaritans ſo much as they did, that they framed the name Sychem, into the drunken name Sychar, and in ſcorn called the metropolis of the Samaritans ſo, in the diſdain and ſcorn that they had againſt them. So they called Beelzebub Beelzebul or the God of a dunghil for the greater deteſtation, and ſo the Holy Ghoſt calleth Achan, Achar, 1 Chron. 2.7. to hit him home for his troubling of Iſrael, Joſh. 7. compare the changing of Sychem unto Sychar, with the changing of Achan into Achar, and why may we not apprehend this to be done purpoſely, and without miſtakes of tranſcribers as well as that?

Now, as for the difference between the two Texts of Moſes that ſpake of this portion, of Jacobs ground, the one ſaying that it was bought of the Hivite with mony or lambs, and the other that it was won from the Amorite with his ſword and bow, it is beſt reconciled by taking both places literally and in their proper ſenſe, but to underſtand them of ſeveral times: At Jacobs firſt coming unto Sichem out of Padan Aram, he bought this piece of ground of the Hivite as it is ſtoried *Gen.*33.19. whether for money or for lambs we ſhall not need to diſpute in this place: But after the ſlaughter of the Sichemites, he was long and far diſtant from that place and made no uſe of it, it not being ſafe for him to reſide there, his ſons having cauſed him to ſtink to the Inhabitants of the lands, and God calling him away unto other places: Now what became of his land, and of the City Sichem which had been emptied of its Inhabitants, all this while of Jacobs abſence? Certainly it is more proper and probable to hold, that the Inhabitants of the land would ſome of them uſurpe and ſeize upon thoſe places, and that Jacob was put to recover them again by force of arms, than either to think that Jacob owneth the ſlaughter of Sichem by his ſons, as his own act, or to underſtand, this portion of ground and Jacobs ſword and bow allegorically as many do: Vid. Targ. Onkel. & Jeruſalami, &c.

Verſ. 6. Now Jacobs well was there, &c.

There is mention of this well in Gen. 49. 22. where Jacob foretels that Joſeph ſhould grow exceeding fruitful by this well, or at this place of Sichem. As it came to paſs, Joſh. 24.1. 1 *King.*12.1. &c. Joſeph is a fruitful bough, or a ſon of fruitfulneſs, beſide the well: which words are not only to be taken figuratively, as reſembling Joſeph for fruitfulneſs, to a tree planted beſides a well, which was near moiſture and watering, but they are to be underſtood even properly and literally, for the very place of this well, where Joſeph ſhould be chiefly ſeated, and grow even to the dignity of a Kingdom. It was not only the tradition of the Samaritans, that this well was extant in Jacobs time, and that his family drank of it, but it was a real truth, as is aſſerted by the Evangeliſt, and both affirm it upon the warrant of that Text: Compare this ſtory of Chriſt, with the woman of Samaria at the well of Sichar, with the ſtory of Abrahams ſervant at the well of Haran, Gen. 24. Jacob at the ſame well, *Gen.*29. and Moſes at a well in Midian, Exod. 2.

§. For the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.

This is the ſpeech of the Evangeliſt, not of the woman of Samaria, for it was needleſs for her to tell our Saviour of the diſtance that the Jews and Samaritans kept one from another, which both the Nations knew well enough: but it was neceſſary that the Evangeliſt ſhould relate ſo much to us, both that the womans queſtion, How is it that thou being a Jew askeſt water of me, might be the better underſtood, and alſo that the great work done by our Saviour in the converſion of ſo many Samaritans, might be ſet out the more glorious, by how much the hatred between the two Nations was the greater; This diſſention and fewd betwixt them did proceed from ſeveral cauſes and occaſions.

1. There had been a continual enmity between the Inhabitants of the two Countries Judea and Samaria even while they were both of the ſeed of Iſrael, from the time of the ten Tribes revolt under Jeroboam, to their captivity by Shalmanezer, as is copiouſly ſet out in the book of Kings and Chronicles.

2. When the ten Tribes were captived out of their land, the King of Aſſyria planted Samaria with men of divers Nations and divers Idolatries, 1 King. 17.24. &c. And ſent among them ſome of the Prieſts of the ten Tribes to inſtruct them in Religion, 1 King. 17.28. *Joſ. Ant. lib.*9. *cap.*14. And ſo the Country fell into an hotch-potch of Religion, in ſome things like the Jewiſh, in many things exceeding Heatheniſh. And the people ſometime ſhewed friendſhip to the Jews, ſometimes enmity, ſometimes claiming kinred of them when they ſaw them in proſperity, pretending to have been deſcended from Joſeph but ſometimes again ſcorning and deſpiſing them when they ſaw them brought to any ebb or in calamity. *Joſ. Ant. l.*9. *c.*14. & *lib.*12. *cap.*7.

3. When the Tribes of Judah and Benjamin were brought to the loweſt ebb, and captived out of their own land into Babel, then did theſe Samaritans get elbow-room and inſolency againſt them, againſt their coming to their own land again. Theſe were the main oppoſers and hinderers of the building of the Temple, Ezra 4. called the Adverſaries of Judah and Benjamin, verſ.1. and the people of the land, verſ.4. yet pretending to ſeek God, and to ſacrifice as well as the Jews, *verſ.*2. &c.

Here the fewd and hatred began to be more apparent, and as the Samaritans were thus bitter to the Jews, ſo the Jews to their power were not behind hand with the Samaritans. For (if we may believe their own Authors) Ezra, Zorobabel and Joſhua gathered all the Congregation into the Temple, and brought in three hundred Prieſts, and three hundred books of the the Law, and three hundred Infants, and they blew Trumpets, and the Levites ſung, and curſed, and curſed, excommunicated, and ſeparated the Samaritans by the ſecret Name of God, and by the glorious writing of the Tables, and by the curſe of the upper and lower houſe of Judgment; that no Iſraelite eat of any thing that is a Samaritans: for he that doth, doth as if he eat ſwines fleſh: Nor that any Samaritan be proſelyted to Iſrael, nor have any part in the Reſurrection, as it is ſaid, what have you to do with us to build the houſe of the Lord our God? Nor have you any part or right or memorial in Jeruſalem. And they wrote out and ſent this curſe to all Iſrael in Babel, and they added thereto curſe upon curſe, and the King fixed a curſe everlaſting to them as it is ſaid, And God that hath cauſed his name to dwell there, deſtroy all Kings and people that ſhall put to their hands to alter it. Hæc R. Tanchuma. fol. 17.

4. Hitherto the Samaritans, after the captivity of the ten Tribes, were Heatheniſh and no Jews among them ſave one or a few Prieſts to teach them the Law according to the ten Tribes uſage of it, and as it ſeemeth by Aben Ezra on *Eſth.*1. they had the book of Moſes law among them, but in ſo wild a tranſlation, that the firſt verſe of it was read thus, In the beginning Aſhima created heaven and earth. (What Aſhima meaneth, ſee 2 King. 17.30.) but from the times of Ezra and Nehemiah, exceeding many Jews began to be mingled among them, and became Samaritans: The main occaſion was this: One of the ſons of Jojada the ſon of Eliaſhib the High Prieſt, married the daughter of Sanballat the Horonite a chief man among the Samaritans: for which cauſe he was driven from the Prieſthood by Nehemiah, *Neh.*13.28. Joſephus nameth both the man and the woman, and relateth the full ſtory to this purpoſe. Manaſſes (ſaith he) the brother of Jaddua the High Prieſt had maried Nicaſſo the daughter of Sanballat. Which thing the Elders of the Jews taking exceeding ill, as a violation of their Laws, and as an introduction to ſtrange marriages, they urged that either he ſhould put away his wife, or that he ſhould be put away from the Prieſthood: Yea and Jaddua his brother drave him away from the Altar that he ſhould not Sacrifice. Whereupon Manaſſes addreſſing himſelf to his Father in Law Sanballat, tells him, that it was true indeed that he loved his daughter Nicaſſo moſt dearly, but yet would not loſe his function for her ſake, it being hereditary to him by deſcent, and honourable among his Nation. To this Sanballat replied, that he could deviſe ſuch a courſe, as that he ſhould not only injoy his Prieſthood ſtill, but alſo obtain an High Prieſthood and be made a primate and metropolitane of a whole Country: on condition that he would keep his daughter ſtill and not put her away: For he would build a Temple on mount Gerizim over Sichem, like the Temple at Jeruſalem, and this by the conſent of Darius who was now Monarch of the Perſian Empire. Manaſſes imbraced ſuch hopes and promiſes, and abode with his Father in Law, thinking to obtain an High Prieſthood from the King. And whereas many of the Prieſts and people at Jeruſalem were intricated in the like marriages, they fell away to Manaſſes, and Sanballat, provided them lands, houſes and ſubſiſtence. But Darius the King being overthrown by Alexander the Great, Sanballat revolted to Alexander and did him homage, and ſubmitted both himſelf and his Dominion unto him: and having now gotten an opportunity, he made his Petition to him and obtained it of building this his Temple. And that that helped him in this his requeſt was, that Jaddua the High Prieſt at Jeruſalem had incurred Alexanders diſpleaſure for denying him help and aſſiſtance at the ſiege of Tyrus. Sanballat pleaded that he had a ſon in Law named Manaſſes brother to Jaddua, to whom many of the Jews were very well affected and followed after him, and might he but have liberty to build a Temple on mount Gerizim, it would be a great weakning of Jaddua, for by that means the people would have a fair invitation to revolt from him: Alexander eaſily condeſcended to his requeſt: and ſo he fell on to build his Temple with might and main. When it was finiſhed it cauſed a great Apoſtaſie at Jeruſalem, for very many that were accuſed and indited for eating of forbidden meats, for violating the Sabbath or for other crimes, fled away from Jeruſalem to Sichem and to mount Gerizim, and that became as a common Sanctuary for offenders. To this purpoſe Joſephus: To which it may not be impertinent to add the relation of R. Abrah Zacuth about this matter. When Alexander the Great, ſaith he, went from Jeruſalem, Sanballat the Horonite went forth to him (with ſome Iſraelites and ſome of the ſons of Joſhua the High Prieſt, who had made marriages with the Samaritans, and whom Ezra and Nehemiah had driven from the houſe of the Lord) and he deſired of Alexander that the Prieſts his ſons in law might build a Temple in mount Gerizim: and the King commanded that it ſhould be done, and ſo they built a Temple. Thus was Iſrael divided, half the people after Simeon the Juſt and Antigonus his ſcholar, and their ſociety, following what they had received from the mouth of Ezra and the Prophets. And the other half after Sanballat and his ſons in Law, and they offered burnt offerings and ſacrificed out from the houſe of the Lord, and made ordinances of their own invention: And Manaſſeh the ſon in Law of Sanballat, the ſon of Joſhua the ſon of Jozedek the High Prieſt, was Prieſt in this Temple. And then Sadoc and Baithus alſo became famous, being the Scholars of Antigonus, and this was the beginning of Hereſie: for they went in the time of Antigonus their Maſter to the Temple of mount Gerizim, and became chief men there. And that Temple ſtood about two hundred years. It was built forty years after the building of the ſecond Temple, Juchaſin. fol.14. col.2.

And thus was Temple ſet up againſt Temple, High Prieſt againſt High Prieſt, and Worſhip againſt Worſhip, and now are the two Nations grown into a greater deteſtation one of another than ever they were before. And many of the Jewiſh Nation became Samaritans, enemies to their own Country, kindred and Religion: And it became a common quære and quarrel among them, whether was the truer Religion, and whether the truer Temple, that at Jeruſalem, or that one Gerizim, as the woman queſtioneth in this Chapter, verſ.20. and Joſephus ſaith, the Jews and Samaritans mutined upon this diſpute in Egypt, Antiq. lib. 12. cap. 1. & lib. 13. cap. 6. And this difference and heart-burning of the Nations in regard of Religion brake out often into open hoſtility and acts of violence, as the ſame Joſephus giveth examples, *Antiq. l.*12. *c.*3. & *l.*18. *c.*3. & *l.*20. *c.*5. &c.

The Jews in their writings do commonly call the Samaritans כותיים Cutheans: from Cutha a Country and River of Perſia, 2 *King.*17.24. *Joſeph. Ant. l.*11. *c.*4. & *l.*9. *c.*14. but ſince Chriſtianity came into glory, their hatred to Chriſtians being equal to what it was towards the Samaritans, they ſo commonly call Chriſtians by the ſame name, that it is hard in many places to judge when they ſpeak of Samaritans and when of Chriſtians. Three things (ſaith the Talmud) *make a man tranſgreſs againſt the mind of himſelf and againſt the mind of his Creator, and thoſe are an evil ſpirit, the Cutheans, and the rules of poverty. Erubhin cap.*4. And again, They ſay not Amen after a Cuthean that giveth thanks. Beracoth. c.8. &c. From theſe Samaritans Elias Levita conceiveth that the wandering generation of Gipſes came. Vid. Tiſhbi. in voce כות.

Verſ. 10. If thou knoweſt the gift of God.

Τὴν δωρεὰν The article prefixed (ſaith Beza) ſheweth that he ſpeaketh of ſome excellent gift, and that is of himſelf whom the Father offered now unto the woman. And indeed the latter clauſe expoundeth the former unto this ſenſe, and ſheweth that by this gift of God, Chriſt is to be underſtood not only as given to the world, *Joh.*3.16. (for this the Samaritan woman knew well enough that the Meſſias was to come a Redeemer, verſ. 25.) but as now come and offering himſelf unto her: and this our Saviour calleth the gift of God in ſuch a ſenſe as he ſaith to his Diſciples, To you it is given, but to others it is not given, Mar. 13. 11. For though Chriſt were the goodneſs of God to all his people, as *Hoſ.*3.5. yet was it a peculiar gift of God to ſome particular ones to ſee and hear Chriſt work miracles, and preach for their converſion, as Luke 10. 23, 24.

&. Thou wouldeſt have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water.

The Vulgar Latine puts a forſitan to it, Perhaps thou wouldeſt have asked: leaving it as doubtful whether the woman would have begged grace from Chriſt if ſhe had known him for the Meſſiah: Whereas Chriſt knew well enough what ſhe would have done, and none that knoweth Chriſt can do leſs than beg this living water of him. Were it not that I obſerve the Author of the vulgar tranſlation to render the particle Αν by forſitan in other places, as Chap.5.46. & 8.19. I ſhould have thought that he put a perhaps upon it becauſe of the carnal apprehenſions that the Nations, both Jews and Samaritans, had about the coming and Kingdom of the Meſſias, but I ſhall not trouble my ſelf and the Reader about the ſearching of his thoughts. Chriſt knew the womans, and if ſhe had but known him (how ever it might be a pertinent inquiry how the generality of the Nation would have intertained Chriſt if they had known him, and what they would have asked of him, becauſe of their earthly thoughts of his Kingdom, and becauſe of their high thoughts of their own legal performances) he himſelf ſaw, that ſhe would have asked grace from him. I ask of thee, if thou kneweſt thou wouldeſt ask of me: as John the Baptiſt that knew him came on in ſuch a kind of tenor, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comeſt thou to me? Thou wouldeſt have asked of him, and he would have given thee, as Mark 7.7,8.

That by the living water here ſpoken of, is meant the Spirit of Grace, is apparent in verſ.14. and paſt denial, and therefore I cannot think that Cyprian did give it as the very meaning of this place, but that he meant it alluſively only, when he ſaith that this living water is baptiſm, and that becauſe baptiſm once received is not to be reiterated, therefore it is ſaid, that whoſoever drinketh of this water ſhall never thirſt. Lib.1. Epiſt.3.

The Spirit in Scripture is compared to fire and water, two the greateſt purifiers, and refreſhers: for water purifieth from filth, fire from droſs, water refreſheth againſt heat, fire againſt cold, and how the work of the ſpirit of Grace is ſutable to theſe, needeth not to ſpend time to demonſtrate.

Verſ.

Verſ. 14. But whoſoever ſhall drink of this water that I ſhall give him ſhall never thirſt.

It is made a great ſcruple by Expoſitors and that deſervedly, how he that hath received grace may be ſaid never to thirſt for it more: Since the more grace, the more deſire of grace ſtill: and various anſwers are given to the doubt, which I ſhall omit: To me it ſeemeth needful, that by thirſting here is not to be underſtood barely deſirouſneſs of drink, but fainting and failing for thirſt: and ſo the word צחא which is uſed by the Syriack here for thirſting, is uſed by the Chaldee Paraphraſt, Lam. 2. 19. for fainting: for whereas the Hebrew text hath it, lift up thy hands toward him for the life of thy young children, העטופים ברעב that faint for hunger, the Chaldee hath rendred it דצחין בכפנא that thirſt for hunger: And ſo Eſay 48.21. They thirſted not when he led them through the deſerts (which the Chaldee rendreth, He ſuffered them not to thirſt) is ſo to be underſtood, of not periſhing for thirſt: or not languiſhing for it: for that they thirſted in the wilderneſs and cried out for water, it is related more than once.

In the verſe before, our Saviour ſaid, He that drinketh of this water, Διψήσει πάλιν may thirſt again: but in this verſe he uſeth not the word πάλιν Again, (for he that is watered with grace doth thirſt for the ſame water of grace again and again) but he ſaith whoſoever ſhall drink of this water which I ſhall give him, οὐ μὴ διψήσει εἰς αἰῶνα, he ſhall never ſo thirſt, as to fail or periſh by it, but this water ſhall preſerve him to eternal life. Compare Eſay 41.17.

Verſ. 15. The woman ſaith, Sir give me of this water, &c.

The woman doth now fall from queſtioning, as verſ. 11, 12. to plain mocking and deriſion, for this can be conſtrued no other in her; I know theſe words of hers, are taken by divers to intimate her inclining to, and imbracing this doctrine of Chriſt though ſhe knew not well how to underſtand it: and they ſhew, ſay ſome, Simplicitatem credendi, her ſimplicity or ſincerity of believing, who ſo ſoon doubted not to ask for this ſo excellent water. But be it conſidered, 1. That as yet ſhe took Chriſt but for an ordinary man, until he hath told her of her ſecret villanies, and then ſhe takes him for a Prophet, verſ. 19. And 2. that taking him for an ordinary man, ſhe talks with him as a Samaritan huſwife would do with a common Jew, between whom there was ſo deadly a ſcorn and fewd. 3. The thing that Chriſt ſpake of, of giving water, after which the party that had it ſhould never thirſt, were things ſo ſtrange, and would ſeem ſo ridiculous to any Samaritan, nay to any fleſh and blood that knew no more of him than as yet ſhe did, (thoſe words proceeding from ſo mean a man as he ſeemed to be) that her words in reply thereunto, Sir give me of this water, &c. can be no other but a jeer and ſcorn of what he had ſpoken. And her calling him κύριε or Sir, doth no whit take off this conſtruction, ſince that was but a word of ordinary compellation: or if ſhe uſed it in a higher ſenſe, ſhe uſed it but in the higher ſcorn.

Verſ. 17. I have no husband.

The reaſon why Chriſt bids her call her husband, may be ſuppoſed to be, partly that he might check and ſtop her jeering, by minding her of her own faults, and chiefly that he might ſhew her that he was another kind of perſon, then ſhe judged of him, by telling her of ſuch things as ſhe knew he could not tell her but divinely.

Now her denial that ſhe had any huſband, is aſcribed by ſome to her modeſty, to conceal her adultery: by others to this, becauſe ſhe knew not what Chriſt would do with her huſband: but till it can be ſhewed, why a Samaritan quean ſhould talk with any reverence or civility, with an ordinary Jew (for ſhe took Chriſt for no other as yet) eſpecially when he ſpake to her of ſuch unlikely things as he did, it is the moſt proper and undiſputable interpretation of her words, I have no husband, to take them for a ſcoffing and regardleſs anſwer to a queſtion and to a perſon that ſhe was careleſs whether ſhe gave any any anſwer to or no.

Verſ. 18. He whom thou now haſt is not thine husband.

It ſeemeth by the numerouſneſs of her former husbands, and by the ſame expreſſion uſed concerning them and this (thou haſt had five and this that thou haſt) that ſhe was a divorced woman, and now lived in an adulterous marriage: and it may be, married to him, who had adulterated her in her former husbands days: But be it either thus, or that ſhe lived in adultery out of wedlock, her conſcience is convinced of the truth of the thing that Chriſt ſpeaketh, and withal ſhe findeth that he had told her that which a meer ſtranger ſtranger could not tell her but by the ſpirit of Prophecy, and therefore ſhe owns him for a Prophet.

Verſ. 20. Our Fathers worſhipped in this Mount.

Conceiving him to be a Prophet, ſhe ſodainly deſireth to hear what he will determine upon that great diſpute, that was between the Jews and the Samaritans continually, namely whether was the truer and righter place of worſhip, Jeruſalem or Mount Gerizim.

She called Jacob, Our Father Jacob, ver. 12. for ſo the Samaritans would be a kin to the Jews when they thought good; but the Fathers ſhe ſpeaks of here, were as far from the Religion and Worſhip that Jacob uſed, as Jacob was from the Religion of Hamor and Sichem. Joſephus tells one ſtory, that gives this woman but little cauſe to boaſt of her Fathers worſhipping in that Mount, and that is this, That when Antiochus Epiphanes did ſo heavily oppreſs the Jews and perſecute their Religion, theſe Samaritans thinking that their Religion alſo looked ſomewhat like that of the Jews, and that Antiochus might happily ſuſpect that they and the Jews, and both their Religions were ſomething a kin, and ſo they ſuffer as well as the other: they fairly ſend to Antiochus, and betime diſclaim any ſuch kindred: And whereas indeed they could not deny, but they had a Temple, they beſought him that it might be dedicated to the Grecian Jupiter and called by his name, and ſo by the Kings command it was, Antiq. lib. 12. cap. 7. Here was worſhipping in that Mount with a witneſs and much to be bragd of: but ſee the impudence of Hereticks, when ſuch a Temple ſhall compare with the Temple at Jeruſalem.

Abraham Zacuth ſaith, This Temple of Gerizim was deſtroyed by Jochanan the ſon of Simeon the ſon of Mattathias, and the Hereticks ſlain. Juchaſ. fol. 14.

Verſ. 21. Woman believe me, The Hour cometh, &c.

As ſhe owned him for a Prophet, ſo he challengeth to be believed of her as a Prophet, and as a Prophet he foretels her of what was now ready to come to paſs: namely, that Ceremonious Worſhip ſhould ceaſe, and be no more confined to particular place or Nation. That there ſhould be no Sacrifice at Jeruſalem, no Image at Samaria, no Ephod at Jeruſalem, no Teraphim at Samaria, as Hoſ. 3. 4. but that thoſe places and that manner of worſhip ſhould fail and be aboliſhed. And ſo he anſwers her queſtion in the firſt place, to this purpoſe that it was needleſs for her or any other to trouble themſelves about that diſpute whether Jeruſalem or Gerizim were the more eminent place of Worſhip, for the time was juſt now in coming, when neither the one, nor the other ſhould be the place of worſhip at all. And then he determins the queſtion indeed, that Jeruſalem had ever been and was at that preſent the right place of worſhip, but Gerizim a Temple of error and uſurpation: and he proves his determination by this reaſon, We know what we worſhip, &c.

Verſ. 23. The true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in ſpirit and truth.

In the term, The true worſhippers, he looketh at the womans queſtion, and the two Nations controverſie. They tugged for it, and ſhe inquires about it, whether of the people had the true worſhip amongſt them: why, ſaith Chriſt, ere long there ſhall be no worſhip at all either among the one or the other: And the time is now come that he that will be taken for a true worſhipper, muſt neither worſhip as the Jews do, ceremoneouſly, but in ſpirit, nor as the Samaritans do, erroneouſly, but in truth. Thus may we very well divide the two words Spirit and truth, to ſerve theſe two purpoſes, as thus to anſwer about the worſhip of either Nation: the one whereof worſhipped God altogether in external Rites and Ceremonies, and the other worſhipped they knew not what and they knew not how. But generally the word Spirit and truth, are taken by Expoſitors to ſignifie but one and the ſame thing, and ſtand in oppoſition only to the carnal Rites and ſhadowy types in which their whole Worſhip in a manner did conſiſt.

His uſing of the term Father for God, is not ſo much in reference to the other perſons in the Trinity, or becauſe the woman was acquainted with that myſtery, but becauſe the Jews, and it is like the Samaritans alſo uſed the word very commonly in their prayers and ſpeeches, as, Our Father which art in Heaven do to us as thou haſt promiſed by the Prophet. And, Let the prayers and requeſts of all the Houſe of Iſrael be accepted before their Father which is in Heaven, &c. Maym. in Tephilloth.

Verſ. 24. God is a Spirit, and they that worſhip him, &c.

Here ariſeth a queſtion upon the very firſt reading of the verſe, (the words Spirit and truth being interpreted, as is mentioned immediately before) and that is, why did did God ſo punctually ordain, and ſo long continue a Typical and Ceremonious Worſhip, if thoſe that worſhip him muſt worſhip in ſpirit and truth? Anſwer, That very worſhip was for this end and purpoſe, that men ſhould learn to worſhip God in ſpirit and truth. For all theſe rites and types were but doctrines of the way of Salvation through Chriſt till Chriſt came: and the very uſe of them was to this end, that out of them men ſhould ſpel this ſpiritual and true worſhip, namely to worſhip God in Chriſt, and to look after his benefits for their ſalvation which thoſe rites doctrinally held unto them: and which leſſon the true worſhippers or believers did attain unto.

Verſ. 25. I know that Meſſiah cometh, &c. he will teach us all things.

The Samaritans had learned from the Jews to expect Meſſias; and how the Jews expected this to be the time of his coming, we have ſhewed before, and it may be the woman ſpeaketh this as meaning, that ſhe looked for Meſſias to come ſhortly, which occaſioned Chriſts anſwer, I am he, as taking at her words in that ſenſe, Thou ſayeſt Meſſias will come ſhortly and reſolve all things, I tell thee Meſſias is come already, and I am he. Now her referring the reſolution of this doubt to Meſſias his coming, it ſheweth ſhe did not throughly digeſt and entertain Chriſts anſwer to her queſtion, although ſhe took upon her to acknowledge him for a Prophet. She had no mind the thing ſhould be ſo as he had reſolved, and therefore ſhe had no mind to believe it. How Chriſt was expected as the great teacher, we ſhall obſerve afterward.

Verſ. 29. A man which hath told me all things that ever I did.

The Diſciples having now bought all things that they would have for dinner, (for it was now dinner time,) return to the well to their Maſter, and upon their return, Chriſts diſcourſe and the womans is broken off, and ſhe ſlips a way into the City, and bids come ſee a man that hath told me all things that ever I did: But Chriſt did not ſo, for he told her only of one particular or two, about her husbands: but beſides that the word All in Scripture is not always ſtretched to the utmoſt extent of its ſignification, he had told her ſo much that ſhe concludes that he that could tell her that, could have told her alſo all things elſe: ſuch expreſſions as theſe in earneſt and pathetical narrations are not ſtrange.

Verſ. 35. Say ye not there are yet four months, &c.

The coherence and connexion of this verſe with thoſe before, which is the firſt thing to be looked after in it, lyeth thus: The Diſciples had been in the City and bought ſome meat, and when they had ſet it ready they invite him to dine: He anſwers, No; he hath other meat to feed upon than they are aware of, and that was to do the will of him that ſent him, and to finiſh his work: And what work was that? Why, the very work that he had been juſt now about, preaching the Goſpel and converting a ſoul, and which work he knew was increaſing upon him by the coming of the Samaritans to hear him, whom either he now ſaw coming in flocks towards him, or knew they would come: In theſe words therefore he anſwers his Diſciples to this purpoſe: You would have me to eat, but I have ſomewhat elſe to do which is meat to me, which is to finiſh my Fathers work in preaching the Goſpel: for look you yonder: whereas ye ſay it is four months to harveſt, ſee what a Goſpel harveſt is coming yonder, what a multitude of people is yonder coming to hear me, ready for the harveſt: therefore it is not a time to talk of eating of meat that periſheth, but to fall to this harveſt work, which is my meat in doing the will of him that ſent me.

The harveſt of the Jews began at the Paſover: for on the ſecond day of the Paſover the Law injoyned them to bring a ſheaf of the firſt fruits of their harveſt and wave it before the Lord: and from that day they counted ſeven weeks to Pentecoſt: See Levit. 23.10.15. Four months therefore before the Paſover (which was the fourteenth day of the firſt month) falls to be towards the latter end of our November, or thereabout; as is eaſily caſt by any. This therefore helps to ſet the clock of the time reaſonable well, both for the reckoning of what times are paſt, and for the better fixing of the next Paſsover that is to come. As, 1. It ſhews about what time Johns impriſonment befel, and how long he preached: namely, from Paſover was twelvemonth to this November, a year and a half and a month and ſome days above: for it is like that Chriſt ſtayed not long in Judea after Johns impriſoning. 2. It ſhews that Chriſt had ſpent ſome eight months in Judea from the Paſover hitherto and had in this time converted abundance of people to his doctrine. 3. It will help to clear that the feaſt of the Jews ſpoken of in the next Chapter, is the next Paſover that was to come, as we ſhall obſerve when we come there.

In

In the former part of the words, Say ye not, There are four months and then cometh harveſt? He ſpeaketh literally of their harveſt of corn: but in the latter the fields are already white to harveſt, he ſpeaketh parabolically or ſpiritually, of the multitudes of people both among Jews and Gentiles, that were ready to be reaped and gathered by the Goſpel: And when he ſaith, lift up your eyes and look on the fields, he ſeemeth to point them to the multitude of Samaritans that were now in ſight coming toward him. That paſſage in the Prophet Hoſea Chap. 2. 20, 21, 22, 23. ſpeaketh to ſuch another divine and ſpiritual ſenſe and purpoſe. I will hear the heavens, and they ſhall hear the earth, And the earth ſhall hear the corn and the wine and the oil, and they ſhall hear Jezreel (the Lords ſeedneſs) And I will ſow her to me in the earth, &c. And the like in Amos 9. 13, 14. Behold the days come, ſaith the Lord, that the plowman ſhall overtake the reaper, &c.

Verſ. 36. And he that reapeth, &c.

The Prophets and the holy Teachers under the Old Teſtament ſowed the Word and Doctrine of Salvation which ripened to the harveſt of the Goſpel. Not but that they like good labourers reaped the fruits of their labours in gathering a harveſt of ſouls in their ſeveral generations by the power of their Miniſtery, but in this paſſage our Saviour aimeth not only at the Diſciples converting of ſouls as they had done, but alſo at ſome tranſcendency of theirs in this miniſtration above thoſe that had gone before them, which may be obſerved in theſe particulars of advantage.

1. The Prophets and the teachers of the way of Salvation under the Law, may be conſidered in a twofold relation: either in reference to the great pains they took in their miniſtery and the fruit they had of it in converſion of ſouls, or in reference to the doctrine of Salvation which they left behind them, planted in the Nation by their pains and miniſtery, to ſucceeding generations. To this latter it is that our Saviour referreth when he ſaith, that they were to enter into other mens labours: meaning that whereas the clearneſs of the doctrine of Salvation had been growing in the Nation, from time to time, by the pains and ſowing of the holy Prophets in their ſeveral ages, they now came to preach upon this advantage, that they had all theſe holy mens foundations to build upon, and to top up the clearneſs of that doctrine which they had been building up through all the time of the Old Teſtament. Nay we may alſo take John Baptiſt and Chriſt himſelf in the number of theſe ſeedſmen, that ſowed the ſeed of that doctrine in more plentifulneſs and clearneſs than all had done before, and even into their labours muſt the Diſciples in their miniſtery enter, having ſo great a preparation made, and ſo great a foundation laid as they two had made, for them to enter upon and to begin their work.

2. The Prophets and Teachers under the Law had raiſed the thoughts of the people to an expectation of Meſſias his coming about this very time, as hath been obſerved before, and ſo had even ripened them to the full, for the miniſtery of the Apoſtles, when they ſhould come to teach that Chriſt was come, and that he had done and ſuffered whatſoever was written of him: And this very thing among others was a ſingular and eminent whiteneſs of this field of the Jewiſh Nation to harveſt, that they looked every day when the Meſſias ſhould appear: And obſerve how ſoon the womans words take in Samaria, Is not this the Chriſt, ſo as not only the Samaritans flock out to him, but that upon her very words they believe and upon a little converſe they confeſs, We know that this is indeed the Chriſt the Saviour of the world, verſ. 42. And this, becauſe their expectation was full ripe, of the Meſſias his preſent coming.

3. Now as for the ripeneſs of the Gentiles field, for the Goſpel harveſt, it conſiſted not ſo much in any ſuch doctrine of Salvation as had been ſowed among them, or in ſuch expectation of Chriſts coming (though the Jews now diſperſed through all the world, might have a little acquainted them with ſuch matters more than had been publiſhed among them in ancient times) as it did in the ripening of the love of the Lord, and his turning towards the Nations in mercy whom he had for ſo many years caſt off and deſpiſed. And according to the ripening of that love the Lord had diſpoſed certain providences which did ſomewhat help toward the ripening of the world unto ſuch a purpoſe: as in that the Scriptures were now turned into the Greek Tongue and were among the Heathens, that the Greek Tongue in which the New Teſtament was to be written, was now the moſt commonly ſpoken language of all other, and that the Jews of thoſe Tribes that had retained the true Religion when the ten fell away, namely Judah and Benjamin, were by ſeveral means planted and ſowed abroad in all Countries of the world, and with them the Scriptures.

Our Saviour therefore upon the Samaritans coming out unanimouſly to him through the womans relation concerning him, (to whom he had imparted that he was the Meſſias for that very purpoſe) taketh occaſion to diſcourſe of the ripeneſs of the world for the harveſt of the Goſpel, and animateth his Diſciples to that work by ſeveral arguments: as

1. That

1. That they ſhall receive the reward and fruit of their labours to eternal life.

2. That they ſhall not only receive this fruit, but they ſhall receive it in the eminenteſt and higheſt degree, with the glorious Patriarchs and Prophets who had laboured in ſowing, they and theſe reapers ſhould rejoice together.

3. That they ſhould enter into other mens labours, (as Iſrael did at their entrance into the land of Canaan; into houſes they builded not, and vineyards they planted not, &c.) And that that common Proverb, which proveth to be true upon various occurrences, one ſoweth and another reapeth, ſhould prove true to them to their much comfort and incouragement.

Verſ. 42. This is indeed Chriſt the Saviour of the world.

Here is a confeſſion of Faith higher by ſome degree than the Jews common Creed and belief concerning the Meſſias: for they held him only for a Saviour of the Jewiſh Nation and Redeemer of that people, but the reſt of the world they looked not after nor regarded: and ſo we may ſee how deeply and cordially theſe Samaritans had drunk in and digeſted the water of life which Chriſt had adminiſtred unto them, as to acknowledge him in his proper character: The Samaritans indeed were Gentiles, however they pretented to Joſeph for their Father, and ſo in their converſion may we look upon a beginning of the converſion of the Gentiles, the great field now white for the Goſpel Harveſt. In leſs than four years after this, this field of Samaria where Chriſt had now ſowed ſuch ſeed, the Enemy came and ſowed damnable tears by Simon Magus, Acts 8. It may be that wretch took opportunity for the venting and ſpeeding of his deluſions there, by this, that he found the City acknowledging it for certain that the Meſſias had been among them: and he creeps in among them either as one of his Diſciples, or elſe in affront and contradiction to Chriſt, as doing wonders by magick whereas we read not that Chriſt had done any miracles there at all.

Verſ. 44. For Jeſus himſelf teſtified, that a Prophet had no honour in his own Country.

The reaſon alledged ſeemeth ſomewhat ſtrange at the firſt ſight: that Jeſus ſhould go into Galilee his own Country, becauſe he teſtified that a Prophet hath no honour in his own Country. But by the words his own Country is not to be underſtood Galilee at large, but his own Town Nazareth the place of his education. And ſo is the expreſſion plainly conſtrued, Luke 4. 23. His voiage therefore was into the other parts of Galilee, avoiding his own home Nazareth, becauſe he foreſaw his entertainment would not be honourable and reſpective there.

Verſ. 45. For they alſo went unto the Feaſt.

It was very pertinent for the Evangeliſt, to clear this matter about the Galileans going up to Jeruſalem to the Feſtivals, becauſe there were ſeveral things that might give occaſion to think that they came not there. As 1. the diſtance of place, Galilee being ſo far from Jeruſalem, as that the whole Kingdom of Samaria lay between, and the way exceeding full of danger. 2. Their difference in manners and cuſtoms in exceeding many things from the Jews that dwelt in Judea: of which the Talmudiſts do give exceeding many inſtances. In Judea they did work on the Paſsover Eve: in Galilee they did not. Peſachin per. 4. In Judea they ſearched the Bridegroom and the Bride three days before their bedding: in Galilee they did not. In Judea they had two Paranimphi, one of the Bridegrooms friends, and another of the Brides: in Galilee they had not ſo. In Judea the Paranymphi lay in the ſame room where the Bridegroom and Bride lay, in Galilee they did not, &c. Toſaphta ad Cetuboth per, 1. 3. Their difference in language, as Mark 26. 73. Mark 14. 70. For בני יהודה דיוקי לשנא נלוד לא דיוקי לשנא The Jews of Judea ſpake a pure language in compariſon of the Jews of Galilee. Erubbin. fol. 53.

Verſ. 46. A certain Nobleman.

It is hard in the variety of conſtructions, that are given of the Greek word Βασιλικὸς to tell what this man was that was ſo titled: The Vulgar Latin and Eraſmus render it Regulus, A little King: The Syriack עבר מלכא one of the Kings ſervants: Which the Arabick followed in ſenſe, though not in words. The Italian hath it Signore, A great man or of high degree: Nonnus, Βασιλήιος ἀνὴρ, A man of the Kings, which is the very epithet that is uſed by the Arabick, and ſeveral other expoſitions of it are given, upon which I ſhall not inſiſt.

Now for conjecturing who this man was, and what this title of his doth import I ſhall firſt produce a paſſage out of Juchaſin fol. 19. which is to this purpoſe, Hillel and Shammai, received the traditional Law from Shamajah and Abtalion. At firſt it was Hillel and Menahem, but Menahem went away to the ſervice of the King (Herod) with fourſcore men gallantly cloathed, as it is related in Hagigah. And this matter is alſo mentioned by Joſephus ben Gorion: that Menahem was a great wiſe man like a Prophet, that he uttered divers predictions and foretold Herod (the great) when he was young that he ſhould be King. Herod alſo did much honour old Hillel, for theſe men were well contented that he was King. Old Shammai alſo foretold that Herod ſhould reign: for when Herod came upon a trial before the Sanhedrin for killing of a man, they reſpected his perſon: but Shammai told that he ſhould be King and ſhould kill them. Yet Herod layd no hands on Hillel, Shammai, Menahem, and their aſſociates, but honoured them.

Theſe men that ſided with Herod, and helped to promote and ſupport his reign, though he were a ſtranger and of the ſeed of Edom, I conceive to be thoſe that are called Herodians in the Goſpel, Mark 3. 6. Matth. 22. 16. men of as eminent learning and authority as any other in the Nation, but ſwayed by Courtſhip to this complyance. Of this number I cannot but conceive this man to have been, that we have in hand, who came to Chriſt for the healing of his Son: Βασιλικὸς, A Royaliſt, who had ſided and been aſſiſtant to old Herod, the Father of him which was now Tetrarch, and one of that Herodian faction, to raiſe and eſtabliſh him in the Kingdom; and now a follower of the ſon as he had been of the Father. Shall I gueſs at his name? I ſhould as ſoon think this man was Chuza, Herods Steward, mentioned in Luke 8. 3. as any other that can be named: unleſs it be Manaen or Manahem, Acts 13. 1. who was educated together with Herod the Tetrarch, being it may be, the ſon of that Menahem ſpoken of before, who firſt departed to Herods party. But be the man by name whoſoever he will, we cannot but obſerve this thing about the occurrence that doth here concern him, That though Herod himſelf, had been ſo harſh and cruel to John the Baptiſt but a little before as to put him in priſon; yet had the Lord ſo provided for the cheriſhing of the Goſpel in Chriſts miniſtery, that even of Herods houſhold and retinue, there are ſome that hearken and are converted to it: The miniſtery of John did not want its fruits even in the Court: Though Herod himſelf was a dallying auditor, and did ſome things after the preaching of John, which he thought might ingratiate him the more with the people, but left other things undone, yet were there belonging to his Court that did really and ſincerely receive the Goſpel and obey it.

[d] The Evangeliſt in this quotation from Eſay, doth follow the tranſlation of the Septuagint verbatim, but only in that clauſe, To ſet at liberty them that are bruiſed.

The differences betwixt the Greek and the Hebrew text are not great; they are only theſe. 1. In the Hebrew it is The Spirit of אדוני יהוה The Lord Jehovah is upon me: which the Greek hath uttered by the ſingle word κύριος, becauſe it commonly uſeth that word to tranſlate both Adonai and Jehovah by. 2. Whereas the Hebrew repeateth the word Jehovah again in the next clauſe, becauſe the Lord hath anointed me: the Greek hath omitted it, the ſenſe being clear enough, though it do leave it out. 3. The Hebr. חבש which ſignifieth to bind up, it hath rendred to Heal, bringing the word up to its full ſenſe. 4. The Hebrew ענוים the humble, it hath rendred πτωχοὺς the poor: for it meaneth The poor in Spirit, which is the ſame with Humble.

[e] Phyſician heal thy ſelf, This Proverb the Jews commonly utter thus אסיא אסי Phyciſian heal thine own lameneſs: Tanchumah hath it in a legendary ſtory of a Dialogue betwixt Adam and Lamechs wives. They fell out with their Huſband, and would no more aſſociate with him, yet they would go to Adam to ask his counſel.

Adam adviſeth them to hearken to their Huſband. They anſwer him with this Proverb. אסאי אסי יית חגרחך Phyſitian heal thine own lameneſs: Thou partedſt from thy mate an hundred and thirty years, and doſt thou teach us otherwiſe? Tanch. fol. 4. col. 2.

Reaſon of the Order.

TO clear the ſubſequence of this Section to that preceding, needeth no more ado, but ſeriouſly to conſider the progreſs of the ſtory hither, and to obſerve the progreſs of it from hence a ſtep or two forward. For although Luke hath laid it ſo cloſe to the ſtory of the temptation, as if it did immediately follow, and as if it were the firſt journey that Chriſt took into Galilee after, yet is the parallel ſtory in Matth. 4. 12. ſo plainly pointed out to have been after Chriſt heard that John was impriſoned, that it leaves no more doubting of the method and of the time of this ſtory. Jeſus indeed departed into Galilee preſently after his temptation in the wilderneſs, of which we have the ſtory John 1. 43. and there he turned water into wine at Cana, Joh. 2. 16. &c. and abideth a while at Capernaum, verſe 11. and from thence goeth to the Paſſover at Hieruſalem, verſ. 13, &c. and there and in Judea he ſtayeth till towards the latter end of our November, as was obſerved before; and all this while was John the Baptiſt preaching at liberty, John 3. 23. but then Jeſus heard of his impriſonment, and foreſaw his own danger if he ſhould continue in Judea, therefore he makes for Galilee, and goeth through Samaria, John 4. 1. &c. comes up to Cana in Galilee, and there healeth the Rulers Servant

vant at diſtance, verſ. 43, 46. and now begins to be famous by theſe miracles, and ſo begins to preach in their Synagogues. So that the beginning of this Section may be ſuppoſed as an Epiphonema to the ſtory foregoing, the firſt word being changed from And to Thus. Thus Jeſus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee, and the like of Matthew, Thus when Jeſus heard that John was committed to priſon, he returned to Galilee.

Nor is it a ſtrange thing in Scripture to lay ſtories ſo cloſe together, as Luke hath done theſe two, when yet there was a long ſpace of time, and a large Catalogue of occurences came between, as in this Evangeliſt, Acts 9.25,26. compared with Gal. 1.17,18. Mat. 19. 1. compared with John 7. 10. to John 10. 40. and in other places.

And as the order of this Section is thus cleared and aſſerted, by the current of the ſtory hitherto, ſo will it be the more confirmed by the continuance of it henceforward, it being obſerved how Matthew, Mark, and Luke fall in together at the next Section in one and the ſame ſtory, and ſo continue it as a three twiſted coard not eaſily broken, of which thing the Readers own eyes may be his Judge.

Harmony and Explanation.

Verſ. 14. Jeſus returned in the power of the Spirit.

IT had been at the leaſt fourteen months ſince the Holy Ghoſt came down upon Chriſt when he was baptized, and yet doth Luke purpoſely mention the power of the Spirit upon him after ſo long a ſpace. 1. To ſhew he had the Spirit in a meaſure above other men, for they were not always acted by the Spirit after his firſt coming on them, 2 Kings 4. 27. but Chriſt was always. 2. The Evangeliſt in the ſtory that he had mentioned next before, had ſhewed that Chriſt was led by the power of the Spirit into the wilderneſs, and by it had overcome the temptations of Satan, and now would he ſhew that he cometh in the ſame power to deal with men, and to overcome their affections. But 3. and chiefly Luke uſeth this expreſſion, becauſe he is now to relate how Chriſt began to ſhew himſelf powerful in his miracles, ſo that the fame of him went all about the Country, and that his Miniſtery was glorified of all, and now it was ſeaſonable to mention, and to take notice of the Spirit of the Lord upon him, when he is more fully and intirely to fall upon the Miniſtery of the Goſpel.

Ver. 15. And he taught in their Synagogues.

We have here occaſion to look a little preſly after theſe two things. 1. The nature and conſtitution of their Synagogues, And 2. upon what ground and permiſſion Chriſt, who hitherto had lived as a private mechanick man, was ſuffered to preach in them. The former of theſe deſerveth our conſideration, becauſe of the frequent mention that we have of Synagogues all along the Goſpels, and other books of the New Teſtament: And the latter, becauſe of the queſtion ſo much afoot, of preaching without a publick call and ordination.

Sect. 1. The Antiquity and divine inſtitution of Synagogues.

Although the word Synagogues, be rarely found in the Old Teſtament, ſpelled ſyllabically with ſo many letters in our Engliſh Bibles, yet both reaſon and equivalent expreſſions uſed there, do more than probally perſwade us, that ſuch conventions and meeting places were no ſtrangers to Iſrael in thoſe ancient times.

For 1. It is ſaid expreſly according as our Engliſh utters it, Pſal. 74. 4. that the enemie had burnt all the Synagogues of God in the land. Which although the Chaldee render it of the Temple only, and Rabbi Solomon of Shiloh and the firſt and ſecond Temple only, yet both the plural number uſed, and the context it ſelf inforceth it, to be interpreted of more conventions than only in one place: And Aquila doth render it expreſly Synagogues as our Engliſh doth: And Jonathan the Caldee Paraphraſt of the Prophets (whoſoever was of the Pſalms) ſpeaketh the very ſenſe of that clauſe of the Pſalm, even as our Engliſh utters it, when he interprets that paſſage in Eſay 7.19. בכל הנחלים the Aſſyrian Bee ſhall come upon all the Houſes of Praiſe.

2. What can we make of theſe High places that are ſo often mentioned in Scripture in a commendable ſenſe: as 1 Sam. 9.19. & 10.5. 1 Kings 3.4. &c. other, than that they were Synagogues or places of publick worſhip for particular congregations? For howſoever High places do often bear ill in the Scripture, as places of Idolatry, and falſe worſhip, as 1 Kings 11. 7. & 12. 31. Jer. 7. 31. & 19. 5. &c. yet do we find alſo that ſome High places eſcape that brand, and are mentioned with an honourable memorial: And although thoſe alſo are frequently taxed for Sacrificing there, which ſervice ſhould only have have been exerciſed at Jeruſalem, yet do we never find them taxed for mens worſhipping there. In 2 King. 12. 2. & 14. 4. & 15. 4. &c. it is ſaid, that Joaſh, Amaziah and Uzziah did uprightly in the ſight of the Lord, But the high places were not taken away, nor that they ſhould have been deſtroyed for being places of worſhip or of publick Aſſemblies, but the text expreſſeth ſtill what was their abuſe and what ſhould have been removed, namely, that the people ſhould not have ſacrificed and burnt incenſe there, which part of worſhip was only confined to Jeruſalem. מחרבן שילה עד בית המקדש הותרו הבמות: From the deſtruction of Shiloh to the building of the Temple high places were lawful, as it is the Jews general and common ſaying, but they underſtand it as generally, of lawfulneſs to ſacrifice: which when the people would not leave to uſe after the Temple was built, they are often taxed with it; but with no other part of worſhip in High places if it were not Idolatrous.

3. How was it poſſible that the Jews ſhould keep the Sabbath according to the injunction laid upon them of having every ſeventh day a holy meeting or convocation, Lev. 23. 3, 4. if they had not in all times their Synagogue meetings or particular Congregations, which the plural number uſed of Aſſemblies or Congregations doth more than ſeem to intimate in Pſal. 26. 12. & 68. 26.

4. Let us caſt how the Jews could poſſibly celebrate thoſe ſolemnities to which they were obliged, (beſides the three Feſtivals which required their appearance at Jeruſalem) if they had not Sygnagogues or meetings of particular Aſſemblies: when they were in the Wilderneſs, what could they do on the Sabbath day, when the Tabernacle Court would not hold the thouſand part of them, and when Family duties only would not reach the rule that was ſet before them? And when they were come into the land, when diſtance of place from Jeruſalem made going thither every Sabbath impoſſible, and when every Family were not able to read the Law, much leſs to expound it, nay when many and many Families were neither able to carry on a Sabbath days work, nor hire or get one that was learned and able to carry it on, what could they then do without Synagogues, but loſe the Law, Sabbath, Religion and the knowledge of God and themſelves, and all?

5, When Synagogues were now come into uſe and frequented, how was this uſe and frequency and frequenting of them firſt taken up? We read of them under the ſecond Temple, eſpecially in the Times of our Saviour and of his Apoſtles: when the people were now loſt in hypocryſie and traditions: And can we think that thoſe corrupt times outwent the purer and holyer times of David, Joſhuah, Samuel, &c. in finding out ſo abſolutely needful a means for maintaining of Knowledge and Religion as their Synagogue meetings were? Can we conceive that Phariſees ſhould ſet up theſe ſo uſeful conventions (how uſeful may be judged by Chriſts and his Apoſtles conſtant frequenting them, to omit all other evidences) and that the Elders and Prophets, and holy men under the Old Teſtament wanted them? Take but the Chaldee Paraphraſts opinion again upon this point, who upon thoſe words of Deborah, in Judg. 5. 9. My heart is towards the Governours of Iſrael, that willingly offered themſelves, bleſs ye the Lord, gloſſeth thus. I am ſent to praiſe the Scribes of Iſrael, who when this affliction was, ceaſed not from inquiring after the Law, and now it is comely for them that they ſit in the Synagogues likely, and teach the people the words of the Law, and bleſs and praiſe the Lord.

It cannot therefore be otherwiſe imagined (to ſpare more words upon this proof) but that, ſeeing the uſe of Synagogues was of ſo abſolute and inevitable neceſſity, for the maintaining of Religion, as that in a very ſhort time there could be no Religion without them, they were not only of ancient uſe among the Iſralites even from their firſt ſetling in Canaan, but that they had alſo ſo warrantable an original, as could not be leſs than Sacred: for if their founding were not appointed articulately by Moſes or ſome other Prophet, yet was their erecting written ſo plainly in a moſt religious neceſſity, that if they had not a divine Law in terms, they had a divine neceſſity indeed for their foundation.

Sect. II. Of the Synagogues in thoſe latter times after the return out of captivity.

However corruptions and vain fancies were crept into, and mingled with the worſhip and carriage in their Synagogues in the latter days of Jeruſalem, when ſin, folly, and traditions did abound (as what hath there been even of the holieſt uſe and inſtitution, which by the wretched folly or daring of men hath not been abuſed, either beſides or contrary to the proper end and uſe of it?) yet becauſe the New Teſtament doth ſpeak of the Synagogues as they then were better or worſe, and hath occaſion often to relate to their cuſtoms which were now traditional and mingled with humane inventions; It is agreable to the work that we have in purſuit, to give account and relate the ſtory of them accordingly out of their own antiquities and traditions. In which if we find find that their fond and fooliſh inventions had ſpoiled the Synagogue ſervice, yet had it no more nullified the neceſſary being of Synagogues than their Traditions had done the Law.

We will firſt therefore look upon the places that were capable and fit to have a Synagogue builded and erected in them, as their traditions ordered, and thoſe were not every Town or Village that was in Iſrael, but only thoſe that were called עירות גדולות Great Cities. Now what one of theſe was is determined by the Talmud in theſe words: אי זו היא עיר גדולה כל שיש בה עשרה בטלנים פחות מכאן הריזה כפר What is meant by a great City? Such a one as hath in it ten men of leiſure? Leſs than thus, it is a Village. Megillah per. 1. And to this ſenſe is Maymonides to be underſtood, when he ſaith כל מקום שיש בו עשרה מישראל צריך להכין בה בית שיכנסו בו לתפלה Every place where there are ten men of Iſrael, there it is requiſite to build an houſe, whither they may reſort to prayer at every time of prayer: and this place is called a Synagogue: And the men of the City are to urge one another to build a Synagogue, and to buy them a book of the Law, Prophets, & Hagiographa, Maymon. in Tephillah. per. 11.

Not that every Town which had ten men or ten idle men in it was capable preſently of a Synagogue, but theſe ten men that they mean muſt be men of ſome faſhion and quality.

Their preciſeneſs for this number of ten aroſe from this, becauſe they held not that to be a lawful Congregation, nor pleaſing to God in which there was not ten perſons. And they read not in the Law nor in the Prophets, in the Synagogue, nor lifted up their hands, &c. unleſs there were ten perſons preſent. Megillah. per. 4. For they thought not that God was preſent there, if there were not ſo many men preſent.

The Divine Majeſty dwelleth not among leſs than ten: Nay, R. Jonathan ſaith, that when the Holy bleſſed God cometh into the Synagogue and findeth not ten there, he is preſently angry, as it is ſaid, Wherefore came I and there was no man?

ומנין לעדה שהוא עשרה But whence ground they this opinion that a Congregation conſiſteth of ten, and muſt not be leſs? This is the Talmuds queſtion in Sanhedrin per. 1. and they give there this anſwer.

שנא עד מתי לעדה הרעה הזאת יצאו יהושע וכלב Becauſe it is ſaid, How long ſhall I bear with this evil Congregation (עדה Numb. 14. 27.) Take Joſhuah and Caleb out, and there remainded but ten: namely, the reſt of the ſpies which cauſed the people to murmur, for of them only they underſtand theſe words to be ſpoken.

The words of our Saviour in Matth. 18. 17, 20. ſeem to have reference to this opinion; Dic Eccleſiæ, Tell the עדה or Congregation; and that is not ten or many, as they held, but when two or three are gathered together in my name, if no more may be had.

Now upon this traditional conſtruction of the word עדה or of a Congregation, that it muſt conſiſt at the leaſt of ten, they only erected Synagogues in thoſe places, where there were ten men, that were בטלנים or ſtill at leiſure, and uningagad from other imployments, to go to Church at every time of prayer to make up a Congregation: Poor labouring men, and men of great imployments in the world could not be at this leiſure always, and therefore thoſe men that muſt be continually the makers up of a Congregation at every pinch, muſt be גדולים בני חוריה as Rambam ſtiles them ubi ſupra, per. 12. Men of rank and quality; Not ſo much of rank and greatneſs in regard of outward poſſeſſions, wealth and honours, as in regard of Study in the Law and Religion, שאין לך לן חור ין אלא מי שעוסק בתלמוד תורה For there is no Ben horin or man of rank, but he that is verſed in the ſtudy of the Law, Avoth. per. 6.

Sect. III. Of their Synagogue days, or time of their meeting there.

Where a City or Town was ſtockt with ten ſuch ſufficient men there they built a Synagogue, and according to the number of ſuch men, and populouſneſs of the place, they increaſed the number of their Synagogues ſometimes to a very great multitude: The treatiſe Beracoth ſaith there were twelve Synagogues in Tiberias: fol. 8. And Rabbi Solomon ſpeaketh of four hundred and eighty Synagogues in Jeruſalem, on Eſay. 1.

Now their Synagogue days, or the times of their publick prayers there, were three every week (ſetting holy days aſide) namely, on the Sabbath, and on the ſecond day of the week, which anſwereth to our Munday, and on the fifth day, which is our Thurſday: Their meeting there on the Sabbath, and praying, and reading the Law was ordained by Moſes. Maym. Tephil. per. 12. But on the ſecond and fifth day of the week was appointed by Ezra. Talm. in Bava bathra per. 4. There the Gemariſts and Gloſſaries debate the matter why on theſe two days rather than on any other two of the week, and ſome ſay it was, becauſe they ſhould never be three days together without hearing of the Law. And in alluſion hereunto they apply that paſſage in Exod. 15. 22. They went three days to the wilderneſs and found no water. Others ſay it was, becauſe Moſes went up on the fifth day of the week to receive the renewed Tables, and came down on the ſecond.

Theſe two days of the week were called ימי כניסה The days of Aſſembling. Megill. per. 1. Becauſe on theſe days the Inhabitans of the Villages went into the great Towns where Synagogues were to hear the Law, Gloſſ. Miſhnaioth in octavo. ibid.

The Judges uſed to ſit in Judgement on theſe two days of the week: *Chetuboth. per.*5. and theſe were the two days of the week on which they uſed to faſt, Luke 18. 12. Gloſſ. in Bava bathr. ubi ſupr.

There is an expreſſion in Acts 13. 22. The Gentiles deſired to have the ſame words ſpoken to them εἰς τὸ μεταξὺ σάββατον on the Sabbath between: which if it be not to be underſtood of one of theſe Synagogue days of the week, it would fairly plead for our Chriſtian Sabbath.

Their traditional Canons injoyned the frequenting of the publick aſſemblies in their Synagogues, and that upon the very clear grounds of Reaſon and Religion, God refuſeth (ſay they) the prayers of a Congregation, yea though ſinners be amongſt them. Therefore it is neceſſary that a man joyn himſelf to the Congregation, and pray not alone at any time, when he may pray with the Congregation. And let a man ever go to morning and evening prayer in the Synagogue: And every one that hath a Synagogue in his City, and prayeth not in it, with the Congregation he is called שכן רע An evil neighbour. Maym. in Tephillah. per. 8. Beracoth. fol. 61. And it was forbidden that any one ſhould go by the Synagogue at the time of Prayer, unleſs he had ſome burden upon his back: or unleſs there were more Synagogues in the City, for then he might be thought to be going to his own Church: or that there were two doors in the Synagogue: for then he that ſaw him go by the one door might think he would come at in the other. But if had his Phylacteries upon his head he might go by, for thoſe bare witneſs at in that he was mindful of the Law. Id. ibid. per. 6. This Phylacterial note of a Student, and learned man in the Law, I ſuppoſe was that, by which the rulers of the Synagogue of Antioch in Piſidia, were incited to make the motion to Paul and Barnabas to make a Sermon to the people. They were meer ſtrangers one to another, and I ſee not how they ſhould gueſs them to be men fit to teach, any way ſo well and readily, as by ſeeing their Phylacteries upon them, which the learned among the Jews only uſed to wear and the Apoſtles among the Jews wore them as well as others, for to the Jews they became Jews for the winning of them.

Sect. IV. Of their Synagogue Officers.

Their Synagogues themſelves are deſcribed by the Jewiſh writers, to conſiſt of two parts, the Chancel and the Church. The chancel they called היכל The Temple: and it ſtood weſtward as did the Sanctum Sanctorum in the Tabernacle and the Temple: and in this they ſet the Ark or Cheſt, (for every Synagogue had one) in which they laid up the book of the Law. In the body of the Church the Congregation met, and prayed and heard the Law, and the manner of their ſitting was thus. The Elders ſate neer the Chancel with their faces down the Church: and the people ſate one form behind another with their faces up the Church toward the Chancel and the Elders. Between the people and the Elders thus facing one another, there was a ſpace where there ſtood the Pulpit, where the Law was read and Sermons made unto the people. *Talm. in Megil. per.*4. & Maym. ubi ſupr.

Now Rabbi Alphes expounding what is meant by the Elders of the Synagogue, he ſaith, זקנים דהוינו חכמים They were the wiſemen or thoſe ſtudents of the Law that were among them: that is, thoſe ten men of Religion, rank and learning, of which we have ſpoken before, which were the prime members and conſtituents of the Congregation. Of theſe Elders there were ſome that had rule and office in the Synagogue, and ſome that had not. And this diſtinction the Apoſtle ſeemeth to allude unto, in that much diſputed text, 1 Tim. 5. 17. The Elders that rule well, &c. where The Elders that ruled well, are ſet not only in oppoſition to thoſe that ruled ill, but to thoſe that ruled not at all.

Thoſe that ruled or had Office in the Congregation were theſe two.

1. ראש הכנסת Ἀρχισυνάγωγος The Ruler of the Synagogue: Luke 8, 41, 49. He had the chief care of affairs there: that nothing ſhould be done undecent or diſorderly, as Luke 13. 14. He gave warning when the Reader ſhould begin to read. Maym. ubi ante per. 1. and when the people ſhould anſwer Amen, Aruch. in אמן and took care of things of the like nature, that conduced to the regulating of the Service and of the Synagogue.

2. שליח הצבור Angelus Eccleſiæ, The Miniſter of the Congregation, who labourd in the word and doctrine, being the conſtant Miniſter of the Synagogue, to pray, preach, keep the book of the Law, appoint the Readers of it, and to overſee that they read aright:

aright: And from hence he was called חזן ἐπίσκοπος or Overſeer. And ſo Baal Aruch doth clearly expound it, The חזן Chazan, ſaith he, was שליח הצבור the Miniſter of the Congregation: and the word meaneth an Overſeer: for it behoved him to ſee how they read in the Law. And the gloſs upon Maymony in the places aforecited doth plainly make the Sheliahh hatzibbor, or Angelus Eccleſiæ, and the Chazan or Epiſcopus to be all one: And ſo we may ſee from whence theſe titles and epithets in the New Teſtament are taken, namely from the common platform and conſtitution of the Synagogues, where Angelus Eccleſiæ, and Epiſcopus were terms of ſo ordinary uſe and knowledge: and we may obſerve from whence the Apoſtle taketh his expreſſions when he ſpeaketh of ſome Elders ruling and labouring in word and doctrine, and ſome not, namely, from the ſame platform, and conſtitution of the Synagogue, where the Ruler of the Synagogue, was more ſingularly for ruling the affairs of the Synagogue, yet was he ever a Student in Divinity: and the Miniſter of the Congregation, labouring in the word, and reading of the Law, and in doctrine about the preaching of it: Both theſe together are ſometimes called joyntly The Rulers of the Synagogue, Acts 13, 15. Mark. 5. 22. being both Elders that ruled, but the title is more ſingularly given to the firſt of them.

Sect. V. Of their Preachers.

Having thus taken ſome view of their Synagogues as they now ſtood, it is in the ſecond place worth the examination, upon what ground and reaſon Chriſt was permitted to teach in their Synagogues, he being a private man, and of a mechanick education: He was not only a Carpenters Son in common repute, but he is alſo called a Carpenter himſelf, Mark. 6. 3. And was it uſed among the Jews that mechanicks and tradeſmen might preach, if they would thruſt themſelves upon it? No, it was not any ſuch uſe or cuſtom in the nation, that gave Chriſt this admiſſion to the Pulpit, but the wonders and miracles that he wrought which cauſed his fame to go through all the country, and which cauſed the people to take him for a Prophet: this was that that procured him admittance and acceptance to teach and preach in any Synagogue where he came.

1. From the very firſt platforming of the Church of Iſrael, the tribe of Levi was ſet a part for the publick miniſtery, to attend upon the Altar at Jeruſalem, and to teach the people up and down the Nation, Deut. 33. 10. Mal. 2. 7. and for the better fitting of them for teaching, they had eight and forty cities allotted them, Joſh. 21. in which they dwelt together, as in ſo many Univerſities, ſtudying the Law, that they might be able in time to be Preachers in the Synagoguess and Teachers in ſchools up and down the Land.

2. Men of other tribes alſo ſtudied the Law and became learned men and publick Preachers as well as the Prieſts and Levites, as the Scribes of Zebulun, Judg. 5. 14. the learned men of Iſſachar, 1 Chron. 12. 32. The great Hillel of the tribe of Judah, and his poſterity, Rabban Simeon, Rabban Gamaliel, Pauls maſter &c. and Paul himſelf of the Tribe of Benjamin: Nay ſometime they had Doctors and publick Teachers of the Law, and profeſſors of Divinity, that either were not Iſraelites at all, but only Proſelytes or Proſelytes Sons, as R. Akibah, a man exceeding famous, was the ſon of Joſeph a Proſelyte of Righteouſneſs. Maym. pref. ad Iad. hazahah: or that were but half Iſraelites, as Shemaiah and Abtalion are ſaid by Maymony in the place cited, to be Proſelytes of righteouſneſs alſo, and by Abraham Zacuth to be of the poſterity of Sennacherib, but their mother was an Iſraelite, Juchaſin fol. 50.

3. There were ſome of their publick Teachers and Preachers that had been Mechanicks. as R. Johanan called Sandelar or the Shoomaker: R. Judah called Hajiat, or the Jaylor, &c. And ſo ſaith Maymonides, &c. גדולי חכמי ישראל היומהן חוטבי עצים Some of the greateſt wiſemen of Iſrael have been ſome of them hewers of wood, and drawers of water, and ſome of them blind, yet for all that they plyed the Law day and night, and ſo became ſome of the great Traditionaries. In Talm. torah. (per. 1.

4. Now none of theſe forementioned, were admitted to this publick imployment of teaching and preaching, but he was firſt ordained, and had Ordination as a State call and commiſſion to that Office. So Johanan the Shoomaker, or Sandeler mentioned before, was ordained by R. Akibah, before ever he was publick Teacher or called Rabbi: Juchaſin fol. 61. for none were called Rabbi but who were firſt ordained, for that was one of the paſſages in their ordination; They laid not always their hands on him that was to be ordained, but they called him Rabbi, and ſaid to him, Behold thou art ordained, &c. Maymon. in Sanhedr. per. 4. And all the while before his Ordination, he was called after his Fathers name as Ben Betirah, but after his Ordination he was called R. Joſhua Ben Betirah. Juchaſin fol. 56. Till Hillels time, a publick Teacher having been ordained himſelf, had authority and uſed to ordain his Scholars according as he ſaw them fit, but for honour to Hillel that rite was centred in the Sanhedrin: and they uſed to ordain men to particular ticular imployment in the publick adminiſtration, and they might not go beyond that particular to which they were ordained: כל מי שירצו לרבים יחידים They have power, ſaith Maymony, to appoint whom they will to particular matters: As for example, there was an exceeding great wiſe man, that was fit to teach all the Law every what, it was in the power of the Sanhedrin to ordain him, ſo, as that he might not judge or that he might not teach about bound and looſe, or they might give him licenſe to teach about bound and looſe, but not to judge in matters of mony, or they gave him power to judge in this matter, but not to judge in matters of damage, &c. Maym. ubi ſupra. Thus curious and circumſpect they were in and about the matter of ordination and concerning a lawful and authoritative deſignation of publick Teachers and Judges to their peculiar and particular imployment in the publick, to fix them within their own compaſs and line, and that every one might not intrude upon what miniſterial or magiſterial miniſtration he would. And therefore it was far from being a common uſe, or from being any uſe at all among the Jews in their Church, to let any Mechanical or uncalled and unordained men to ſtep up into the Doctors chair, or Miniſters Pulpit, to read Divinity publickly, or to preach in their Synagogues, as impudency or folly would put them forward on it, but they had a ſolemn State-call or dimiſſion into ſuch imployments by a lawful Ordination, by men themſelves ordained.

5. But if any man came in the ſpirit of a Prophet and took on him to preach under that notion, he found permittance under that notion; yet was there not immunity and liberty for any whoſoever to become Preacher upon that tearm and ſo to continue, but the Sanhedrin was to judge concerning falſe Prophets; and he that was not a Prophet, and yet would be preaching as a Prophet, did it at his own peril. This then was that that procured our Saviour liberty to Preach, and audience to his Preaching in every Synagogue, where he came, becauſe he came not only in the name, but alſo in the viſible power and demonſtration of a Prophet, doing ſuch wondrous ſigns and miracles, as that his Prophetick call could not be denyed, but he was glorified of all.

Verſ. 16. And he came to Nazareth.

He had avoided this place purpoſely, when he came out of Judea, becauſe he knew a Prophet hath no honour in his Country, John 4. 44. for it would have been ſo ſtrange a thing in the eyes of the people of that Town, that he that had been a tradeſman among them all his life hitherto, ſhould now fall a Preaching as a Prophet, that it was eaſie to ſee how little he would have been intertained: but now that he hath got a name through all the Country there about, and hath taught in all their Synagogues, and is glorified of all, now he cometh at the laſt to his own Town to ſee how his doctrine would take with them there.

§ As his Cuſtom was he went into the Synagogue.

Whether it mean, as his cuſtom was at this preſent, or as it had been whileſt he lived there a private man, (which I rather conceive, the expreſſion aimeth at) I ſee not, what in the world the Separatiſts that withdraw from the publick worſhip in our Congregations, can ſay to this example: For was not their publick Worſhip in their Synagogues as corrupt as ours is pretended to be in our Congregations? was not the people of Nazareth as corrupt a people, as moſt Congregations now are? ſee their deſperate wickedneſs in verſ. 29. What did Chriſt all the while he lived there a private man, did he never go to the Synagogue? Sabbath, and Holy days and Synagogue days, whileſt others went to the publick Service and Congregation did he ſit at home? Nay I aſſert, that now when he is become a publick Miniſter, he goes to the Synagogue of Nazareth, as a member of that Congregation, and as a member he reads publickly there; you find not in all the Goſpel, (though he preached in every Synagogue where he came, yet) that he read in none of them but only in this: and you find not in any Talmudick or Jewiſh record, that they that read the Law and Prophets in their Synagogues were any others but members of that Congregation. It is true indeed that ſtrangers, if they were learned might Preach in their Synagogues, as Paul and Barnabas did, Acts 13. 15, 16. &c. but none did publickly read there but a member of that Synagogue. In all the Scripture we find not, that either any that were holy indeed, or any that took upon them to be holy, no nor he that was holyneſs it ſelf, did ſeparate and withdraw from the publick ſervice in the Congregation.

§ And he ſtood up to read.

Moſes and the Prophets were read in their Synagogues every Sabbath day, Acts 13. 15. & 15. 21. And Moſes every Synagogue day beſide, and the Prophets every holy day, and the ninth day of the month Ab which was a faſt, and every faſting day beſides. Maym. in Tephillah per. 12.

On the Sabbath the readers of the Law were ſeven: on the day of expiation ſix: on holy days five: on the new moons and the ſeven days of the three great Feſtivals four: and on the ſecond and the fifth day of every week three. And the Law might not be read by leſs than three, one after another. Id. ibid. & Talm. utrumque in Megil. per. 4. in Gemara.

Now on the Sabbath, the readers being then ſeven, they ſeven read in order thus: firſt a Prieſt, then a Levite, then five Iſraelites one after another. If there were not a Prieſt nor a Levite there, then ſeven Iſraelites did it. If a Prieſt were there and no Levite, then the Prieſt read twice. But the rule was, Firſt a Prieſt, then a Levite, then an Iſraelite, then a fourth, a fifth, a ſixth, a ſeventh. And this may help the young Student of the Hebrew text to underſtand, that which he will meet with in ſome Pentateuchs (as the Pentateuch in Buxtorfes Bible, and that with the triple Targum) and that is, when he ſees in the margin here and there כהן and לוי and ישראל and רביעי and חמישי and ששי and שביעי which mean no other thing than this order of the reading of the Law, firſt a Prieſt, then a Levite, then five Iſraelites in their order.

The שלוח צבור Angelus Eccleſiæ, or Miniſter of the Congregation called him out that was to read, and he went up into a Desk or Pulpit, (בימה Βῆμα) which ſtood in the midſt of the Synagogue for that purpoſe, and he delivered him the Book of the Law: which he opened, and looked out the place where he was to read, but he began not till the Archi-ſynagogus bad him begin. Yea if the Archi-ſynagogus himſelf or the Miniſter of the Congregation were to read, he began not till the Congregation, or he that was now chief among them bad him read: Maym. ubi ante.

Before he read, he began with Prayer, bleſſing God that had choſen them to be his people, and given them his Law, &c. and then he begins ſtanding all the while he reads, as it is ſaid by the Evangeliſt, He ſtood up for to read. And for this poſture they have a ſpecial caution in the treatiſe Megillah, That he that reads the Law muſt ſtand, partly for the honour of the Law it ſelf, and partly becauſe God ſaid to Moſes, Stand thou here with me. Per. 4. in Gemar.

As he read, the Miniſter of the Congregation ſtood by him, to ſee that he read and pronounced aright (and from hence he was called חזן Epiſcopus or Overſeer, as hath been obſerved) and if he miſſed he recalled him to utter it aright.

There ſtood another by him alſo, who did interpret into the Chaldee tongue what he read out of the Hebrew Text. For from the days of Ezra, נהגו שיהא שם תורגמן they uſed to have an Interpreter in the Synagogue, who interpreted to the people what the Reader read: that ſo they might underſtand the ſenſe of the words: And the Reader read a verſe and ſtopt, till the Interpreter had interpreted it, and then he went on and read another verſe, and the Interpreter interpreted it: and he might not read above one verſe at once to the Interpreter: This was the conſtant practice in reading the Law: but in reading of the Prophets the Reader might read three verſes at once to the Interpreter, &c. Talm. & Maym. ubi ſupr. & Maſſecheth ſopherim. per. 10.

It was their cuſtom (ſaith Alpheſi) to intrepret in the Synagogue becauſe they ſpake the Syrian tongue, and they interpreted that all might underſtand. In Megil. per. 4. To which Rabbi Solomon alſo ſpeaketh parallel, ſaying, The Targum or interpretation, was only to make women and עם הארץ the common people to underſtand, who knew not the holy tongue: and the Interpretation was into the Vulgar Babylonian. Ibid. compare 1 Cor. 14. 27.

So that this uſe of interpreting was introduced of neceſſity, becauſe they were not able to underſtand the Original Text, and they might not read the Scriptures publickly but in the Original: And they hold withall that Ezra himſelf gave example and a copy for this, for ſo they underſtand that paſſage, Neh. 8. 8. The Gemariſts in the Jeruſalem Talmud queſtion, Whence came the cuſtom of having an Interpreter. R. Zeora in the name of R. Hananeel ſaith from that place, They read in the Book of the Law, That meaneth the reading: Diſtinctly; that meaneth the interpreting, and gave the ſenſe, that meaneth the expoſition, and cauſed to underſtand the reading, that meaneth the Maſſoreth, or points and accents. In Meg. ubi ſupr. Where alſo it relateth theſe two or three ſtories. R. Samuel bar R. Iſaac went into a Synagogue, and ſaw one as he interpreted leaning to a pillar. He ſaith to him, That is not lawful: For as the Law was given in fear and terror, ſo muſt it be uſed with fear and terror. The ſame man went into a Synagogue, and ſaw the Angelus Eccleſiæ, reading and ſetting no man by him, (no Interpreter as Alpheſi expounds it) He ſaith to him, That is unlawful, for it was given by the hand of a Mediator, ſo is it to be uſed by the hand of a Mediator.

He

He alſo went into a Synagogue, and ſaw a Scribe reading his interpreting out of a Book. He ſaith to him, That is unlawful; for, what by word of mouth, by word of mouth, and what out of the book, out of the book.

The Reader of the Haphtaroth or portion out of the Prophets, was ordinarily one of the number of thoſe that had read the Law: he was called out to read by the Miniſter of the Congregation, he went up into the desk, had the Book of the Prophet given him, began with Prayer, and had an Interpreter, even as it was with them that read the Law.

And under theſe Synagogue rulers are we to underſtand Chriſts reading in the Synagoue at this time: namely, as a member of the Synagogue, called out by the Miniſter, reading according to the accuſtomed order, the portion in the Prophet when the Law was read (and it is like he had read ſome part of the Law before) and having an Interpreter by him to render into Syriack the Text he read: he then begins in Syriack to preach upon it.

Now if it be queſtioned Under what notion may the Miniſter of the Congregation be thought to call him out to read? It may be anſwered. 1. It is poſſible he had done ſo, many a time before, while Chriſt lived amongſt them as a private man: for though none but men learned and in orders might Preach and Teach in their Synagogues, yet might, even boys and ſervants, if need were, read there, if ſo be they were found able to read well: And Chriſt though his education was but mean according to the condition of his parents, John 7. 15. yet it is almoſt paſt peradventure, that he was brought up ſo as to read, as generally all the children of the Nation were. 2. Chriſt in other parts of Galilee had ſhewed his wiſdom and his works, and his fame was ſpread abroad; and no doubt was got to Nazareth where he was beſt known: and this would readily get him ſuch a publick tryal in the Synagogue, if he had never been upon that imployment before, to ſee what evidences he would give of what was ſo much reported of him.

Verſ. 17. And there was delivered to him the Book of Eſaias.

It is a tradition, and ſo it was their practice שאין קוראין בחומשין בבתי כנסיורת That they read not in the Synagogues in the five books of Moſes bound together, but every book of the five ſingle by it ſelf: And ſo alſo may it be conceived they did by the Prophets, that the three great Prophets, Eſay, Jeremy, Ezekiel, were every one ſingle, and the twelve ſmall Prophets bound together: And we may conclude upon this the rather, becauſe they had alſo this Tradition and practice מפטיר בנביא That the Maphtir or he that read in the Prophets might skip from paſſage to paſſage (that is, from one text to another for illuſtration of the matter he read upon) but he might not skip from Prophet to Prophet, but only in the twelve ſmall Prophets.

The delivering of the Book unto him by the Miniſter, to whom he alſo delivers it again when he hath read, verſ. 20. doth confirm what was ſaid before, that Chriſt ſtood up to read as a member of the Synagogue, and in the ordinary way of reading uſed there: for ſo it was the cuſtom of the Miniſter to give the book to thoſe that did ſo read: But if Chriſt had gone about to read, beſide or contrary to the common cuſtom of the place, it can little be thought that the Miniſter would ſo far have complied with him, as to give him the Book that he might read irregularly or beſide the cuſtom. To which may alſo be added: that if our Saviour intended only to rehearſe this paſſage of Eſay, that he might take it for his text to ground his diſcourſe upon, he could have done that by heart, and had not needed the Book; but it ſheweth that he was the Reader of the ſecond Leſſon, or of the Prophets this day, in the ordinary way as it is uſed to be read by ſome or other of that Synagogue every Sabbath.

§ He found the place where it was written, &c.

Not by chance, but intentionally turned to it: Now whether this place, that he fixed on, were the proper leſſon for the day, may require ſome diſpute: They that ſhall peruſe the Haphtaroth or Leſſons in the Prophets which were preciſely appointed for every Sabbath to be read, will find ſome cauſe to doubt whether this portion of the Prophet that our Saviour read, were by appointment to be read in the Synagogue at all: But not to inſiſt upon this ſcrutiny: in the reading of the Prophets they were not ſo very punctual as they were in the reading of the Law: R. Alphes ubi ſupr. but they might both read leſs than was appointed, and they might skip and read other where than was appointed: And ſo whether our Saviour began in ſome other portion of the Prophet, and thence paſſed hither to illuſtrate what he read there, though the Evangeliſt hath only mentioned this place, as moſt punctual and pertinent to Chriſts diſcourſe, or whether he fixed only upon this place and read no more than what Luke hath mentioned, it is not much much material to controvert, his reading was ſo as gave not offence to the Synagogue, and it is like it was ſo as was not unuſual in the Synagogue. He that read in the Prophets was to read at the leaſt one and twenty verſes ואם השלים בפחות אין צריך But if he finiſhed the ſenſe in leſs, he needed not to read ſo many. Megill. & Maym. ubi ante.

Verſ. 18. The Spirit of the Lord is upon me.

The Jews in the interpretation of this Scripture, do generally apply the ſenſe and truth of it, to the Prophet himſelf: as the Eunuch was ready to apply another place in this ſame Prophet, Acts 8. 34. So the Chaldee renders it אמר נביא The Prophet ſaith, The ſpirit of Prophecy from before the Lord is upon me. And David Kimchi, Theſe are the words of the Prophet concerning himſelf. In which application they did not much amiſs, to bring the meaning of the words to Eſay himſelf, if they did not confine and limit the truth of them there: For the words do very well ſpeak the function of the Prophet, his calling and Miniſtery being to thoſe very ends and purpoſes that are named here: but to reſtrain it to him only, is to loſe the full and vigorous ſenſe of it, which the words hold out, and which the Prophet could not reach unto to have them verified of himſelf to the utmoſt extent: as being anointed, Preaching the acceptable year of the Lord with an Emphaſis put upon the word the, and ſome other particulars as may be obſerved.

It is an ordinary ſtyle with the Prophets to ſpeak things as in their own perſons or of themſelves, which ſometimes were not punctually and literally applicable to them only, nay which ſometimes were not ſo applicable to them at all: but whoſe truth and ſenſe was made good only in Chriſt, as Pſal. 16. 10. with Acts 13. 36. Pſal. 22. 16. They pierced my hands and my feet: Eſay 8. 18. with Heb. 2. 13. Zech. 11. 12, 13. with Matth. 27. 9. &c.

How the Spirit of the Lord came upon Chriſt, and dwelt upon him in meaſure above meaſure, hath been obſerved before; only let the Reader obſerve, how ſutable this Text in the mouth of Chriſt, is to the words of the Evangeliſt in the beginning of this Section. Jeſus returned in the power of the Spirit.

§ Becauſe he hath anointed me.

The Greek expreſſion ἕ ἕνεκεν, is ſo rendred by ſome Expoſitors on the one hand, ſome on the other, that in a manner a clean contrary ſenſe is put upon it: Some thus, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, therefore he hath anointed me: and ſo they make the reaſon of his anointing to be becauſe the Spirit of the Lord was upon him: To this ſenſe the Syriack renders it, who utters it thus, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me מטול הנא and becauſe of this he hath anointed me: and ſo Beza, Cujus rei gratia, unxit me: The Vulgar, propter quod. Brucioli, Per cagione del quale, &c. But others, amongſt which, is Eraſmus, and our Engliſh, do read it, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, becauſe he hath anointed me (which though it ſpeak not the literal conſtruction of the Greek particle ſo very punctually, yet doth it the Hebrew, by which the Greek is to be ſtated, and which the Chaldee ſo reads) as that they do make the Lords anointing him to be the cauſe of the Spirits being upon him, which is a far more eaſie and profitable ſenſe.

Object. But was not his anointing by the very coming of the Spirit upon him at his Baptiſm? and ſo theſe two things are ſo far from being the cauſe and effect one of another, that indeed they were but one and the ſame thing: the holy Spirits coming upon him was his anointing, and his anointing was nothing but the Holy Spirits coming upon him.

Anſwer: If by anointing we will underſtand, his exalting and ſetting up and apart (as the Jews expound the word in the text of Eſay) for this office and work that the Text ſpeaketh of, than was his anointing before the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, for he was ſet apart for Mediator and Miniſter of the Goſpel before: and ſo his anointing was the cauſe and reaſon why the Spirit came upon him, namely, to fit him and act him to that office to which he was ſet apart. But if by anointing we will underſtand a viſible and an apparent inſtalment of him into the preſent execution of that office unto which he was deſigned before, than was his anointing and the Spirits coming upon him, but the very ſame thing, for the Spirits coming upon him, was that anointing. And in this ſenſe are we to underſtand his anointing here, and yet even in this ſenſe, are we to take his anointing to be the cauſe of the Spirits being upon him, though the Spirits coming upon him was the very way and manner of his anointing; but we are to underſtand it thus with difference and diſtinction of time: At the very inſtant of the Holy Ghoſts coming upon him at his Baptiſm, that was his anointing and inſtallment into the execution of his function: but all the time following while he executed his function, the Holy Ghoſt reſted upon him; why? Becauſe the Lord had anointed him with with the Holy Ghoſt at his Baptiſm: and ſo the Emphaſis of the clauſe lies in the verb underſtood and limited to its time, the Holy Ghoſt is now upon me and continueth ſtill upon me, becauſe the Lord hath heretofore anointed me with the Holy Ghoſt: And herein is the difference apparent of the meaſure and manner of the Holy Spirits being upon the Prophets, and his being upon Chriſt: They had not the actings of the Spirit alwas upon them, nor are they viſibly anointed with it, as he was both.

§ To preach the Goſpel to the Poor, &c.

Here are ſix particulars in this portion of Scripture as parts of Chriſts Miniſtery; which though they may be all applyed to any one particular perſon to whom the Goſpel and Miniſtery of Chriſt powerfully and effectually came, for ſuch a poor wretch had the Goſpel preached to him, his broken heart was heald, he heard of deliverance from the bondage of Satan, &c. yet have they all their ſingular and ſeveral intentions and meanings, and ſo are to be expounded and underſtood, for the taking up of the verſe in its full ſenſe and life.

1. Chriſt was ſent to preach the Goſpel to the Poor: in the Text of Eſay it is ענוים to the meek, or humble, and accordingly rendred by the Chaldee Paraphraſt: and ſo the ſenſe is made the readier, namely, that by the poor here is meant the poor in Spirit, as Mat. 5. 3. Such as went out of their own righteouſneſs, and by the convictions of the Law, did find themſelves to be nothing, and worſe than nothing: to ſuch Chriſt was ſent to Preach the Goſpel, and ſuch received it. Mat. 9. 12, 13. & 11. 5. Chriſt preached to to all that came about him to hear him, but he ſpeaketh here of his Preaching the Goſpel in the proper power and fruit of it, viz. ſo as that it was received. Now this is the firſt compoſure to the receiving and intertaining of the Goſpel, when a ſoul by the power of the Preaching of the Law is thruſt off from all ſecurity either in ſin, or ſelf-righteouſneſs, and becomes ſo poor in his own ſpirit, that he finds himſelf nothing but wretched and miſerable and poor and blind and naked and in need of all things.

The title of poor is as common a name for the Saints of God, eſpecially in the Old Teſtament, as any name whatſoever: and that not only becauſe of their depreſſed and oppreſſed condition by the wicked, but becauſe of their poverty of ſpirit, and abaſedneſs in their own eyes: they knowing how poor they are, and living by continual begging of grace at the hands of God. The Hebrew word is ſometime written עניים poor in the text and read ענוים humble, in the margin, as Pſalm. 9. 13. and ſometime ענוים in the text, and read עניים in the margin, as in the ſame Pſalme verſe 19. ענוים is tranſlated poor by the Septuagint, Pſal. 10. 13. & 22. 27. as well as here.

2. To heal the broken hearted: here is the heart a degree lower than in the former expreſſion, and the operation of the Goſpel a degree higher: Every broken hearted ſoul is alſo poor in ſpirit, but not e contra: for an humble and poor ſpirited ſoul, may yet ſome time be free from theſe breakings of heart which many a one hath met withall, and which it ſelf may meet withall at another time. For being brought poor in ſpirit, and made ſenſible of its own unrighteouſneſs by the Preaching of the Law, and ſo intertaining the Goſpel, it is by degrees even broken alſo by the Goſpel, the heart melting in the ſenſe and apprehenſion of the dear love of God to ſinners, and of its own ſinfulneſs and untowardneſs towards him.

3. To Preach deliverance to the Captives: This may very well allude to the Jews expectation: who looked for (and do ſtill) a bodily deliverance from all their captivities and calamities, by the coming of Meſſiah: now Chriſt came to Preach deliverance to captived ones, but not in this ſenſe, but in a higher, in as much as he was a higher Saviour than their ordinary deliverers.

4. Recovering of ſight to the blind: This may look alſo at the Gentiles, who ſate in the darkneſs of all manner of ignorance, Error, and Idolatry: And though it be moſt true that every one naturally is blind as to the things of Heaven, and that the Goſpel giveth new ſight to thoſe that receive it, yet ſince the Heathen are eſpecially ſet out as ſitting in blindneſs, this clauſe may very well be applyed to them, as in a ſingular propriety.

The Evangeliſt doth here ſomewhat differ from Eſays Text, as alſo do the Septuagint, whom he followeth: for Eſay hath it ולאסורים פקח קוח And opening of priſon to thoſe that are bound, as our Engliſh tranſlates it: There is ſome ſcruple among tranſlators about rendering the words פקח קוח and what to make of them; but the other word אסורים doth plainly enough and without all difficulty ſignifie Bound, and yet the Greek hath uttered it blind.

1. The words פקח קוח are taken by divers, to be not two but one word doubled as סהרחר ארמדם ורקרק and many other of the like nature: and that it ſignifieth by the duplication the more emphatically and eminently: which opinion is the more juſtified by this, that קוח the latter part of it, by it ſelf, can be made nothing of (ſuch a word not not being to be found again in Scripture) but uncertain and unprofitable conjectures only are given of it: As that it ſhould ſignifie a priſon, as is the conceit of Dav. Kimchies Father; or that it ſhould ſignifie a taking out of Priſon, as is fancyed by Kimchi himſelf; and both taking away the firſt ſyllable in לקוח to mint this word, but by what warrant, and after what example they do not ſhew.

2. The word פקח doth properly refer to opening of the eyes; and it is hard, I believe, to find where it ſignifies any other kind of opening: and therefore the Chaldee Paraphraſt, to cloſe as near with the very propriety of it as he thought the word אסורים would ſuffer him, hath given it אתגלו לנהור revealing to the light.

3. Obſerve that this clauſe in the Prophet is of a higher tenor than that next before; for there was mention of captivity: but here of impriſonment in captivity: for it is a ſad thing to be captived into a ſtrange land, but it is a ſadder to be bound in chains or lockt up in a priſon there. Now the Evangeliſt (as he tranſlates the Prophet) ſpeaks of a higher degree of miſery ſtill, and that is to be impriſoned having his eyes put out, as it was the caſe of Sampſon, Judg. 16.2. and Zedekiah, 2 Kings 25.7. and as it was the cuſtom much in thoſe eaſtern parts, and is at this day in Turkey. The Evangeliſt therefore willing to render the Prophet to the Higheſt comfortable ſenſe that might be, uſeth an expreſſion that meeteth with the higheſt miſery that was couched and included in the word אסורים and that is, when men were not only ſhut up in a blind priſon, where they could ſee no light, but when they had alſo their eyes put out, that they could not ſee light if there were any: He telleth therefore that Chriſt ſhould not only Preach deliverance to captives, but alſo reſtoring of light to captive priſoners, nay yet more, recovery of ſight to blinded priſoners, and ſo doth he ſweetly ſet out Chriſts delivery of men from the captivity of Satan, chains of corruption and blinding of ignorance: and ſo he doth not croſs the Prophets expreſſion, but explain it to the higheſt ſweetneſs.

5. To ſet at liberty them that are bruiſed. This clauſe is not verbatim in that Text in the Prophet, from whence the reſt are alleadged: yet is it generally in all copies here, and in all Tranſlations: How it came into this Text, ſome are very bold and indeed uncivil with the Text, in imagining that it crept in, out of the margin of the Septuagint, being ſet there by ſome body that thought he had met with a fit parallel to that that was in the Text. Sed quiſquis hunc locum primus annotavit ad marginem, ſaith Beza, res ſane diſſimillimas inter ſe comparavit. Poterat autem quiſquis ille fuit alium locum prorſus ſimilem conferre ex cap. 42. 7.

I ſhould rather confeſs my own ignorance and ſay I cannot underſtand how this came into the Text, or rather bewray my own folly in giving ſome conjecture at it ſome other way, than in thus down-right tearms to conclude that it came in from the marginal notes of ſome one or other that knew not well what he noted: I would give ſome aim at it, the reſult whereof ſhall be to the undervaluing of my judgment, rather than thus to determine, to the undervaluing of the ſacred Text.

It was allowed and uſed in their Synagogues, as was toucht even now, in the reading of the Prophets to skip from Text to Text upon occaſion: take the tradition at the full מדלג מענין לענין אחר ואינו מדלג מנביא לנביא אלא בנביאים של יב בלבר ובלבר שלא ידלג מסוף ספר לתחלתו וכל המדלג לא ישהא ברילוג אלא שישלים המתרגם תרגומו He that readeth in the Prophets may skip from one Text to another: but he may not leap out of one Prophet into another, but in the twelve ſmall Prophets only: And he may not leap from the end of a Book to the beginning of it: And whoſoever leapeth thus, muſt not ſtay on the Text whither he skips, longer than the Interpreter gives the interpretaton of it: Maymon. in Tephillah. per. 12.

Now I ſhould rather think that Chriſt as he read in the Prophet, skipped into another Text of the ſame Prophet, and brought it in hither, than to think it crept out of the margin of the Septuagint of I know not whoſe ſetting there. This their skipping from Text to Text in the reading of the Prophets was for nothing elſe but to fetch in another place that ſpake in parallel or in clearing of the Text that they were in reading: And ſo ſince we find Chriſt conforming in many other things to the cuſtom of their Synagogues, why may we not hold that he did the like in this, which was a thing of profitable uſe? He reading therefore upon this clauſe ולאסורים פקח קוח And to thoſe that are bound, opening, opening (for ſo the word is doubled, and ſignifieth the largeſt and freeſt opening that may be) why may we not conceive, that he uſed the דילוג skipping to another Text in the ſame Prophet (as it was ordinary for learned Readers in the Synagogues to do) by which he might clear the ſenſe of this doubled and remarkable word to its full extent?

The words that are here taken in, are found in Eſay 58. 6. one Syllable only changed in the Septuagint from the words uſed by the Evangeliſt: Now by πεθραυσμένους or bruiſed ones is to be underſtood, bruiſed by calamity and miſery, in difference from broken hearted which was uſed before: And ſo the very ſenſe of the place in Eſay, and the uſe of of the world in Deut. 28. 33. do make it apparent without more evidence. Chriſt therefore ſetteth at liberty thoſe that are bruiſed with outward calamities, not only by delivering his people out of their troubles, but by the ſweet comforts of the Goſpel, inlarging their hearts though their perſons be in ſtraits.

Verſ. 19. To preach the acceptable year of the Lord.

This expreſſion alludeth to the proclaiming of the year of Jubilee, that welcome year to poor wretches that were in debt, decay, and ſervitude. There have been ſome in ancient time that from this paſſage have concluded, that Chriſt preached but one year from the beginning of his Miniſtery to his death, which is a matter ſo apparently confuted in the Goſpels that it is needleſs to ſtand about it. If the alluſion to the Jubilee year in the expreſſion, aim at any particular year Chriſts preaching, it referreth to the year of his death, which was not only a year of Jubilee in a ſpiritual ſenſe, (becauſe then there was redemption and reſtoring to a loſt eſtate, and out of ſervitude by his death) but alſo it was a year of Jubilee in the literal and proper ſenſe indeed.

The Jews have ſo jumbled the Jubilees in their writings and conſtructions, and made them ſo faſt and looſe, (and it may be purpoſely, to evade the clear anſwer of the Antitype to the Type in the death of Chriſt on a Jubilee year) that they have left it at a careleſs and indifferent caſt whether there were any Jubilees after a while or no. Aſſoon as the Tribes of Ruben, Gad and Manaſſeth were captived, ſay they, the Jubilee ceaſed. Siphri. in Lev. 15. And, Iſrael numbred ſeventeen Jubilees from their coming into the land, to their going out: and the year that they went out, when the Temple was firſt deſtroyed, was the going out of a ſeventh year of reſt, and it was the thirty ſixth year of the Jubilee. For the firſt Temple ſtood four hundred and ten years, and when it was deſtroyed this counting ceaſed. The ſecond Temple ſtood four hundred and twenty years, and on the ſeventh year from its building Ezra came up, and from that year they began to count again, and made the thirteenth year of the ſecond Temple a year of reſt, and counted ſeven reſts and hallowed the fiftieth year, although there was no Jubilee under the ſecond Temple. The deſtruction of the ſecond Temple was in the going out of a ſeventh year, and it was the fifteenth year of the ninth Jubilee: Maym. in Shemittah. per. 10. & Erachin. per. 2.

But God having appointed ſo full and ſweet a reſemblance of Chriſts redemption, in this Type, as a greater is ſcarcely to be found, he did ſo carry on the chain and bracelet of Jubilees as I may ſo call them, from the time that their accounting for did firſt begin, that many of them were alſo made remarkable with ſome ſingular event, beſide their releaſements, and the laſt of them fell with the year of the death of the Redeemer: as is accutely obſerved by the moſt learned Mr. Broughton who alſo produceth this confeſſion of old Zohar or R. Simeon ben Jochai upon this matter בה תרא שכינתא דרור פרות ושנית לישראל The Divine Majeſty will be to Iſrael in a Jubilee, Freedom, Redemption, and ſimiſher of Sabbath.

But we need not to ſtraiten this acceptable year of the Lord, to that particular year of Chriſts death (though that moſt eminently hath its ſhare in the ſenſe of it) but it may alſo be underſtood of that time that was now begun, of Meſſias his appearing, and the publiſhing of the Goſpel: which preaching of the Goſpel was ſo full and clear an anſwer and Antitype, to the proclaiming of that year with the ſound of the Trumpet, that every one cannot but ſee it: Zohar hath this application of that rite. It is appointed, ſaith he, to blow the Trumpet at the Jubilee: Now as at the blowing of the Trumpet at the Jubilee all ſervants went free הני בפורקנא בתרייתא So at the laſt redemption, at the blowing of a Trumpet, all Iſrael ſhall be gathered from the four ſides of the world, &c. Zohar. in Lev. 25. fol. 53.

Verſ. 20. And cloſing the Book he gave it to the Miniſter.

The Miniſter or ὑπηρέτης here mentioned, was the שליח צבור Angelus Eccleſiæ, of whom we have ſpoken before: When they had done reading, the Angelus Eccleſiæ laid up the Book in its place again. Maym. ubi ſupr. Chriſts ſitting down in the Pulpit when he had done reading (whereas he ſhould have come away to his ſeat in the Church) did cauſe all the Synagogue to eye him, and to expect what he would ſpeak unto them. It was the cuſtom for the Teacher to ſit, as Mark 5. 1. Luke 5. 3. and ſo in their Divinity Schools הרב יושב בראש The Doctor ſate aloft and all his Scholars round about him in a circle, that all might ſee him and hear his words, &c. At the firſt the Maſter ſate and his Scholars ſtood, but before the ſecond Temple was deſtroyed, it came into uſe, that every Maſter taught his Scholars they alſo ſetting. Id. in Talm. torah. per. 4. Which cuſtom came up from the death of Gamaliel the old (Pauls Maſter) whereupon it was ordinarily ſaid, From the death of Rabban Gamaliel the old the glory of the Law ceaſed. Jucajn. fol. 53.

Verſ.

Verſ. 21. This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears, &c.

Chriſt doth openly profeſs himſelf to be that perſon, there foretold of by the Prophet, and at large explaining the Text which he had read (which explanation the Evangeliſt hath not recorded) he declares himſelf who he was, ſo evidently and graciouſly, that even his own Townſmen, who knew his birth and education, could not but acknowledge what he ſpake, and gave teſtimony to his words, they were ſo gracious. And this makes them wonder (comparing his preſent powerful and divine diſcourſe with his mean and homely education) and to be amazed among themſelves, and to ſay, Is not this the ſon of Joſeph? as Mark 6. 2, 3.

Verſ. 23. Ye will ſurely ſay to me this Proverb, &c.

He taketh occaſion of theſe words from their preſent wonderment and queſtioning among themſelves about him. As if he had ſpoken out to them thus at large: Ye look upon me as Joſephs ſon, as one that was bred and brought up among you, and therefore ye will be ready to urge me with the ſenſe of that Proverb, Phyſician heal thy ſelf, and expect that I ſhould do ſome miracles here in mine own Town, as I have done in other places, nay rather in this Town than in others, becauſe of my relation to it.

§ Whatſoever we have heard done in Capernaum.

Janſenius from this paſſage, concludeth that this Sermon of Chriſt in the Synagogue of Nazareth, was not of a great while after his coming into Galilee, but that he had firſt paſſed and preached through Galilee, becauſe as yet according to the order in which we have laid the ſtory, there is but one miracle mentioned that he had done at Capernaum, which was the recovering of the Rulers ſon. Now that miracle was enough to have occaſioned theſe words though he had done no more. But Capernaum was Chriſts very common reſidence upon all occaſions, and it is like he had done divers miracles there, though they be not mentioned: for when he came from Samaria, the Text relateth, that he avoideth his own Town of Nazereth, becauſe he knew that there he ſhould find but cold intertainment and little honour, but that he went into ſome other parts of Galilee, and the Galileans whither he went received him, having ſeen all that he did at Jeruſalem at the Feaſt of the Paſsover, John 4. 44, 45. Now Capernaum was as likely a place whether he would betake himſelf and where he would ſtay if he ſtayed in any City, as any other.

Verſ. 25. When the Heaven was ſhut up three years and ſix months.

This ſum lyeth very obſcure in the Text of the Book of Kings: for there it is only ſaid that Elias ſaid, there ſhall not be dew nor rain theſe years. 1 Kings 17. 2. And that after many days, in the third year Eliah ſhewed himſelf to Ahab, and there was rain, &c. 1 Kings 18. 1, And it were not ſtrange that Chriſt the Lord of time, did for all the difficulty of the Text determine it; but it ſeemeth by his ſpeech to theſe Nazarites, that it was a reckoning and ſum commonly known and received of them. And ſo when the Apoſtle James uſeth the ſame account, James 5. 17. it is likely that he ſpeaketh it to the Jews as a thing acknowledged and confeſſed: But how to pick it up in the Book of Kings, is very intricate to him that ſhall go about it. Yet thus far we may go. 1. That it was a year after the drought began, before the Brook Cerith dried up: for it is ſaid, that at the end of days the Brook dried: now for the word ימים Days, to be uſed for to ſignifie a year, examples might be given exceeding copiouſly. 2. Thoſe words, in the third year God ſaid to Eliah, Go ſhew thy ſelf to Ahab and I will ſend rain: cannot be underſtood of the third year of drought: for this his coming to Ahab was not in the third year but after it, for he had told him there ſhould be no rain השנים האלה theſe three years, at the leaſt, as the learned in the Hebrew tongue will eaſily obſerve, out of the number of the word, which is not dual but plural. And therefore the third year is to be referred to Elias ſojourning with the Sareptane widow. He had been one year by Cherith, and above two years at Sarepta, and after many days in the third year, he ſhews himſelf to Ahab and there were rains.

Now how to bring theſe many days, to half a year is ſtill a ſcruple, how to fix it or to go any whit near thereunto, unleſs it be by caſting the times of the year when the drought began and when it ended: and there might be very probable reaſons produced to ſhew that it began in Autum, and ended in the Spring, which two times were their moſt conſtant times of rains, Joel 2. But truth hath ſpoken it here, and it is not to be diſputed, but only thus much is ſpoken to it, becauſe it ſeemeth that he ſpeaketh it to the the Jews here as men conſenting and agreeing in the thing already: The Rabbins do quaintly deſcant upon the laſt verſe of 1 King. 16. (where there is mention of Hiels building Jericho, and loſing his two ſons in the work according to the word of Joſhua) and the firſt verſe of Chap. 17. where Eliah foretels the reſtraint of rain thus: Ahab and Eliah (ſay they) went to comfort Hiel for the death of his ſons. Ahab ſaid to Elijah, it may be the word of the ſervant [Joſhua] is performed, but the word of the Maſter [Moſes] will not be performed, who ſaith, Ye will turn away and ſerve other Gods, and the anger of the Lord will be kindled againſt you, and he will ſhut up heaven that there be no rain, &c. Thereupon Elias ſwore and ſaid, As the Lord liveth before whom I ſtand, there ſhall be no rain.

This number and term of time, of three years ſix months, (juſt half the time of the famine in Egypt, is very famous and renowned in Scripture) as hath been obſerved before. But in nothing more renowned then this, that it was the term of Chriſts Miniſtery from his Baptiſm to his death, he opening Heaven for three years and ſix months, and raining down the Divine dew of the Goſpel, as Elias had ſhut Heaven ſo long and there was no rain at all.

Verſ. 28. And all they in the Synagogue when they heard theſe things were filled with wrath, &c.

Here is ſuch another change of affection, in theſe Nazarites, one while giving teſtimony to the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth, and preſently ready to murder him for his words, as there was in the men of Lycaonia, Act. 14. who one while would worſhip Paul and Barnabas for Gods, and immediately ſtone them with ſtones. The matter that gave ſuch offence in theſe words of Chriſt to his Countrymen, was double. 1. Becauſe he ſo plainly taught and hinted the calling of the Gentiles and refuſing of the Jews, as was to be ſeen in the double inſtance that he alledged that Elias ſhould harbour no where with any Iſraelite, but ſhould be recommended by God to a heathen widow (for ſo were the Sareptanes being of Sidon): and that not one Iſraelite leper ſhould ever be healed, but Naaman a Heathen Syrian ſhould be. This doctrine about the calling of the Gentiles was a matter that the Jews could never hear of with patience, but it did provoke them, Deut. 32.21. This made Jonah to out-run his errand, and to flee to Tarſus when he ſhould have gone to Nineveh, becauſe it vexed him at heart to be any means of the converſion of the Gentiles, upon this conſideration, that the coming in of the Gentiles would be the caſting off of his own people: which before he will be an inſtrument of, he will outrun God he knows not whether; The Jews expreſs his fancy pertinently thus: חבע כבוד הבן לא חבע כבוד האב He was careful of the honour of [Iſrael] the child, but he was not careful of the honour of [God] the Father. This made the Jews of Jeruſalem to rage for madneſs when Paul did but ſpeak unto them of going to the Gentiles, Act. 22.21. And 2. another thing that incenſed theſe people of Nazareth was, that Chriſt did refuſe to do any miracles amongſt them, which they knew he did not refuſe to do in other places; and that his refuſal was backed with ſuch a compariſon of them, as that he doth compare them with Iſrael when it was at the wickedeſt, for ſo it was in the days of Elias and Eliſha, under Ahab and his wretched Generation. Now our Saviour in this his refuſal and in theſe his words, doth but by the Nazarites as he did by the Syrophenician woman afterwards: he called her dog, and at firſt denied her petition, but afterward upon her importunity conſented to her and received her to favour: and ſo his firſt refuſal was not a reſolved rejection of her, but a trial: Such another was his ſpeech here: but it was not ſo digeſted by his Countrymen: for they in diſdain to be ſo likened and ſpoken to, when the Synagogue ſervice was done, lay hold upon him, and would have thrown him headlong from the rock: but he by a Divine power and work, delivers himſelf out of their hands: And thus hath poor and wretched Nazareth undone it ſelf.

SECTION XVIII.

St. MATTH. Chap.IV. Verſ. 13.

AND leaving Nazareth he came and (a) dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the Sea coaſt, in the borders of Zabulon and (b) Nephthali.

St. LUKE Chap. IV. Verſ. 31.

AND he came down to Capernaum a City of Galilee.

14. That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by Eſaias the Prophet, ſaying,

15. The land of Zabulon and the land of Nephthali, by the way of the Sea beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles.

16. The people which ſat in darkneſs ſaw great light, and to them which ſat in the region and ſhadow of death, light is ſprung up.

(a) Κατῴκησεν εἰς Καπερναὺμ as Κατῴκησεν εἰς Ναζαρέθ. Matth. 2. 23.

(b) Gr. Νεφθαλείμ, according as the Septuag. reads the word in Eſays Text, though generally it read it otherwiſe in other places: the Evangeliſt John reads it Νεφθαλεὶμ alſo *Rev.*7.6. which is the Plural abſolute, in ſtead of the Plural contracted נפתלי for נפתלים.

Reaſon of the Order.

THE paſſage in the preceding Section, concerning the unkindneſs and madneſs of his Townſmen of Nazareth, and concerning the danger of his perſon by them, doth ſo clear the dependence of this Section on that, that there needs no more for the proof of the dependence, than meerly laying them together: For although Matthew hath not mentioned the occaſion of his leaving of Nazareth, yet Luke hath, and hath added, that he got from among the men of Nazareth, and came down to Capernaum: and ſo he hath not only cleared Matthews order, but hath alſo expounded his words, And leaving Nazareth: ſhewing the reaſon of his leaving it.

Harmony and Explanation.

Matth.4. verſ.13. And leaving Nazareth, &c.

AH unhappy Nazareth, the firſt refuſer and the firſt refuſed of Meſſias: the baniſher and perſecutor of thine own happineſs and glory! Here Chriſt had been brought up and lived ſix or ſeven and twenty years together, from his return out of Egypt, till the time of his Baptiſm, and he honoured the Town with his Title and Epithet Jeſus of Nazareth, but Nazareth will not retain him, much leſs honour him: So Moſes was refuſed of his Brethren, and glad to flee upon their repulſe, Act. 7. but the loſs theirs, ſo the miſery Nazareths: we read not that Chriſt ever came to this Town again or ever owned it: but betook himſelf to Capernaum, for his habitation, where we conjectured before, that his Father Joſeph had ſome poſſeſſion or habitation. And thus is Nazareth caſt down to Hell, and Capernaum lifted up to Heaven, if it can improve the happineſs now offered to it: Luke ſaith he came down to Capernaum, either as any journies in Scripture are indifferently called going down or going up, or as men are ſaid to go down to the Sea or the Sea ſhore, as *Pſal.*107.23. *Jon.*1.3.

Verſ. 15. The land of Zabulon and the land of Nephthali, &c.

The words are cited from Eſay 9.1. as it is well enough known, but with ſo much difference as that it cannot but challenge conſideration and obſerving: It may not be amiſs to take up Eſays Text verbatim firſt, and to ſee its meaning; and then to compare this quotation with it.

The Prophet in the latter end of the ſeventh Chapter had threatned ſad but deſerved miſery upon thoſe that ſhould tranſgreſs the Law and Teſtimony, that they ſhould be hard beſtead, hungry, ſeeing nothing but trouble, darkneſs, darkneſs of anguiſh, and they ſhall be driven to darkneſs, and then he comes on in the firſt verſe of the ninth Chapter לא מועף לאשר מוצק לה For that dimneſs or darkneſs ſhall not be ſuch as was in her vexation when the firſt lightly afflicted the land of Zabulon and the land of Nephthali, or when the latter did afflict more heavily the way of the Sea, the Country beyond Jordan, and Galilee of the Gentiles: That people that walked in darkneſs ſaw great light, &c.

The

The intention of the Prophet in this passage, is to proclaim a greater calamity darkness, and vexation to befal the contemners of Emanuel and his Testimony or Gospel, than did befal the parts and people here mentioned, in their captivity either by the first or second captiver, for the breach of the Law: The first captiver was Benhadad the King of Syria, who smote Jion, Dan, Abel-beth-maachath and all Cinneroth and all the land of Nephthali, 1 King. 15.20. and this was a sad and a heavy affliction in it self, but it was but easie, and he did but lightly afflict, in comparison of what a latter Captiver or another Kingdom did, namely the Assyrian, who took Jion, Abel-beth-maachah, Janoah, Kedesh, Hazor, and Gilead and Galilee, all the land of Nephthali, and carried them away captive to Assyria, 2 King. 15. 29. And carried away the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half Tribe of Manasseh, 1 Chron. 5. 26. Yet is not the calamity and misery of these people and places equal to the misery of the despisers of the Gospel and of Christ: for these places saw light again after their captivity, but those shall be driven to utter darkness. And thus doth the Prophet these two main things in this Propheſie: 1. He foretelleth the first appearing and arising of the Gospel, in these places where captivity first appeared: And 2. He denounceth a sadder plague to befal those places and all other among the Jews for despising the Gospel, than what had befallen them for despising the Law and breaking the commandments: and Nazareth in the foregoing Section doth first visibly fall under that plague. And now according to this first scope and intention of the Prophet, our Evangelist in the allegation of his Text doth most pertinently fix upon those words that do most properly hold out that sense or prediction, of the Gospel beginning where the captivity first began: He omitteth the words in the Prophet that import the forepast misery of these places, for his aim is at their light and happiness to come: And he medleth not with those words that compare the misery to come, of those that should despise the Gospel, with the misery that those places had past, for he intends the Gospels first appearing, and not the Gospels last despising, and therefore he leaveth out all the first part of the verse, and takes up only with the latter which only speaketh to his purpose. And such another abridgment may be observed in Hosea: who when he is speaking of Israels and Judahs sins, misery and rejection, he calls them Lo-ammi, and Lo-ruchamah, No people and Not pitied, Hos. 1.6.9. But when he is speaking of their conversion and calling home, he leaves the first word or syllable out which carried a sense contrary to the scope that he had then in hand, and he calls them Ammi and Ruchamah: A people and Pitied, Hos. 2.1.

The land of Zabulon, &c. In Esays Hebrew the word the land is in the accusative case, as following a verb that went before it, but the Evangelist hath set it in the nominative case as going before the verb that next comes after, to be construed in this sense. The land of Zabulon and the land of Nephthali, That people saw great light, &c.

§. By the way of the Sea.

Ὁδὸν θαλάσσης in the Greek: Κατὰ or σὺς being understood according to an usual Hebrew Idiom: In the Text of the Prophet this clause and the rest that follow, lie in this sense: The latter Captiver did heavily afflict the way of the Sea, or those places that lay upon the Sea coast; he did heavily afflict the coast beyond Jordan, and he did heavily afflict Galilee of the Gentiles. But in the Text of the Evangelist it is sweetly changed to this comfortable tune: The land of Zabulon and Nephthali, which are by the way of Sea, or on the Sea-coasts, And also Peræa, or the Country which lies beyond Jordan: and likewise Galilee of the Gentiles, or the upper Galilee, even the people of all these several places saw great light, &c. And thus the clauses of the Text being severed and considered apart, as they ought to be, (for there is only a want of the conjunction, which is a thing most usual in the Hebrew tongue) the sense lies clear and facil; where as some expositors jumbling them altogether as if they spake but of one place, have intricated and perplexed the sense, and have been necessitated to make bold with the language to put a construction upon some part of it, which it is very unwilling and not used to bear. And so they will have πέραν Ἰορδάνου to be not trans but secus Jordanem, and to be the land of Zabulon and Nephthali: and Galilee of the Gentiles to be the land of Zabulon and Nephthali too, and they clutter all together in the land of Zabulon and Nephthali; not distinguishing where they should distinguish, between Galilee superior (or Galilee of the Gentiles,) and Galilee inferior (or the land of Zabulon and Nephthali) and Peræa (or the Country and Region of the two Tribes and half that lay beyond Jordan) In these three several Regions had the captiver afflicted, and captivity had begun: In Galilee Superior or Galilee of the Gentiles at the taking of Jion, Dan, Abel-beth-Maachah, &c. In the lower Galilee at the taking all Nephthali; and in the Country beyond Jordan in the taking of Gilead, and carrying away the Reubenites, Gadites, and half Tribe of Manasseh: as the Texts alledged ere while do give testimony: And answerably, in these three Regions did the Gospel appear most radiantly, even in Christs own Ministry and his presence there, as may be observed copiously in the

The Chaldee Paraphraſt tranſlates this paſſage of the Prophet exceeding ſtrangely, he gives it thus: For none ſhall be weary that ſhall come to afflict them, as at the firſt time the People of the land of Zabulon and the people of the land of Nephthali were captived: and as for the reſt a mighty King ſhall captive them, becauſe they remembred not the mighty power at the Sea, the wonders at Jordan, and the war with the Cities of the Nations. The people of the Houſe of Iſrael, that walked in Ægypt as in darkneſs, came forth to ſee a great light, &c. How the Septuagint hath ſpoiled the ſenſe of the verſe in the Prophet, by pulling it too much in pieces, as many expoſitors have done by crowding it too much together, I ſhall not trouble the Reader with inſtance, the learned will obſerve it of themſelves.

§. Beyond Jordan.

This is to be taken as an intire clauſe of it ſelf: and neither to be joyned with that that went before, nor that that follows after. And therefore it is but a needleſs pains which Beza ſpends, to prove that περαν here ſignifies ſecus, not beyond but along Jordan, which he could never be able to prove: and ſo he would have Zabulon and Nephthali to be περαν Ἰορδάνου, not minding the tautology, of ὁδὸν θαλάσσης, & περαν Ἰορδάνου if they were ſo to be applied to one place and thing, nor obſerving the Prophets aim in theſe various expreſſions which he uſeth in the Text.

§. Galilee of the Gentiles.

Here the conjunction and is to be underſtood, as it is ordinary in the holy language to leave it out, and yet to underſtand it as was ſaid before.

Now as for the title of Galilee of the Gentiles, it was not the appellation of all Galilee wholly, but of a part of it, namely that which was called the upper: Obſerve Joſephus his diviſion of theſe two, and their common diſtinct names, in theſe words of his, in Vita ſua, πᾶς τε κύκλῳ τὸν ἄνω Γαλιλαίαν κώμας ἐπίσχοσα: ὀχυρώσας δὲ πόλεις ἐν τῇ Γαλιλαίᾳ, &c. The Towns in the upper Galilee I walled, and the Cities and Towns in Galilee I fortified: The lower he calls Galilee only, and the other he calls Galilee the upper. And ſo ran the diſtinction, there was Galilee and Galilee of the Gentiles: that is indeed Galilee the lower and the upper.

Verſ. 16. The people ſat in darkneſs, &c.

In the Hebrew of Eſay it is, The people which walked in darkneſs, and ſo it is uttered alſo by the Septuagint, but our Evangeliſt, hath expreſſed it, The people which ſat, according to the ſenſe of the Prophet though not according to his ſyllables.

To ſit or To walk in Scripture when they are uſed in a borrowed ſenſe, do indifferently ſignifie To be or To continue, as *Gen.*15.2. I walk childleſs, *Lam.*1.1. The City ſitteth ſolitary, &c. And in ſuch a ſenſe are the words of the Prophet and the Evangeliſts to be taken. The people that have been and continued in darkneſs, &c.

The people here ſpoken of, may generally mean all the dark people and places of the world whither the Goſpel ſhould come: but more eſpecially it is to be underſtood of the people of thoſe places that are mentioned immediately before: And ſo the next verſe in the Prophet may be interpreted according to that reſtriction to thoſe places and people. Thou haſt increaſed the Nation, in reſtoring thoſe places to be peopled again, but thou haſt not increaſed their joy, in that they ſit ſtill in darkneſs of ignorance and error: yet the time ſhall come when they ſhall rejoyce before thee as the joy in harveſt, &c. Or if this verſe in hand be conſtrued largely of all Nations ſeeing light by the Goſpel, then that verſe may be underſtood thus, that the Nation of Iſrael was increaſed when the Gentiles came in, as *Hoſ.*1.11. but the joy of the Jews was not increaſed by it, for the calling of the Gentiles was their vexation, God angring them by a fooliſh Nation: But in the Hebrew there is a double reading לא Not, in the Text, and לו To him or it, in the margin, which latter is followed by the Chaldee, which if it be imbraced the words carry no difficulty with them, applied to the joy that the increaſe of the Church and light of the Goſpel ſhould bring to every true Iſraelite.

SECTION

SECTION XIX.

St. LUKE Chap. V.

NOW it came to pass as the people pressed on him to hear the Word of God, he stood by the lake of Gennesareth.

2. And saw two ships standing by the lake: but the fisher-men were gone out of them, and were washing their nets.

3. And he entred into one of the ships which was Simons, and prayed him that he would thrust out a little from the land: and he sat down and taught the people out of the ship.

4. Now when he had left speaking, he said unto Simon, Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught.

5. And Simon answering, said unto him, Master, we have toiled all the night and taken nothing: nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net.

6. And when they had done this, they inclosed a great multitude of fishes, and their net brake.

7. And they beckned unto their partners which were in the other ship, that they should come and help them. And they came and filled both the ships, so that they began to sink.

8. When Simon Peter saw it he fell down at Jesus knees saying, Depart from me, for I am a sinful man O Lord.

9. For he was astonished and all that were with him, at the draught of the fishes which they had taken.

10. And so was also James and John the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And Jesus said unto Simon, Fear not, for from henceforth thou shalt catch men.

11. And when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook all and followed him.

St. MATTH. Chap. IV.

Vers. 17.

FROM that time Jesus began to preach and to say, Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand.

18. And Jesus walking by the Sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the Sea (for they were fishers.)

19. And he saith unto them: Follow me and I will make you fisher of men.

20. And they straightway left their nets and followed him.

21. And going on from thence he saw other two brethren James the son of Zebedee and John his brother, in a ship with Zebedee their father, mending their nets, and he called them.

22. And they immediately lift the ship and their Father, and followed him.

St. MARK Chap. I.

Vers. 14.

JESUS came into Galilee preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom of God.

15. And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdom of God is at hand, repent ye and believe the Gospel.

16. Now as he walked by the Sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the Sea, (for they were fishers.)

17. And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men.

18. And straightway they forsook their nets, and followed him.

19. And when he had gone a little further thence, he saw James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, who also were in the ship mending their nets.

20. And straightway he called them, and they left their father Zebedee in the ship with the hired servants, and went after him.

Reason

Reaſon of the Order.

THERE is not ſo much doubtfulneſs of the ſubſequence of this Section, or at the leaſt of ſome of it, to the Section preceding (for the tranſition in Matthew doth make it clear) as there is of ſomething contained within the Section it ſelf. Luke had related Chriſts unkind uſage and danger by his Townſmen of Nazareth, and that thereupon he ſlipt away from them and went to Capernaum: There Matthew takes at him, and tells how divinely that Propheſie of Eſay came now to be fulfilled by his dwelling in thoſe parts, The land of Zabulon and the land of Nephthali, &c. And then he comes on with a ſpecial note of conjuction of the ſtories, From that time Jeſus began to preach, &c. And how Mark doth joyn with him in bringing on this ſtory before us, in the preſent Section, though he doth it very briefly, not mentioning any of his actions in Galilee till this in hand, yet is it ſo apparent and conſpicuous that there needeth nothing to be ſaid of it: But in the body of the Section now under hand lie theſe two queries.

Queſt. 1. Whether is this ſtory in Luke about Peter, and Zebedees ſons, the ſame with that in Matthew and Mark? For ſome particular circumſtances do ſeem to difference them: as whereas Matthew and Mark ſay Jeſus was walking by the Sea of Galilee and ſaw Peter and Andrew caſting a net into the Sea and called them, Luke relates how he was in Peters ſhip, and ſpake to him to caſt his net into the Sea, &c. Again Matthew and Mark ſay, when he had gone a little further he ſaw James and John mending their nets, &c. but Luke relateth that James and John came up to Peters ſhip, where Jeſus was to help to draw up the great draught of fiſhes that was taken, &c.

Anſw. Now though there ſeem to be theſe different, yea contrary circumſtances in the Evangeliſts relation, yet is the ſtory but one and the ſame, but only related more largely by Luke than by the other: The texture of it may be taken up thus: As Jeſus walked along the Sea ſhore of Genneſareth, and the people preſſed on him to hear the word, he ſtepped into Peters ſhip and there taught: and having ended his ſpeech he cauſeth Peter to caſt down his net for a draught, and he had a great one; (this is that that Matthew and Mark ſpeak of when they ſay, He ſaw Peter and Andrew caſting a net into the Sea, they ſpeaking ſhort, and Luke giving the ſtory in its full relation) Peter unable to manage ſo great a draught, beckens for James and John to come and help him, which they did: upon the draught Chriſt calls Peter to be a fiſher of men, and he lands and follows him: But James and John returning to their ſtation and to mend their nets, as he comes by he calls them and they follow him alſo: And thus is the ſtory at large as it may be compoſed out of all the three, one helping to explain another, and all relating but the ſame ſtory.

Queſt. 2. If this order of St. Luke be proper, as that this action of our Saviour in calling theſe Diſciples, muſt come ſo near his coming to Capernaum as Matthew hath laid it, how is it that Luke hath laid two miracles done in Capernaum before this ſtory, viz. the caſting out a Devil in Capernaum Synagogue, and healing Peters wifes mother? Chap. 4. 33.38. which Mark hath placed after the ſtory of the calling of Peter and the other fiſhers; and ſo it may ſeem to be after their call, and this ſtory in Luke to be after thoſe miracles, and another ſtory different from that, of their call.

Anſw. Mark, whoſe method of all the three Evangeliſts is moſt conſtantly according to the order of time in which things were done, hath given one undoubted hint of the order of this ſtory, that it was before the two miracles done there, for when he hath related the calling of the Diſciples, he ſaith, And they, that is, Chriſt and theſe Diſciples now called, went in to Capernaum, verſ. 21. And Matthew alſo in laying the healing of Peters mother in law, (which was one of the miracles mentioned) ſo very far after the ſtory of the Diſciples called, doth alſo confirm this method that it was not before.

Now, two things are obſervable in St. Luke as to his method: 1. That Chriſt refuſed to do any miracles in his own Town of Nazareth, though they expected he ſhould ſhew ſome great works there) as he had done in Capernaum: Not that he would have refuſed Nazareth, had not Nazareth refuſed him, as was ſaid before, bt that he would by that his ſpeech have made them to have cloſed with him the more. But now that that Town had ſo baſely and ſo cruelly caſt him off (as that if they could they would have caſt him down a rock) the Holy Ghoſt doth preſently ſet down what he did in Capernaum, as by the one ſtory to ſet off the other the more: to ſhew what Nazareth had loſt by what Capernaum had gained. And whereas in Nazareth Synagogue, he had had ſo little reſpect and intertainment, Luke hath preſently ſhewed, that yet he taught conſtantly in Capernaum, and there found more acceptance, and they found benefit, for there he wrought a miracle. 2. The Evangeliſts aim to the end of the Chapter is apparently this, to ſet forth Chriſts Preaching and Miniſtration in the Synagogues of Galilee upon his return thither: He lays his groundwork at verſ. 14, 15. Jeſus returned returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee, and he taught in their Synagogues: And then he dilateth upon that relation: as firſt that he taught in the Synagogue of Nazareth, and there he was ill uſed, and thence he went to the Synagogue of Capernaum, and there he caſt out a Devil, and then he went over the Synagogues of Galilee: And having given this account of what he intended, namely to ſpeak of Chriſts publick and open Miniſtery in the Synagogues, then he cometh to his more particular actions and demeanour: And being in ſpeech of Capernaum Synagogue, he mentioneth two miracles done there, ſomewhat before the proper order of their time, becauſe having no more to ſay of that Town of a long ſpace he would conclude all the occurrences there now altogether.

Harmony and Explanation.

AS Moſes, David, Eliſha, and Amos were called from their mean and homely imployment, of feeding ſheep and following the plow, to thoſe great functions in which they were ſo eminent and renowned afterwards: ſo are theſe four, (the chiefeſt of Chriſts Diſciples, if we may think of any Diſparity in that glorious ſociety) called from a mean and poor vocation of catching fiſh in the Sea of Genneſareth, to the high and honourable imployment of catching ſouls with the net of the Goſpel, See 1 *Cor.*1.27,28.

Galilee as baſe as it was in the repute of the Jews of Judea, Joh. 7.52. yet had it been renowned in many atchievements, and for ſeveral occurrences, and now was come to be moſt honourable of all other places for the reſidence of Chriſt, and original of the Goſpel. Moſes had foretold that Zabulon and Iſſachar, Galileans, ſhould call the people unto the mountain of the Lords houſe to offer Sacrifices of righteouſneſs, *Deut.*33.19. And Jacob before him, That Nephthali the Galilean ſhould give goodly words, Gen. 49.21. Both evident and glorious predictions of this original of the Goſpel in both places. Zabulon and Nephthali had done renownedly in the overthrow of Siſera, Judg. 5. 18. and in the wars of Gideon, *Judg.*6.35. ſee alſo 1 *Chron.*12.33,34. &c.

Matth. 4. verſ. 17. From that time Jeſus began to preach, &c.

There are two dates to be conjoyned from which this preaching of our Saviour is dated by the Evangeliſt, and both which he intimateth and mentioneth in the verſes before. 1. From Johns impriſonment verſ. 12. for when he had now run his race, and prepared what people he could for Chriſts appearing, and ſealed his Miniſtery with ſuffering, then from that time beginneth Chriſt moſt plainly to ſhew himſelf, and to preach the Goſpel. 2. When he was now come into Galilee into thoſe parts, where captivity firſt began, and where it was foretold that comfort and appearance of redemption ſhould firſt begin alſo: It is indeed a good ſpace of time ſince John was ſhut up in priſon, for Chriſt ſince that had come out of Judea, been in Samaria, travailed in Galilee, and been refuſed at Nazareth, and yet till now he beginneth not to preach that the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand. Becauſe he would firſt try what intertainment would be given to the Goſpel of the Kingdom, before he declares how near that Kingdom is to come.

Mark 1. verſ. 15. Saying, The time is fulfilled.

Queſt. 1. Why was it ſo long in the age of the world, as that almoſt four thouſand years of it were expired before Chriſt came, and before the Kingdom of Heaven did appear? Had it not been more agreeable to the end for which Chriſt came, which was to ſave ſinners and to call the Gentiles, for him to have come ſooner, and nearer the time when ſin began, and the Gentiles were caſt off, than to ſuffer the one to grow ſo much and the other to periſh ſo long ere he appeared?

Anſw. Aquinas diſputeth this point, *part.*3. *queſt.*1. Art. 5. and he giveth theſe anſwers. 1. It was not convenient that Chriſt ſhould appear ſo very ſoon after ſin was entred into the world, becauſe it was needful, that man by the Law, ſhould firſt be taught to know his own eſtate and miſery, and to ſee the need he had of the great Phyſitian. 2. Becauſe it was needful that he that was the great Lord and Judge, ſhould have his harbengers and meſſengers to be ſent before him, as the Prophets were, before he himſelf came: other reaſons he giveth, but theſe two are of the greateſt weight. To which may be added. 3. That the coming of Chriſt, and preaching of the Goſpel as it was the higheſt mercy, that could be ſhewed to mankind, ſo it was laſt to be ſhewed, as the laſt trial, whereby the Lord would ſee what was in man, and how he would intertain this greateſt mercy: God had tried the world before with divers trials, the light of nature, the promiſe of Chriſt, a publick ſervice, a ſucceſſion of Prophets, &c. (for Iſrael to whom theſe things were allowed were as the Epitome of the world) but all theſe things being abuſed, there was but one trial more, the Lord ſaid, I will ſend my ſon, they will ſurely reverence my ſon, &c.

Queſt. 2. Why did Chriſt appear at that very time of the world rather than any other?

Anſw. 1. As Chriſt came a deliverer from ſin, ſo he appeared when ſin was at the higheſt (ſo the Jews obſerve from Eſa. 63. 5.) for if ever it were at height in the world, it was then. Not only among the Gentiles (the Romans, the wicked and bloody Nation, being now as high in all manner of impiety as they were in power) but even among the Jews, they having after all other their ſins, and killing of the Prophets, even killed the Scriptures and the Word of God by their irreligious and accurſed traditions. It was not only ſeaſonable, but it was time for Chriſt to come to revive the Scriptures, which were thus murdered. 2. The Jews were now in as great bondage, or greater than ever they had been, both ſpiritually and bodily: for they were not only inſlaved in their ſouls by blind Teachers, but their outward man was under the double bondage, of the Romans and of Herod. He of the poſterity of curſed and hated Edom, and they the great afflicter, that had now laid that yoke upon the Nation, that it muſt never come from under till Jeruſalem be deſtroyed. 3. The Antichriſtian Nation or that ſtate that was to be the continual Ἀντικείμενος or oppoſer againſt the truth, was now riſen, and the wiſdom of God diſpoſed that the Goſpel and this enemy ſhould riſe together.

Now therefore when Chriſt thus began to declare himſelf, the time was fulfilled. 1. Which God from the foundation of the world had determined for this great occaſion. 2. Which all the Prophets did point out and foretel of the coming of the righteous one. 3. Which the Jews themſelves had in expectation. 4. The laſt days were come (to which the Prophets ſtill pointed in their predictions concerning his appearing, as Eſa. 2. 2. Mic. 4. 1. &c.) namely the laſt days of Jeruſalem, for ſhe was now come under the bondage of that Nation that was to be her ruine. And 5. Elias, Baptiſt, was come and had run his courſe.

6. And the Kingdom of God is at hand, Repent ye and believe the Goſpel.

Matth. 4. verſ. 17. Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand.

1. Both Chriſt and John the Baptiſt uſe this ſame doctrine and argumentation, Matth. 3. 2. not only exhorting to repentance becauſe of the neceſſity of the thing it ſelf, but alſo perſuading it from this reaſon, becauſe The Kingdom of Heaven was at hand. For 1. That was the peoples great expectation, Luke 2 25. 38. & 19. 11. Mark 15. 43. And 2. It was their own opinion that their Redemption by Meſſias muſt be upon their repentance: This point is diſputed at large by the Gemariſts in the Treatiſe Sankedrin per. 10. and David Kimchi on Eſay 59. 16. His words, for he alleadgeth the words of the other, are to this purpoſe. And he ſaw that there was no man, &c. Behold we find in the Law this ſaying, And thou ſhalt return unto the Lord thy God, and ſhalt hearken to his voice: And he ſaith alſo: And the Lord thy God ſhall turn thy captivity and ſhall pity thee. And ſo he ſaith likewiſe: And from thence ye ſhall ſeek the Lord thy God, and thou ſhalt find him if thou ſeek him with all thy heart and with all thy ſoul. Behold the gathering of their captivity ſhall be by the means of repentance. Now whereas Eſay ſaith, And he ſaw that there was no man, therefore his own arm brought Salvation, &c. And ſo likewiſe, And I looked and there was none to help, &c. And he ſaith, I have ſeen his ways. And whereas Ezekiel ſaith. Not for your ſakes do I this O houſe of Iſrael, &c. And again, I will bring you from among the people. And yet again, I will purge out from among you the rebels and them that tranſgreſs againſt me, I will bring them out of the Country where they ſojourn, and they ſhall not enter into the land of Iſrael. And alſo in the Law he ſaith, I will remember for them the former Covenant, &c. It may ſeem that they come not forth upon their own goodneſs, but upon the mercy of God, and the goodneſs of their Fathers. And alſo by the words of our Rabbins of bleſſed memory we find, that they were intricated about this matter, whether they ſhould come forth by means of repentance or no. For they ſay thus, Rabbi Jochanan ſaith, The ſon of David cometh not, but either in a generation all righteous, or a generation all wicked. In a generation all wicked as it is ſaid, And he ſaw that there was no man and wondered that there was no Interceſſour, and then it follows, Therefore his own arm brought Salvation: In a generation all righteous, as it is written, Thy people are all righteous, they ſhall inherit the land for ever. They ſay moreover thus. Rabbi Joſhua ben Levi ſaith, It is written, Behold one like the ſon of man came with the clouds of Heaven, And it is alſo written, Lowly and riding upon an Aſſe. Now how agrees this, If they be good he comes with the clouds of Heaven, If they be not good, then lowly and riding upon an Aſs? Alſo in their words Rabbi Eliezer ſaith, If Iſrael repent, they are preſently redeemed. Rabbi Joſhua ſaith to him, And is it not ſomewhere ſaid, Ye were ſold for nought and ye ſhall not be redeemed with ſilver: but by repentance and good works? So that we ſee that they

ſcrupled amongſt themſelves, whether the gathering of the captivity ſhould be by the means of repentance or no. And the reaſon of this was becauſe of the diverſity of theſe Texts. But it is poſſible thus to reconcile them: That many of Iſrael ſhall repent after that they ſee ſome ſigns of redemption. And hereupon it is ſaid, And he ſaw that there was no man: becauſe they will not repent till they ſee the beginning of redemption.

In ſuch a ſenſe did the Jewiſh Nation hold repentance, an ingredient to the entertainment of the Kingdom of Heaven when it ſhould appear, and ſo both our Saviour and John the Baptiſt, in this argumentation, Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand, do but apply themſelves to them even upon their own doctrines and concluſions: Now whereas we ſaid, in the explanation of the ſtory of Nicodemus, that they expected that the appearing of the Meſſias would take them as they were, and that without more ado they ſhoul be tranſlated into a glorious condition, and happineſs ſhould drop into their mouths; it doth not croſs it though it be ſaid here, that they had thoughts of repentance as an ingredient to the intertainment of Meſſiah when he came, for exceeding many of them thought they needed no repentance, and for thoſe that needed, they allotted ſuch a kind of repentance, as we ſhall ſee by and by, as was far from any inward alteration of ſpirit or change of mind.

3. Nor doth this manner of arguing, Repent, becauſe the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand, ſuit only with the Jews own maxim and opinion, and ſo might convince and win them the ſooner, but it alſo agrees moſt properly with the nature of the Kingdom of Heaven it ſelf. For 1. if by the term be underſtoood the coming and appearing of the Meſſias (as that indeed is the firſt ſenſe of it) what fitter intertainment of his appearing than repentance? For men, when he came to ſave them from their ſins, Matth. 1. 18. to repent of their ſins, and when he came as the true light, they to forſake their dark ways: And when the Lord by the appearance of Chriſt for mans redemption, did ſhew as it were that he repented of evil againſt man, how fit was it for man to meet this great mercy by repenting of his own evil? And 2. If the term the Kingdom of Heaven be taken for the ſtate of the Church and Religion under the appearance of Chriſt and the Goſpel in compariſon of what it was under the Ceremonious adminiſtrations in the Law, there could be no fitter intertainment of it than by repentance, namely by waſhing, purifying and ſacrificing the heart, when there was no other waſhing, purifying or ſacrificing in Religion to be had, and ſuch external Ceremonies ſhould be gone out of date. 3. And laſtly, if by this phraſe, be meant the Kingdom of Chriſt among the Gentiles, and their calling by the Goſpel (as it alſo reacheth that ſenſe) it was a proper kind of arguing uſed to the Jews to move them to repentance, by minding them of the calling of the Gentiles, whoſe calling in, they knew would be their own caſting off, if they repented not.

II. A ſecond thing worth our conſideration in this our Saviours doctrine, is the word by which he calleth for repentance. What Syriack word he uſed ſpeaking that language it is uncertain (the Syriack tranſlater uſeth תובו Return or be converted) but the word which the Holy Ghoſt hath left us in the Original Greek Μετανοεῖτε is exceeding ſignificant and pertinent to that doctrine and occaſion. The word is frequently uſed in the Septuagint, concerning God, when he is ſaid to repent or not repent, as 1 Sam. 15. 29. Jer. 3. 9. Amos 7. 3. 6. &c. but the uſe of it applied to man is not ſo frequent in them, as of the word ἐπιστρέφειν, & ἐπιστρέφειν ἀπὸ καρδίας as Ezek. 18. 30. becauſe that word doth moſt Grammatically and verbatim tranſlate the word שובו, which is the word moſt commonly uſed in the Hebrew, for Repenting, and yet do the Septuagint ſometimes uſe Μετανοεῖν for mans repentance, as Jer. 8. 6. &c.

The word doth firſt ſignifie a reviewing or conſidering of a mans own ſelf and condition, as Lam. 3. 40. and ſo Brucioli doth render it in the Italian, Ravedete vi, view your ſelves, or take your ſelves into conſideration. Secondly, it betokeneth a growing wiſe, or coming to ones ſelf again, as Luk. 15. 1. 7. and thereupon it is well rendred by our Proteſtant Divines, Reſipicite, Be wiſe again, for ſo the word were to be conſtrued in its ſtrict propriety. And thirdly it ſignifieth a change of mind, from one temper to another.

Now the Holy Ghoſt by a word of this ſignificancy, doth give the proper and true character of repentance, both againſt the miſpriſions that were taken up concerning it, by their traditions in thoſe times, and thoſe alſo that have been taken up ſince. The Jews did place much of repentance in a bare confeſſion of the offence, and much of pardon, in the Scapegoats ſending away, and in the ſervice of the day of Expiation, and much in induring the penalty inflicted by the Judges; And undoubted pardon at the day of death: We will take their mind in their own words. He that tranſgreſſeth againſt an affirmative command and returns preſently, he ſtirs not till God pardon him, and of ſuch it is ſaid, Return O ye backſliding children, and I will heal your backſlidings. He that offends againſt a negative command, repentance keeps him off from puniſhment, and the day of Expiation atones for him, and of ſuch it is ſaid, For to day he will expiate: But he by whom the name of Heaven is blaſphemed, repentance hath no power to ſhield him from puniſhment, nor the day of Expiation to atone for him, nor chaſtiſements by the Judges to acquit him. But repentance and the day of Expiation, do expiate a third part, and chaſtiſements a third part, and death a third part. And of ſuch it is ſaid, If this iniquity be purged till you dye, Behold we learn that death acquitteth. Talm. Jeruſ. in Sanhedr. fol. 27. Obſerve by the way, how directly our Saviour faceth this opinion, when he ſaith the blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt ſhall neither be forgiven in this life nor in the life to come, Matth. 12.32. that is, no not by the expiation of death as they conceived. Now what a kind of repentance they mean, we may obſerve by ſuch like paſſages as theſe. All the commandments of the Law, be they preceptive or prohibitive, if a man tranſgreſs againſt any of them, either erring or preſuming, when he repents and turns from his ſin he is bound to make confeſſion: Whoſoever brings a ſin or treſpaſs offering for his error, or preſumption, his ſin is not expiated by his offering, until he make a verbal confeſſion: And whoſoever is guilty of death or of whipping by the Sanhedrin, his ſin is not expiated by his whipping or his death, unleſs he repent and make a confeſſion: And becauſe the Scapegoat is an atonement for all Iſrael, the High Prieſt maketh a confeſſion for all Iſrael over him. The Scapegoat expiateth for all tranſgreſſions mentioned in the Law, be they great or little. Maym. in Teſhubah per. 1.

This their wild doctrine about repentance and pardon being conſidered, in which they place ſo much of the one and the other in ſuch things, as that the true affectedneſs of the heart for ſin or in ſeeking of pardon, is but little ſpoken of or regarded, we may well obſerve, how ſingularly pertinent to the holding out of the true doctrine of repentance, this word is which is uſed by the Holy Ghoſt, which calleth for change of mind in the penitent, and an alteration of the inward temper, as wherein conſiſteth the proper nature and vertue of repentance: and not in any outward actions or applications, if the mind be not thus changed.

And thus as our Saviour, urging the duty of repentance upon them from this reaſon, becauſe the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand, argueth to them from one of their own conſeſt opinions: ſo in this original word, by which repentance is called for, another opinion of theirs ſeemeth alſo to be looked upon but with gainſaying and confutation, becauſe they placed ſo much of repentance, if not all repentance, in outward things. And ſo when the Miniſtery of the Goſpel calleth for Repentance, and in ſuch a word as betokeneth a change and alteration of the mind, it doth at once confute the double error that was amongſt them, which was either about not needing of repentance but inſiſting upon legal righteouſneſs: or if they were to repent, it was to be chiefly performed by confeſſion, or offerings, or ſome outward action.

III. Thirdly, It is obſervable in this preaching of Chriſt, that to his admonition to repent, he alſo adjoyneth the other, To believe the Goſpel which John the Baptiſt (that we read of) had not done, Matth. 3. 2. And yet John preached the Goſpel too: for his Miniſtery is called the beginning of it, Mark 1.1,2. and he preached that they ſhould believe, Joh. 1.7. But his doctrine did mainly aim at the declaring of him that was to preach the Goſpel, that when he came to preach it, he might the more readily be believed. Joh. 1.31. Act. 19.4. Johns chiefeſt and moſt intended task and purpoſe was to point out Chriſt, and to bring the people to be acquainted with his perſon, and to take notice of him as the Meſſias the great Prophet, to whom it was reſerved to publiſh the great things of the Goſpel, that when he came openly to preach it (as now he doth) he might be the better intertained and hearkned after: And thus John makes ready a people prepared for the Lord, Luke 1.17. And now that this great Preacher (for whom attention and regard was prepared by all the bent of Johns Miniſtery) is come to preach and publiſh the Goſpel in its full clearneſs and manifeſtation, He calleth for repentance and belief of it, as Act. 20.21. Repentance towards God and Faith in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Faith or believing, in order of the work of grace, is before repentance, that being the firſt and mother grace of all others, yet is it here, and in other places named the latter, 1. Becauſe, though faith be firſt wrought, yet repentance is firſt ſeen and evidenced both to the heart of him that hath it, and to the eyes of others. 2. Becauſe a poor broken and penitent heart is the moſt proper receptacle of the Goſpel, Eſay 61.1. Matth. 11.5.

Now by the Goſpel is not only here meant, the good and glad tidings of Salvation, as the word ſignifies in the original, and as it is taken in other places: but it is alſo held out here by our Saviour with a ſingular emphaſis and circumſtance, namely as the new Law and Covenant which God had promiſed to give unto his people, and which they expected from the Meſſias. The Goſpel, as it ſignifies the good tidings of Salvation and Salvation by Chriſt, was very abundantly held out in the Law and the Prophets: and if Chriſt propoſed the word here but in that ſenſe, he propoſed his Miniſtery but like unto theirs: But as in the Synagogue of Nazareth, he had begun to aſſert himſelf the highly anointed one of the Lord, for the ſingular work of publiſhing the new Law, Luk. 4.18. ſo now and forward he doth openly proclaim himſelf to be he whom the Lord had appointed and anointed for that end, and that his Miniſtry and doctrine was that Goſpel or glad tidings, which God had promiſed to ſend by the Meſſias: And in this ſenſe it is, that he calls upon them to believe the Goſpel, not only in regard of the tenour, but alſo in regard of the diſpenſer and diſpenſation of it, he the great Prophet, and that according to the promiſes of God, and the expectation of the Nation.

The Lord had foretold them copiouſly by the Prophets, that Meſſias ſhould be the great Teacher and Lawgiver in the laſt days, and this had put them in expectation of a new Law and doctrine when he ſhould come, Eſay 2.1,2,3. In the laſt days the mountain of the Lords houſe ſhall be eſtabliſhed on the top of the mountains, &c. And many people ſhall ſay, Come and let us go up, &c. And he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths, &c. This Teacher, ſaith David Kimchi, is the Meſſias. And whereſoever it is ſaid in the laſt days, it meaneth the days of Meſſias. And ſo in *Eſa.*11.4. With righteouſneſs ſhall he judge the poor and reprove with equity: This the Chaldee Paraphraſt expreſly and nominatim underſtandeth of Meſſias: And ſo he doth that in *Eſa.*42.1. &c. And ſo in *Eſa.*52.7. How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, (or that preacheth the Goſpel) which though the Apoſtle in Rom. 10.15. apply generally to the Miniſtry of the Goſpel, yet doth the Context in the Prophet, ſhew that it is primarily and eſpecially to be underſtood of Chriſt whom the Chaldee Paraphraſt nameth Syllabically at verſ. 13. Such another Propheſie of Chriſt being the great Teacher when he ſhould come is that which is ſo much retched and abuſed towards the countenancing of Enthuſiaſm, *Eſa.*54 13. And all thy children ſhall be taught of God, where the Prophet ſetting forth the glorious ſtate of the Church in the days of the Meſſiah, (and ſo the Rabbins underſtand the place) he addeth this, as a ſingular and eminent privilege thoſe times ſhould have above the times that had gone before, and that was, that whereas they had been taught by Prophets and by men, in thoſe times God himſelf in viſible appearance converſing among men in humane nature, ſhould be their Teacher. From ſuch propheſies as theſe whereof there is great ſtore in the Old Teſtament, the expectation of the Nation was raiſed, to look that Meſſias when he came, ſhould preach the glad tidings of deliverance, ſhould give a new Law as Moſes at Sinai had done the old, and ſhould be the great Teacher and Inſtructor of the people. So the Chaldee Paraphraſt gloſſeth the two and twentieth verſe of the 2d. Chap. of the Lamentations; Thou wilt proclaim liberty to thy people the houſe of Iſrael by the hand of Meſſias, as thou didſt by the hand of Moſes and Aaron on the day of the Paſsover. And the Jeruſalem Targum on *Exod.*12. Moſes came out of the midſt of the wilderneſs, and King Meſſias out of the midſt of Rome: The one ſpake in the head of a cloud, and the other ſpake in the head of a cloud: and the Word of the Lord ſpeaking between them and they walking together. And the Targum on *Cant.*8.2. When King Meſſias ſhall be revealed to the Congregation of Iſrael, the Children of Iſrael ſhall ſay unto him, Come, be with us as a brother and we will go up to Jeruſalem, and will ſuck in with thee the ſenſe of the Law as a child ſucketh his mothers breaſts, &c. And I will take thee O King Meſſias, and will bring thee to the houſe of my Sanctuary, and thou ſhalt teach me to fear the Lord and to walk in his Law. King Meſſias ſhall ſay to them: I adjure you O houſe of Iſrael my people, &c. Stay here a little till the enemies of Jeruſalem be deſtroyed, and after that the Lord will remember you with the mercies of the righteous, and it will be his good pleaſure to deliver you.

To ſuch promiſes of the Prophets and ſuch expectation of the Nation, (examples of which might be given many more if it were needful) that Meſſias when he came ſhould be as another Moſes, not only a Deliverer but alſo a Lawgiver, and the great Prophet and Teacher, (after the great decay of Propheſie and inſtruction) it is that Chriſt looketh and hath reference when he calleth on them to believe the Goſpel. As if he ſhould have ſpoken thus at large: You expect according to the prediction of the Prophets that when Meſſias comes, he ſhall be another Teacher and Lawgiver to you as Moſes, that he ſhall preach and proclaim to you deliverance and redemption, that he will inſtruct you in the ways of the Lord, and ſhew you how to walk in his paths: Behold this doctrine that I ſhall now teach, is that great promiſe and expectation. I am he whom the Lord hath anointed, and ſent to preach theſe glad tidings: believe ye therefore the Goſpel which I preach: and as it hath been your great expectation when it would come, ſo let it be intertained and received now it is come among you.

And here is the reaſon why John the Baptiſt joyned not this admonition, to believe the Goſpel, to the other of repenting, becauſe John was not to be the preacher of the Goſpel in this ſenſe, but he that was to publiſh it ſo, was then to come. Now though both theſe parts of Chriſts doctrine, Repent and believe the Goſpel, were levelled ſo directly and pertinently toward the Jews in reference to their opinions about theſe things, yet are the doctrines and duties of that perpetuity and neceſſity, that they reach both Jew and Gentile to the end of the world. And then the word Goſpel, doth not only ſignifie the good tidings of Salvation, nor only as publiſhed and preached by Meſſias, two high and eminent excellencies, but alſo as the cleareſt and laſt way of God for mans Salvation.

IV. And laſtly, whereas he ſaith The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand ἤγγικε: it may be queſtioned whether he mean, it was now come, or near in coming: And indeed it was both. For the term, The Kingdom of Heaven, hath a latitude in its ſignification as was obſerved before, and according to that latitude, is the ſenſe of that word alſo dilated: That meaneth the revealing of the Meſſias, and the ſtate of Church affairs, and dilating of the Church under his revealing. Now the revealing of Chriſt was by degrees, as is the dawning of the morning growing to a perfect day. The firſt Epocha of his revealing was from the beginning of Johns baptizing, *Matth.*11.12,13. Mark 1.1,2. Becauſe then he began to be preached as near at hand, and ſome change in the Church Oeconomy began by the introduction of Baptiſm: But from his own Baptiſm his revealings increaſed more and more, in the power of his preaching and infinite miracles, but moſt eſpecially in his reſurrection. So that when he ſaith The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand, he meaneth the revealing of the Meſſias in ſuch evidences and demonſtrations, eſpecially by his riſing again from the dead, as Rom. 1.4. that they that were not wilfully blind, might have ſeen the Salvation of God to be then revealed. For concluſion of this diſcourſe concerning the great doctrine of the Goſpel, repentance and believing, take one Maxime of the Jews more, *The day of expiation and ſin offerings and treſpaſs offerings do not expiate, but only for thoſe that repent and believe their expiation. Maym. in Shegagah. per.*3.

Luke 5. verſ.1. As the people preſſed upon him to hear the Word of God.

There were two things that caught the people and made them thus importunate to hear him, and thoſe were, the tenor of his doctrine, which proclaimed the Kingdom of Heaven which they ſo much expected, and the authority of his perſon, whom they looked on as a Prophet at leaſt, if not as Meſſias. When it is ſaid, they preſſed upon him to hear the Word of God, the expreſſion The Word of God hath its ſingular Emphaſis and thoſe paſſages, They were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine, for he taught them as one that had authority and not as the Scribes, Mark 1. 22. Mark 7. 28, 29. do readily tell us in what ſenſe the people take the Word of God, namely in a higher ſtrain and ſignification, than the Doctrines and Preachings of their Phariſees and Scribes: for theſe look upon Chriſt as a Prophetick teacher, and from him they deſire to hear the Word of God as from a Prophet: And if they took him not for the Meſſias, yet do they look upon him as one ſent from God, and another kind of Teacher than all their Doctors. The long abſence of Propheſie, and the preſent expectation of Meſſias did eaſily beget this opinion, when they alſo ſaw ſuch demonſtrations.

§. He ſtood by the Lake of Genneſareth.

Whereas Luke ſaith He ſtood by this Lake, the other Evangeliſts ſay he walked: which difference needeth to breed no ſcruple: for beſides that men in their walking, ſometimes do move and ſometime ſtand ſtill, the ſtory of Luke taketh him as he was before he went into Peters ſhip, and the other Evangeliſts, as he was come out.

The Lake of Genneſareth, which ſometimes in the Goſpel is called the Sea of Galilee, and ſometimes the Sea of Tiberias, is conſtantly called in the Old Teſtament, The Sea of Cinnereth, *Numb.*34.11. *Joſh.*12.3. 1 *King.*15.20. Now after times had changed the name Cinereth, into Geneſar: as divers other names and places had received the like alteration. And ſo the Chaldee Paraphraſts (who do commonly call places of ſuch changed names by the names they carried in their times) do uſe the word Geneſar or Ginoſar in the Texts alleadged: and ſo do the Jews alſo in their writings call this Sea by the ſame name. Joſephus hath deſcribed it, in theſe words. The Lake Geneſar is ſo called from the Country adjoyning, and it is forty furlongs broad and an hundred long, the water ſweet and moſt fit to drink. Pliny thus, Jordanes ubi prima convallium fuit occaſio, in lacum ſe fundit, quem plures Geneſaram vocant, &c. As ſoon as Jordan meets with a valley fit for that purpoſe, it dilates it ſelf into a lake, which they commonly call Geneſara, being 16 miles long, and 6 *miles broad, invironed with fair Towns, as on the Eaſt with Julias and Hippo: on the South with Tarichea, by which name ſome alſo call the lake: on the Weſt with Tiberias, famous for hot baths, Lib.*5. & 5. Strabo ſaith it had Ἀρωματίνην χίνον καὶ κάλαμον, *Sweet canes growing by it. Lib. Geogr.*16.

About the reaſon of the name Geneſar, Baal Aruch hath theſe paſſages. In the Gemara of the firſt Chapter of the Treatiſe of the Paſſover it is ſaid, Why are none of the fruits of Geneſar at Jeruſalem? And in the fourth Chapter of Maaſeroth it is ſaid: The coaſt of Geneſar is quit, though there be mills and Cocks there. Some interpret it of a place near Tiberias where are Gardens and Orchards. The Targum renders, The Sea of Cinnereth, The Sea of Ginoſar: And in Jelammedenu our Rabbins ſay, why is it called Ginoſar? Becauſe of גני שרים The Gardens of the Princes. Theſe were the Kings that had Gardens there.

Rabbi

Rabbi Judah from Rabbi Simeon ſaith, why is it called Genoſar? Becauſe the portion of Nephthali was there, and it is ſaid of Nephthali, A thouſand Princes. And in Jelammedenu it is ſaid again. The border of Nephthali was Ginoſar. So that by the Jews Etymology, the name was taken from ſome royal Gardens that lay upon it, which may very well be ſince Herods palace was at Tiberias: and as from the royalty of that City, the Sea was called the Sea of Tiberias, ſo poſſibly from the Orchards and Gardens upon it, it might be called Geneſar or the place of the Princely Gardens: We cannot but obſerve the propriety of the Greek utterance, in adding the ſyllable eth in the latter end of this word, as alſo in the word Nazareth, whereas in the Hebrew it is only נצר Netzer, both after the letter r, but we ſhall not be inquiſitive about it.

Verſ. 3. And he entred into one of the Ships which was Simons.

Whether theſe two veſſels that ſtood by the ſhore, whereof Simons was one, were ſhip indeed in the proper Bulk and bigneſs, that we allot to ſhips now, let them diſpute that have a mind to it: The Greek word may well be applied to a boat or barge, or ſome ſuch a leſſer veſſel, more convenient for Fiſhermen, than a ſhip of unwieldy bulk and burden. The Talmud in the Treatiſe Zavim per.3. doth diſtinguiſh betwixt a great and little Ship, thus. What is a great ſhip? Rabbi Judah ſaith, It is ſuch a one as cannot be moved by one man. But not to trouble our ſelves about the quantity of this Ship of Peters, which belike was but a fiſher Boat, let us rather look a little after the Maſter of it, Peter himſelf, and conſider how he is now become a fiſher, ſince he was a Diſciple of Chriſt before: for ye have him coming to him and Chriſt naming him Cephas or Peter, Joh. 1. 42. Did not he follow him from that time? In the ſeveral places and occurrences where the Diſciples of Jeſus are mentioned, as *Joh.*2.2. 17.22. & 3.22. & 4.8. &c. was not he one of the number? And then how come he and Andrew, who were then with him, now parted from him, and following fiſhing?

Anſw. 1. We cannot hold otherwiſe than that Peter and Andrew followed Chriſt from their firſt meeting with him, and that they are to be reckoned in the number of his Diſciples, in the places cited, as well as any other. For though it be ſaid of Andrew and of his fellow that firſt fell in with him, that they abode with him that day, Joh. 1.39. as if they left him again on the morrow, it is to be underſtood in reference to the place, rather than to the limitation of the time, namely that they ſtayed with him all night at his own houſe. 2. We cannot conceive that Peter and Andrew being now upon their Fiſhermans imployment, had left Chriſt without his permiſſion and conſent, but that he had diſpenſed with them, to retire to their own homes and buſineſs for a ſeaſon. But when and whereupon that diſpenſation was, is ſtill a queſtion. I ſee not how we can conjecture the time and occaſion more properly than thus: One cauſe of Johns impriſonment, was the multitude of his Diſciples, for that gave Herod ſuſpition of innovation: Now when John was impriſoned Chriſt heard of it, and of the cauſe; and withal he heard that the Phariſees who were in all the power, did take notice, that he had more Diſciples than John had: This makes him to ſlip aſide for his ſafety out of Judea into Galilee. And when he comes into Herods own juriſdiction, it was for his ſafety alſo to diſperſe his Diſciples for a time to their own homes: for as yet he was not to begin to publiſh the Kingdom of Heaven, and himſelf the Meſſias, in the full and cleareſt demonſtration, but a ſpace was yet to paſs, and then he begins to preach, The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand, &c. We may therefore conjecture, that upon his coming up into Galilee, his Diſciples and he, by his own permiſſion, did part for a while, leſt Herod obſerving another man ariſing in Galilee, followed with many Diſciples as John had been, ſhould ſodainly have laid hold upon him, and made him drink of Johns cup. But Jeſus himſelf alone goeth about to divers Synagogues of Galilee, and is received: cometh home to his own City Nazareth, and is there refuſed, goeth down to his other home Capernaum; and there beginneth to ſhew himſelf for the Meſſias, and calls his Diſciples in again. Peter and Andrew therefore, and it may be, James and John, having been thus diſmiſſed, what had they to do, but to fall to their old imployment? For then to preach or to Baptize in the name of Chriſt had been againſt that privacy of Chriſt which was for his preſent ſafety, till he by preaching abroad alone himſelf, had gotten footing in the hearts of the people. And for them to live idely, was neither for their advantage nor for their piety, and ſo till Chriſt call them again to a new imployment, they follow their old: But after this call that they are to have now, they never return to make this a trade again. Peters fiſhing in Joh. 21. was more for a trial than for a trade, and rather in expectation of a ſecond miracle in evidence of Chriſts favour to him upon his recovery from his fall, (as here he had a miracle at his call) than in following his old vocation as his buſineſs.

§. And he taught the People out of the Ship.

The living waters of the doctrine of the Gospel that had begun to stream at the Temple, Joh. 2. 14. (even on the South of the Altar, Ezek. 47.1. for on that side was the market of Cattel, where Christ first began to shew his zeal) are now come into the Sea: and that Prophesie of Ezekiel accomplished almost to the very letter. The Rabbins say, whither did these waters go? Into the Sea of Tiberias, and into the Sea of Sodom and into the Ocean, R. Sol. and Kimch. in loc. ex Tosapht. in Succah. compare *Psal.*29.3.

Vers. 6. They inclosed a great multitude of Fishes.

1. Here those creatures come in in homage to the second Adam, that had never come in so, to the first: See Gen. 2.19. Birds and Beasts had come to him to receive their names, but so did not the fish, though they were also in his subjection. 2. Compare the case of Jonah and Simon bar Jonah here together: the one caught of a fish when he refused to Preach when he was sent, and the other catching fish, being now to be sent to Preach, and by that very thing incouraged to it. 3. Christ by this miracle did not only figure out unto them, the imployment upon which he was now to enter them, to be fishers of men, as he himself applies it, but he also shews, how he can provide for them if they follow him, and how he will follow their indeavors in the Ministery with success.

Vers. 8. Depart from me, for I am a sinful man.

What? Peter on his knees to beg Christ from him? Spirit and Bride say Come, Revel. 22.17. and Peter desire that he should Depart? So say the wicked, Job 22. 17, 18. but with affections as far different from Peters, as both their words do seem parallel and alike. He speaketh from amazement and fear, and considerancy of the Circumstances of the present occurrence. He was amazed at the great miracle, *ver.*9. He was afraid at the visible appearance of so great power being so near him: and he considered that the miracle was wrought for his sake, and therefore in all humbleness he disclaims himself as most unfit to be so near Christ either in place or favour. Not that he was weary of him, but that he acknowledgeth himself unworthy of him; parallel to the words of the Centurion, Matth. 8.8. Lord I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof.

Vers. 10. James and John the sons of Zebedee.

Concerning these four first called Disciples, the two sons of Jona, and the two sons of Zabdi or Zebedee (for the names are the same) we may observe these things:

1. That Peter is ever named first in the Catalogue of the twelve Apostles, and the reason is, because he was first called to be an Apostle. It is true indeed, that Andrew and another not named, were Disciples and followed Christ before Peter did, Joh. 1.36. but they then followed uncalled, and they followed only as Disciples, but now Christ cometh to call them, and to call them for Apostles, and Peter is first dealt withal in this call; Andrew indeed was in the Ship and in the call with him, and he saith to him that he should be a fisher of men, as well as to Peter, but the interchange of Discourse that was betwixt Christ and Peter (which Luke relateth) doth sufficiently intimate unto us, that in order Peter had the first call of the two.

2. James or Jacob is commonly called James the great, in distinction from James the son of Alpheus, who is called the less, not for any dignity or superiority of Apostleship that the one had above the other, but either because this James was the elder, or because he was first called, or because of the singular privacy that Christ admitted him to with himself, as he also did Peter and John, of which anon.

3. John is called the Disciple whom Jesus loved, Joh. 13.23. who leaned in his bosom, to whom he committed his mother, and to whom he imparted the Revelation of the State of the Church till his second coming, as he had done the State of his Church till his first coming to *Daniel a man greatly beloved also. Dan.*10.11. The reason of this title is variously guessed, if any thing in himself might procure that title, I should assoon as any thing conceive it to be because he was Christs first Disciple, as Peter was the first called Apostle: For whereas there is mention of two of Johns Disciples who first followed Jesus, and Andrew named for one of them, there is none so like to be the other as John himself who wrote the story, *Joh.*1.37. &c. And this may appear probable, not only from his partnership with Andrew in his fishing trade (and so might they go together to Johns Baptism) but also because he concealeth the name of that Disciple (whereas he mentioneth the names of all the rest) as he useth to conceal his own name generally throughout all his Gospel.

4. The name Andrew is used in the Hierusalem Talmud in *Midd. per.*4. אנדרו בר חוננא בשם ר ובי Andrew the son of Chinna saith in the name of Rabbi Zacchæus, &c. The Andrew that we have in hand, was a Disciple with the first, Yoke-fellow with John in first following Christ, a Disciple before Peter, and a called Disciple before James and John; and yet which may seem somewhat strange, he is ever set after all of them, and in some particulars we find all the three priviledged above him. There is none that hath read the Gospel, but he may observe, how Christ did sometimes put a singular respect upon Peter and James and John, not only above the rest of the Apostles who were called after them, but even above Andrew who was both a Disciple and an Apostle with the first. As when he went to raise up Jairus daughter, he suffered no man to follow him but Peter and James and John, Mark 5.37. when he went to his transfiguration, he taketh only Peter and James and John, *Matth.*17.1. and when he went to his agony, he taketh only with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, *Matth.*26.37. And thus to these three only a part from all the rest did he shew himself in his greatest power, glory, and combat: the reason of which may be supposed to have been twofold.

1. Because he had designed these three in a more singular manner, for the ministry of the Circumcision, James in Judea, Peter to the dispersion in the East, and John in the West: The Apostle in *Gal.*2.9. nameth James and Cephas and John together, as pillars and agents in such a ministration: where the James indeed that he mentioneth, was not the same that we have in hand, for he was James the less, but he was one that came into that place and ministration in stead of James the great, when he was dead. For why should Herod in *Act.*12. lay hands upon James the brother of John, and destroy him first, rather and sooner than any other of the Apostles, but because there was appearance of singular and peculiar activity of James in that place, in the ministration among the circumcised.

2. Because Christ had designed these three for martyrdom, and for the eminentest witnesses of him of all the rest. He readeth Peters doom to that purpose, *Joh.*21.18,19. and so he doth to James and John, *Matth.*20.23. The martyrdom of James is recorded *Act.*12.2. and when he was thus taken away, James the less came in his stead, as special Minister and Apostle to the Jews or Circumcision within their own Land. And hence it is that he is named first of the three, *Gal.*2.9. and that he is named with such peculiarity, *Act.*15. 13. & 12.17. & 21.18. &c.

Peter after a long stay at Hierusalem and thereabout, was gotten at the last to the Eastern Babylon, the old place of Idolatry and persecution, but now a Church, 1 *Pet.*5. 13. Although there were many thousands of Jews that returned again out of the Captivity of Babylon, under the Proclamation of Cyrus, yet were there exceeding many also that staid behind and returned not; insomuch that they came to have their Universities in Babylonia, and their publick Schools and teachers there as well as in Judea; and were in a kind of a Common-wealth there as well as in their own Country. Among these Peter is sent as a Minister, and among these it is like he sealed his Ministry with his blood, see 2 *Pet.*1.13,14.

We read of Johns being in the Isle Patmos, but further Westward we find him not in all the Scripture; where he ended his life and sealed the Gospel with his blood, it is hard to determine: Histories have brought him to Rome, in which it may be they have not missed the mark very much, had not some of them told wild stories of him there. It may be as both James's the Ministers of the Circumcision in Judea, were martyred at Jerusalem, so Peter the Minister of the Eastern dispersion was martyred in the Eastern Babylon, and John the Minister of the Western, in Babylon in the West.

What became of Zebedee the father of these two eminent Apostles, when his sons were called away from him, the Scripture is silent; It saith, his sons left him in the Ship with the hired servants, and followed the call that Christ had given them. It is not to be thought that they sleighted their father when they left him; but only they complied with that imployment that he that called them would put them upon, which their father possibly by reason of his age was unable to do. Nor can we think that they left their father in his Judaism and unbelief, or that he so continued: certain it is, their mother Salome was a constant and zealous follower of Christ, Matth. 26.56. and we have no reason to think of any less faith or piety in Zebedee himself, only whether he followed Christ, as his sons and wife did, or followed still his lawful calling and imployment, it is not revealed in Scripture, nor is it much material to enquire after. The name Zabdi or Zebedee, is a name that is exceeding frequent in mention among the Talmudicks.

SECTION XX.

St. MATTH. Chap. VIII.

Verſ. 14.

AND when Jeſus was come into Peters houſe, he ſaw his wives mother laid and ſick of a Fever.

15. And he touched her hand and the Fever left her. And ſhe aroſe and miniſtred unto them.

16. When the Even was come, they brought unto him many that were poſſeſſed with Devils, and he caſt out the ſpirits with his word, and healed all that were ſick.

St. MARK Chap. I.

Verſ. 21.

AND they went into Capernaum and ſtraightway on the Sabbath day he entered into the Synagogue and taught.

22. And they were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine, for he taught them as one having authority and not as the Scribes.

23. And there was in their Synagogue a man with an unclean Spirit, and he cryeed out,

24. Saying, Let us alone, what have we to do with thee, thou Jeſus of Nazareth? Art thou come to deſtroy us? I know who thou art, The holy one of God.

25. And Jeſus rebuked him, ſaying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him.

26. And when the unclean Spirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him.

27. And they were all amazed, inſomuch that they queſtioned among themſelves ſaying, What thing is this? What new doctrine is this? For with authority commandeth he even the unclean ſpirits, and they obey him.

28. And immediately his fame ſpread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee.

29. And forthwith when they were come out of the Synagogue they entered into the houſe of Simon and Andrew with James and John.

30. But Simons wives mother lay ſick of a fever, and anon they tell him of her.

31. And he came and took her by the hand, and lift her up, and immediately the Fever left her, and ſhe miniſtred unto them.

32. And at Even when the Sun did ſet, they brought unto him all that were diſeaſed, and them that were poſſeſſed with Devils.

St. LUKE Chap. IV.

Verſ. 31.

AND he came down to Capernaum a City of Galilee, and taught them on the Sabbath days.

32. And they were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine, for his word was with power.

33. And in the Synagogue there was a man which had a Spirit of an unclean Devil, and cryed out with a loud voice,

34. Saying, Let us alone, what have we to do with thee thou Jeſus of Nazareth? Art thou come to deſtroy us? I know who thou art, The holy one of God.

35. And Jeſus rebuked him, ſaying, [*] Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the Devil had thrown him in the midſt, he came out of him, and hurt him not.

36. And they were all amazed and ſpake among themſelves, ſaying, What a word is this? For with authority and power he commandeth the unclean Spirits and they come out.

37. And the fame of him went out into every place of the Country round about.

38. And he aroſe out of the Synagogue and entered into Simons houſe: and Simons wives mother was taken with a great Fever, and they beſought him for her.

39. And he ſtood over her and rebuked the Fever and it left her: And immediately ſhe aroſe and miniſtred unto them.

40. Now when the Sun was ſetting, all they that had any ſick with divers diſeaſes, brought them unto him, and he laid his hands on every one of them and healed them.

[*] φιμώθητι. Be muſſelled, as the word is uſed 1 Tim. 5.18. the emphaſis of which word ſheweth that it was not a bare command of ſilence that Chriſt gave him, but that that command had ſuch power went with it that it caſt a muſſel upon the mouth of Satan that he could not ſpeak more.

St. MATTH. CHAP. VIII.	St. MARK CHAP. I.	St. LUKE CHAP. IV.
17. That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by Eſaias the Prophet, ſaying, Himſelf took our infirmities and bare our ſickneſſes.	33. And all the City was gathered together at the door. 34. And he healed many that were ſick of divers diſeaſes, and caſt out many Devils, and ſuffered not the Devils to ſpeak becauſe they knew him. 35. And in the morning riſing up a great while before day, he went out and departed into a ſolitary place, and there prayed. 36. And Simon and they that were with him followed after him. 37. And when they had found him they ſaid unto him, All men ſeek thee. 38. And he ſaid unto them, Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there alſo: for therefore came I forth. 39. And he preached in their Synagogues throughout all Galilee, and caſt out Devils.	41. And Devils alſo came out of many, crying, and ſaying, Thou art Chriſt the Son of God. And he rebuking them ſuffered them not to ſpeak: for they knew that he was Chriſt. 42. And when it was day, he departed and went into a deſert place, and the people ſought him and came unto him, and ſtayed him that he ſhould not depart from them. 43. And he ſaid unto them I muſt preach the Kingdom of God to other Cities alſo: for therefore am I ſent. 44. And he preached in the Synagogues of Galilee.

Reaſon of the Order.

THE juncture of the two ſtories contained in this Section, is ſo clear from the tranſition of Mark and Luke from the one ſtory to the other, that nothing needeth to be ſaid more of that: and the ſubſequence of the former ſtory of the two, to that that is contained in the former Section, namely about the calling of the Diſciples is apparently enough proved, by the entrance of Mark into this ſtory, when he ſaith, They, that is, Chriſt and his new called Diſciples (as his method ſhews it is to be underſtood) entred into Capernaum, &c. which thing we had occaſion to obſerve alſo, in the proof of the order of the former Section. All the difficulty therefore about the order of this is about Matthews placing the ſtory of the healing of Peters Mother in law: He hath laid it after the Sermon in the Mount, after the healing of the Leper, and after the healing of the Centurions Servant, whereas it is evident enough by the other Evangeliſts, that it was before any of theſe whichſoever was firſt. But the reaſon of his order may be obſerved to be this. In chap. 4. 25. he had ſaid that Jeſus went about all Galilee, teaching in their Synagogues, and preaching the Goſpel of the Kingdom, and healing all maner of ſickneſs: Here are two heads, that the Evangeliſt hath before him to inſiſt upon, and to give the relation of, and theſe are the Doctrine of Chriſt and his miracles. He firſt beginneth with his doctrine, and ſo layeth down the Sermon in the Mount: and having done with that Doctrinal relation, he beginneth with the ſtory of his miracles. And firſt he telleth of the healing of the Leper, which was the firſt miracle he wrought in his perambulation of Galilee: then he relateth the healing of the Centurions Servant, which was the firſt miracle he wrought after his Sermon in the Mount: and being in mention of Capernaum, where the Centurions Servant was healed, he alſo ſpeaketh of other miracles done in the ſame Town, though not at the ſame time, and that was the healing of Peters mother in Law: and others that were brought to him, of ſeveral diſeaſes: And this manner of Method, or flitting of ſtories, from their proper time and place, into other times and places of his Goſpel, upon ſuch like reaſons and occaſions, as this, we ſhall find to be no ſtrange thing with Matthew, as we go along, but exceeding uſual and very common.

Harmony and Explanation.

Mark 1. verſ. 22. He taught as one having authority, and not as the Scribes.

THE Scribes of whom there is ſo frequent mention in the Goſpel, were the learned of the Nation, that taught the People, and expounded the Law, Therefore he that in Matth. 22. 35. is ſtyled a Lawyer, in Matth. 12. 28. is called a Scribe. And Phariſees and Doctors, Luke 5. v. 17. are called Phariſees and Scribes, ver. 21.

And in this ſenſe doth the Chaldee Paraphraſt very often uſe the word Scribe, to tranſlate that that in the Original is a Prophet, meaning a Teacher, as Eſay 9. 5. The Scribe that teacheth lies, he is the taile, 1 Sam. 10. 10, 11. A company of Scribes met him, &c. And when they ſaw that he was praiſing God among the Scribes, &c. They ſaid, Is Saul alſo among the Scribes, &c. In this ſenſe our Saviour calleth ſome of his Miniſters Scribes, Matth. 23. 34. that is, Teachers.

The diſtinction of the Scribes into ſeveral ranks, we ſhall obſerve within a few leaves: but take we them in what rank we will, or all of their ranks together, we ſhall find a vaſt difference betwixt the teaching of Chriſt, and the teaching of any or all theſe Scribes in theſe particulars.

1. The Scribes taught nothing but traditions; what this or that or the other Doctor or Sanhedrin in former time had taught and determined: what Hillel Shammai, Baba ben Bota, Rabban Simeon or Gamaliel, or others their great learned men, had aſſerted or denied, and how they had ſtated this and the other queſtion, and how they had concluded in this or that reſolution: ſo that their whole teaching was but traditions of their Fathers and learned predeceſſors, Gal. 1.14. Mat. 15.6. Hence are thoſe Phraſes and paſſages ſo common in their Talmuds תנו רבנן & תני תניא It is a Tradition, and our Doctors have thus delivered חכמים אמרים The wiſe men have thus determined, &c. that almoſt every line ſpeaks ſuch language. But our Saviour taught in the evidence and demonſtration of a Prophet, the ſound and powerful and ſelf-grounded word of God: And in that he doth ſo conſtantly avouch his own Authority, Verily verily I ſay unto you, and But I ſay unto you, &c. he doth not only aſſert his divine and oracular authority of delivering the truth, but he alſo faceth that common manner of teaching of theirs, which was pinned upon the ſleeve of other mens traditions: And when he biddeth call no man Father (that is, Teacher) upon Earth, he croſſeth that vain Divinity that they taught which was but the Traditions of their Fathers, that is their Doctors.

2. All the teaching of the Scribes was eſpecially about external, carnal, and trivial rites, ceremonies and demeanours: as appeareth infinitely in their Talmudical Pandect, which was but hay, ſtraw, ſtubble, nothing in compariſon of the ſound doctrines of Salvation. Hardly a word in all their Traditions that ſpake any thing, but bodily and carnal matter, as he that ſhall read their Talmuds from end to end will find but little diſcourſe but tending to ſuch a purpoſe: And we need not to go far for a patern of what kind of divinity it was that theſe great Doctors of the people taught, theſe places in the Goſpel give copy enough, Matth. 15. 1, 2. & 23. 16, 18, 23, 25. John 18. 28. Acts 10. 28. Col. 2. 21. &c. But the tenor of Chriſts teaching was the ſpiritual and ſoul-ſaving doctrine, of Faith, Repentance, Renovation, Charity, Self-denial, and ſuch heavenly things as theſe, which by how much the more they had been ſtrangers in the pulpits of the Scribes, and never heard of before, by ſo much the more, did they now take the people, with affecting and admiration, being delivered in power, and piercing and preſſing upon the heart.

3. The teaching of the Scribes was litigious and in endleſs diſputes, as Rom. 14. 1. 1 Tim. 6. 5. Their Doctors and Traditionaries, whom they took upon them to build upon, were of ſo many and ſo different minds, that they that followed them knew not what to follow: He that is never ſo little verſed in the Talmuds, will eaſily ſee ſuch experience in this matter, that he will find it readier to tell what thoſe Doctors ſeverally held, than to chooſe what to hold from them, if one would follow them. But our Saviour taught one only conſtant and undivided truth, plain, convincing and ſo agreeing with the Doctrine of the Old Teſtament, that it was the ſame, but only in a brighter and a clearer garniſh. The people therefore, in this great difference of teaching between their own Doctors and Chriſt would eaſily perceive an alteration: and by how much the more our Saviours doctrine was more ſpiritual, and ſpeaking to the concernment of the Soul, and by how much more it was delivered in the demonſtration of a divine power, by ſo much the more it could not but convine the hearers of its own value and dignity, and work in them an aſtoniſhment at ſo high and ſo powerful truths.

Verſ.

Verſ. 23. And there was in their Synagogue a man with an unclean ſpirit, &c.

Here is the firſt place in the ſtory of our Saviour, where we meet with mention of any poſſeſſed or ſeiſed on bodily by the Devil, and therefore it will be ſomething needful to ſpeak a little in general concerning this caſe, of which we have very frequent example in the proceſs of the Evangelical ſtory.

I. It cannot but be obſerved how common this ſad condition, of being poſſeſſed by the Devil, was in the time of our Saviours miniſtery and thereabout, above all the times of the old Teſtament, and beyond any examples in any other Nation. See Mat. 4. 24. & 8. 28. & 9. 32. & 10. 8. & 12. 22. & 15. 22. & 17. 18. Mark 1. 39. & 3. 11. Luke 10. 17. Acts 10. 38. &c. Which whether it were, 1. In regard that the Spirit of Propheſie had been ſo long departed from them, as 1 Sam. 16. 14. Or 2. that the Lord would in juſtice confute by this dreadful experience, the curſed doctrine of the Sadducees that was now rife among them, that there was no ſpirit, Acts 23. 8. Or, 3. that he did evidence his great diſpleaſure againſt the ſinfulneſs and erroneouſneſs of thoſe times, which was now grown extream by this viſible delivery over of ſo many to the power of the father of ſin and error. Or, 4. that he would by this doleful experience read to all men a Lecture what miſery it is to be in the power and ſubjection of Satan, and ſo make them more intent to hearken after him, that was to break the head of the Serpent; or were it all theſe together. Certainly 5. it did highly redound to the honour of Chriſt, and to the magnifying of his divine power, and did mightily evidence that he was come the deſtroyer of the works of the Devil, when finding ſo very many that lay ſo viſibly under his power, he inlarged them all, and brought them from under his force, and bound the ſtrong one and he could not reſiſt. And the ſame tendency to his glory had the like powerful working of his Apoſtles by derived vertue from himſelf, Mat. 10. 8. Luke 10. 17. Acts 8. 7. & 19. 12.

II. It is obſervable that we do not find that any were healed of this ſad malady till Chriſt came and began the work. It is true indeed that David by the power of the Prophetick Spirit that was upon him, did calm the raging of Sauls evil Spirit when he grew turbulent, but neither did he nor any other at any time till now, caſt either his or any other evil ſpirit out: You muſt give Joſephus leave to tell his ſtory of Solomons skill which he left behind him, of driving out the Devil out of the poſſeſſed by applying a certain root unto his noſtrils, Antiq. lib. 8. cap. 2. pag. apud me 230. as well as the Apocrypha of Tobit hath had leave a long time to tell of the Devil ſmoked away with the broyling of a fiſh liver, Tob. 8. 3. but you may eaſily ſmell them both, what ſent and ſenſe they carry with them.

As it was reſerved for Chriſt utterly to break and bruiſe the head of the Devil, ſo was it reſerved to him, to ſhew this maſtery firſt upon him, by caſting him out where he had taken poſſeſſion, and no man might nor could do it before him. I have obſerved in another place, that as the two firſt miracles wrought in the World, (which were turning a rod into a Serpent, and the Serpent into a Rod again; the hand into leproſie, and the leproſie into ſoundneſs again) did ſhew the great power of him in whoſe power they were wrought, and did refer to the preſent occaſion, which Moſes was then going about: ſo did they more ſingularly refer to the miracles of Chriſt: To whom as it belonged to caſt the Devil the old Serpent out of the Soul, and to heal the leproſie of ſin, ſo to him was it reſerved to caſt the Devil out of the body, and to cure the leproſie of the body, and none did it, none could do it till he came; Eliſha would not ſo much as touch Naaman in concurrency to this truth.

III. Thoſe whom the Devil thus ſeized on bodily, we may diſtinguiſh into two ſorts or ranks, 1. Thoſe whom he poſſeſſed ſo, as to wrack and torture them, or to infect them with ſome diſeaſe, as Mark 5. 5. Luke 9. 39. & 13. 16. Mat. 12. 22. And 2. thoſe whom he dwelt in bodily, to make them by falſe miracles and predictions, inſtruments of his ſeduction and deluſion, as Acts 16. 16. and as Sibylla Cumæa is deſcribed by the Poet:

Talia cui fanti non vultus, non color unus:
Non comptæ manſere comæ, ſed pectus anhelum,
Et rabie fera corda tument: majorque videri,
Nec mortale ſonans afflata eſt numine quando
Jam propriore Dei, &c.

And a little after,

Bacchatur vates, magnum ſi pectore poſſit
Excuſſiſſe Deum, tanto magis ille fatigat
Os rabidum, fera corda domans, fingitque premendo.

Now to be bodily poſſeſſed by the Devil, was the ſaddeſt earthly miſery could befal a man: and therefore giving up to Satan was the higheſt puniſhment could be inflicted, 1 Cor. 5. 5. 1 Tim. 1. 20. For how doleful a thing muſt it needs be reputed, 1. When that body which ſhould be the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt, ſhould become the very local cage, and bodily habitation of Satan. 2. When the Members were acted and uſed by the Devil, as if he had been the very ſoul that did animate the body. 3. When mans greateſt enemy ſhould ſo apparently dwell within him, and have ſuch power over him. And 4. When he either carried the Devil, or the Devil him, or indeed both, whitherſoever he went? Yet were there degrees of this miſery, and the latter kind mentioned was the worſe and the more grievous of the two, though it ſeemed not always ſo in appearance: for in the former poſſeſſedneſs it was poſſible that the Devil might not have ſeiſure on the ſoul though he had of the body, as Mark 9. 21. But in the latter he had poſſeſſion of both.

IV. Of this latter ſort was this man in the Text, namely, a man poſſeſſed with a Spirit of divination, whom the Devil filled and acted, under the notion of an Enthuſiaſt or Prophet to decieve the People. For 1. he is ſaid by Mark to be Ἐν πνέυματι, In an unclean Spirit, as the words do properly ſignifie, (whereas indeed the unclean ſpirit was in him) intimating that he was in the acting or a Prophetick rapture of the Devil, as true and holy Prophets indeed, in the actings and raptures of the Ghoſt, are to be in the Spirit, Rev. 1. 10. 2. Luke hath expreſſed it ἔχων πνῦμα δαιμονίυ, That he had the Spirit of the Devil: namely, in ſuch a kind of ſenſe, as on the contrary part, the Holy Prophets are ſaid to have the Spirit of God, Dan. 4. 5, 6. &c. 3. Both the Evangliſts do ſtyle the Spirit wherewith he was poſſeſſed, An unclean Spirit: which as in general it ſtands in direct oppoſition to the term, The Holy Spirit; ſo is it moſt properly and ſingularly applyed to the Spirit of error and falſe teaching, Zech. 13. 2. Rev. 16. 13, 14. And 4. the words that the Devil uttered by the mouth of the poſſeſſed man, tend directly and only to deceive and to withdraw from Chriſt, as is apparent in their conſtruction.

Verſ. 24. Let us alone: what have we to do with thee? &c.

It is all one as to the ſenſe of the words inſuing, be the firſt worn Ἐα, taken either for an Adverb of grief and wonder, and a Greek expreſſion of the Hebrew הא or be it taken for a Verb, as the Syrian, Vulgar and our Engliſh take it, when they render it, Let alone: The ſcope of the mans words in the whole verſe may be taken up in theſe obſervations.

1. That though indeed it were the Devil within the man that dictated the words to him, yet was it the man that uttered them, and the men of the Synagogue heard the man ſpeaking. The Greek Syntax in the Text of the Evangeliſts, eſpecially of St. Luke, maketh it plain.

2. When he uſeth the plural number, We and Us, (What have we to do with thee, art thou come to deſtroy us?) he ſpeaketh of himſelf, and the reſt of the men of the Synagogue with him: for that theſe words are not applicable to the Devils, which was but one in the poſſeſſed, needeth no more proof than what is in the verſe it ſelf, where when the Devil, or the man by inſtinct of the Devil ſpeaketh of himſelf, he uſeth the ſingular number, I know thee.

3. When he proclaimeth Chriſt the holy one of God, (as he is ſtyled, Pſal. 16. 10. Dan. 9. 24. &c.) he neither doth it, as a voluntary confeſſion of him, for that cannot be expected from the Devil; nor as a ſtrained or forced confeſſion, by the power of Chriſt, for Chriſt commands his ſilence, but it is ſuch a confeſſion and proclamation of Chriſt, as whereby he might make the men of the Synagogue afraid of him, and not daring to have to deal with him becauſe of his dreadfulneſs. So high and dreadful things are ſpoken concerning the coming of Chriſt in the Scripture, as Mal. 3. 2. and ſo terrible apprehenſions had the Jews, concerning the fatal deſtruction of ſome men to be made when Meſſias came, that the Devil by theſe taketh opportunity to affright the men of the Synagogue, with the preſence of Chriſt among them, as if he were but come among them to deſtroy them: And he would diſſwade them from the imbracing of Chriſt by the terrors of Chriſt.

The Jews had ſuch dreadful opinions as theſe about Chriſts coming. In Sanhedr. per. Helek. fol. 97.

In the Generation when the ſon of David cometh (ſay they) ſcholars of the wiſe ſhall be rare, and as for the reſt of the people, their eyes ſhall fail for ſorrow and grief, and great afflictions, and ſore decrees ſhall be ſo renewed, that before the firſt is ended, the ſecond ſhall come.

In the week of years (Dan. 9. 24.) when the ſon of David ſhall come: The firſt year, that that ſhall be fulfilled, I rained upon one City and rained not upon another, (Amos 4.) The ſecond year the arrows of famine ſhall fly abroad: The third year the famine ſhall be ſo great that men, women and children, yea good and godly men ſhall die, and the Law ſhall be forgotten by its Diſciples: On the fourth year a kind of plenty, yet not plenty indeed: On the fifth year great plenty, and they ſhall eat and drink and rejoyce, and the Law ſhall be reſtored to its ſcholars: On the ſixth, voices or thunders: On the ſeventh, war, and in the end of the ſeventh the ſon of David cometh.

When the ſon of Dovid cometh, the Aſſembling places ſhall become ſtews, and Galilee ſhall be deſtroyed (note this for our preſent purpoſe) and Gablan ſhall be deſolate, and the men of the border of Iſrael ſhall go from City to City, and the wiſdom of the Scribes ſhall be abominated, and religious perſons ſhall be ſcorned, and the faces of that generation ſhall be as dogs, (compare Philip 3. 2. Rev. 22. 15.) and truth ſhall be gone, and he that departeth from evil maketh himſelf a prey.

When the ſon of David cometh, young men ſhall revile the ancient, and the ancient, ſhall riſe up before the young: and the daughter ſhall riſe up againſt her mother, and the daughter in law againſt her mother in law, and the faces of that generation ſhall be as the faces of dogs, and the ſon ſhall not be aſhamed at (the reproof of) his Father. And Rabbi Iſaac ſaith, the Son of David cometh not till all the Kingdom be turned to the opinion of the Sadduces. Thus the Talmud in the place cited: To which take this addition out of Maſſecheth derech arets zuta, When the ſon of David cometh Galilee ſhall be deſtroyed, and the men of Galilee ſhall go from City to City and ſhall not be pitied, Perek. 6.

From which dreadful conceptions about Chriſts coming, eſpeially and ſingularly terrible to the Galileans, the Devil might very aptly frame his temptation and ſuggeſtion in a Galilean Synagogue when Chriſt was in it, to proclaim that Chriſt was there, and that ſo they were in danger to be deſtroyed.

Verſ. 26. And when the unclean Spirit had torn him.

Not by making any gaſhes in his fleſh, or any disjoynting or diſmembring of his body, for Luke ſaith, he hurt him not, but he wrung him with convulſions, caſt him into the midſt of the floor, made a horrid cry and ſo came out. And by that it was evident to all that were preſent, that the man was really poſſeſſed, but the ſtrong one armed was caſt out by a ſtronger power: And this maketh them not only to wonder at the thing done, but alſo to take ſpecial notice of the Doctrine which Chriſt had taught, as which was atteſted by ſo great a miracle: And upon this his fame ſpreads throughout all Galilee: For howſoever the other miracles that he had done, of turning water into wine, healing diſeaſes, &c. were high and eminent and to be admired things, yet the caſting out of Devils was ſo ſingular, and incomparable, and till now unheard of and unſeen a work, that it is no wonder if this do erect the people into a high repute and expectation concerning him; and do exceedingly dilate his fame. Obſerve how our Saviour himſelf argues that the Kingdom of God was come among them from this kind of miracle, Mat. 12. 28. and the wretched Phariſees had no way to evade the argument, but by a Deviliſh blaſphemy, that Chriſt by one Devil caſt out another.

Verſ. 29. When they were come out of the Synagogue, &c.

Whether Chriſt went voluntarily into Peters houſe or were invited, and if invited, whether it were to meat, or to cure his mother in Law or both, it needeth not to ſtay us in the diſquiſition, nor is there any difficulty in this ſtory that needeth unfolding: the chiefeſt ſcruple is, how Peter comes to be an Inhabitant of Capernaum, whereas he is ſaid to be of Bethſaida, John 1. 44. whether it were for conveniency of his fiſhing Trade that he took an houſe there, or whether it were by the marriage of his wife, that he came to have intereſt and reſidence there, let them determine that will be curious about it.

There is that conceiveth Capernaum to have been a Town of a diſtinct condition from all the reſt of Galilee, as being out of Herods juriſdiction, which the reſt of Galilee was under: and he ſuppoſeth that Chriſts departing out of Nazareth into Capernaum, Mat. 4. was for this end, that he might get out of Herods juriſdiction, into the immediate juriſdiction of the Romans, Sam. Petit. var. lect. lib. 2. cap. 1. But this conjecture is without ground, as might be ſhewed even out of that Text, Matth. 4. which he layeth as his ground for it, being compared with Luke 4. About Peters wife, ſee 1 Cor. 9. 5. and whether his mother in Law being recovered of her diſeaſe, followed Chriſt afterward, as ſhe miniſtred to him at the preſent, examine from Luke 8. 5. 6. When Peter and Andrew had left their fiſhing by which they maintained the family, there was no way but for the women to go along with them.

Verſ.

Verſ. 32. And at Even when the Sun did ſet.

From hence is a plain demonſtration, at what time the Jews began and ended their Sabbath, namely, from Sun-ſetting to Sun-ſetting, or from Even to Even. They held it a thing unſutable for the day, for Chriſt to heal while the Sabbath laſted, Mark 3. 2. Luke 14.1. yet now when the Sun is ſet they come without ſcruple with all their diſeaſed.

It was commanded them from Even to Even to celebrate their Sabbath, Lev. 23.32. which injunction, although it ſeem only affixed to the ſolemn day of expiation, and ſo is reſtrained only to that by ſome Chriſtian writers, yet do the records of the Jews make it apparent, that they practiſed accordingly in all their Sabbaths: Siphri a very ancient expoſition, maketh this gloſs upon that place. On the ninth day of the ſeventh month, he begins, and faſts whileſt it is yet day, for ſo they add from the common to the holy time. And behold in all the Sabbatizing thou Sabbatizeſt, thou muſt add likewiſe: But Abarbinel far plainer: From Even to Even ſhall be your Sabbath: that is, Every Sabbatizing that you have: whether it be the Creation Sabbath or the ſet feſtivals, or Feaſt of Trumpets, or Expiation: they were from Even to Even, according to the courſe of the Creation, as it is ſaid, The Evening and the Morning were the firſt day, &c. And theſe and the ſuch like Talmudick Traditions as theſe following of which many more might be produced, do ſhew their opinion and practice in this point, more clearly ſtill: In the treatiſe Sabbath per. 1. they have theſe paſſages, They roſt not Fleſh, an Onion, or an Egg, but ſo as that they may be roaſted, בעור יום whileſt it is yet day, viz. on the Eve of the Sabbath.

They ſet not any thing in the Oven עם חשכה towards night: nor a Cake upon the Coales, but ſo as that the upper ſide may be cruſted בעור יום whileſt it is yet day. The School of Shammai ſaith, they give not skins to the Currier, nor veſſels to a waſher, but ſo that they may be diſpatched בעור יום whileſt it is yet day; But in all theſe thing the Schools allowed the doing of them עם שמש before Sun-ſetting: namely, as the gloſs upon the place explains it, if the things were ſet or delivered for theſe ends before Sun-ſetting, it was current: as if Bread or Cakes were ſet in the oven or on the coals, before Sun-ſet, it was no violation of the Sabbath, though they ſtood baking when the Sabbath was come in: And ſo skins or veſſels, if they were delivered before Sun-ſet, to the Skinner or Waſher, it was not Sabbath breach if they lay ſoking in the tanpit or water on the Sabbath. And ſo Piske Sabbath explains it alſo, though by another example. It is lawful (ſaith it) סמוך לחשכה near night, to put water to gummes & copperas, to make ink, to put flax into an Oven to dry, to lay a net, or ſet a trap for a wild beaſt or vermine; It is lawful to do theſe things near night, though the efficacy of the things, (as the ink ſoaking, the flax drying, and the net catching) be on the Sabbath when it is come in.

Maymony in his tractate of the Sabbath per. 5. is yet plainer: On the Eve of the Sabbath they light up a candle: and he that lights it, muſt do it whileſt it is yet day before the Sun go down: From the Sun-ſetting till the appearing of three middling Stars, that ſpace is called בין השמשות Between the Suns: and it is doubtful whither that ſpace belong to the day or to the night: And therefore they light not up the candle in that time: And he that doth any work in that ſpace, on the Eve of the Sabbath or at the going out of the Sabbath ignorantly, he is bound to bring a ſin offering. And theſe Stars are not great Stars ſuch as are ſeen by day, nor little Stars which are not ſeen but by night, but midling Stars between both: and when three ſuch midling Stars can be ſeen it is night undoubtedly. Compare Nehem. 13. 19.

Verſ. 34. And he ſuffered not the Devils to ſpeak becauſe they knew him.

Chriſt healed all diſeaſes with his touch, for Luke ſaith, he Laid his hands on every one of them and healed them: but he caſt out Devils with his Word, for ſo ſaith Matthew, He caſt out the Spirits with his Word, and he prohibited them to ſpeak a word, becauſe they knew him: The expreſſion in the Greek doth carry it indifferently: To ſpeak becauſe they knew him, or To ſpeak that they knew him, and it is indifferent whether way it is tranſlated, for the ſenſe is the ſame: but the queſtion is why Chriſt would not permit them to ſpeak upon this reaſon. Some ſay, becauſe they ſhould not utter him before the time: Others becauſe it was not fit the Devil ſhould preach Chriſt: to which I cannot but add, what was ſpoken of before, namely that the people ſhould not be terrified by the preſence of Chriſt among them, as the Devil if he might have had liberty would have ſet it forth.

Matth. Chap. 8. Verſ. 17. Which was ſpoken by Eſaias the Prophet, Himſelf took our infirmities, &c.

However the latter Jews would elude the Prophecy of that Chapter out of which this quotation is taken, viz. Eſay 53. and would take it off from being applyed to Chriſt, yet yet the ancient learned of the Nation in old time did ſo apply it, as may be perceived by the gloſs of the Chaldee Paraphraſt upon the place, and by a remarkable paſſage in the Talmud: The Chaldee renders it thus: verſe 4. Surely he ſhall pray for our ſins, and our iniquities ſhall be pardoned for his ſake, &c. Verſe 5. He ſhall build the Houſe of the Sanctuary, which was prophaned, becauſe of our ſins, and given up for our tranſgreſſions, and by his doctrine, peace ſhall be multiplyed upon us: and if we hearken to his words, our ſins ſhall be pardoned to us. Verſe 6. It pleaſeth the Lord for his ſake to pardon all our ſins. Verſe 8. He ſhall bring up our captivity from affliction and puniſhment, and the wonders that ſhall be done to us in his days who ſhall tell, &c. The Talmud likewiſe in the Treatiſe Sanhedrin hath this obſervable paſſage: What is the name of the Meſſias? &c. Some ſaid חיורא Leprous: according to that, Surely he hath born our Sickneſſes, &c. And Meſſias ſitteth in the gate of the City (Rome, as the Venetian Edition hath it) And by what token may he be known? He ſitteth among the diſeaſed poor, &c. Per. cheleck. fol. 98.

Now in this allegation and application of the Evangeliſt out of the Prophet there ſeemeth to be ſome hardneſs and impertinency upon theſe conſiderations: Firſt becauſe, the Prophet ſpeaketh of Chriſts taking humane ſickneſſes upon himſelf, but the Evangeliſt applys it of taking away diſeaſes from others. 2. He applyeth that to bodily diſeaſes, which the Prophet ſeemeth to underſtand of the diſeaſs of the ſoul. And ſo Peter doth interpret it, 1 Pet. 2. 24. The Prophet ſpeaketh of the time of Chriſts Paſſion and what he then ſuffered of miſery in himſelf: but the Evangeliſts applie it to the time of his actions, and what he then did for benefit to others.

Anſwer. It is true indeed that this application will appear ſo harſh, if all the Emphaſis and ſtreſs of Eſays ſpeech, be laid upon the word Our, as it is moſt generally laid there: For it is commonly interpreted to this ſenſe: He was a man of ſorrows and acquainted with grief, but the ſickneſſes and ſorrows that he bare were ours, and not properly his own, for he bare them for our ſakes: Which conſtruction is a moſt true, but not a full rendring of the Prophets meaning: for he intendeth alſo a further matter, which the Evangeliſt in his allegation doth apparently look upon, and that is this, viz. The concernment of Chriſt in our ſickneſſes and ſorrows, and his power in reference unto them or concerning them: The Prophet when he ſaith, he bare our ſickneſſes, &c. meaneth not only, that what he bare was for our ſakes, but that it concerned him and belonged to him to bear them, and he was able to bear them, and to deal with them. And this ſenſe the Evangeliſt followeth in his quotation: when having recorded that Chriſt healed all the diſeaſed that were brought unto him, he produceth this place of Eſay, and ſaith, that in him was fulfilled that prediction concerning the Meſſias, which telleth that he was to deal and was able to deal with our infirmities and ſickneſſes: for ſo far do the words of the Prophet reach, and the application of the Evangeliſt ſo taken, is ſmooth and facil: And howſoever the Text of the Prophet do refer and intend more ſingularly to the time of Chriſts paſſion, in regard of our ſorrows and ſickneſſes being then chiefly upon him, yet is the ſenſe given, applicable alſo to all his time, as that he had always to deal with our ſickneſſes and ſorrows.

Now in that Peter applyeth the Prophets Text to the diſeaſes of the ſoul, when he utters it, He bare our ſins, which is alſo the Tranſlation of the Septuagint: he ſpeaketh it in the higheſt and moſt proper ſenſe, as regarding that diſeaſedneſs of which our Saviour did eſpecially come a healer, and which is the cauſe of all other diſeaſes and ſorrows whatſoever: and ſo he includes that which was the chiefeſt, but excludes not theſe. And as our Saviour pronouncing forgiveneſs of ſins to a Paſſick man, whoſe ſtory is ere long to follow, doth thereby heal alſo the ſickneſs of the body, ſo the Apoſtle under term of bearing our ſins, comprehended alſo the bearing our ſickneſſes: and his emphatical expreſſion is worth obſerving, when he ſaith ὃς αὐτὸς Who himſelf bare them: that is, himſelf, of his own willingneſs would take them upon him, and himſelf of his own power was able to undergo them.

Mark Chap. 1. Verſ. 35. And in the morning riſing up a great while before day, &c.

Although the Jews did preciſely begin their natural day from Sunſetting, as hath been even now obſerved, yet did they alſo make the midnight a diſtinctive period, to part between day and day ſo, as to determine, rem diei, in diem ſuum.

Talmud in Beracoth. per. 1. From what time do they ſay over their Phylacteries at even? From the time that the Prieſts go in, to eat their portion of the Sacrifices, till the end of the firſt watch. R. Eliezer ſaith, But the wiſe men ſaid, untill Midnight.

Ibid. in Peſachin. per. 10. The Paſſover, after midnight defiles the hands.

Joma per. 1. & Maym. in Tamid. in per. 2. The cleanſing of the Burnt-offering Altar on the day of expiation began from midnight.

Talm.

Talm. in Zevachin. per. 5. Treſpas offerings might be eaten till midnight.
Ibid. Leſſer holy Offerings may be eaten till midnight.
Ibid. The Paſsover is not eaten but in the night, and it is not eaten but till midnight.

The meaning of which Paſſages is, that whereas theſe things were to be done to day and might not be put off till to morrow: if they were done any time before midnight, it was reputed and current as done to day, as their Phylacteries were to be ſaid over every day at Even: if they were ſaid over before midnight it ſerved turn for the day before: And the parts of the Offerings, that were to be eaten on the ſame day that the offering was offered, (and might not be kept till the morrow) if they were eaten any time before midnight of that day it did ſerve the turn. The burnt Offering Altar was to be cleanſed every day, now on the day of expiation it began to be cleanſed from the midnight before, and that was taken as on the expiation day.

Theſe things have I produced the rather becauſe of the paſſage in the Text before us, which calls it in the Morning, and yet ſaith it was Ἔννυχον λίαν, much of the night yet remaining: for as they reckoned up till midnight for the day that was paſt, ſo they reckoned from midnight for the morning to the day following. Were I to diſcuſs the queſtion about the beginning and ending of our Chriſtian Sabbath, I ſhould think this matter worth conſideration to that purpoſe: And ſomething parallel to this are thoſe Texts, Exod. 12. 22. None of you ſhall go out of the door of his houſe until the morning: Yet Verſ. 29 At midnight the Lord ſmote the firſt-born, &c. Verſ. 33. And the Ægyptians were urgent upon the People that they might ſend them out. Deut. 16. 1. God brought thee forth out of Egypt by night.

Now this Morning on which the Text before us, tells us that Chriſt roſe ſo very early and went out to pray, was on the morrow after the Sabbath, the day on which the Chriſtian Sabbath was fixed, ere long, which may not be unobſerved ſince ſo ſpecial a matter is mentioned of that day. The reaſon why he went into a ſolitary place to pray was, becauſe the company ſo increaſed upon him becauſe of the miracles that he wrought, that in the Town he could not be retired: When day light came, both his Diſciples and the people, are abroad inquiring after him, and when they had found him, they would have detained him in thoſe parts among them, but he will not be confined there but perambulates Galilee.

SECTION XXI.

S. MATTHEW. CHAP. IV.

Verſ. 23.

AND Jeſus went about all Galilee, teaching in their Synagogues and Preaching the Goſpel of the Kingdom, and healing all manner of ſickneſs, and all manner of diſeaſe among the people.

24. And his fame went throughout all Syria, and they brought unto him all ſick people, that were taken with divers diſeaſes and torments, and thoſe which were poſſeſſed with Devils, and thoſe which were Lunatick, and thoſe which had the Palſie, and he healed them.

25. And there followed him great multitudes of People from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Hieruſalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan.

Reaſon of the Order.

THE firſt verſe of this Section, laid to the laſt verſe of the preceding, makes the connection and order undeniable and evident; There Chriſt being urged by the men of Capernaum to abide with them, will not be confined in his Miniſtery to that place, for he was ſent to preach the Goſpel in other Cities alſo, and ſo he went about all Galilee, teaching and preaching and healing all diſeaſes: of which and of the fruit of which, this Section giveth account; as that his fame went throughout all Syria, and they brought him all ſick people, and great multitudes followed him.

Harmony and Explanation.

Verſ. 23. And Jeſus went about all Galilee, &c.

Ἰακώσιαι καὶ τέσσαρες καὶ τῶν Γαλιλαίων εἰσὶ πόλεις καὶ κῶμαι. Joſeph. in vita ſua: Apud me pag. 642. There were two hundred and four Cities and Towns in Galilee: Into all and every one of which, we cannot ſo properly hold that Jeſus entred and preached, as that he choſe to go into the moſt eminent and moſt convenient for his work, namely where he might preach unto the moſt people. And this is a ſecond perambulation of Galilee that he made, and a far fuller than the firſt, mentioned Luke 4.15. Then he had walked more alonely and without the company of his Diſciples, but they are now conſtantly and ever with him: Then did he few or no miracles, but only preached, but now he doth exceeding many, and healeth all diſeaſed that come unto him.

The diſeaſes he healed are reduced to three kinds. 1. Νόσοι, Diſeaſes, as Blindneſs, Witheredneſs, Lameneſs, Fevers, Dropſies, &c. 2. Μαλακίαι, Languiſhings, as Conſumptions, Waſtes, Fluxes, and ſuch other, as carried not ſo much pain with them, as certain decaying of the body, and waſting away. 3. Βασάνοι, Tortures, or Wrackings, as Aches, Gouts, Convulſions, and ſuch other maladies as were attended with grievous pain and tortures: And particularly three grievous maladies are named, Palſies, Lunacy, and poſſeſſedneſs by the Devil, the firſt of which expreſſeth the greateſt debility of body, the ſecond of mind, and the third the greateſt miſery of both that can be named: and they were all maladies naturally as incurable as any whatſoever.

His Doctrine is compriſed under theſe two heads, Teaching and Preaching the Goſpel of the Kingdom: the former denoteth the more general tenor of his doctrine, as his explanation of the Law, Admonition, Exhortation and Reproof: and the latter betokeneth his proving that the long and much looked for Kingdom of Meſſias was now come, and his preaching the doctrines that particularly concerned that Kingdom.

Verſ. 24. And his fame went throughout all Syria, and they brought unto him all ſick.

We ſhall the better underſtand what is meant by all Syria, if we look upon the next following verſe, where mention is made of places out of which ſuch multitudes followed Chriſt, as were drawn unto him by the fame that went of him, and eſpecially if we obſerve that Region which was called Decapolis: which Pliny deſcribeth thus, Jungitur ei (Judææ) latere Syriæ Decapolitana regio a numero oppidorum, in quo non omnes eandem obſervant. Plurimi tamen Damaſcum, & Opoton riguas amne Chryſorrhoa. Fertilem Philadelphiam, Raphanam, omnia in Arabiam recedentia. Scythopolin antea Niſam a Libero patre, ſepulta ibi matre, Scythis deductis. Gadara Hieromiace præfluente & jam dictum Hippon Dion, Pellam aquis divitem, Galaſam, Canatham. Intercurſant cinguntque has urbes tetrarchiæ regionum inſtar ſingulæ, & in regna contribuuntur, Trachonitis, Paneas in qua Cæſarea, cum ſupra dicto fonte Abila, Arca, Ampeloeſſa, lib. 5. cap. 18.

The Region of Decapolis joineth to Judæa on the ſide of Syria: it was ſo called from the number of the (ten) Cities in it, about which all do not hold alike: But the moſt hold for Damaſcus, and Opotos, both watered by the River Chryſorrhoas: Fruitful Philadelphia, and Raphana, all lying towards Arabia. Schythopolis, ſo called from Scythians brought thither by Bacchus, where he buried his mother, but of old called Niſa. Gadara, by which Hieromiax runs, and ſo by that which is now called Hippon Dion, Pella bravely watered, Galaſa, Canatha. Among and about theſe Cities there lie Tetrarchies every one like whole Countries, and they are divided into Kingdoms, Trachonitis, Paneas, in which is Cæſarea (Philippi) with the fountain Abila, Arca, Ampeloeſſa, &c.

By all Syria therefore is meant all the Country of the Jews in its full extent both within and without Jordan, for as that was within the Juriſdiction of the Roman Governour of Syria, ſo was it ordinarily called by that name: and not only that, but all this large Region of Decapolis, which did expatiate far into Syria properly ſo called, and into ſome part of Arabia: So that here is a concourſe of Heathens to Chriſt, as well as of Jews, even out of thoſe Countries which had been the conſtant and bitter enemies of Iſrael: and this is the firſt coming in (and it is a remarkable one too) of abundance of Gentiles to our Saviour: compare *Zech.*9.1,2. upon which the Rabbins give this Gloſs. Rabbi Benaja ſaith, Hadrach is Meſſias: Rabbi Joſi the ſon of Durmaskith (or of a woman of Damaſcus) ſaith to him, How long wilt thou pervert the Scriptures to us? I call Heaven and Earth to witneſs, that I am of Damaſcus, and there is a place there which is called Hadrach. He ſaith to him, But I argue thus: And Damaſcus ſhall be his reſt, for Jeruſalem ſhall reach unto Damaſcus, as it is ſaid, And his reſt: now his reſt is at Jeruſalem, as it is ſaid, This is my reſt for ever. He ſaith to him, But I argue thus: The City ſhall be built upon her heap.

He ſaith to him, That meaneth that ſhe ſhall not be moved out of her place. He ſaith to him, I argue further thus: And ſhe ſhall be broad and of large compaſs exceedingly, for Jeruſalem ſhall be exceeding broad, and enlarged on every ſide, as this fig-tree which is narrow below and broad above, and the gates of Jeruſalem ſhall reach even to Damaſcus: and ſo it is ſaid, Thy noſe is as the Tower of Lebanon which looketh towards Damaſcus. For the eyes of man ſhall be towards the Lord, that is, The eyes of every man ſhall be towards the Lord, and not towards their Idols and Images: therefore the Land of Hadrach and Damaſcus and the reſt of the places near to the Land of Iſrael, ſhall be as Tyre and Sydon, and Hamath, and the Cities of the Philiſtims, comprehended among the Cities of Judah, and they ſhall be of the faith of Iſrael, D Chimch. & R. Sol. in loc.

The fame of Chriſt divulged in Syria, bringeth in many from thence to be healed of their diſeaſes, and they alſo become Converts and follow him: ſo was the caſe about Elisha and Naaman. 2 King. 5. Now though Chriſt profeſſeth to a Syrian woman that he was ſent only to the loſt ſheep of Iſrael, yet he refuſeth not the loſt ſheep of the Gentiles when they ſeek to him: And though he ſeemeth to deny her requeſt becauſe ſhe was a Heathen, yet that was rather to kindle her Faith, than to repel her Petition.

SECTION XXII.

St. MARK Chap. I.

Verſ. 40.

AND there came a Leper to him, beſeeching him and kneeling down to him, and ſaying unto him, If thou wilt thou canſt make me clean.

41. And Jeſus moved with compaſſion, put forth his hand, and touched him, and ſaith unto him, I will, Be thou clean.

42. And aſſoon as he had ſpoken, immediately the Leproſie departed from him, and he was cleanſed.

43. And he ſtraitly charged him, and forthwith ſent him away.

44. And ſaith unto him; See thou ſay nothing to any man; but go thy way, ſhew thy ſelf to the Prieſt, and offer for thy cleanſing, thoſe things which Moſes commanded for a teſtimony unto them.

45. But he went out and began to publiſh it much, and to blaze abroad the matter: inſomuch that Jeſus could no more openly enter into the City, but was without in deſert places: and they came to him from every quarter.

St. LUKE Chap. V.

Verſ. 12.

AND it came to paſs when he was in a certain City, behold a man full of Leproſie, who ſeeing Jeſus, fell on his face and beſought him, ſaying, Lord, if thou wilt thou canſt make me clean.

13. And he put forth his hand and touched him, ſaying, I will, Be thou clean: And immediately the Leproſie departed from him.

14. And he charged him to tell no man: but go and ſhew thy ſelf to the Prieſt, and offer for thy cleanſing according as Moſes commanded for a teſtimony unto them.

15. But ſo much the more went there a fame abroad of him, and great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed by him of their infirmities.

16. And he withdrew himſelf into the Wilderneſs, and prayed.

St. MATTH. Chap. VIII.

Verſ. 2.

AND behold there came a Leper and worſhipped him, ſaying, Lord, if thou wilt thou canſt make me clean.

3. And Jeſus put forth his hand and touched him, ſaying, I will, Be thou clean: And immediately his Leproſie was cleanſed.

4. And Jeſus ſaith unto him, See thou tell no man, but go thy way, ſhew thy ſelf to the Prieſt, and offer the gift that Moſes commanded for a teſtimony unto them.

Reaſon of the Order.

MARK and LUKE (eſpecially the former,) are ſureties for the continuance of this method and ſeries, as it will be apparent to him that looketh into their Text. Only this difficulty lieth in the order of Luke, that he hath laid the calling of the Diſciples after the perambulation of Galilee mentioned laſt, which (as hath been proved and ſeen) was ſome ſpace before: For he concludeth his fourth Chapter with theſe words, And he preached in the Synagogues of Galilee: and he beginneth the fifth with the calling of Peter, and Andrew, James, and John. In which his aim may be conceived to have been not ſo much to ſhew the time of theſe Diſciples calling, as to ſhew with what Diſciples he walked through Galilee, when he thus preached thorough it: and intending to ſhew you the men, he alſo ſheweth the manner of their call.

But Matthews miſplacing of this ſtory about the Leper, doth breed ſome ſcruple, and hath cauſed ſome to conjecture, that the Leper that he ſpeaks of, is not the ſame with him which is mentioned by the other two: And they are confirmed in this conjecture the rather, becauſe Matthew ſeemeth to have brought his Leper to Chriſt, as he came from the Sermon in the Mount, whereas he in the other Evangeliſts cometh to him before his Sermon there: for his Text runneth thus, When he was come down from the Mountain, great multitudes followed him, And behold there came a Leper, &c. where the word Behold, ſeemeth to confine and limit the Lepers coming, to Chriſts deſcending from the Mountain where he had preached.

But 1. the poſture of the Leper in all the three Evangeliſts is in a manner the ſame, which argues that all the three do ſpeak of one and the ſame man; Matthew ſaith he worſhipped Chriſt, Mark that he kneeled down to him, and Luke that he fell on his face before him: which in the different terms, intend not either a different man or geſture, but altogether do deſcribe his humble demeanour to our Saviour to the loweſt abaſement.

2. The words of the Leper are alſo the ſame in all the three, If thou wilt thou canſt make me clean.

And 3. So are the words of Chriſt to him, both for the curing of him, I will, Be thou clean, and alſo for prohibiting him to publiſh what was done, and enjoyning him to ſhew himſelf unto the Prieſt: by which it is made even undeniable that all the three do ſpeak of the very ſame Leper.

And as for the word Behold, which is uſed by Matthew, it pointeth at the thing and not at the time: and we may obſerve the like uſe of the words in Matth. 9. 2. where he that will but ſolidly weigh the time of the ſtories of the firſt and ſecond verſes, will eaſily perceive that that word Behold, is not ſo preciſe a pointer out of the ſtories time: as ſhall be ſhewed alſo in the next Section.

Now the reaſon why Matthew hath laid this ſtory after the Sermon in the Mount, is to be fetched from the fourth Chapter: where he firſt having related how Chriſt began to preach, and how he called his Diſciples, he there recordeth how he went about all Galilee preaching the Goſpel and healing diſeaſes: and then according to the method in which he had mentioned Chriſts actions in his perambulation of Galilee, that he firſt preached, and then healed, he firſt gives account of the doctrine that he taught, in Chap. 5. & 6. & 7. and then beginneth to mention the miracles that he wrought: whereof this about the Leper he nameth firſt, as indeed it was the firſt in that perambulation, that is ſpecified by any of the Evangeliſts.

Harmony and Explanation.

Luke 5. verſ. 12. When he was in a certain City, behold a man full of Leproſie, &c.

THE Talmudiſts do diſtinguiſh between a great City, a walled Town and a Village: In the Treatiſe Megillah (or about reading the book of Eſther at the feaſt of Purim) they have this ſaying, If the fourteenth day of Adar, prove to light on the ſecond day of the week, Villages and great Cities read that book on that day, but walled Towns on the day after. Perek. 1.

Now what they mean by great Cities, they explain themſelves, in the ſame Chapter afterward, namely, that was called a great City in which there were ten men to be the Elders of a Synagogue: every place that afforded not ſo many, was a Village: Into ſuch Cities and even into the Synagogue of ſuch a City a Leper might come: but under theſe conditions and limitations. Doth he come into the Synagogue, they make him a place apart, ten hand high and four cubits broad, and he comes in firſt and goes out laſt: Negaim per. 13. But into Cities incompaſſed with walls, a Leper might not come, Maym. in Biath Mikdaſh per. 3.

Now ſuch a City was this that is mentioned by the Evangeliſt: For the Goſpel owneth only the diſtinction of Cities and Villages, under the latter name of Villages comprehending all Towns unwalled, were they big enough to have Synagogues in them, or were they not: and ſo it is ſaid in Luke 8.1. that Chriſt preached in every City and Village: by Villages underſtanding thoſe places which had Synagogues in them.

So that it may move a queſtion, how this Leper was admitted into the City, ſince ſuch were prohibited acceſs unto ſuch places: ſome conceive he broke through all rules and bounds of modeſty and order, and would not be kept out from coming to ſeek his recovery of Chriſt, who he knew was there: others imagine that Chriſt went out of the City to him; and ſuch like anſwers are found out, which are needleſs to ſeek further after, ſince Luke himſelf hath ſhewed the mans warrant to come in there, and hath given us an anſwer to the queſtion, and that is in relating that he was full of Leproſie: and ſo hath reſolved that he was clean and might come in. I know the Phraſe is conſtrued generally as if it ſignified only in oppoſition to a little Leproſie in the head or the beard only, or the like: but Leproſie was not regarded by a magis and minus, ſince the leaſt was as unclean as the greateſt, and did as intirely ſeparate from ſociety; ſave only it was not ſo very noyſom to the party himſelf. But the Evangeliſts expreſſion when he ſaith, He was full of Leproſie, is only to that ſenſe that theſe words of Moſes are, Lev. 13.12,13. If the Leproſie break out abroad in the skin, and the Leproſie cover all the skin of him that hath the Plague, from his head even to his foot whereſoever the Prieſt looketh: then the Prieſt ſhall conſider, and behold if the Leproſie have covered all his fleſh, he ſhall pronounce him clean that hath the Plague, it is all turned white, he is clean.

This man therefore was full of Leproſie, that is, Leprous all over, had been under the cenſure of the Prieſt, and pronounced clean, and ſo was reſtored again to the ſociety of men, and might come into any of their Cities; but the diſeaſe was not yet cured. I have obſerved elſewhere, that the Prieſts could not make a Leper whole, they could only pronounce him clean; and that ſentence did nothing at all reſtore him to his health, but only reſtore him to the Congregation.

Such was the caſe of this man, the Prieſt had done for him as much as he could, he had pronounced him clean, but the poor wretch was as Leprous as ever, even ſcurvy all over, and like enough ſo to have continued: only the malady was ſo fully broken out, that the venom was wrought out, and his breath not infectious, and ſo he was reſtored to the converſe of men again. His caſe thus ſtated, and his character of Full of Leproſie thus underſtood, it exceedingly cleareth the paſſages of his ſtory afterward: As when he ſaith, Lord if thou wilt thou canſt make me clean; he meaneth, If thou wilt meddle with this diſeaſe which is the Prieſts peculiar to look unto, thou canſt make me clean, for the Prieſt could only ſo pronounce me.

And when it is ſaid, Jeſus was moved with compaſſion towards him, it referreth to his viſible ſad caſe, who was Scurfie and Scabbed, a woful creature all over, and who had had as much done to him as man could do, and yet was in this caſe ſtill.

And when he chargeth him to tell no man, but go and ſhew thy ſelf to the Prieſt, he doth it becauſe he would put no diſgrace upon the Prieſthood, but though he had meddled with ſomething of their concernment, and had taken where they had left and done what they could not do, yet would he not vilifie that order and ordinance, but reſerve the honour due unto them; and maintain the judging of Leproſie unto them ſtill, according to the inſtitution that had aſſigned it to them. And this was one reaſon why he injoined him ſilence, becauſe he would not prejudice but maintain the honour of the Prieſthood. And ſo his own words do conſtrue it, when he bids him go ſhew himſelf unto the the Prieſt: So alſo Luke 17.14. And offer the gift which Moſes commanded, this the man had done before, at the pronouncing of him clean, but muſt do it now again when he is made clean, that there may no derogation accrew to the Prieſthood, and the Law about Leproſie, but both of them might have their due honour both from the man and from Chriſt himſelf: and this is meant alſo by the words, for a teſtimony unto them.

Mark 1. verſ. 45. But he went out, and began to publiſh, &c.

He owned Chriſt for the Meſſias, as appeareth both by his words, and by his Geſture. He had ſeen the tokens of the Meſſias in him, when he ſo inſtantly removed his Leproſie with his word: He had received a moſt ſtrict charge, to conceal the matter, and get him to the Prieſt with his offering: but for all this he begins to publiſh: Mark hath uſed two ſpecial words, to expreſs the charge given him, ἐμβριμησάμενος ἐξέβαλε, He gave him a threatning charge, and ſodainly packt him away: Chriſt was ſo ſerious in his charge, becauſe he would avoid the ſuſpition of ſleighting or undermining the Prieſthood about their office which concerned Lepers, and would withal avoid the danger, which might accrew unto him upon such a suspition: Now whether the man did not rightly apprehend the depth and strictness of this charge that was laid upon him, or if he did so apprehend it, was transported with blind zeal so as he would publish this great work, though he that had wrought it had commanded him silence: or whether his boundless joy for his happy cure did make him forget himself; certainly he is not excusable, who having received so great a benefit, from such a hand as he himself owned to be divine, yet was so careless to observe that command that he had received also with his healing. It was a rare cure that had been, to heal a Leper, (see 2 *King.*5.7.) and Christ had not healed any till this very time: therefore when this was published abroad, it would not only gather people under other diseases to Christ for their recovery (for they would conclude he could heal any when he could heal this) but it would cause Lepers to break into the City where he was, which was contrary to their Law and custom, and so would breed troubles and confusion, so that Jesus could no more openly enter into the City.

unto

Luke 5. vers. 16. And he withdrew himself into the Wilderness and prayed.

When Christ is amongst men, he is doing them good, and when he is from amongst them, he is conversing with God: And otherwise he could not do, in regard of the holiness of his nature, love to man, and his Union with God. It was but a harsh time of the year for him to betake himself to seek retiredness in the desert, the winter being not yet over, but the zeal of the Lords glory did so eat him up, that in company he preferd that before his safety, and in solitude he preferd that before accommodations: What was the matter and subject of his prayers particularly were boldness to go to define: It is undoubted, the general tenour of them was, for the advancement of Gods glory and gathering of his Church, and prospering the work of himself for that end, as he sheweth the subject of all his prayers, John 17. and it is like the present conflux and great concourse of people unto him was looked upon by him in his prayers as a singular occasion offered, in tendency to those purposes.

SECTION XXIII.

St. MARK Chap. II.

AND again he entred into Capernaum, after some days, and it was noised that he was in the house.

2. And straightway many were gathered together, in so much that there was no room to receive them, no not so much as about the door: and he preached the word unto them.

3. And they come unto him bringing one sick of the Palsie, which was born of four.

4. And when they could not come nigh unto him for the press, they uncovered the roof, where he was, and when they had broken it up, they let down the bed wherein the sick of the Palsie lay.

5. When Jesus saw their faith, he said unto the sick of the Palsie, son, thy sins be forgiven thee.

St. LUKE Chap. V.

Vers. 17.

AND it came to pass on a certain day, as he was teaching that there were Pharisees and Doctors of the Law sitting, which were come out of every Town of Galilee, and Judea and Jerusalem: and the power of the Lord was present to heal them.

18. And behold men brought in a bed, a man which was taken with a Palsie, and they sought means to bring him in, and to lay him before him.

19. And when they could not find by what way they might bring him in, because of the multitude, they went upon the house top, and let him down through the tiling with his couch into the midst before Jesus.

20. And when he saw their faith: he said unto him, Man, thy sins are forgiven thee.

St. MATTH. Chap. IX.

Vers. 2.

AND behold they brought to him a man sick of the Palsie lying on a bed: and Jesus seeing their faith, said unto the sick of the Palsie, Son be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee.

8. And immediately when Jeſus perceived in his Spirit, that they ſo reaſoned within themſelves, he ſaid unto them, Why reaſon ye theſe things in your hearts?	22. But when Jeſus perceived their thoughts, he anſwering ſaid unto them, What reaſon yea in your hearts?	4. And Jeſus knowing their thoughts ſaid, Why think ye evil in your hearts?
9. Whether is it eaſier to ſay to the ſick of the Palſie, Thy ſins be forgiven thee: or to ſay, Ariſe and take up thy bed and walk?	23. Whether is it eaſier to ſay, Thy ſins be forgiven thee: or to ſay, Riſe up and walk?	5. For whether is it eaſier to ſay, Thy ſins be forgiven thee: or to ſay, Ariſe and walk?
10. But that ye may know that the ſon of man hath power on earth to forgive ſins, he ſaith to the ſick of the Palſie,	24. But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power upon earth to forgive ſins, he ſaid to the ſick of the Palſie, I ſay unto thee, Ariſe and take up thy couch, and go into thine houſe.	6. But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive ſins, Then ſaith he to the ſick of the Palſie, Ariſe, take up thy bed, and go unto thine houſe.
11. I ſay unto thee Ariſe, take up thy bed and go thy way into thy houſe.
12. And immediately he aroſe, took up the bed and went forth before them all, in ſo much that they were all amazed, and glorified God, ſaying, We never ſaw it on this faſhion.	25. And immediately he roſe up before them, and took up that whereon he lay, and departed to his own houſe glorifying God.	7. And he aroſe, and departed to his houſe.
	26. And they were all amazed, and they glorified God and were filled with fear, ſaying, We have ſeen ſtrange things to day.	8. But when the multitudes ſaw it, they marvelled, and glorified God which had given ſuch power unto men.
13. And he went forth again by the Sea ſide, and all the multitude reſorted to him, and he taught them.	27. And after theſe things he went forth, and ſaw a Publican named Levi, ſitting at the receipt of cuſtom: and he ſaid unto him, Follow me.	9. And as Jeſus paſſed from thence, he ſaw a man named Matthew ſitting at the receipt of cuſtom: and he ſaith unto him, Follow me, and he aroſe and followed him.
14. And as he paſſed by, he ſaw Levi the ſon of Alpheus, ſitting at the receit of cuſtom, and ſaid unto him, Follow me, and he aroſe and followed him.	28. And he left all, roſe up and followed him.

Reaſon of the Order.

THERE were no ſcruple at all about the ſeries of this ſtory, Mark and Luke have laid it ſo clear, were it not that Matthew hath brought it in a place ſo far different from them, that one would think in him, that this cure of the Palſie man was not till Chriſts return out of the Country of the Gadarens, for he relateth it thus. And he entred into a ſhip, and paſſed over and came into his own City. And behold they brought to him a man ſick of the Palſie, &c. As if the bringing of the ſick of the Palſie were not till that time of his return, and that it was immediately upon it. But 1. the method of the other two Evangeliſts, who are far more punctual for order than he is, eſpecially Mark, muſt ſtate and rank the ſeries of his ſtory. For it may be eaſily obſerved by any that conſiderately will view the true progreſs of hiſtory in the three laid together, that Matthew ſetteth himſelf to give relation of the ſtories themſelves, but is not ſo very preciſe in fixing them to their proper time. But Mark and Luke who wrote after him, have reduced thoſe ſtories of his into the due order and method of time in which they were acted and came to paſs: and ſo do, as it were, ſet his clock, and tell the time when his ſtories did occur. 2. We obſerved at the laſt Section, upon theſe words of Matthew, When

When he was come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed him, and behold there came a Leper, &c. that the word Behold doth not tye the two verſes together in the ſame time, but that it ſingularly and only pointeth at that ſtory to which it is prefixed, concerning the Leper, without looking back to the time of the ſtory in the verſe before: Such another behold is this, wherewith the ſame Evangeliſt beginneth this ſtory in hand: Not that it tieth the bringing of the Palſick man, to the time of Chriſts return out of the land of the Gadarens, of which there is mention in the verſe before, but it pointeth to the ſtory, before which it is ſet, looking forward to that, and not backward, to the ſtory in the verſe before at all. 3. Now the reaſon why Matthew hath laid this ſtory ſo far off, may readily be obſerved by looking into his Text in this ninth Chapter: He joyneth this ſtory about the Palſick man, and that about Levies or his own calling, and a third about his feaſt, and a fourth about Jairus coming to Chriſt, all together: But theſe were not all of the ſame time, only the two firſt were of the ſame time, and the two latter were alſo concurrent in time but a great while after. Yet he being minded to diſpatch the ſtory of his own call and of his Feaſt both together, as alſo the other two Evangeliſts do, he hath pitched all the ſtories upon the time of his Feaſt; His Feaſt indeed was preſently upon Chriſts return from among the Gadarens, and Jairus his coming to him was at the time of that Feaſt, and ſo thoſe are laid there in their proper time and order: Now though his Call was a long while before his Feaſt, yet to diſpatch all that ſtory of himſelf at once, he hath laid his Call alſo at the ſame place, and with it hath likewiſe joyned the ſtory of the Palſick man which was immediately before his Call. Why we have parted the ſtory of his Call and his Feaſt which all the three Evangeliſts, that ſpeak of them, have laid together, and why we have referred them to ſeveral times, we ſhall give the reaſon of it in the order of the next following Section.

Harmony and Explanation.

Luke 5. verſ. 17. As he was teaching there were Phariſees and Doctors of the Law ſitting, &c.

OUR Saviour having walked and preached through Galilee for a good ſpace, doth now near Paſsover time, betake himſelf to Capernaum to his own home again, that he might provide there for his journey to Jeruſalem to the Feaſt: To Capernaum there had followed him, beſides others that fell to him, in his Galilean perambulation, Phariſees, Scribes and Doctors of the Law, for all the three are mentioned by the three Evangeliſts in the relation of this ſtory, and it will not be amiſs, nor much beſides our buſineſs to look a little diſtinctly what kind of men the Scribes and Phariſees and Doctors of the Law were, ſeeing there is ſo frequent mention of them in the Goſpel.

§. 1. The diſtinction and diviſion of the Jewiſh Nation.

For the proceeding in which inquiry, it may not be impertinent, in the firſt place, to look upon the diviſion of the whole Nation of the Jews as it is held out very ordinarily and commonly in their own writers. And that was into תלמידי חכמים & עם הארץ The Scholars or Diſciples of the wiſe, and The people of the land: or the learned ſort of people, and unlearned: or thoſe that were men of breeding, and that were not. Examples of this dichotomy might be produced by hundreds out of the Jewiſh Authors, I ſhall only offer theſe few.

Maſſecheth derech arets Zuta per. 4. The Scholars of the wiſe are comely in a ſociety, but the people of the land are not comely in a ſociety.

Juchaſin fol. 22. Rabbi Akiba ſaid, when I was of the people of the land, I ſaid, Oh for a Scholar of the wiſe, how would I kiſs him, &c.

Maym. in Talm. Torah. per. 4. Is there a matter of controverſie between a Scholar of the wiſe and one of the People of the land? They adhere to the Scholar.

Idem. The Scholars of the wiſe might not eat in an Inn, nor in the ſtreets, nor with the people of the land.

Idem. in Tephil. per. 12. A Prieſt of the people of the land readeth in the Synagogue before a great wiſe man an Iſraelite.

Id. in Talm. torah. per. 3. A baſtard, if a Scholar of the Wiſe, is of more value than an High Prieſt of the People of the land. Where by a Prieſt and High Prieſt of the People of the land he meaneth ſuch as indeed was a true Prieſt or High Prieſt, but ſuch a one as was unlearned. For, They called every one that knew not the doctrine of the Law, The folk of the land, Elias Lev. in Tiſhb.

§. 2. The diviſion and diſtinction of the learned of the Nation.

Thus was the firſt and general diviſion of the Nation into learned and unlearned, men bred up in the ſtudy of Law, and men that were not: and to this diviſion doth that ſpeech of the Phariſees themſelves refer, *Joh.*7. 48,49. Doth any of the Rulers or of the Phariſees believe in him? But this people which know not the Law, &c. Now the learned of the Nation which were called The wiſe and The Scholars or Diſciples of the wiſe were parted and even crumbled into many ſub-diviſions: Scribes, Phariſees, Sadduces, Herodians, mentioned in Scripture, and Eſſeans, Chaſidim, Jechidim, Zelotæ, Therapeutæ, in Jewiſh writers.

Now the reaſon of this their diviſion was in regard of ſome of them holding to, and others of them warping from, the National and State Religion, ſome more, ſome leſs, ſome one way, ſome another. For if their own Authors did not tell, reaſon it ſelf and common ſenſe would do it, that that Nation, which only of all others, had Religion among them, had ſome common and ſet Rule for their Religion, by which they were to go and to be guided in the practiſe of it. The Rule was Moſes and the Prophets: the ſetting of this rule for practiſe, that is, giving it its fixed and determinate ſenſe for that purpoſe, was by the Sanhedrin or great Council: and according as any one kept exactly to the rule ſo determined, or ſwarved from it by exceſs, or defect, he came under one or other of theſe titles and recogniſances.

§. 3. The National and State Religion of the Jews in the times of Chriſt.

Their Religion in theſe times, howſoever they pretended to the Scriptures for their rule, yet lay in a manner all in traditions, which they not only valued above the Scriptures, but by them they made the Scriptures of none effect at all. *Mark*7.7,8,9. They held That the Lord made his Covenant with them according to the Traditional Law. Baal Turim, on *Gen.*1.3. They held The written Law ſcant and narrow in compariſon of the Traditional. Tanc. fol.4. And that the written Law might be taught for hire, but the Traditional might not. Maym. in Talm. torah per.1.

Now their Traditions were twofold, either thoſe that they called and accounted הלכה למשה מסיני an unwritten Law given to Moſes at Sinai and handed by Tradition from generation to generation: or the practical Gloſſes and Canons which were made upon that unwritten and traditional Law, in the ſeveral generations as they paſſed: Both theſe were called *The Traditions of the Fathers and of the Elders, Matth.*15.2. *Gal.*1.14. 1 *Pet.*1.18.

The deliverers of the Cabbalah, or unwritten Law (which they ſay came ſucceſſively from Moſes) they will name you, as directly from generation to generation, as the Papiſts will name you Popes ſucceſſively from Peter. Moſes, ſay they, received this Traditional Law from Sinai, and delivered it to Joſhua, Joſhua to the Elders, the Elders to the Prophets, and the Prophets to Ezras great Synagogue: Talm. in Avoth. per. 1. The particular hands through which it paſſed thither we obſerved at *Matth.*3. *v.*7.

After the return of the Captivity they derive its pedegree thus, Simeon the Juſt received it from Ezra; Antigonus of Soco from Simeon; Joſes the ſon of Joezer of Zeredah, and Joſeph the ſon of Johanan of Jeruſalem received it from Antigonus; Joſhua the ſon of Perakiah, and Nittai the Arbelite received it from them; Judah the ſon of Tabbai, and Simeon the ſon of Shetah received it from Joſhua and Nittai; Shemaiah and Abtalion received it from Judah and Simeon; Hillel and Shammai from them; Rabban Simeon the ſon of Hillel, and Rabban Jochanon ben Zaccai received it from Hillel and Shammai; Rabban Gamaliel, called the old (Pauls maſter) received it from Rabban Simeon his father; Rabban Simeon the ſon of Gamaliel received it from Gamaliel, he was ſlain at the deſtruction of the Temple; After him was his ſon Rabban Gamaliel of Jabneh who received it from his father; and after him was Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai who had received it from Hillel and Shammai, &c. Avoth. ubi ſupr. Maym. in præf. ad Madda. & Juchaſin fol.13,14. &c.

Thus is the Tradition concerning the deſcent and conveyance of the traditional Law; of which perſons and of which Law theſe two things are to be taken notice of: 1. That all thoſe that are named ſingle in this ſucceſſion, were the Heads or Preſidents of the Sanhedrin, and where they are named double or (זוגות) paires, the firſt named of the two was Naſi, or Preſident, and the ſecond named was Ab beth din, or Vice-preſident. 2. That this Cabbalah or traditional Law whoſe conveyance they thus pretended from Moſes, might not be diſputed, as concerning the truth or certainty of it, though it received in every generation, ſome illuſtration and practical Gloſs for the laying out of its latitude and extent.

They

They that fixed theſe poſitive practical ſenſes upon it, were the Elders of the great Sanhedrin, concluding thereupon in the Councel, and commenting this traditional Law into particular Laws and Ordinances as rules to the nation whereby to walk: and the Sanhedrin of every generation was adding ſomething in this kind or other. And ſo they held That the great Sanhedrin at Jeruſalem was the foundation of the traditional Law, and pillars of inſtruction, and from them decrees and judgements went out unto all Iſrael: And whoſoever believed Moſes, and his Law, was bound to reſt and lean upon them for the matters of the Law. Maym. in Mamrim. per. 1.

Now the way or manner of their legiſlative determining upon this unwritten Law was thus.

1. The general rule by which they went to work, was עשה סיג לתורה To make a hedge to the Law, that men ſhould not break in upon it to tranſgreſs it. And this was a ſpecial ground and riſe, and a ſpecious colour for all their traditions: for they pretending to make conſtitutions to fence the Law from violation, and to raiſe the obſervance of it the higher, they brought in inventions and fancies of their own brains for Laws, and ſo made the Law indeed nothing worth. Take a patern of one or two of their hedges that they made to this purpoſe: The written Law forbad, Thou ſhalt not ſeeth a kid in her mothers milk. Now to make ſure, as they pretended, that this ſhould not be broken in upon, they fenced it with this tradition, Thou ſhalt not ſeeth any fleſh whatſoever in any milk whatſoever. All things that were appointed to be eaten the ſame day, the command taught till the dawning of the next morning: If ſo, why do the wiſe men ſay but till midnight: namely to keep men far enough from trangreſſing, Beracoth. per. 1.

And ſuch another hedge they made to the times, in that ſtory that is mentioned by Tanchumah fol. 37. A man in the time of the perſecution in the days of the Greeks, rode upon a horſe on the Sabbath day, and they brought him before the Sanhedrin and they ſtoned him: not becauſe it was fit to do ſo, but becauſe of the times it was neceſſary to do ſo.

2. This then being the ground upon which they went to work (with an aime to this hedge, as they pretended in all their conſtitutions) they hammered their Cabbalah, or unwritten Law into theſe three parts or forms תקנות גזרות מנהגות Conſtitutions, Decrees, and Cuſtomes, or practices: vid. Maym. in Mamrim per. 1, & 2. I ſhall not be curious to give the exquiſite difference of theſe three in this place, they were (in a few words) Laws which they hewed out of their Cabbalah, injoyning ſome things to be done, or forbidding others, or preſcribing the manner of doing. We ſhall take up one example or two to this purpoſe. It is a command to pray every day, as it ſaid, Ye ſhall ſerve the Lord your God: They learned by Tradition that this ſervice is prayer, becauſe it is ſaid, Ye ſhall ſerve him with all your heart. The wiſe men ſay, What ſervice is that that is with the heart? It is prayer: Now there is no number of prayers appointed by the Law, nor no fixed time for prayer appointed by the Law, nor no obligation to this prayer ſet down in the Law, that is, no mention of perſons tied to it. Maym. in Tephillah per. 1.

Therefore the Sanhedrin in ſeveral generations, made Canons and conſtitutions to decide and determine upon all theſe particulars, as their own reaſon and emergencies did lead them and give occaſion: As in one generation they preſcribed ſuch and ſuch times for morning and evening prayer: In proceſs of time, they found theſe times allotted to be too ſtrait, therefore the Sanhedrin of another generation did give inlargement as they thought good. And ſo concerning the number of prayers to be ſaid dayly, one Sanhedrin appointed ſo many, but time and experience found afterwards that theſe did not anſwer ſuch or ſuch an occaſion, as it ſeems was not obſerved when they were appointed, therefore the Sanhedrin of another generation thought good to add more and more ſtill as occaſions unobſerved before, did emerge, and ſo the number of their dayly prayers grew at laſt to be eighteen, And in the days of Rabban Gamaliel (ſaith my Author laſt cited) רבו מינים בישראל Hereticks increaſed in Iſrael (he meaneth thoſe that from Judaiſm turned to Chriſtianity) and they vexed Iſrael and perſwaded them to turn from their Religion. He ſeeing this to be a matter of more import than any thing elſe, ſtood up, he and his Sanhedrin, and appointed another prayer, in which there was a Petition to God to deſtroy thoſe Hereticks: and this he ſet among the prayers and ordained it to be in every ones mouth: and ſo all the dayly prayers were nineteen. ibid. per. 2.

Sect. IV. The Scribes and Doctors.

Thus was the State Religion of the Jews, and thus ſtated and ſetled. The groundwork was pretended traditions from Moſes expounding the written Law, delivered from hand to hand in the Sanhedrins of ſeveral congregations: the ſuperſtructure was legiſlative and practical ſenſes made hereupon, and determined for the uſe of the people by the Sanhedrin: Now they that had to deal in theſe determinations, were called The Scribes, and thoſe were divided into four ranks.

1. The Naſi and Ab deth din, that is, Preſident and Vice-preſident, who were the ſpecial Treaſurers of the Cabbalah, which they pretended did deſcend from Moſes.

2. The whole Sanhedrin it ſelf, which made their Canons and conſtitutions out of this Cabbalah, and did impoſe them upon the people.

3. Thoſe men of the Sanhedrin or others that kept Divinity Schools, and read publick Lectures in explication of theſe traditions, as Hillel, Shammai Gamaliel, Tyrannus, or Turnus, Acts 22. 3. & 19. 9. &c.

And 4. Thoſe that expounded theſe Laws, as the publick preachers in their Synagogues.

According to which ſeveral acceptations the word Scribe is to be conſtrued in the New Teſtament, ſutable to the ſcope of the place, and to the occaſion whereupon the word is uſed. As 1. in that diviſion of the Sanhedrin into chief Prieſts and Scribes and Elders, Mat. 26.3. the Scribes are here peculiarly to be underſtood, either for the Preſident and Vice-preſident, the Receivers and deliverers of the Cabbalah, or for thoſe that kept Divinity Schools: for properly all the members of the Sanhedrin were Elders, and all of them were Scribes: and yet this diſtinction is uſed to difference theſe Scribes in the ſenſe mentioned from the reſt of the company, and the Elders of the people from the Elders of the Prieſthood. 2. In that paſſage, The Scribes and Phariſees ſit in Moſes chair, Mat. 23. 2. the word Scribes meaneth the whole Sanhedrin who ſate in the chair of Judicature. And in this ſenſe is the word taken in that common and ordinary phraſe which the Hebrew Authors infinitely uſe, דברי סופרים The words of the Scribes. 3. In ſuch paſſages as theſe, The Scribes ſay Elias muſt firſt come: and He taught as one having authority, and not as the Scribes: and, A Scribe taught to the Kingdom of Heaven bringeth out of his Treaſure things new and old, &c. the word is more properly to be underſtood for their publick teachers.

And ſo it is to be conſtrued in this paſſage that we have in hand, Mark 2. 6. There were certain of the Scribes ſitting there; which Luke expoundeth Doctors of the Law, out of every Town of Galilee, &c. For Scribes and Doctors were terms convertible, as Luke 5. 17. with verſ. 21. and ſo were Scribes and Lawyers, Matth. 22. 35. with Mark 12. 28.

We ſhall not trouble the Reader with canvaſſing the queſtion about all the Sects of the Jews which are or might be mentioned, we ſhall only look upon thoſe that are of ſo frequent mention in Scripture, the Phariſees and Sadduces, eſpecially the Phariſees which are named in the Text that we have in hand: Now that theſe, and the Eſſeans who commonly by humane Authors are named with them, were but Schiſmes or Sectaries from the ſtate and national Religion, may appear (to omit more) by theſe two particulars. 1. Becauſe by Joſephus they are commonly ſo called, Αἱρέσεις, as Antiq. lib. 12. cap. 9. & cap. 18. De Bell. lib. 2. cap. 12. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 2. where he alſo calls them Philoſophiæ; which very title uſed by him and other Authors, doth evidently argue, that none of theſe was the general and ſet Religion of the Nation, but an excreſcency, out of it, and a ſingularity from it: as Luke 18. 9. And reaſon it ſelf might tell ſo much, becauſe there was a long time when neither Phariſaiſm nor Sadduciſm, nor Eſſeaniſm were in being, and yet the Nation had National Religion in that time, and when theſe came up, they all differed from it, and one from another. 2. A paſſage of Joſephus in the ſtory of his own life, is remarkable to this purpoſe. I grew, ſaith he, to a great meaſure of learning, being reputed to excel in memory and knowledge. And being a youth but of fourteen years of age, I was commended by all for a ſcholar: and the chief Prieſts and the chief men of the City would come unto me to be informed of the Law. Περὶ ἐκκαίδεκα δὲ ἔτη γενόμενος ἐβουλήθην αὐτὸς παρ' ὑμῶν αἱρέσεων ἐμπειρίαν λαβεῖν, &c. Being of ſixteen years of age, I thought to make trial of the Sects that were among us: Now they are three, the firſt of the Phariſees, the ſecond of the Sadduces, and the third of the Eſſeans: For I thought I ſhould chooſe the beſt if I were verſed in them all. And ſo enduring much hardſhip, and with great pains I went through all three: And not thinking this enough but underſtanding that there was one Banus a Hermit, who uſed no cloaths but what were made of Trees, and that ate nothing but what grew of it ſelf, and that for chaſtity ſake waſhed himſelf often day and night in cold water, I was very zealous to become an imitator of him, and I ſpent three years with him.

By which words it is apparent that there was a Religion in which Joſephus was brought up the moſt of his youth, diſtinct and different from any of theſe Sects Religion: and that he was a Student and learned in ſtudies different from their learning and ſtudies: till ſuch a time as Curioſity put him to dive into their doctrines and practices, which took upon them to be the very Apex and perfection of Religion and Learning.

Sect.

Sect. VI. Of the Sadducees.

Sadock and Baithus two Scholars of Antigonus of Socho were the firſt Schiſmaticks and Hereticks againſt this ſtate Religion, of which we have ſpoken: They denyed the reſurrection, which to deny was hereſie indeed; and they or their Scholars denied the whole Traditional Law, which the Jews did take for a worſe Hereſie than the other: Antigonus their Maſter had uſed an obſcure expreſſion in his doctrine, exhorting his Scholars to embrace the Law not looking for a reward, meaning that they ſhould embrace it for the love of it ſelf. But theſe unlucky Scholars miſconſtrued his doctrine even to the denying that there was any reward in the World to come at all: and thereupon they denied the Reſurrection, and ſo did the Sadduces after them, who took their denomination from this Sadock the firſt Author of their Sect. Avoth. R. Nath. per. 5. Juchaſin. fol. 15. Elias Lev. in Tiſhbi; See Matth. 22. 22. Acts 23. 8.

Hereupon that and the ſucceeding generations were put to it, to take up words and arguments whereby to face and confute this Hereſie: And ſo came the Phraſes The world to come, Gehennah, Paradiſe, Abrahams boſom, The ſecond death, &c. into uſe and requeſt, that the very expreſſions might aſſert the Reſurrection, and cry down the wicked opinion of Sadock, Baithus, and their followers who denied it. And among other fortifications that were made againſt this Hereſie, that argument of Gebikah ben Paſiſa, or ben Koſem is deſervedly renowned, מאן דלא הוה הוה מאן דהוה דת כל שכן That which was not, came into being, and ſhall not that much more that hath been already? Juchaſ. fol. 13. meaning, that God who had made the body of man when it had never been in being, can much more raiſe up that body that hath been in being before.

This was the only Hereſie of Sadock and his followers at the firſt, and they diſturbed the ſetled religion with no other, (only he and his fellow Baithus went away to the Temple at Gerizim, and became Samaritans) but he afterward and the Sadduces which came after him, and took their name from him, held another opinion, which by the Jews was taken for as bad or a worſe Hereſie than this (though in it ſelf indeed it deſerved no ſuch brand) and that was, They denyed the Traditional Law, and would owne no Law but the written Law of Moſes: and hereupon they were alſo called Karaites or Scripturiſts, becauſe they were all for the written Text, and would not indure any Traditions: and ſo they ſtruck at the very root of the then religion, which was built upon Traditions in a manner only.

Hear how Rambam complains againſt them, From that aroſe ſaith he, the curſed Sect of Hereticks which were called Karaites: but they are called alſo by the wiſe men Sadduces and Baithuſæans: they began to oppoſe the Cabbalah, or traditions, and to expound the Text as themſelves thought good, without hearkning to any of the wiſe men at all. In Avoth. per. 1. And Elias Levita thus. Antigonus of Socoh had two Scholars Sadoc and Baithus, which grew exceeding wicked and denied the Traditional Law, and believed only what was written in the written Law, therefore they called them Karaites.

The Sadduces were addicted to a Ceremonious Religion as well as the Phariſees, though in all things they went not ſo far, and in the ſame things they went not always alike. They uſed Phylacteries as well as the Phariſees, but they wore them not after the very ſame faſhion. Megil. fol. 24. Nay ſomtimes ſome of the Prieſts adminiſtred the ſervice at the Temple, על דעת הצדוקים after the way of the Saduces, different from the Ordinary way, but ſuch (as the Jeruſalem Talmud relateth) dyed ſtrange deaths. And the matters wherein they followed the way of the Sadduces were all about Ceremony.

But they would own none of the Ceremonies they uſed, as derived from Tradition, but, (as they pretended) deduced in all points from Moſes his Text: For they would acknowledge nothing but what was written, though oftentimes they did not ſo much find it to be written ſo, as they made it ſo by their conſtruction: and joyned in many things with the Traditional Ceremonies, but ſcorned to receive them from Tradition, but would make ſhift to find ground for them in the Text: even as many amongſt us at this day, hold Arminian, Socinian, or Popiſh Tenets, yet ſcorn to fetch them or to acknowledge them fetcht from Arminius, Socinus, or Rome, but will ſeem to fetch them out of the very Text of Scripture.

Let me conclude this matter with ſome words of Joſephus to ſhew how they deſpiſed and rejected traditions, and with a paſſage in Maimonides, that ſheweth how they would have nothing but what was to be ſeen in the Text of Scripture. Νόμιμα πολλὰ τινὰ παρέδοσαν τῷ δήμῳ οἱ φαρισαῖοι, &c. The Phariſees (ſaith Joſephus) delivered many things unto the people as appertaining to the Law, by Traditions from the Fathers, which are not written in the Law of Moſes. And therefore the Sect of the Sadduces caſt them off, ſaying that theſe things are to be accounted for Laws, which are written, but that theſe things that come by Tradition from the Fathers ought not to be kept. And about theſe matters were often great diſputes and differences betwixt them. Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 18.

And, It is unlawful (ſaith Maymonides) for a man to teach when he is drunk: but if he teach a thing that is ſo plain in the Law, ער שידעוהו צדוקים that even the Sadducees will acknowledge it, then is it lawful: as that a creeping thing is unclean, a frog clean, blood forbidden, &c. In biath. hammikdaſh. per. 1.

Sect. V. Of the Phariſees.

As the Sadducees on the one hand made nothing of Traditions at all, ſo the Phariſees on the other hand did make exceedingly too much, not only beyond the Sadducees, but alſo the reſt of the Nation that walked in the high way of the State-Religion, ſeparating and ſingling themſelves in a more ſtrict courſe of Ceremonious devotion, from other people. The Jews do write their name פרושים & פרוש Paruſh & Paruſhim with u in the ſecond Syllable. But the Greek of the New Teſtament, and Joſephus, as alſo the Syriack and Arabick do read it with i φαρισαῖοι & פרישא Phariſh: Suitable to the Chaldee and Syriack language which was then ſpoken. The word Paraſh is uſed but once in Scripture for ſeparation, as ii is obſerved by Elias Levita, whoſe words are theſe פרש לשון הבדלה והפרשה ולא נמצא נמקרא רק במקום אחר &c. Paraſh, ſaith he, betokeneth diviſion and ſeparation, and it is found in Scripture but only once. בתוך צאנו נפרשות Ezek. 34. 12. (His ſcattered or parted ſheep πρόβατα διακεχωρισμένα in the Septuagint rendred by the Latine, oves ſeperatæ) yet our Rabins of happy memory have uſed it exceeding much. And from hence is the Noun Paruſh and Paruſhim, that is Phariſee and Phariſees, and they were men ſeparate from the ways of the world, as were the Nazarites. Baal Aruch yet clearer פרוש הוא שפירש עצמו מכל טומאה ומן מאכל טמא ועם הארץ שאינו מרקדק במאכל A Phariſee (ſaith he) is he that ſeparateth himſelf from all uncleaneſs and from all unclean meats, and from the common people that underſtand not the exact orders for meats, &c. According to this ſenſe of ſeparation Juchaſin calleth Merlins mother a פרושה a Phariſee, that is a Nun or recluſe. His ſtory of him and her is briefly thus. בימי ליאון היה החכם הגדול מירלין באינגא לטוירא ואמרו שהיה בן שר ואמו היתה בת מלך פרו שה ועשה ספרים הרבה In the days of Pope Leo was the great wiſe man Merlin in England: And they ſay he was the ſon of a Spirit: Now his mother was a Kings daughter, A Nun: And he made many books, fol. 144. col. 1.

And divers other paſſages in the Jewiſh writers might he produced, by which they ſhew the general acceptation of the word Phariſee, namely, that it ſignified and imported ſeparation: and that the Phariſees were Separatiſts from others of the Nation.

Now about the ſeparation of the Phariſees from other perſons, two things are to be examined. 1. In what their ſeparation did conſiſt. And 2. from what perſons it was that they did ſeparate.

As to the firſt; their Separation from others was not about the publick Ordinances or refraining the publick Aſſemblies as the Separatiſts of our times do, but it conſidered in ſome other thing, In Mat. 12. 9, 13. Luke 6.6,7. there were Phariſees in the Synagogue at the publick Worſhip, &c.

And Separation from the publick Aſſemblies was againſt their own poſition. תפלת הצבור נשמעת תמיר ואפילו היו בהן חו שאים The prayer of the Congregation (ſaith their Tradition) is always heard: Yea though ſinners be among them, yet the Holy bleſſed God refuſeth not the prayer of the Aſſembly: Therefore it is neceſſary that a man joyn himſelf with the Congregation, and pray not alone at any time when he may pray with the Congregation: And let a man ever go to Morning and Evening prayer in the Synagogue: for his prayer is not always conſtantly heard but in the Synagogue: And every one that hath a Synagogue in his City, and prayeth not in it with the Congregation he is called שכן רע an evil neighbour. Maymon. in Tephillah. per. 8.

Nor did their Separation conſiſt in refraining the company and converſe of others, for they ſate in the Sanhedrin with Sadducees, Acts 23. 6. Mark 3.6. ſee alſo Mat. 16.1. they to other mens houſes. Mark 16. 16. &c.

Converſed with any ſorts of men to make them Proſelytes, Mat. 23. 15. conferred ordinarily with Chriſt and his Diſciples, Mat. 15. 1. & 12. 1, 2, &c. And indeed it will be a hard thing to find in the Jews antiquities, mention of Separation of any of the Nation, from the converſe of others: unleſs it were from a perſon Anathemated, which falleth not under the conſideration that we have in hand.

To eat indeed with the common ſort of people they made it ſhy, as Mark 2. 16. for none of the Scholars of the Wiſe would eat with the people of the Land, (as was obſerved before) no more would any of the people of the land with a Heathen, Act. 11. 3. (therefore that prophane perſon of the Church of Corinth muſt be uſed as a Heathen or Publican, Mat. 18.17. they muſt not eat with him. 1 Cor. 5. 11.) but to talk, walk, ſit, buy, ſell, and to uſe other common converſe with men of the Nation, it was neither againſt the Tenents nor practice of the Phariſees, nor any other Sects of the Nation, unleſs it were the Eſſeans growing Theraputæ, or the Colledges of Hermites in Egypt.

2. The

2. The ſeparation of Phariſees therefore did not conſiſt (which is the ſecond thing to be looked after) ſo much in their withdrawing from the ſociety of men, as it did in a ſingularity of holineſs and devotion, which they pretended and took upon them to have above, beyond, and diſtinct from other men: walking beyond and above the rule of the State Religion, and common devotion of the Nation, and ſeeming ſomething above Ha in the ſcale of holyneſs to the eyes of others, whereas he whoſe eyes walk through the Earth, ſaw them to be but painted Sepulchers full of rottenneſs and corruption, Mat. 23. 27.

Their tranſendency of holyneſs which they took upon them, they deſired ſhould appear eſpecially in theſe two particulars. 1. In extream Ceremoniouſneſs beyond other men, as in frequent waſhings, large Phylacteries, Touch not, taſte not, handle not, &c. And 2. In extraordinary pretended devotions, as long and frequent prayers, much ſhew of faſtings, &c. that they might be ſeen of men.

We will not antedate the conſideration of theſe particulars, by inſiſting on them here, but reſerve them to be looked after as they come to hand in our future progreſs: only here let us take the pattern and Character of the Phariſees, as the Talmud it ſelf, and the Jews own Authors do picture them, which for the preſent may ſerve for ſome explanation of thoſe particulars, wherein the Goſpels do point at their pretended and hypocritical ſuperlative holineſs. The Talmud nameth ſeven kind of Phariſees. 1. פרוש שכמי The Schechemite Phariſee העשה מעשה שכם שמלו שלא לשם מצוה that doth like the Shechemites, who circumciſed themſelves, not for the commandment ſake, but for advantage: 2. פרוש נקפי The daſhing or ſtumbling Phariſee, for ſo we may interpret it המתרחק מלרחות בני אדם בדרכים that avoids thruſting upon men in the way: ונופק רגליו באבנים And daſhes his feet againſt the ſtones: he went ſo demure a grave pace that he would not lift up his feet from the ground, but daſht and ſtumbled againſt every ſtone that lay in his way. 3. פרוש קואי The Phlebotomizing Phariſee כיוצא הוא נדחק שלא להזיק חעוברים ושביס He as he went would thruſt up to the wall, leſt he trouble the paſſengers that went and came, ומקיו דם בנותלים ſo hard that he would daſh his face againſt the wall and draw blood: 4. פרוש מרוביא The Peſtil Phariſee כיוך בגדיו בודו that wrapt his coat about his hand ומראה עצמו מתרחק ממגע בני אדם שלא יטמא And kept off himſelf from touching of any men, leſt he ſhould be defiled: uſing his hand mufled in his cloaths, as it were a peſtil to drive off men from him. 5. פרוש מה חובתי ואעשנה The Supererogation Phariſee, that ſaid what is my duty and I will do it and to ſpare, ſhew me my trangreſſion and I will amend it, as meaning, that there is no man that can ſhew wherein ever I tranſgreſſed. 6. פרוש אחר נקפי Another daſhing Phariſee, שהולך כפוף that went bending double, in ſhew of humility: and winked as he went and daſhed his feet againſt ſtones: but his heart was naught: He drew blood by daſhing againſt walls: ſeeming to be very humble, and for the abundance of his humility, he would not look about him as he went, but daſhed his arms or ſhoulders againſt walls, and drew blood: and all this not in the fear of God but to deceive men. 7. פרוש מאהבה The Phariſee of love: that became a Phariſee for the love of men or for the love of God. Vid. Talm. in Sotah per. 3. in Gemara & Aruch R. Nathan in voce, פרוש where he alſo mentioneth יוחני אשה פרושה Joanna a woman Phariſee: of whom he giveth this ſtory in the word יוחני Joanna the Daughter of Retibi by witchcraft hindred womens childbearing, and put them to extream pain in childbirth: Now ſhe pretended to be a very holy woman, and they uſed to come to her and to beg her Prayers in behalf of ſuch or ſuch a woman, that ſhe might be delivered: and then ſhe would looſe the charm, and the woman was ſoon brought to bed: At laſt ſhe was diſcovered to be a Witch, and then they ſlew her. He calleth her פרושה A Phariſee becauſe of her pretended holineſs.

Thus was the Phariſees Separation or diſtinction from other men: not in regard of refraining of the ſociety of men, either in publick or private, either in Synagogue or ſtreet, but in taking on him and ſeeming to be more incomparably holy, and moſt diſtinctively tranſcendent above all other: Luke 18. 10. They deſpiſed the Sadduces as Hereticks; and the ſtrictneſs of the Eſſeans as far ſhort of their Ceremoniouſneſs (though I believe they were the far honeſter and more ſincerely religious men) and the reſt of the learned of the Nation that were not of theſe Sects were nothing in their eyes, becauſe not of their way and practiſe: But as for the common people, it is above expreſſion how ſcornfully they looked upon them. לא יאכל זב פרוש עם זב עם הארץ A Phariſee that had an Iſſue might not eat with one of the common people that had an iſſue, though they were both under the ſame uncleanneſs: Sabbath per. 1. in Gemara. Nay they had a ſcornfull Maxim, בגדי עם הארץ מדרס לפרושים That the garments of the common people were to them as the ſhooes of him that had an iſſue: Hagigah. per. 2. for having touched their garments, they waſhed themſelves before they ate, is having been defiled by them with an high uncleaneſs. Aruch in voce פרוש And that ſpeech of theirs mentioned before may top up all, John 7. 49. This people that know not the Law is curſed.

Thus

Thus were the Phariſees ſeparated and ſevered in their own conceit and practice, and would appear ſo in the eyes of others, from all other men of the Nation, as in an higher form, and pitch of holineſs and devotion: looking down upon all ſorts of men as below them in piety and Religion, and though not ſeparating from their ſociety, yet not equalling them within their thoughts, but deſpiſing them: converſing ordinarily with the common people, but waſhing after coming near them, as having received defiling from them.

This great pretence and ſhew of holineſs they politickly uſed to bring them into the eſteem and repute of men and in favour with the people: which end they accordingly attained unto ſo far, that they got all the applauſe and indeed all the power into their own hands. The Phariſees have ſo great power with the multitude (ſaith Joſephus) that if they ſpeak any thing againſt the King, or againſt the High-Prieſt they are preſently believed Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 18. And a little after. The Sadduces did only win upon the rich, but had not the common people on their ſide. But the Phariſees had the multitude for them: They had ſmall reaſon, conſidering how they ſcorned them, and domineered over them. And there he relates how they ſtirred up the peoples hate againſt Hyrcanus the King, and in chap. 23. how they did the like againſt King Alexander. And therefore when he was upon his death bed, he adviſeth Alexandra the Queen to keep in with the Phariſees: For that they were very powerful with the people, and could hurt thoſe they hated and help their friends. Μάλιστα γὰρ πιστεύεσθαι παρὰ τῷ πλήθει περὶ ὧν ἂν φθονοῦντες τὶ κακὸν λέγωσι. For that they are mightily believed by the people, eſpecially if they ſpeak evil of any man whom they hate. And I my ſelf ſaith the King came into diſfavour by their means becauſe I gave them offence: And to trouble the Reader but with one Character more of them: the ſame Joſephus Ant. lib. 17. c. 3. gives them this badge: Φαρισαῖοι βασιλεῦσι δυνάμενοι μάλιστα ἀντιπαρῆσαν: περιμηθεῖς κακῷ πρᾶσσειν εἰς τὸ πολεμεῖν τε καὶ βλάπτειν ἑτοιμότατοι. The Phariſees are exceeding ſtrong to oppoſe Kings: they are ſubtil and very forward to make open war, and to do miſchief.

Now although the word Scribes and Phariſees are made terms convertible in this portion of Scripture that we are upon (for whereas Luke calls them Phariſees and Doctors of the Law, verſ. 17. and Scribes and Phariſees, verſ. 21. the other two Evangeliſts have only called them Scribes) and the like convertibleneſs is uſed in other places, yet was there a diſtinction to be made betwixt a Scribe and a Phariſee. To this purpoſe is that paſſage obſervable in Acts 23. 6, 7, 9. where the Sanhedrin is deſcribed to conſiſt of Phariſees, Sadduces, and Scribes which were on the Phariſees part: that is, Scribes that were of the Phariſees mind and part in matter of opinion, but were not Phariſees in demeanour in matter of ſo preciſe converſation (unleſs the word Scribes there do mean the Preſident and Vice-preſident of the Councel.) For it was very poſſible, nay eaſie for a man, to be a Scribe, that is, either a member of the Sanhedrin, or a publick Teacher, and yet neither a Sadduce in opinion, nor a Phariſee in practice. The Sadduces of the Sanhedrin may be called Scribes, becauſe they were of the Law-makers to the Nation as well as the Phariſees, but the Phariſees more properly might be called ſo, becauſe they were ſo zealous of Traditions and of the decrees of the Scribes that had ſtill gone before them: but every Scribe that held with the Phariſees in that point, went not with them in the ſtrictneſs of their Ceremonious demeanour: ſo that every Scribe was not a Phariſee, and every Phariſee not a Scribe. For the title Scribe did denote a function, but the title Phariſee did denote devotion: Now theſe that the Evangeliſts ſpeak of in the place that we have in hand, were both Phariſees and Scribes, that is, not only the publick Teachers in their Schools and Synagogues, of thoſe Traditions upon which the State-Religion was ſetled, and according to which the body of the Nation walked, but ſuch as took upon them a preciſeneſs and devotion above the common rate and practiſe of thoſe that walked in the State-Religion. The concourſe of theſe Doctors was occaſioned partly by Chriſts peregrination throughout their Synagogues of Galilee, where they were eye and ear witneſſes of his works and words, and partly by that fame that was now ſpread of him through all the Countries thereabout, as Mat. 4. 25. And Chriſt in this great concourſe of ſuch learned, prying and captious men, doth mightily and abundantly ſhew forth his power of healing which Luke hath uttered, The power of God was preſent to heal them, that by ſuch demonſtrations he might convince them that he was the Meſſias.

Mark 2. Verſ. 4. They uncovered the Roof, and when they had broken it up, they let down the bed.

It ſeemeth by ſome paſſages of Scripture, that as their houſes were flat roofed, ſo that they had grates on the top of the roof, through which they received light and air when they pleaſed, and when they would they covered thoſe grates with a covering to keep out cold and foul weather; So it is ſaid of Noah that he removed the covering of the Ark and looked, Gen. 8. 13. though it had a window in the ſide of it to have looked out,

Verſ.

Verſ. 8. And of Ahaziah, that he fell through a lattice, 2 King. 1. 2. which may be underſtood of this grate, as he was walking over it. Now whether the Evangeliſts mean that theſe men, took up this cover, grate, and all, and let down the bed, or rather as their expreſſion ſeem to carry it, that they broke the ſolid and whole roof, we ſhall not inſiſt to make inquiry after it, only we cannot but obſerve how like this bed and man in it comes down from the top of the houſe to the coming down of Peters ſheet from Heaven, Acts 10. let down by the four corners.

Mat. 9. Verſ. 2. Son be of good cheer, thy ſins are forgiven thee.

What Matthew and Mark utter, Son, Luke expreſſeth Man, Luke 5.20. and the terms may be underſtood convertibly according to the idiom of the Language uſed both among the Hebrews and the Chaldees: or if the word ſon be conſtrued in its cloſer ſtrictneſs, it may be taken as an expreſſion uſed by Elders to younger perſons, or by ſuperiours to inferiours, as Joh. 7. 19. 1 Sam. 4. 16. Luke 16. 25. But I ſhould expound it in a cloſer ſtrictneſs ſtill, as ſpoken by Chriſt in much tenderneſs and cheriſhing to that ſingular faith of this man that he obſerved in him. It is ſaid indeed by all the Evangeliſts, that Jeſus ſaw their Faith, as applying it to the four men that brought the palſick man thither, but it cannot be ſo much as ſurmiſed but that the diſeaſed man had faith as well and as vigorous as they. And indeed a greater faith had not been ſhewed by any that had dealt with Chriſt in all the ſtory hitherto, than was ſhewed in this action, of bringing this man before him in ſuch a manner, and thereupon it is the leſs to be wondred at, if Chriſt do in moſt melting and tender expreſſion call him ſon, and pronounce healing of the Soul to him that came for healing of his body.

It is not to be doubted, but that upon theſe words of Chriſt the man had received healing though he had ſaid no more to him: ſince none that came to him in faith went away not ſped. Yet herein lyeth ſome ſcruple and queſtion, how the forgiveneſs of his ſins could have influence into the healing of his diſeaſe. Since that is the cure of the ſoul and not of the body, and ſince juſtified perſons are as incident to diſeaſdneſs and to death; as thoſe that are not juſtified: There is a paſſage in the Prophet Eſay, ſomething agreeable to this matter in hand, and that is in Chap, 33. 24. The Inhabitant ſhall not ſay I am ſick, the people that dwell therein ſhall be forgiven their iniquity. Now in ſuch paſſages as theſe there ſeemeth reference to be had to thoſe curſes threatned for violation of the Law in Deut. 28. amongſt which there are ſad diſeaſes of body and mind mentioned and denounced verſ. 21, 22, 27, 28, 35, 59, 60, 61. And from that ground ſeemeth to have riſen their giving up men that were palpable offenders to a Cherem or a curſe, and the giving up of men to Satan: For as for incorrigible offenders, that would not be reclaimed by correction, and for whom there was no expreſs and poſitive Law to put them to death, what was there to be done with them? But to devote them ſolemnly and to leave them to thoſe curſes that God denounced againſt ſuch violaters of his commandements: which Judicial proceſs founded upon the warrant, and belief of his word, it pleaſed the Lord very often to follow with anſwerable effect: and ſuch a perſon became a curſe among his people, as Numb. 5. 27. And this I ſuppoſe to be the giving up to Satan mentioned in the Scripture as devoting ſuch a wretch, out of the care and protection of God, to the power and diſpoſal of the Devil: And this that common and proverbial ſpeech among the Jews לוּף לשטן Pack to Satan, which is to be found in their Talmudical writers ſeemeth to have reſpect and reference unto: And accordingly divers diſeaſes in the Goſpel are aſcribed to the inflicting of Satan, as Luke 13. 16. & 11. 14. &c. And the giving up of the perſon to Satan, 1 Cor. 5. muſt be for the deſtruction of the fleſh, verſ. 5.

Verſ. 5. Whether it is eaſier to ſay, Thy ſins be forgiven thee, &c.

It was indeed a truth that the Scribes aimed at, when they ſaid this man blaſphemeth, namely that none can forgive ſins but God only, but their ignorance concerning the perſon about whom they ſpake, did cauſe themſelves to blaſpheme, when they ſaid he blaſphemed. In this anſwer of Chriſt to them, whether it is eaſier to ſay, &c. 1. He meaneth not whether is it eaſier to pronounce thoſe words, but whether is it eaſier to effectuate thoſe words, that is, to do thoſe things that the words do mean, namely to forgive ſins, or to heal a palſie? 2. He meaneth that it had been an eaſier thing to have ſaid, Riſe, take up thy bed and walk, and ſo to have recovered the man of his malady, as a Prophet or one indued with the gift of miracles might have done. But 3. that he ſaid Thy ſins are forgiven thee, purpoſely that they might take notice not only by his uttering of the words, but alſo by the effect that was to follow them, that he had power to forgive ſins: As he had mightily revealed his power in the two cures that he had wrought in the ſtories before, in caſting out a Devil and healing a Leper; ſo doth he here ſhew this power a greater power than either of thoſe; and it may be conceived, That he purpoſely uſeth thoſe word, Thy ſins are forgiven thee, for the mans healing, rather than Riſe, take up thy bed, not only becauſe he would ſhew his own power to forgive ſins, but becauſe he would glorifie the doctrine of forgiveneſs of ſins before theſe Phariſees, who ſtood altogether upon legal righteouſneſs: And ſo at once would ſhew the great work of the Meſſias to ſave his people from their ſins, as Matt. 1. 18. and the great tenor of the Goſpel, faith and remiſſion of ſins, He ſaw their Faith, and ſaid, Thy ſins are forgiven.

in

Matthew is now writing his own ſtory, and he is not aſhamed to ſpeak the worſt of himſelf, that the grace of God might be the more magnified in him, and to tell you that he was of the worſt ſort of men, namely, a Publican, as he ſpeaks it out, Chap. 10. 3. He was alſo called Levi, for ſo Mark and Luke do ſtyle him, and whether he carried theſe names, one before his calling and the other after, it is but needleſs to enquire, ſince double-namedneſs among the Jews was ſo familiar. He was the Son of Alphæus or Cleopas and ſo Chriſts kinſman; and thus that one man hath four ſons that were Apoſtles, namely, James called the leſs, and Judas (called alſo Lebbeus and Thadeus) and Simon called the Canaanite, and Levi called alſo Matthew.

Matthew it ſeemeth was a Publican at Capernaum Cuſtom-houſe, on the Sea ſide (for ſo it appeareth by the relation of Mark) to gather tribute or Cuſtom of Paſſengers over the water, and of thoſe whoſe imployment lay in that Sea of Galilee. And here I cannot but mention a Gloſs of Rabbi Solomon on Judg. 5. 10, 11. You (ſaith he) that walk afoot by the way, ſpeak and mention this deliverance which you have from the noiſe of thoſe that ſhot at you from Ambuſhes, ליסטים ומוכסין Thieves and Publicans that lay in wait by flocks to ſurpriſe thoſe that came over the waters: And the Chaldee Paraphraſt at the ſame place, ſpeaketh of the Publicans ſitting beſides the waters. And to this purpoſe alſo, may be produced that Tradition in the Treatiſe Sabbath per. 8. To carry out ink on the Sabbath to write with it, קשר מוכסין one of the Publicans Tickets, and to carry out one of the Publicans Tickets was unlawful. The Gemariſts there explain what theſe Publicans Tickets were כמה שיעור קשר מיכסים בּ אותות How big (ſay they) was one of theſe Publicans Tickets? It was two great Letters written in Paper, or on ſomething elſe, &c. And the intent of theſe Tickets were, that he that had paid his whole toll, or Cuſtom on this ſide the water, ſhewing it when he came on the other ſide of the water, he was freed from paying any more.

Now Publicans were of two ſorts, either thoſe that voluntarily ſet themſelves to a mony-changing and mony-breaking trade, and in that trade, by cheating and oppreſſion raiſed profit; and ſuch Baal Aruch meaneth, when he ſpeaketh of מוכס העומד מאליו A Publican that ſets up of himſelf, or ſuch as were ſet up by the Romans to gather their Tribute of the Jews, (as ſaith Haggaon) and they favoured ſome in partiality, and on others they laid load, and exacted more than right, and proved but thieves. Aruch in מכס And whether voluntary or authorized Publicans, they are both branded as wicked and unconſcionable wretches, not only by the Scripture, but alſo by the Jews own writers: and as in Scripture they are commonly mentioned in conjunction with ſinners or harlots; ſo are they alſo linked in their writings with the vileſt perſons: נודרין להרגין לחרמין ולמוכסין vows made to murderers, thieves, and Publicans may be broken, Talm. in Nedarim per. 3. halac. 4. אלו פסולין רועין גבאין ומוכסין Theſe perſons are prophane or unlawful, Shepherds, alms-gatherers and Publicans, Sanhedr. per. 1. fol. 24. And in Baba kamah fol. 94. The repentance of ſhepherds, alms-gatherers and Publicans is very hard, &c. Of ſuch a rank and profeſſion was Matthew before his calling, and yet (ſo great is the power of Chriſt in his ſpirit and grace) he becomes not only an Apoſtle but a Pen-man of the Goſpel: and (as it is not improbably held) the firſt that ſet Pen to paper in that kind, of all the four. *Matthæus in Judæa Evangelium primus ſcribit. SECTION XXIV.

St. JOHN Chap. V.

The second Paſſover after Chriſts Baptiſm.

AFTER this there was a Feaſt of the Jews, and Jeſus went up to Jeruſalem.

2. Now there was at Jeruſalem by the [a] Sheep gate, a Pool which is called in the Hebrew tongue [b] Bethesda, having five [c] porches.

3. In theſe lay a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, [d] withered, waiting for the moving of the water.

4. For an Angel went down at a certain ſeaſon into the pool and troubled the water, whoſoever then firſt after the troubling of the water, ſtepped in, was made whole of whatſoever diſeaſe he had.

5. And a certain man was there which had an infirmity thirty and eight years.

6. When Jeſus ſaw him lye, and knew that he had been now a long time in that caſe, he ſaith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole?

[a] The Syriack omits the clauſe ἐπὶ τῇ προβατικῇ and readeth thus, There was there at Jeruſalem a place of a pool, but the Arabick retains it ſo far, that it uſeth the very Greek word. The vulgar hath read both the words in one caſe. Eſt autem Jeruſolymis Probatica piſcina, (though now amended, as ſaith Janſenius) and with the like ſyntax readeth Theophylact, but both diſagreeing from the beſt copies, and both by ſuch a reading, cauſing a very rough and hardly to be conſtrued conſtruction. The Chaldee Paraphraſt in *Jer.*31.39. ſpeaketh of Piſcina vitularia, or the Calf or Heifer Pool, for he hath rendred נועתה by לבריכת עגלרא interpreting the Hebrew word according to its ſignification of lowing or bellowing; where whether he mean this pool here in mention, be it referred to the learned to examine the place and judge.

[b] Bethesda.] The Vulgar reads it Bethſaida, and ſo doth Tertullian and Theophylact in one edition, as is obſerved by Beza: but as he well cenſureth, Scriptura proculdubio propter horum nominum affinitatem, a librariis & aliis Hebraeæ linguæ imperitis depravata. And even ſome of the Romaniſts themſelves who value the Vulgar edition at its full rate, yet forſake it in that reading here. Bethesda, which is the common and moſt received reading, is conceived by ſome to be derived or compounded of בית אשר which ſignifieth the place of effuſion, or falling in of waters; either, ſay ſome, becauſe the rain water falling off the houſes gathered here: or as others, becauſe the waters uſed in the Temple, fell in through an underground channel hither: or as yet ſome others, becauſe water ran out of another pool into this: nay yet ſome further, have dreamed of the blood of the ſacrifices running in hither: But certainly (to omit to examine theſe opinions) the title of the place of effuſion is a note but little diſtinctive of a peculiar pool (and it is apparent enough the Evangeliſt would put a diſtinction upon this pool here) ſince it may be given to any pool near Jeruſalem, or near any City whatſoever. The Syriack therefore hath more pertinently and properly expreſſed it בית חסרא as ſignifying the place of mercy or compaſſion, in regard of the vertue that it had of healing thoſe that were diſeaſed.

[c] The Greek word στοὰ which is conſtantly rendred in the Latine Porticus, is both it, and that Latin word, as conſtantly rendred in our Engliſh A porch: in which there is ſome ambiguity, becauſe of the ſingular ſignification that we in England put upon that word. We take it only for the προσυλον, firſt entrance into a houſe, or Church, or the like, as our common experience tells us what a Church porch or a Houſe porch is, and in other ſenſe than this we uſe it not: whereas the Greek and Latine words, and the Rabbinick word סטיו (the ſame with στοὰ) do ſignifie commonly and conſtantly, cloiſter-walks, (ſuch walks as in which they walk in the Royal Exchange London) namely, walks roofed over, and the roof born up on one ſide with pillars. In the ſurvey and deſcription of the Temple, we have had occaſion largely to treat of this matter, and there we have explained and ſhewed the fabrick and faſhion of Στοὰ Σολομῶντος Solomons Porch or Cloiſter-walk mentioned in the Scripture, and of Στοὰ Βασιλικὴ, The Cloiſter-royal mentioned by Joſephus, and of כסטיו לפנים מסטיו Cloiſter within Cloiſter, ſpoken of by the Talmudiſts. And ſo is the word to be underſtood in this place, that joyning to the buildings or walls that ſtood about this pool, there were Cloiſters or walks made, for the people there to lie or walk under, free from rain and weather. The Syrian uſeth the ordinary Talmudick word אסטוא which is but the Greek word στοὰ brought into an Hebrew garb.

[d] Sinew-ſhrunk, as 1 *King.*13.4. Matth. 12.10. there are only three ſorts of diſeaſed ones named by the Evangeliſt, not but that other diſeaſes attended here for cure, but theſe three were hardeſt of curing, and withal the unreadieſt to get down into the water when it was troubled.

St. JOHN Chap. V.

7. The impotent man answered him, Sir, I have no man when the water is troubled to put me into the pool: but while I am coming another steppeth down before me.

8. Jesus saith unto him, Rise, take up thy bed and walk.

9. And immediately the man was made whole and took up his bed and walked: [e] and on the same day was the Sabbath.

10. The Jews therefore said unto him that was cured, It is the Sabbath day, it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed.

11. He answered them, He that made me whole, the same said unto me, Take up thy bed and walk.

12. Then asked they him, What man is that which said unto thee, Take up thy bed and walk?

13. And he that was healed wist not who it was; for Jesus [f] had conveyed himself away; a multitude being in that place.

14. Afterward Jesus findeth him in the Temple, and said unto him, Behold, thou art made whole, sin no more lest a worse thing come unto thee.

15. The man departed and told the [g] Jews that it was Jesus which had made him whole.

16. And therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, and sought to slay him, because he had done these things on the Sabbath day.

17. But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.

18. Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, not only because he had broken the Sabbath, but said also that God was his Father, making himself equal with God.

19. Then answered Jesus and said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do, for what things soever he doth, those also doth the Son likewise.

20. For the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth him all things that himself doth, and he will shew him greater works than these that ye may marvail.

21. For as the Father raised up the dead, and quickneth them; even so the Son quickneth whom he will.

22. For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son.

[e] And on the same day was the Sabbath,) the expression is something strange, and it might almost induce to think, that by the Sabbath is meant not the Sabbath in its proper sense, but one of the Sabbatical or holy days in the Passover week, and so some apprehend it: but that we find not the Evangelist speaking of the Sabbath but in the proper sense: By Sabbath therefore in these words, is to be understood the Sabbatism of the day, as well as the very day it self.

[f] Ἐξένευσεν) The word by some Expositors is made of a questionable derivation: whether from ξένευω or from ἐκνέυω: The latter is the more undoubted, both as better suiting with the sense of the place, and having also its parallel in the Old Testament, as 2 *King.*23.16. And as Josiah turned himself he saw the graves, &c. The Septuagint have it Καὶ ἐξένευσεν Ιωσιας καὶ ἴδε, &c. So Jesus when he had done his cure upon the man, turned himself away and was gone; Having picked out this long diseased man to do his work upon, and not minding in his wisdom to heal any more, nor to be observed by the multitude more than he must needs: What brought the concourse together in this place, is somewhat hard to find. Jerusalem was now full of people, it being the Passover, and whether these cloisters were full of the poorer sort that had come up to the feast; and could not find better accomodation of lodging for themselves (who can tell whether they were not built for such a purpose) or whether the multitude had followed Jesus thither, or gathered thither upon the report of the mans recovering, be it left to those to think upon that desire to be resolved of it.

[g] The Jews,) that is, the Sanhedrin or the Rulers, for so it is very common with the Evangelists, especially with this, to mean by that expression, as Chap.1.19. The Jews sent Priests and Levites from Jerusalem, Chap.7.1. The Jews sought to kill him. Chap.9.22. The Jews had agreed to put out of the Synagogue, &c. Chap. 18.12. The Officers of the Jews took Jesus, vers.14. Now Caiaphas was he that gave Counsel to the Jews, &c. So that Christ is here convented before the Sanhedrin, although the Evangelist hath not expressed so much totidem verbis, and is put to answer for his life, about the violation of the Sabbath, which they laid to his charge, upon what he had done and commanded to the man that he had recovered.

23. That

St. JOHN Chap. V.

23. That all men ſhould honour the Son even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father which hath ſent him.

24. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, He that heareth my word and believeth on him that ſent me, hath everlaſting life, and ſhall not come into condemnation: but is paſſed from death unto life.

25. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, The hour is coming and now is, when the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear ſhall live.

26. For as the Father hath life in himſelf, ſo hath he given to the Son to have life in himſelf.

27. And hath given him authority to execute judgment alſo, [b] becauſe he is the ſon of man.

28. Marvail not at this: for the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves ſhall hear his voice:

29. And ſhall come forth, they that have done good unto the reſurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the reſurrection of damnation.

30. I can of mine own ſelf do nothing; as I hear I judge: and my Judgment is juſt, becauſe I ſeek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath ſent me.

31. If I bear witneſs of my ſelf, my witneſs is not true.

32. There is another that beareth witneſs of me, and I know that the witneſs which he witneſſeth of me is true.

33. Ye ſent unto John and he bare witneſs unto the truth.

34. But I receive not teſtimony from man: but theſe things I ſay that ye might be ſaved.

35. He was a burning and a ſhining light: and ye were willing for a ſeaſon to rejoyce in his light.

36. But I have a greater witneſs than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given me to finiſh, the ſame works that I do, bear witneſs of me that the Father hath ſent me.

37. And the Father himſelf which hath ſent me, hath born witneſs of me: Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor ſeen his ſhape.

38. And ye have not his Word abiding in you: for whom he hath ſent, him ye believe not.

[b] Some divide this ſeven and twentieth verſe, and joyn the latter part of it becauſe he is the Son of man, to the verſe following, and read it in this ſenſe and juncture, Becauſe he is the Son of man, Marvail not at this: that is, Marvail not at this that I ſpeak, although ye ſee me to be a man, &c. And thus readeth the Syriack and Chryſoſtome and ſome that follow him; And Chryſoſtome, the rather upon this ground, becauſe Paulus Samoſatenus abuſed the verſe pointed as we have it, to the denial of the Godhead of Chriſt, making this argument upon it. If authority to execute judgment was given to Chriſt becauſe he was the ſon of man, then had he not this power of himſelf as God. To which Chryſoſtome gave this anſwer, If the Father gave authority of judging unto the Son upon this ground and reaſon becauſe he was man, then by the ſame reaſon all men ſhould have the ſame authority, for they are men likewiſe. And ſo it appeareth that he was ſtrained to point the verſe as he did, joyning that clauſe, Becauſe he is the Son of man, to the verſe following, that he might avoid the dint of the Hereticks argument: which had been more fairely fenced againſt and without ſtraining the Text, had the term, The Son of man, been cautelouſly interpreted, and the diſpenſations of the Father to the Son as he was the Meſſias, obſerved; As for the pointing that we follow, joyning the clauſe, Becauſe he is the Son of man, to the words preceding, and not to thoſe that follow, it is plainly cleared and aſſerted by the very ſenſe and conſtruction of the place it ſelf: And with all it hath this conſent and concurrence of antiquity, Auguſtinus eam diſtinctionem ſequitur quam ille (Chryſoſt.) Samoſateno tribuit (they are the words of Beza) ut plane appareat Latinam Eccleſiam ſemper ita legiſſe. Conſentiunt veteres omnes Græci codices quos vidimus. Cyrillus quoque non aliter diſtinguit. To which I may add Nec aliter diſtinguit Arabs, for the Arabick pointeth alſo as we do.

The ſame Beza in his verſion of the Greek Text hath rendred it, not Becauſe he is the Son of man, but As he is the Son of man, which caution enough, if with as much warrant of the language.

St. JOHN Chap. V.

39. [i] Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testifie of me.

40. And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life.

41. I receive not honour from men.

42. But I know you, that ye have not the love of God in you.

43. I am come in my Fathers name, and ye receive me not: If another shall come in his own name him ye will receive.

44. How can ye believe which receive honour one of another, and seek not the honour that cometh from God only?

45. Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you even Moses, in whom ye trust.

46. For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me.

47. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?

[i] Gr. Ἐραυνᾶτε] It is not to be distinguished from the word it self whether Christ speak here, by way of command, and injunction, as requiring them to search the Scripture, or whether he speak historically, as relating that they did search them: and so it lieth questionable whether it is to be translated, ye search, or search ye. It is very generally received in the latter sense, namely that he sendeth them to the study of the Scripture, and biddeth Search the Scriptures: and I suppose a main induction to that sense is the signification of the Greek word, which denoteth a narrow or a serious searching, and so the Italian of Brucioli doth render it Guardate diligentemente: But I rather construe it in the Indicative sense, ye search the Scriptures, upon these reasons. 1. Because of what is said in the verse it self, Ye think ye have eternal life in them: in which words our Saviour intendeth not so much to shew what they might have in the Scriptures, for then it had been proper to have said, In them ye may have eternal life: as he meaneth to touch upon the erroneous conceit of the Jews, who thought they obtained eternal life by the study of the Law, ex opere operato: 2. Because of the context in the verse following, which lieth far fairer in this sense, Ye study the Scriptures scrutinously, and they are they that testifie of me, and yet ye will not come unto me: than taken thus, Search ye the Scriptures, for they testifie of me, And ye will not come to me, &c.

Reason of the Order.

FOR the clearing of the Order of this Section (the currency and continuance of the story being the hardest here, to make out of any place in all the Gospels) we must seriously weigh, and if we can give an answer to these two questions.

Quest. 1. Whereas the next Section before, concludeth with the calling of Levi, unto which story the Evangelists and the progress of the history have fairly led us, and whereas all the Evangelists that have spoken of Levies call, have also spoken of a Feast that he made for Christ, in the very next verse, as if it had been on the very next day of his calling, if not on the same; upon what ground or reason can we part his call and his feast as we have done, which all the Texts have laid so close together, Matth. 9. 9, 10. Mark 2.14,15. Luke 5.27,28,29.

Ans. As the Reader may find the time of Levies calling, to be as it is laid in the preceding Section, by the undeniable continuance of the story thither: so will he find by one passage afterward, that the time of his calling was not the time of his Feast, but his Feast was a good while after his Call: and that passage is this. In Matth. 9.18. it is related that Jairus came to Christ to beg the healing of his daughter, whilest Christ was speaking concerning the children of the Bride-chamber not fasting, and of New wine to be put into new bottles: which speech as Luke doth inform us was made at Levies Feast, Luke 5.29,30,31,32,33,34. &c. Now the coming of Jairus to intreat for his daughter, will be found by any that will study the progress of the story, a long space after that time, which the undeniable continuance of the story hath given for Levies Call in the Section preceding. And at the same distance must we lay Levies Feast.

Quest. 2. But since the story of Levies calling and of his feasting must be parted, what reason is there, to lay this fifth Chapter of John, next to the story of his calling above any other part or story in the Evangelists?

Answ. The clearing of the reason of this, and the confirmation of the proper order of this Chapter here, will be made out by observation of these particulars.

1. That the Feast that is spoken of in the beginning of the Chapter, was the Feast of the Passover: which indeed is contradicted by some, as Cyrill and Chrysostome, &c. and held to be the Feast of Pentecost (it may be they thought so because a Passover was the Feast last mentioned before Chap. 2.23. and a Passover is so soon mentioned after, Chap. 6. 4.)

6.4.) but may be confirmed by theſe arguments. 1. Whereas this Evangeliſt John of all the reſt, only undertaketh to give account of the time of Chriſts publick Miniſtry, reckoning it by Paſsovers: if the Feaſt ſpoken of in this Chapter were not a Paſsover, the Miniſtry of Chriſt will prove to have been but two years and an half, from his Baptiſm to his death, which the Prophet Daniel did foretell, and preceding Types did fore-ſignifie ſhould be three years and an half, as hath been cleared heretofore: 2. When Chriſt was in the field of Samaria, it was then but four months to Harveſt, as was obſerved on *Joh.*4.35. Now their harveſt began at the Paſsover, at which time, they offered the firſt fruits ſheaf at the firſt putting the Sickle into the Corn. It was therefore four months before the Paſsover, when our Saviour uttereth thoſe words, or towards the latter end of our November: betwixt which time and the Paſsover, there was no Feaſt (unleſs the Feaſt of dedication were after thoſe words ſpoken, which had no great ſolemnity at Jeruſalem above what it had in other places, nor was there any command of attending it there: nor indeed could Chriſt reach up to it at Jeruſalem, after his utterance of thoſe words if it were after, conſidering the time he ſpent in Galilee before.) This Feaſt therefore that the Evangeliſt mentioneth here, being the next that Chriſt went unto or indeed could go unto, it muſt of neceſſity be the Feaſt of the Paſsover: And this may be ſuppoſed the reaſon why the Evangeliſt did not ſyllabically call it the Feaſt of the Paſsover, though he meant ſo, becauſe that ſpeech and paſſage in the fourth Chapter, did inforce it to be ſo underſtood, though not expreſſed.

2. Look back to the end of the laſt Section about Levies calling: and then forward to what muſt next follow it (ſince his Feaſt did not, as hath been obſerved) and the two Evangeliſts Mark and Luke will reſolve you, that the next ſtory in their relation that did follow, was the Diſciples plucking the ears of Corn: They have indeed laid Levies Feaſt and the Diſciples queſtioning at that time about faſting, between, becauſe they would conclude all Levies ſtory together, but it will ſufficiently appear to him that will but ſtudiouſly ſearch and examine the Order of the ſtory, that his Feaſt was not at his calling, but a good while after: The plucking of the ears of Corn then being the ſtory that in thoſe two holy Penmen is next to follow, we muſt conclude that a Paſsover muſt come between: For till the Paſsover the Corn was not ripe, and till they had offered a firſt fruits ſheaf, on the ſecond day after the Paſsover, it was not lawful to put the Sickle into the Corn to cut it down, to pluck the ears to eat neither, till the offering of the firſt ſheaf had ſanctified the Corn to their eating, as well as it gave them liberty to fall to harveſt. But a word that Luke hath uſed hath put the matter out of all doubt: He ſaith the plucking of the earns of Corn was ἐν σαββάτῳ δευτεροπρώτῳ, that is, on the firſt Sabbath after the ſecond day in the Paſsover week, on which ſecond day they offered their firſt ſheaf, and from which ſecond day they counted their weeks and Sabbaths until Pentecoſt. Between Levies calling then and the Diſciples plucking of the ears of Corn, a Paſsover muſt neceſſarily be underſtood to have paſſed: and this Feaſt that is mentioned in the beginning of this Chapter muſt alſo needs be that Paſsover, or elſe you find not that Paſsover mentioned at all, and you find not any place in the ſeries of the Evangelical ſtory, where this Feaſt and the ſtory attending it in the fifth of John can be ſo fitly and properly laid.

And for the clearer obſervation of theſe things, let us trace the time and the progreſs of Chriſt from his being in Sychar field at Jacobs well, when he ſaith it was then four months to harveſt (or to the Paſsover when their harveſt began) to this Feaſt which we doubt not to aſſert for that next Paſsover. Two days he tarried in Samaria, and then he goes for Galilee, *Joh.*4.43. There he preacheth up and down in their Synagogues, and at laſt cometh to Nazareth his own City, Luke 4.14, 15, 16. with Joh. 4.43, 44. Being refuſed and in danger there, he goeth and dwelleth at Capernaum, Matth. 4.13. calleth four Diſciples, Luke 5.1. &c. continueth in Capernaum ſome Sabbaths, Luke 4.31. on one caſteth out a Devil, healeth Peters mothers in law, and divers diſeaſed: Goeth and preacheth abroad in the Synagogues of Galilee, Mark 1.23.29.32.39. cureth a Leper in one of thoſe Cities, Luke 5.22. returns to Capernaum, and recovereth a Palſick man, and calleth Levi from the receipt of cuſtom, Mark 2. and by this time his four months may well be expired, and we muſt look out for a Paſsover, which we find in this Chapter that we have in hand, or we know not where to find any.

Harmony and Explanation.

Verſ. 1. Jeſus went up to Jeruſalem, &c.

OUR Saviours conſtant appearing at the feſtivals at Jeruſalem, did not only ſhew his obedience to the Law, which injoyned that appearance, but his Communion with the Church of Iſrael, for thoſe appearances were Ordinances and Symboles alſo of Communion. At ſuch times he had moſt pregnant opportunities to reveal himſelf, (as far as his Divine Wiſdom thought it fitting) when all the people of the Country were gathered together, and might be ſpectators and auditors of what was done and ſpoken by him. At the Paſsover before this mentioned, in this Chapter (which was at this time 12 month) he had done many miracles there, ſo that he could not but be looked upon as a Teacher come from God, as Nicodemus profeſieth of him, Chap. 2. At this Paſsover, of which there is mention in the preſent Section, he doth a remarkable miracle in healing a man ſo long diſeaſed, but doing it on the Sabbath day, it became offenſive to them that ſtrained at a Gnat and ſwallowed a Camel, Chap. 7. 21. 23. For this he is convented before the Sanhedrin to anſwer for himſelf: and there he doth as clearly and fully not only confeſs, but alſo prove himſelf to be the Meſſias, as at any time, or in any paſſage in all the Goſpel beſides: And to this his ſpeech, he himſelf doth refer them once and again (when they queſtion him who he was) as to an acknowledgment ſo plain, that there had needed no more queſtioning, had they not been wilfully blinded, Chap. 8. 25. They ſaid unto him, Who art thou? And Jeſus ſaith unto them, Even the ſame that I ſaid unto you from the beginning, Chap. 10. 25, 26. They ſaid to him, If thou be the Chriſt tell us plainly. Jeſus anſwered, I told you and ye believed not, &c. He had preached before, That the Kingdom of Heaven, or the revealing of the Meſſias was at hand, and here in his plea before the Council, he confirmeth that doctrine and cleareth it, affirming and proving himſelf, moſt undeniably to be he. How he came off upon this his plain ſpeech, the Evangeliſt hath not particularly mentioned or recorded; (within the compaſs of a week, at the leaſt, he was walking in the Corn fields, and put to it again to plead about the Sabbath as he doth here:) Whatſoever the Sanhedrin ſaid or did to him, upon this his diſcourſe, certainly he left ſuch a proof and evidence of himſelf amongſt them, that he left them no room to plead ignorance of him, or that they did not know him, but made them, in their croſsneſs and bitterneſs againſt him, utterly unexcuſable: The Reader obſerving how plainly Chriſt ſpeaketh out himſelf at this time, and that before the Sanhedrin may have occaſion to uſe this his obſervation upon ſeveral paſſages in the ſtory afterward, and he may make ſome advantage of the uſe of it.

Verſ. 2. Now there was at Jeruſalem by the Sheep-gate a pool which is called in the Hebrew tongue Bethesda.

The ſituation and the healing vertue of this people, do as much trouble Expoſitors to find out the place of the one, and the cauſe of the other, as any one verſe doth in all the Goſpel: for ſo little is ſaid of either in the Old Teſtament, or in Joſephus, or in the Talmudiſts, that all that have medled with them, have had enough to do, to make but handſom conjectures concerning them. And the Anabaptiſts (as Tolet reports them) have held this ſtory to be but a fiction, blaſpheming what they could not underſtand, or what they thought did pinch their opinion.

In following the inquiry after theſe two things that lie ſo obſcure, we ſhall not be much ſollicitous to find a ſubſtantive to fit the word προβατικῇ whether to render it by the Sheep-gate, or by the Sheep-market, the one no doubt took the name from the other, and they were ſo near together as to breed no ſcruple in our iniquiry. I ſhould rather render it the Sheep-gate, and ſo the moſt have done, becauſe there is ſuch a gate mentioned in Scripture, Nehem. 3. 1. 32. & 12. 39. and rendred πύλη προβατικὴ by the Septuagint.

1. This Gate lay upon the South-eaſt point of the outmoſt wall of the City, as may be ſuppoſed upon theſe grounds. 1. Nehemiah in numbring the Gates and ſurveying this wall round about the City, beginneth at the Sheep-gate, and goes the round till he comes to the Sheep-gate again, Nehem. 3. 1, 32, 33. In this his circuit he goes from the Eaſt along the South wall, and ſo Weſt, North, and to the Eaſt again: If this were a place to ſurvey Jeruſalem, this might be ſhewen at large through all the particulars of that Chapter; It will be enough to an obſervant eye, for diſcovery that his march is this way, when he ſees him, go up from the pool of Siloam, which lay on the Weſt of the City, (as ſhall be ſhewed by and by) along by the aſcent of the ſtairs of Sion, and ſo upward on Sion to the ſepulchers of David, verſ. 15, 16. and behind the Kings houſe full North, verſ. 24. and at length he is got to the Eaſt quarter, to the Water-gate, verſ. 26. to Ophel, verſ. 27. and the Horſe-gate, verſ. 28. which was on the Eaſt, Jer. 31. 40. and about the turning of the South-Eaſt corner he is got to the Sheep-gate again where he began, verſ. 32.

II. This pool of Bethesda, I cannot but conjecture to be the ſame with that which by Joſephus is called the pool of Solomon, in this paſſage of his, lib. de bell. 5. cap. 13. where he thus deſcribes the ſituation of the outmoſt wall. Πεὸς δύσιν διὰ τῦ Βηθσὼ καλυμβδος χωρεῖ καὶ πρὸς τὸν Ἐσσηνῶν πύλην κ) ἔπειτα πρὸς νότον ὑπὲρ τὴν Σιλωὰμ ἐπιστρέφον πάλιν, ἔνθενδε πάλιν ἀνακλῖνον πρὸς ἀνατολὴν ὅπῃ τὴν Σολομῶνος κολυμβήθραν, κ) διῆκον μέχρι χώρε τινὸς ὃν καλῦσιν Οφλᾶς, τῇ πρὸς ἀνατολὴν στοᾷ τῦ ἱερῦ σωπᾶται. On the Weſt it goeth along through the valley called Bethſo to the Eſſene-gate: and then on the South, turning above the fountain Siloam, from thence it winds about to the Eaſt, to Solomons pool: and going along to a place called Ophel, it reacheth to over againſt the Eaſt cloiſter of the Temple. In this ſurvey it is eaſie to obſerve that he comes the way back that Nehemiah had gone forward, and below the turning of the South-eaſt corner (whereabout we place the Sheep-gate) he placeth Solomons pool, upon the Eaſt: Let any one but ſeriouſly conſider of the ſituation of the Sheep-gate in Nehemiah, and of this pool of Solomon in Joſephus, and he will not find about all Jeruſalem a place ſo likely to be Bethesda as was this.

III. The waters of this pool were drawn and conveyed in a ſource thither from the fountain of Siloam. For the clearing of this we muſt 1. obſerve, that Gihon and Siloam were all one: And ſo the Chaldee Paraphraſt renders theſe words, in 1 King. 1.33. Bring him down to Gihon, and 33. They brought him down to Gihon; Bring him down to Siloam, and they brought him down to Siloam: and ſo likewiſe Rabbi Solomon and David Kimchi ſay upon the place, Gihon is Siloam. 2. The fountain Gihon or Siloam, had two courſes or ſtreamings into two ſeveral pools which were called the upper and the neather, ſee Eſa. 7.3. & 2 Kings 18.17. The neather pool was that which was called the Pool of Siloam, Joh. 9.7. Neh. 3.15. which lay on the Weſt of the City, being brought down thither by Hezekiah, 2 Chron. 32. 20. The upper pool was this pool of Solomon, called the old pool, Eſa. 22.11. from that its ancient author; the water-courſe to it was ſtopped by Hezekiah, that he might the better and fuller be furniſhed with water at his own pool of Siloam, near his gardens, Nehem. 3.15. but in aftertimes opened again in times of danger for the advantage of the City, and ſo it continued. And thus did the fountain Siloam lying on the Weſt of Sion called Siloam, and the other on the Eaſt of Jeruſalem called of old Solomons from its Author, and now Bethesda from its ſoveraign Virtue.

IV. Now when and whereupon this wondrous excellency accrewed to this pool, it is eaſier to alledge what others have ſuppoſed upon it, than to produce any ſubſtantial propoſal of ones own: yet ſhall I not inſiſt upon opinions given hereupon already, which are very well known, but offer mine own thoughts, in this conjecture. 1. The waters of Siloam in the Lords own conſtruction did ſignifie and reſemble Davids, and ſo, Chriſts Kingdom, Eſa. 8.6. And in regard of this ſignification Levi Gerſhom, and other of the Jews do not obſerve amiſs, that David chooſeth to have Solomon anointed at Siloam or Gihon: in token of the continuance and ſpreading of his Kingdom, as the ſpringing of that Fountain was continual, and the ſtreams of it did dilate themſelves: And ſince God had put ſuch an honour upon thoſe waters, as to make them an embleme of that Kingdom, the Jews held them in ſo high a repute, that they applied thoſe words of the Prophet to thoſe waters, Eſa. 12.13. With joy ſhall ye draw water out of the Wells of Salvation: and they drew and poured out of thoſe waters at the Feaſts of Tabernacles in their higheſt rejoycing: nay ſtuck not to ſay, משם שאבים רוח הקודש From thence they drew the Holy Ghoſt, Talm. Jeruſ. in Succah. fol. 55. 2. It may therefore be a conjecture not altogether groundleſs: That ſince God had made thoſe waters of ſo high a reſemblance, as to betoken ſo high a Kingdom: and ſince that that reſemblance, (held out by God himſelf) had brought thoſe waters into ſo high an eſteem and obſervation with the people: It pleaſed him againſt the coming and appearing of that promiſed King and Kingdom, to honour and indue thoſe waters with ſuch ſoveraign and healing virtue as the ſtory we are upon, ſpeaketh of; that as they had hitherto repreſented his Kingdom, ſo their healing virtue, given them againſt his appearing, did repreſent his healing power, as Mal. 4.2. And not only that, but alſo gave occaſion to the people to think that the glory of Davids Kingdom was near at hand, when ſuch unwonted and wondrous excellency did now appear in thoſe waters that did ſignifie it. So when the time of the promiſe to Iſrael in Egypt drew nigh, God beſtowed a miraculous and ſupernatural courſe of nature, if we may ſo call it, for the Generation and Birth of their children, Act. 7.17.

V. I ſhall

V. I ſhall not ſtrive to conclude any under this opinion with me; I ſhall only conclude with two things which are remarkable, about the waters of Siloam, from which Fountain I do ſuppoſe the waters of Bethesda to have their flowing. 1. The firſt is, that as this collection of Siloam waters in Bethesda was honoured with this miraculous virtue of healing of all diſeaſes: ſo that in Joh.9. Chriſt honoured the other pool that was filled from Siloam, with the miraculous cure of eyes born blind. 2. Secondly, Let it be obſerved, how ſtrangely, and one would wonder to what purpoſe, the Holy Ghoſt doth conſtrue the Hebrew word Siloam, into a Greek expreſſion, Joh.9.7. Go waſh in the Pool of Siloam, which is by interpretation ſent. Who ſent? Let the Reader but examine whether he can find any to whom the conſtruction may ſo properly be applied as to Chriſt, ſent of God, whom that Fountain or waters ſignified.

§. Having five Porches.

We obſerved before that theſe Porches are to be underſtood for Cloiſter walks: five in number according to the quinque lateral, or five-angle form of the pool and place: for ſo it is more proper to hold, concerning the number rather than to look after alluſions and allegories about it, which give but little ſatisfaction as to the hiſtorical matter: whether theſe Cloiſters were built before the healing virtue of the water firſt appeared for the conveniency of thoſe that had occaſion to come to the waters, or after the appearing of that miraculous excellency for the accommodation of them that ſtayed there for healing, it is not much worth the labour to inquire, and there is but little hope to find it out. It is more generally thought that they were built upon the latter occaſion, and ſo we leave them.

The general ſilence of the Jews about the race and wondrous virtue of this pool is ſomething ſtrange, who in the abundant praiſes and privileges and particulars of Jeruſalem, which they give, yet ſpeak not one ſyllable that I have ever found, towards the ſtory of Bethesda, though it might have been a ſtory of ſo remarkable recogniſance: which makes me the rather to believe that this healing virtue of it, was, and was taken for a preſage of the near approach of the Meſſias, as we have ſpoken, becauſe they to weaken the truth of his coming have ſubtilly been ſilent in ſuch a matter.

I may not utterly omit to ſay ſomething about the opinions of others concerning the ſoveraign efficacy of theſe waters, the two that are the moſt current, and that carry the faireſt probability and colour with them are theſe,

1. That in this pool the Sacrifices were waſhed, and God would honour the rite of Sacrifice with ſuch a miraculous work in the place where they were waſhed and fitted for the Altar: which if the thing were true, were not impertinent in the application, but the truth I queſtion. For if they mean that the beaſts that were to be ſacrificed were waſhed here whilſt they were alive, as ſome, and thoſe not a few will have it, it is neither to be proved by the Scripture, nor dreamed of by any Jews that write upon that ſubject, that any ſacrificed beaſt was to be waſhed till he was ſlain: But if they mean that the inwards of the ſlain Sacrifice was waſhed here (as the inwards indeed were the only things except the legs, that were to be waſhed, Lev. 1. 9.) it is eaſie to be proved by Scripture that the inwards were waſhed at the Temple, and never brought out thence; and the Talmudiſts ſhew us a room at the Temple for this very purpoſe, called The waſhing room, which we have ſpoken of in its place, where they had their firſt ſcouring, and marble Tables in the Court, where they had a ſecond.

2. Another opinion is, that God by this wondrous virtue of Bethesda waters would antedate, as it were, honour to the waters of Baptiſm which was now to come in.

But might not the Phariſees as well miſconſtrue the matter, and ſay it ſealed the honour of their waſhings, which were of uſe already and ſo long before, as well as of Baptiſm that was now coming in? I am not ignorant of the conception of Tremellius in this matter, in his marginal notes to *Nehem.*3. but when I conſider what kind of man Eliaſhib was, to whom that opinion refers ſo much, I can ſee but little ſatisfaction in that conjecture: eſpecially conſidering how dead the appearing of Angels or miracles had been, from the times of Eliaſhib, till near the appearing of Chriſt in humane fleſh.

Verſ. 4. For an Angel went down at a certain ſeaſon, &c.

It is but a kind of labour loſt to ſtand to debate, whether this ſeaſon were fixed to all the three feſtivals, or to Paſsover time alone, or to Pentecoſt alone, or to ſome other determinate time of the year, for theſe opinions are ſeverally aſſerted; it is moſt probable the time was uncertain, and the waiters there could not gueſs when the Angel would come, come, but ſtood in continual expectation and attendance for his coming: Whether he appeared in viſible ſhape is alſo queſtionable, but though he were not to be ſeen, which is the more probable, yet did he give ſo viſible and apparent evidence of his being there, by troubling the water, either cauſing it to boyl, or tumble in waves, or ſome ſuch thing, that the parties preſent did perceive well enough when he was come. The Lord would uſe an Angel in this imployment, and the Angel muſt uſe the troubling of the water, for the healing effect, not only becauſe it is Gods ordinary way of providence to uſe the miniſtration of Angels in ſuch things, nor altogether becauſe the meer troubling of the water did produce ſuch an efficacy, but becauſe the people might the more viſibly obſerve the reſtoring of ſenſible miniſtration of Angels, and of works miraculous, which had been either a very meer ſtranger, or if at all appearing, exceeding rare, ever ſince the death of the laſt Prophets or thereabout: And upon this reaſon I cannot but hold that this miraculous virtue was but of a later date; becauſe miracles and Angels had not been ſo conſpicuous among them till near Chriſts coming.

Verſ. 5. A certain man which had an infirmity 38. years.

Our Saviour is pleaſed to chooſe out for his cure, a man and malady of the longeſt languiſhing and of the greateſt unlikelihood of recovery. If we run back theſe eight and thirty years to the firſt beginning of his infirmity, we ſhall find that he was entred into this his diſeaſe ſeven years and an half before Chriſt was born, for Chriſt was now compleat thirty years old and an half: and it may be his diſeaſe was as old as was this virtue of Betheſda waters. It began upon him immediately after the Temple was finiſhed and completed by Herod, as it will appear to him that will calculate and compute the times. Now I ſhould aſſoon date this healing virtue of Betheſda from about thoſe times as any times I can think upon. For as the providence of God did bring on and uſher in the coming of the Meſſias (when it drew near) by ſeveral diſpenſations and degrees, ſo the bringing of the Temple to the higheſt glory that ever it muſt have (but only that the King of glory came into it,) and the reſtoring of Angelical and miraculous adminiſtrations were not the leaſt of thoſe diſpenſations.

But be it how it will, whether the mans diſeaſe were as old as the pools virtue or no, it was ſo old, as doubtleſs the oldeſt in all the pack, and as to glorifie the power of Chriſt moſt ſingularly in the healing of it.

Verſ. 6. He ſaith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole?

Chriſt doth not queſtion this as doubting of his deſire, but to ſtir up his faith and expectation. His lying and waiting there ſo long, did reſolve the queſtion, That he would be made whole; but the greater queſtion was, Whether he had faith to be healed, as Acts 14. 7. and that our Saviour puts to trial by this interrogation.

Verſ. 8. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Riſe, take up thy bed and walk.

Here is a queſtion alſo not unjuſtly moved; Why would Chriſt injoyn him to carry his bed on the Sabbath day? It was contrary to the letter of the Law, Jer. 17. 21, 22. Bear no burden on the Sabbath day, &c. It was extreamly contrary to their Traditions. For bringing a thing out and in from one place to another was a work, and one of the ſpecial works forbidden to be done on the Sabbath day. Mayim. in Shab. per. 12. And he that carryeth any thing on the Sabbath, in his right hand, or left, or in his boſom, or upon his ſhoulder, he is guilty. Talm. in Sab. per. 10. And it was dangerous to bring him either to whipping or to ſuffer death. The moſt general anſwer that is given is, that Chriſt would have him hereby to ſhew that he was perfectly and entirely healed, when he that could not ſtir before, is able now to carry his bed: and ſo by this action, at once he gives a publick teſtimony of the benefit received, and an evident demonſtration of the perfectneſs of the cure.

But both theſe might have been done abundantly, only by his walking ſound and well, ſeeing that he could not walk nor ſtir of ſo long before. A man that had been ſo diſeaſed ſo long a ſpace, and had lain at theſe waters ſo great a time, for him now to walk ſtrongly and well, would ſhew the benefit received, and the cure done as well as walking with his bed on his back. There was therefore more in this command of Chriſt, than what did barely refer to the publication of the miracle; and that may be apprehended to have been, partly in reſpect of the man, and partly in reſpect of the day.

In reſpect of the man, it was to trie his faith and obedience, whether upon the command of Chriſt, he durſt and would venture upon ſo hazardous an action, as to carry his bed on the Sabbath day, which might prove death, or ſore beating to him:

and he relies upon the word of him that commanded, and casts off fear and does it. And to this sense his own words do construe the command when the Jews question him upon the fact, He that made me whole gave me warrant to do it, for he bad me, and said, Take up thy bed and walk. He whose power was able for such a cure, his word was warrant for such an action. And as our Saviour stirs up his faith in his question before, Wilt thou be made whole? so he tries what it is in this command, Take up thy bed and carry it home: for so we must construe that Christ ment by walking, from the like expression, Mark 2. 9. with vers. 11.

In respect of the day, it was to shew Christs power over the Sabbath: And as in healing of the palsick man, Mark 2. 9. he would not only shew his power over the disease, but also over sin, and so forgave it: So it pleased him in this passage, to shew his power over the Sabbath, to dispence with it, and to dispose of it as he thought good, as he shewed his command over the malady that he cured.

And here is the first apparent sign toward the shaking and alteration of the Sabbath in regard of the day that we meet withall, and indeed a greater we hardly meet with, till the the alteration of the day came. To heal diseases and to pluck off ears of corn for necessary repast on the Sabbath day, had their warrant even in the Law it self, and in all reason: but to enjoin this man to carry his bed on that day, and to bear it home, whereas the bed might very well have lain there till the Sabbath was over; and his home was no one knows how far off; certainly it sheweth that he intended to shew his authority over the Sabbath, and to try the mans faith and obedience in a singular manner. It was easie to foresee how offensive and unpleasing this would be to the Jews (for it stuck with them a long time after, Joh. 7. 23.) and how dangerous it might prove to the man himself, and yet he purposely puts him upon it, that he might hereby assert his own divine power and God-head, as it appeareth by his arguing for it, when they cavil at him all along the Chapter. Even the same power that could warrant Abraham to sacrifice his own son, and Joshua to march about Jericho on the Sabbath day.

Vers. 14. Afterward Jesus findeth him in the Temple, &c.

The Faith and Obedience of the man upon Christs command (though it were of so nice consequence) do argue to us, that his appearance at the Temple, was to render his thanks for the great benefit he had received. The poor wretch had hardly been at this Temple for eight and thirty years together, (the date of Israels wandring in the Wilderness after Gods decree upon them, Numb. 14.) and now seeing he is miraculously inabled to go thither, it is time to go to give praises to him who had done so great things for him. It was at the Passover that he was recovered, a time when all the people upon the ingagement of the command, were to present themselves before the Lord: but his long absence and his present miraculous inabling to appear, did double and treble the ingagement upon him.

There Christ findeth him, where it was fittest he should be found, owns him again, and giveth him the wholsome admonition, Sin no more lest a worse thing come unto thee. Not only implying that all our maladies come for sin, but as it seemeth concluding that this long and sore diseasedness had seised upon him, for some particular and notorious offence.

Vers. 15. The man departed and told the Jews that it was Jesus, &c.

Not with an evil will or intention, to have Christ indangered or persecuted for his work on the Sabbath day, but in zeal to profess and publish him to the Jews, for the wonder wrought so powerfully by him: we need no other argument to prove the negative; namely, that he sought not to endanger Christ, than even common sense and reason: For, for a man so gratiously recovered from so sad and so long a malady, to go about in requital of this, to forward and seek the destruction of him that did recover him, is a thing so horrid and incredible to conceive, that it would speak a Devil rather than a man that did it. It is true indeed that the Jews to whom he went to tell this, were the Sanhedrin, or the men of authority; but that he did it for the honour of Jesus who had cured him, his obedience to Christs command, his pleading the warrant of that command, his resorting upon his healing to the Temple, his lesson given him by Christ there, and his mentioning only the miracle of healing, and not the command to carry his bed, are arguments sufficient to evince. So that this healed mans errand to the Jews is not to accuse Christ, but to preach him, and to incite them to take such notice and respect of him, as was fit for one that had done so great a miracle.

Vers.

Verſ. 17. My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.

The ſpeech of Chriſt from hence to the end of the Chapter, was made by him (as hath been ſaid) before the Sanhedrin, before which he was called to anſwer for what he had done on the Sabbath day: for whereas it is ſaid the Jews did perſecute him and ſought to kill him, it is moſt proper to underſtand it, that they went about it in a Judicial way, (as they would pretend) even as they did when they put him to death indeed. Now through all the ſpeech he pleads himſelf to be the Meſſias, in as plain terms and with as ſtrong arguments as could be uttered, and yet that Court that was to judge of true and falſe Prophets, doth neither believe him for the true Meſſias, becauſe of the wickedneſs of their own hearts, nor yet puniſh him for a falſe, becauſe of the fear they had of the people, and becauſe his time was not yet come. It is ſomething ſtrange that the Evangeliſt hath not given us intelligence of the iſſue of this ſo plain and ſo full a plea, which Chriſt pleadeth even for his life: but by his ſilence in ſuch a thing, we may well conclude the irreſiſtible power and truth and clearneſs wherwith he ſpake, which though the Jews would not comply with, nor entertain, yet were they not able to deny or contradict it.

For the aſſerting of the act that he had done on the Sabbath, he averreth his power as he was the Meſſias, and alledgeth the Teſtimony of John, of his own miracles, of the voice from Heaven, and of the Scriptures to prove he was ſo: And though he do acknowledge that he had received his copy and power of working from the Father, yet doth he account it no robbery to equal himſelf with him in his mighty working, and authority, and particularly in thoſe three great affairs, the managing of which are only proper for the hands of God, and thoſe are, raiſing of the dead, judging of the world, and diſpoſing of the Sabbath: He proves this laſt which was the matter that he had in pleading, by his authority and power that he had in the two former: That as God raiſed the dead, ſo he raiſed whom he would, and as God judged men, ſo he alſo judged; nay, the father had committed all judgement to him, and therefore as the Father had authority over the Sabbath, ſo had he alſo authority over it: That is his argument in theſe words that we have in hand, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work: in which he referreth to what is ſpoken concerning God, in relation to the Sabbath, That God reſted on the ſeventh day, and bleſſed that day, and ſanctified it: and yet God by his providential actings worketh hitherto, even every Sabbath, and ſo ſaith he, do I alſo work; doing good on the Sabbath, and diſpenſing providences for the benefit of man, and for the accompliſhing of his miniſtration: But how does the parallel between Gods works of providence on the Sabbath, and this acting of Chriſt on the Sabbath, hold throughout, or in all the parts of it? As God doth good on the Sabbath, diſpenſing his Ordinances, ſending rains and Sun-ſhine, providing food for all fleſh, &c. ſo Chriſt did good on this Sabbath, healing a diſeaſe, and recovering a man from ſo long an infirmity. Herein the parallel holdeth clearly: but Chriſt went a ſtep further, for he commanded the man to carry his bed, which tended to the viſible violation of the Sabbath, which Gods providential actings do not do. It is true indeed that God alſo commanded the Prieſts of the Temple to work on the Sabbath in killing, ſlaying, aud ſacrificing beaſts, but this was for the greater promotion of his ſervice: and he commanded Joſhuah to march about Jericho on the Sabbath day, but that was for the more forwarding of the publick good: but this command to the man to carry his bed, tended neither to the one end, nor to the other, but meerly and mainly to ſhew the power and authority that Chriſt had over the Sabbath: Skan but conſiderately that command and action, and you will find the tendency of it, ſo directly and properly to nothing, as to this very thing: Say it was to ſhew the compleatneſs of the cure, that might have been ſufficiently, and indeed as much ſhewed, either by the mans ſound walking without his bed, or by carrying his bed the next day; Was it more for the glorifying of God? Regarding the bare action, one would ſuppoſe, that to have kept the Sabbath and not giving offence to others, might have tended to that end more fairly. There was therefore this chief thing in it, beſides the tryal of the mans faith and obedience, That Chriſt would glorifie his divine power and authority, in ſhewing his command and diſpoſal that he had over the Sabbath.

Therefore whereas his pleading, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work, does anſwer moſt directly but to one objection that lay againſt him, namely, for healing on the Sabbath, yet doth it ſatisfie the other ſufficiently, which was his command to the man to carry his bed; for he that wrought in other things with the ſame authority that the Father worketh, he alſo hath the ſame authority over the Sabbath that the Father hath; who as he ordained it, ſo can he diſpenſe with it as pleaſeth him.

Now Chriſt in this command cannot be conceived to have intended to vilifie the Sabbath, as it was a day of reſt, or to lay that Ordinance of keeping ſuch a day of reſt unto the Lord, in the dirt; but he that was to alter the Sabbath to a new day, and in that equality of working which he had with the Father, he was to ſet a new Sabbath day upon the finiſhing of the work of Redemption, as the Father had done the old upon the Creation: and therefore as in preface to ſuch a thing, he both giveth ſuch a command, and pleadeth for what he had done, from his divine authority, as beginning to ſhake the day which within two years was to be changed to another, The proof of the divine inſtitution of the day of the Chriſtian Sabbath, may be begun here.

Verſ. 19. The Son can do nothing of himſelf but what he ſeeth the Father do.

1. By the Son in this place, and in the diſcourſe following, we are to underſtand, not the ſecond perſon in the Trinity, ſimply and ſolely conſidered in his God-head, which while ſome have done, they have intricated theſe words with endleſs and needleſs ſcruples: but the Son, as he ſtood there before them, when he ſpeaketh theſe words, namely, as the Meſſias, God and Man; and ſo he himſelf doth teach us to underſtand it at verſ. 27. The Father hath given authority to the Son to execute Judgement becauſe he is the Son of man.

2. The terms of Father and Son, do not only ſpeak that relation of the Father and the Son in the God-head, which doth peculiarly regard the eternal generation of the Son begotten of the Father, and the mutual and natural notion of Fatherhood and Sonſhip that is betwixt them by that generation, but it more ſingularly referreth to the ſeveral or diſtinct managings of the Father, as to the affairs of the old Teſtament, and the Son as to thoſe of the new. For though it is moſt true, and undeniable, that the Father in times of the old Teſtament, did work by the Son in his diſpenſations to the Church and World; as by him he made the World, and him he made Lord of all things: yet was his acting by the Son in the times of the new Teſtament, infinitely more apparent and diſcernable, becauſe the Son appeared in humane and viſible ſhape, the Meſſias ſent of God, God bleſſed for ever: and did great and powerful things parallel to any done by the Father in the adminiſtration of the old Teſtament. And this conſtruction of the Relative terms Father and Son, the very ſcope of Chriſts diſcourſe, doth call upon us to make, and the particulars of it as we come to take them up, will help to clear unto us and confirm: For 1. the matter that Chriſt was pleading now about, which was concerning his preſent demeanour towards the Sabbath, needeth not ſo much a diſcourſe to tell the Jews how far the ſecond perſon in the Trinity ſimply conſidered as God, could act of himſelf, or how far he received his activity from the firſt Perſon, or how far the firſt perſon ſhewed his Counſels to the Second, as to ſhew how far the Lord gave power, and imparted himſelf unto the Meſſias; and how far he in his Kingdom and Adminiſtrations did come neer to the Lord in his: For 2. the Jews were not ſo well acquainted with the diſtinction of the Perſons in the Trinity, the firſt and the ſecond, as they were with the diſtinction of the Father or the Lord, that had ruled in the world hitherto, and the Meſſias, that in his time ſhould be the King and Ruler by the Lords appointment; and it was proper for Chriſt to ſpeak to them ſo as they might beſt underſtand him, and ſo he doth according to their own diſtinction, which indeed was moſt true and proper. And 3. Obſerve the whole ſpeech of Chriſt throughout this Chapter, and you find it divided into theſe two parts, 1. To ſhew what was the power and acting of the Meſſias to verſ. 31, 32. and 2. to prove and evidence that he was he: Not ſo much to ſhew what is the power and acting of the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity ſimply conſidered in his Godhead and compared with the firſt, nor ſo much to prove that he was the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity, as to ſhew and to prove himſelf to be the Meſſias.

3. When he ſaith therefore, The Son can do nothing of himſelf: he meaneth, that the Meſſias cometh not in his own power, though the ſecond perſon in Trinity be Omnipotent, but he is ſent and hath his Commiſſion from God the Father, as he doth continually both in this ſpeech and in other places inculcate, that the Father ſent him. As he is the Son of God, he is all powerfull in his nature, and as he is the Meſſias he hath all power put into his hand by the Father, and yet he ſaith He can do nothing of himſelf, becauſe he owns the appointment by which he was ſent as Meſſias by the Father. He could do all things of himſelf as he was God, but he could do nothing of himſelf as he was Meſſias, becauſe he was a ſervant, and bare that Office upon the deſignment. And therefore the Arrians were miſerably wide and wilfully blind, when they produced theſe words of the Son himſelf to infringe the glory of the Son, and to prove him not equal to God the Father; not diſtinguiſhing, what a Child might have done, betwixt his divine Nature which could do all things, and his Mediatorial Office, which could not do, but what he that ſent him had appointed. In the former they might have owned infinite power, and in the latter infinite obedience: for it was not imperfection in him that he could do nothing of himſelf as Meſſias, but it was perfection of obedience and compliance to the will of him that ſent him: and this does not only argue the readineſs of his will, but the impeccableneſs of his nature, for he could do nothing of himſelf, but his actings were wholly and neceſſarily wrapped up in the Will of God.

4. Now to apply this part of his ſpeech to the occaſion of his preſent plea: He had done a great miracle, and he had, as they thought, violated the Sabbath, and he was eſpecially to ſpeak unto the latter, for thereupon lay his accuſation: and he argueth that he had not done what he did on the Sabbath of his own mind, but that it was comprehended within his Commiſſion, as Meſſias: and as he had in that his Office received authority from the Father to do wonders, to raiſe the dead, and to judge the world, ſo had he alſo, no have command and diſpoſal over the Sabbath peculiarly.

5. His words, But what he ſeeth the Father do, are to be pointed and referred to the ſame ſenſe, and limitation, to which the preceding part of the verſe hath been referred: To underſtand the words properly, and in their firſt apparent ſignification is ſomething difficult: To ſay ſtrictly that Chriſt could do nothing but thoſe individual and ſingular things which he had ſeen God the Father actually to do before him, would be very rugged, and ſuch a ſaying as would not be proved. For fecit mundum, tamen non vidit Patrem ante facientem, it is the objection of ſome of the Fathes: He made the world, and yet he ſaw not the Father make another world before him: He took upon him humane nature, yet he ſaw not the Father do ſo before him, and ſo of other particulars. But his meaning is, according to the thing that he was ſpeaking of, namely, that in his adminiſtrations under the Goſpel, he could do nothing, but according as the Father had done under the adminiſtration of the Old Teſtament: not as to every ſingular and particular adminiſtration, as if Chriſt in the adminiſtration of the New Teſtament was to do no particular thing, the like to which the Father had not done before, but it is to be underſtood in reference to the general, of power, authority and diſpoſal, according to which the Meſſias acted in the Goſpel, even as the Father had done before: And ſo the words immediately following do expound it, Whatſoever he doth, the ſame doth the Son likewiſe.

Verſ. 20. For the Father loveth the Son.

This God proclaimed twice in a voyce from Heaven, Matth. 3. 17. & 17. 5. which very words do teach how to underſtand the term Son all along this diſcourſe, namely for the Meſſias, God and man; Eſay 42. 1. Eph. 1. 6. whom as David repreſented in other things, ſo did he even in his name, which ſignifieth Beloved, and Solomon in his name Jedidiah, 1 Sam. 12. 24. The Father, beſides the infinite and eternal love he beareth to the Son, as God the ſecond perſon in the Trinity, Prov. 8. 30. is ſaid to love the Son as Meſſias, becauſe of his undertaking mans redemption, and promoting Judgment, righteouſneſs, knowledge, mercy, &c. the glory of the Father, &c. Eſay 42. 1,2,3,4. Heb. 1. 8, 9. John 10. 17.

§ And ſheweth him all things that himſelf doth.

By ſhewing is not meant barely diſcovering or revealing, but imparting and communicating: As Pſal. 4. 6. Who will ſhew us any good: that is, who will beſtow any good on us? Pſal. 85. 7. Shew us thy mercy: 1 Kings 2. 7. Shew kindneſs, &c. that is, grant and vouchſafe it. And ſuch is the meaning of Chriſts words here, that the Father doth grant and communicate to him, as the Adminiſtrator of the New Teſtament, the ſame power and activity that he himſelf exerciſed under the Old. To do and act in the ſame divine Authority, and in the ſame miraculous power, that he himſel uſed and acted in, doing whatſoever pleaſed him.

It was a great work that Chriſt had done, in healing a man of ſo long diſeaſedneſs and it was a great matter that he had aſſumed, when he granted ſuch a diſpenſation with the Sabbath, and yet he muſt do greater things than theſe, before he had done, namely, raiſe the dead, and change the Sabbath day. It is ſaid in verſe 16. The Jews did perſecute Jeſus becauſe he had done theſe things on the Sabbath day: Theſe things, that is, healed the man, and commanded him to bear his bed: In anſwer to thoſe two particulars, our Saviour ſpeaketh in this expreſſion greater works than theſe: and in the two next verſes he ſheweth what greater works thoſe are, namely, raiſing the dead and power of all Judgement,

Judgment. If any will take the clauſe, in compariſon with the works that the Father had done in the Old Teſtament, as that he would vouchſafe the Son to do the like, nay greater than theſe, there may be an innocent conſtruction made of it, for we read of greater miracles done by Chriſt than done before, but in that he inſtanceth in the two particulars, verſ. 21, 22. it argueth that he ſpeaketh not of doing greater works than the Father had done, (for the Father had done thoſe two works that he inſtanceth in) but of doing greater works than thoſe that he had done already, for which he was now upon his anſwer: He had healed a long continued diſeaſe; but as the Father raiſed the dead, ſo would he raiſe dead as he thought good, and he had only granted a diſpenſation for a particular action on the Sabbath; but the Father had committed all Judgment about the affairs of men into his hand, and he might alter the Sabbath if he pleaſed, and he would do it. Now whereas he referreth theſe his great works to no higher end in this his ſpeech, but only this, That ye may marvail, he propoſeth not this as their ultimate end, for that end you have in verſe 23. but he propoſeth this only as a fruit of thoſe works that he ſhould work, that they ſhould be to the aſtoniſhment and conviction of theſe that now accuſe him, though not to their intertaining of him and believing, Parallel to that Acts, 13. 41.

Verſ. 21. For as the Father raiſeth up the dead, &c.

This relateth to what is ſpoken of God in the Old Teſtament, Deut. 32. 39. and to what he did in the Old Teſtament, by the Miniſtery of his Prophets. He proclaims himſelf God alone, in the place cited, becauſe he killeth, and maketh alive, and he raiſed ſome dead by the means of Elias and Eliſha, &c. Now (ſaith Chriſt) as the Father or God whom ye acknowledge this great Agent in the Old Teſtament ſheweth this power, and ſo thereby ſhewed himſelf to be God alone: even ſo the Meſſias in the New Teſtament is inveſted with the very ſame power to raiſe and quicken whom he will, that all men ſhould honour the Meſſias, the Adminiſtrator of the New Teſtament, as they honour the honour the Father, the Adminiſtrator of the Old: For to this tenour (that I may ſay it again) doth he ſpeak all along this Chapter, parallelling the Father and the Son, not in regard of their equal Diety and Divine power as God, but in regard of their diſpenſations to the ſons of men under the two Teſtaments. As how is it poſſible to underſtand this paſſage in hand, As the Father raiſeth the dead, under any other notion, than as is mentioned, when verſ. 17, 18, 19. do clearly aſcribe the general Reſurrection to the Son?

Verſ. 22. For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son.

This is but the ſame in ſenſe and ſubſtance with thoſe many places of Scripture, where the Lord ſetteth up Chriſt as King and Lord of all things: as Pſal. 2. 7, 8. &c. Pſal. 89. 27. Iſay 9. 6, 7. Heb. 1. 2, 6. &c. Dan. 7. 13, 14. Eſay 42. 1, 2. &c. Jer. 3. 9. Mat. 28. 18. Rev. 16. 19. &c.

It pleaſed the infinite wiſdom of God to uſe this moſt divine and myſterious diſpenſation, that the Son of God ſhould become the Son of man, and this God-man, the Lord Chriſt ſhould be ſet up the head of all Principality and power, Col. 2. 9. and King and Ruler and Judge of all things. And this diſpenſation the Scripture aſcribeth to diyers reaſons.

1. To Chriſts natural and eſſential intereſt, as I may expreſs it, for he was the only begotten of the Father, and ſo neceſſarily the heir of all things, Heb. 1. 2.

2. To Gods love of the Son, becauſe he laid down his life for mans redemption, Joh. 10. 17. Philip. 2. 8, 9. He became obedient to the death, &c. Wherefore God hath alſo highly exalted him.

3. To Gods willingneſs and contrival that man ſhould have the utmoſt means of the knowledge and for the honouring of God that was poſſible, namely, by revealing his Son in humane fleſh, yet in the higheſt evidence of Divine power, Matth. 21. 37. Heb. 1. 1. When men for all the means that he had uſed for the bringing of them to the knowledge of himſelf, yet would not know God, nor worſhip him as God, but doted after Gods that were viſible, the Lord ſends his own Son in viſible ſhape, and in viſible demonſtration of his Divinity in that he raiſed himſelf from the dead, Rom. 1. 4. and ſetteth him up as Lord of all things, to be worſhipped as God bleſſed for ever, and in and through him the Father to be worſhipped who ſent him.

4. The Scripture holdeth out Chriſt as the arm of the Lord, Eſay 53. 1. & 40. 10. the Combatant and Champion againſt Satan and all the Lords enemies, Gen. 3. 15. Revel. 19. 11. &c. And the Lord hath ſet him up to reign till all theſe enemies be put under his feet, 1 Cor. 15. 24, 25.

5. God

5. God hath given him authority to execute judgment, Becauſe he is the Son of Man, John 5. 27. which we ſhall ſpeak to when we come to that verſe.

Verſ. 23. That all men ſhould honour the Son, even as they honour the Father.

The great deſign of the bleſſed Trinity was, to reveal it ſelf the eternal God-head to be worſhipped Trinity in Unity and Unity in Trinity: In the times of the Old Teſtament the Father was worſhipped and acknoweledged, diſpenſing indeed his adminiſtrations by the Son, the Angel of the Covenant and the Arm of the Lord, but himſelf more eſpecially owned, as the Fountain and Original of all Divine diſpenſations, as Pſal. 2. 6. &c. Exod. 23. 20, 21. Prov. 8. 22. Eſai. 42. 1. &c. Under the New Teſtament the Son was viſibly exalted, and ſet up as the Lord to whom every knee ſhould bow, and every tongue confeſs, in that he gave the Goſpel as the Father had done the Law, ſubdued Satan, triumphed over death, aſcended viſibly by his own power into heaven, and did as viſibly pour out and ſend down the Holy Ghoſt which he had promiſed: That as all men had honoured the Father under the Old Teſtament, ſo all men ſhould equally honour the Son under the New. The Arian in denying the God-head of Chriſt, and his coequality with the Father, is not only injurious to his perſon, but alſo contradicteth the higheſt and greateſt deſign of heaven, for Chriſts exalting: And the Jews, Turks, and whoſoever take upon them to honour God, and acknowledge not Chriſt, their undertaking is but vain, ſince they honour not the Son whom he hath ſet up and exalted over all.

Verſ. 24. He that heareth my word and believeth on him that ſent me.

Theſe words and thoſe in the verſes following, have their riſe from verſe 21. and lie in connexion with the ſenſe of thoſe words, and are in explanation of them. There he had ſaid, that, As the father raiſed the dead, ſo the Son quickneth whom he will, and in theſe verſes he ſpeaketh to that point, and in this verſe he ſheweth how he quickneth ſpiritually, and in the following how he quickneth bodily, and both his aſſertions he ſetteth on with this aſſeveration, Ἀμὴν Ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν.

The matter of this verſe ſeemeth to be taken from thoſe words in Eſay 55. 3. Incline your ear and come unto me: Hear and your ſoul ſhall live: Upon which laſt words Aben Ezra giveth this gloſs, It meaneth that the ſoul abideth though the body dye, or it meaneth that the Meſſias ſhall revive thoſe that turn to the Law of God. And ſo likewiſe do other Jews confeſs there, that thoſe words, and the context before, do ſpeak of the teaching of the Meſſias.

Our Saviour in the verſes before had pleaded his equal acting as he was Meſſias, with God the Father as he ſhewed himſelf in the adminiſtration of the Old Teſtament: that as the Father raiſed the dead by Prophets then, ſo he quickened whom he pleaſed: and as the Father had judged, ſo now he had committed all Judgment unto him: and here he cometh on with a third parallel, and that is, that as the Father had given the Law, or the Word of the Old Teſtament, ſo he ſhould give the Goſpel the Word of the New: And as it was life to hearken to the Work of the Father, Deut. 30. 15. 20. ſo he that heareth his Word hath life everlaſting, &c. He was the Word of the Father, that came out of his boſom to reveal him, Joh. 1. 18. He was the great Teacher promiſed and expected, Deut. 18. 15. Acts 3. 23. and ſealed and proclaimed, Matth. 17. 5. 1 Pet. 1. 17. He was to be the deſtroyer of the works of Satan, the hearkning to whoſe word had been mans confuſion, and therefore it would not only be their piety to hearken to him who revealed the Father: nor would it be only ſutable to their expectation, who looked for the great Teacher and were reſolved to be taught by him, but it would be eternal life, and everlaſting healing to the Soul, againſt thoſe wounds that hearkning to the words of the Tempter had made in it.

Now in that he ſaith, And believeth on him that ſent me, 1. He doth moſt properly center the ultimate fixing and reſting of belief in God the Father: For as from him, as from the fountain, do flow all thoſe things that are the objects of Faith in its living and moving, namely, free Grace, the gift of Chriſt, the way of redemption, the gracious promiſes, &c. So unto him as to that Fountain doth Faith betake its ſelf in its final repoſe and reſting, namely, to God in Chriſt, as 2 Cor. 5. 19. and he doth hereby more clearly open that myſtery of God in Chriſt, than if he had ſpoken only of believing himſelf, or only of believing the Father. 2. There are ſome that conceive that he ſpeaketh of believing him that ſent him, rather than of believing him himſelf, that by this humble reference of all to God, he might make his ſpeech more accceptable to the hearers. 3. Compare this paſſage with Exod. 20. 19. and Deut. 18. 16, 17, 18.

His expreſſion of paſſing from death to life, ſeemeth to refer either to the doom upon Adams not hearkening to the voice of God, thou ſhalt die the death: or to the condition under under which every man is left by the Law, namely, under a curſe: from which, hearkning to the voice of the Goſpel is deliverance. Or it may be it is ſpoken in ſome parallel to the caſe of the man healed, for he by hearkening to the Word of Chriſt received health of body, ſo whoſoever heareth his Word obtains life of the Soul: And thus doth Chriſt ſtill make good the word that he had ſpoken to the man for a diſpenſation with the Sabbath: and argueth that he might do ſuch a thing, becauſe he was to give the Law and Word of the New Teſtament, as the Father had done of the Old: and ſheweth that though violation of the Sabbath deſerved and had been puniſhed with death, yet obedience to his Word and Command, was diſcharge and a paſſing from death to life.

Verſ. 25. The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead ſhall hear the voyce of the Son of God, &c.

1. Theſe words are moſt generally underſtood, as aiming at thoſe dead that Chriſt raiſed by his voyce or word to life again, as ſaying to Jairus daughter, Talitha Kumi, to the widdows ſon of Naim, Young man ariſe, and to Lazarus, Lazarus come forth: And being taken in ſuch a relation, the connexion of them to the words going immediately before lyeth thus. Chriſt had ſpoken there of his ſpiritual reviving, whoſoever ſhould believe his Word, and here he either produceth a proof and evidence, of what he had there ſpoken, or elſe alledgeth it as another wonder and virtue of his power, that by his voyce he would raiſe thoſe that were bodily deceaſed. And he aſcribeth this reviving to the hearing of his voyce, partly becauſe he had aſcribed the ſpiritual reviving to the hearing of his Word, and partly to diſtinguiſh his raſing of thoſe dead from the raiſing of thoſe that were revived under the Old Teſtament: for they were not raiſed by a word, but by other applications, 1 King. 17. 21. & 2 King. 4. 34. & 13. 21.

2. It was the opinion of the Jews, that there ſhould be a reſurrection in the days of Meſſias. The Chaldee Paraphraſt gloſſeth Hoſ. 6. 2. thus, He will revive us in the days of conſolation, Luke 2. 25. which are to come in the day of the Reſurrection of the dead. And Hoſ. 14. 8. thus, They ſhall be gathered out of their captivity, they ſhall ſit under the ſhadow of their Meſſias, and the dead ſhall revive, and good ſhall be multiplyed on the Earth. And Eſay 49. 9. I give thee for a Covenant to the people, to raiſe the righteous that lye in the duſt. And Kimchi on Eſay 26. 19. The Holy bleſſed God will raiſe the dead at the time of deliverance. And in Jer. 23. 20. In that he ſaith, Ye ſhall conſider it, and not, They ſhall conſider it, it intimateth the Reſurrection of the dead in the days of the Meſſias. And on Ezek. 37. It may be God ſhewed Ezekiel the viſion of the dead bones reviving, to ſignifie to him, that he would raiſe the dead of Iſrael at the time of deliverance, that they alſo might ſee the deliverance. Ab. Ezr. in Dan. 12. 2. The righteous that dyed in the captivity ſhall revive when the Redeemer cometh, &c. And this was ſo far the opinion of the Nation that they underſtood the term The World to come of the ſtate of glory, and yet of the days of Meſſias, as ſhall be ſhewed when we meet with that phraſe: Now there was a Reſurrection in the days of the Meſſias accordingly, not only of thoſe three that have been named, but alſo of divers Saints whoſe graves were opened and bodies aroſe, Mat. 27. 52. And if the words that we have in hand be applyed to the raiſing of dead in a bodily ſenſe, they may moſt properly be pointed to that Reſurrection, which was ſo parellel to the expectation of the Jews; and Chriſt aſcribing ſuch a matter to himſelf, doth prove himſelf to be the Meſſias, even they and their own opinion being Judges.

3. But the raiſing of the dead, is taken in Scripture alſo in a borrowed ſenſe, namely, for the reviving and quickning of thoſe that were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, &c. as Epheſ. 2. 1. And that ſenſe doth ſeem more agreeable to this place, becauſe our Saviour in the verſe before doth apparently ſpeak of ſuch ſpiritual reviving. The calling in of the Gentiles to the Goſpel, is called a Reſurrection in divers places of the Scripture: as Eſa. 26. 19. Thy dead men ſhall live, together with my Body they ſhall riſe: awake and ſing ye that dwell in the duſt: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the Earth ſhall caſt out her dead: What dead theſe are that were to riſe with Chriſts body from the dead, is not ſo much intimated in that paſſage of the Evangeliſt, The bodies of divers Saints aroſe, Matth. 27. 52. as in that ſaying of our Saviour, There ſhall no ſign be given them but the ſign of Jonah the Prophet: By which he doth not only ſignifie his own death and Reſurrection, but he doth alſo gall the Jews with an intimation of the calling of the Gentiles upon his Reſurrection, as the Ninivites were called upon Jonahs Reſurrection out of the grave of the Whales belly. And that dew of his that ſhould inliven men as the dew doth herbs, is the dew of the Doctrine of the Goſpel, as Deut. 32. 2. And ſo likewiſe Hoſ. 6. 2. ſpeaketh to the very ſame tenor, of Chriſts raiſing the dead in a ſpiritual ſenſe, upon his own Reſurrection which was on the third day: And ſo is the Reſurrection in Ezek. 37. plainly expounded in that very chapter, to be in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and ſo the Apoſtle conſtrues it, Rom. 11. 15. And the calling of the Gentiles is ſtyled the firſt Reſurrection, Rev. 20. 5. &c.

That

That Christ meaneth the dead, and the raising of the dead in this sense in this place, might be argued upon these observations.

1. Because throughout his speech hitherto and some steps further the scope of his discourse is, namely, to prove his all powerful rule and disposal of the affairs under the Gospel, equal to what the Father had under the Law, of which the calling of the Gentiles was one of the most eminent and remarkable.

2. Because, as was said before, his very last words preceding, were of passing from death to life in a spiritual sense, which argues that he intends the same sense here.

3. In that he ascribeth reviving to his Voice here, as he did there to his Word.

4. Because he distinguisheth upon hearing his voice, The dead shall hear it, and as many as hear it shall live: which is applicable a great deal more fairly to the bare, and to the effectual hearing of the Gospel; than to dead in corporal sense.

And 5. lastly, Because there are so great things spoken of the calling of the Gentiles in the Scripture, and of Christs work about that matter, and their Heathenish condition so expressly called death, and their imbracing the Gospel a resurrection, that when Christ is speaking of his actings in the New Testament, and useth such words as these before us, we may not unproperly apply them in that sense: It would have prevented many controversies, and not a few errors, if the Phrases the last days, and the day of the Lord, and the end, and new Heavens, and new Earth, and the dead raised, &c. had been cautelously understood, and as the Scripture means them in several places: But as for the raising of the dead in the verse in hand, it needeth not very much curiosity to fix it to either of those as a determinate sense, since taken either way that hath been mentioned, it carries a fair construction most agreeable to the truth, and not very disagreeable to the scope and context.

Vers. 26. For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself.

It is needless to dispute here how far the second person in the Trinity may be said to have or not to have his being of himself: for the words do not consider him simply as the second person, but as the Messias God and Man, as is the tenour of speech all along: And in this acceptation we may give the words this construction.

1. That they are a Paraphrase upon the name Jehovah, which betokeneth Gods eternal being in himself, and his giving of being to the Creature: and that they mean, that as the Father is Jehovah, so also hath he given to the Son the Messias, that name above all names, as Philip. 2. 9. to be owned and worshipped for Jehovah, having life in himself, as being the eternal and living God, and having the disposal of life in his power as being the God of all living.

2. That as the Father is the eternal and immortal God, so also is the Messias; and though he stand there before the Sanhedrin in humane appearance, yet should he never see corruption, as Psalm 16. 10. but declare himself mightily to be the Son of God, and to have life in himself, by his raising himself from the dead, Rom. 1. 4. Being the first and last, He that liveth though he died, and is alive for evermore, Amen, and hath the Keys of Hell and death at his disposal, Rev. 1. 17, 18.

3. As the words before may be applied to Christs raising from the dead those that were either bodily or spiritually deceased; so these are a reason and proof of that assertion, because as the Father hath the absolute disposal of life in his own power, so hath he given to the Messias the same disposal.

Vers. 27. And hath given him authority to execute Judgment also, because he is the Son of Man.

By this passage it is apparent in what sense our Saviour useth the term The Son, and The Son of God, all along this discourse; namely, for the Son of God as he was also the Son of Man or the Messias.

There hath been some scruple made (as was mentioned before) upon the reason given of Christs authority of Judging, namely, because he was the Son of Man, which will be removed, by rightly stating the sense of the Son of Man, which we may take up in these three particulars.

1. The Phraſe the Son of Man, may be taken to ſignifie ſimply A Man, and then the words are to be underſtood in this ſenſe, He hath given him authority of judging, becauſe he is a man; and then is the reaſon current and apparent under this conſtruction.

Firſt, Becauſe the Son of God humbled himſelf and became man for the redemption of man, therefore the Lord hath given him authority to be judge of man, as Phil. 2. 8, 9.

And ſecondly, He hath given the Meſſias authority of judging, becauſe he is man, that man might be judged by one in his own nature, as Act. 17. 31. He hath appointed a day in which he will judge the World in righteouſneſs, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given aſſurance unto all men, in that he hath raiſed him from the dead.

2. The title, The Son of Man, which our Saviour ſo oft applieth to himſelf in the Goſpel, doth not ſpeak him barely A Man, but it owns him as that ſingular and peculiar ſeed of the woman, or Son of Man that was promiſed to Adam to be a repairer of ruined mankind, and the deſtroyer of the works of Satan, (as the term hath been cleared before.) And in this conſtruction, the reaſon of Chriſts authority of judging becauſe he was the Son of Man, is yet cleared further: namely, becauſe he was the Son of that promiſe, the Heir of the world, and Redeemer of mankind, and Deſtroyer of Devils; therefore the Lord did give authority to him to be Lord of the World, and Judge of Men and Devils; to deſtroy the Serpent and his ſeed that were his enemies, and to perfect and ſave the holy ſeed that ſhould believe in him and obey him; and to do and order all things here in this world, that were in tendency either to the one or the other end.

3. The Meſſias is thus charactered, in Dan. 7. 13, 14. Behold one like the Son of man came with the clouds of Heaven, and came to the antient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a Kingdom that all people, nations, and languages, ſhould ſerve him.

Upon which words R. Saadias gloſſeth thus, This is Meſſias our righteouſneſs. But is it not written concerning the Meſſias lowly, and riding upon an Aſs? Becauſe he ſhall come in humility and not in pomp riding upon Horſes. And with the Clouds of Heavens, meaneth the Angels the Hoſt of Heaven: this is the abundance of greatneſs which the Creator ſhall give unto the Meſſias, &c. Our Saviour in the words that we are upon, ſeemeth to point at thoſe words of Daniel: and whereas it was confeſſed by the Nation, that the Son of Man there ſpoken of, to whom all Dominion was given, was the Meſſias, he doth here plainly aver that it was himſelf; and that all Authority and Judicature was given him becauſe he was the Son of Man.

Obſerve how purpoſely he changeth expreſſions: In ver. 25. He ſpeaketh of raiſing the dead by the voice of the Son of God, and here, of executing judgment, becauſe he is the Son of Man; not only that he might aſſert the two natures in the Meſſias: but alſo that he might diſtinguiſh the double power that was in himſelf, natural as he was God, and diſpenſed as he was, and becauſe he was the Son of Man.

Verſ. 28. Marvail not at this, &c.

At what? Cyrill thinks, At the healing of the diſeaſed perſon; and he reduceth the words to this ſenſe, Think not the curing of this diſeaſe ſo great a matter, for I can, and once muſt raiſe even all the dead, and judge all the world. But for ought we find they were as much filled with indignation at that cure, as with wonder. Therefore it ſeemeth more likely that their marvailing muſt rather refer to the words of Chriſt that he had now ſpoken, than to the work that he had done. For comparing his perſon that they ſaw ſtanding before them, with the power and acting that they heard him ſpeak of, it is no wonder if they wondred at his words, and it is probable they did little believe his power. See verſ. 38, 40, 41, 42.

But how doth he ſatisfie their wondring and unbelief any whit by the words which follow? Had they believed theſe things that he had ſpoken hitherto, then might it have been proper to have added this about raiſing all the dead: but when they believed not the former, to what purpoſe was it to bring in this for confirmation, when they would believe neither this nor that?

Anſw. 1. Chriſt was to ſpeak in his authority, and the guilt of their unbelief was to reſt upon themſelves.

2. They could not deny him for a Prophet becauſe of his miracles, Joh. 3. 2. and he would wind them up to believe that he was the great Prophet.

3. It was a proper proof of his power and authority to judge all men, to aſſert that he had power to raiſe all men from the dead, and to bring them to judgment. And thoſe that did believe his former words, would believe theſe and ſee the arguing pregnant: but but those that would believe neither, are left highly unexcusable, having heard Christ so fully and plainly asserting himself to be the Messias, as in all the Gospel he doth it not plainer.

4. Here we may add one thing more about the term the Son of man, for the clearing of that clause before, He hath given him authority of Judging because he is the Son of man.

It is observable that as the Jews do most constantly call Christ the Son of David, both in the Scripture, as *Matth.*21.9. & 22.42. Luke 18.38. and infinitely in their writings, so doth Christ most constantly call himself the Son of man; and that title is only used by himself and in his own speeches: The reason of this his different styling himself from their common title of the Messias, may be conceived to be, partly because whereas they under the term the Son of David, did conceit the Messias for an earthly King, as David was, he in his term the Son of man, would contrary them in that opinion: and partly because by that title he would shew what relation his office should have towards all men, even towards the Gentiles as well as the Jews, whereas they expected the Son of David, a King of the Jews only, or at the least, especially: For it is true he was indeed the Son of David, promised to David, and so the Jews had first interest in him: but withal he was בן אדם The Son of man, promised to Adam, and so whole mankind had interest in him: And his arguing in *vers.*27. may be understood not only in reference to his authority of judging, but also in regard of the generality of that authority; that as in *ver.*25. he was to raise even the Gentiles from their dead condition to the life of the Gospel, so in *vers.*27. he had authority and dominion given him throughout all the World, even among the Gentiles, and that because he was the Son of man, or the seed promised to Adam, in whose loins the Gentiles were as well as the Jews when that promise was made, and whose Mediatorship concerned them as well as the other. And if these words be taken up in such an interpretation, this confirmation of them by asserting his power to raise all the dead, cometh on thus: Marvail not at these transactions that I speak of with the Gentiles, as to raise them by the Gospel, and to execute Judgment even through all Nations, for I am to raise the dead of all Nations at the general Judgment, and that by the Testimony of the Scripture it self, *Dan.*12.2.

For the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, &c.

These words do so directly speak the sense of that place cited in Daniel, though they differ something in expressions, that it is little to be doubted that they were spoken from thence.

An Angel to Daniel is there relating the grievous times that Israel should undergo under the persecution of Antiochus, and because at that time the cursed Doctrine of the Sadduces, which denied the world to come (a desperate Doctrine in times of persecution) should be at a great height and entertainment, therefore with the prophetick story of those times, he doth joyn the Doctrine of the Resurrection, and of everlasting reward, for the staying of the hearts of those that should live and suffer under those bitter days, and to arm them against fear of death and suffering for the truth.

It might be observed how Christ in this speech which he maketh before the Sanhedrin, which consisted of Pharisees and Sadduces, doth meet with both their Heretical principles, with a cutting doctrine: Against the Pharisees doting upon Traditions, he holdeth out his own word, as the great oracle of truth to be believed, *ver.*24. and against the Sadduces denial of the Resurrection, he holdeth out the Doctrine of that in this verse, and his own power to be the Author and effector of it. But this I do but note by the way.

These words might also be applied to a spiritual Resurrection as were the former, (and so coming out of graves meaneth, Ezek. 37.12.) the words of the verse following being only translated and glossed thus, And they shall come forth, they that do good after they hear his voice in the Gospel, to the Resurrection of life: And they that do evil after they hear the Gospel, unto the Resurrection of damnation: But they are more generally understood of the general Resurrection, and so will we take them; And that the rather because this sense is so exceeding sutable to the method that Christ useth in this speech. The main scope of his oration is to justifie himself to be the Messias, and from that very notion, to justifie the thing that he had done about the Sabbath. His Speech he divideth into these two heads.

1. To shew what his work and authority was as he was the Messias. And

2. To shew what testimony there was of his so being.

The former which he prosecuteth hither, he handleth in these several particulars; His power of miracles to the highest demonstration of Divine Power, equal with the Father, vers. 19, 20, 21. His absolute authority of ordering all things, vers. 22. His Divine Worship under the New Testament, as the Fathers under the Old, vers. 23. His being being the Teacher of his Church and preacher of the Goſpel, *verſ.*24. His calling of the Gentiles, *verſ.*25. His raiſing of himſelf from the dead, and having the diſpoſal of life and death in his own hand, verſ. 26. His univerſal dominion over all, *verſ.*27. His being the powerful raiſer and Judge of all at the general reſurrection, *verſ.*28, 29, &c.

All that are in the graves,] In Daniel it is, Many of thoſe that ſleep in the duſt, &c. that is, The many, meaning All: Not that all the dead are in graves, for ſome were drowned, ſome burnt, &c. but becauſe the grave is the moſt common receptacle of the dead; and becauſe the Jews did ordinarily render the word Sheol, which betokeneth the place and ſtate of the dead generally, by the grave, as ſee Targ. Jonath. in *Gen.*37.35. & 44.29. &c. & Buxtorf. in voce שאול ſignificat (Sheol) in genere locum corporum humanorum poſt mortem, unde communiter pro Sepulchro, &c.

Shall hear his voice.] We might here intricate our ſelves in a diſpute, whether there ſhall be an audible voice of Chriſt at the general reſurrection, or whether the hearing of his voice do mean the feeling of his power only, (as ſome do underſtand it) to the expence of that time, which might be better improved in preparing againſt that time come: Theſe Scriptures ſpeak about that matter, 1 *Cor.*15.52. The Trumpet ſhall ſound, and the dead ſhall be raiſed. 1 Theſſ. 4. 16. The Lord himſelf ſhall deſcend from Heaven with a ſhout, with the voice of the Archangel and with the Trump of God. 2 Pet.3.10. The day of the Lord will come as a Thief in the night, in the which the Heavens ſhall paſs away with a great noiſe, &c. But as for that Text which is commonly produced to the ſame purpoſe, Mark 24.31. He ſhall ſend his Angels with a great ſound of a Trumpet, and they ſhall gather together his elect from the four winds, &c. It plainly ſpeaketh only of Chriſts ſending his Miniſters with the Trumpet of the Goſpel to fetch in people to the Faith; for *verſ.*34. ſaith that this and the other things ſpoken with it in the verſes before, muſt be accompliſhed before that generation that was then alive ſhould paſs.

It is not to be doubted but the coming of Chriſt to Judgment, will be in the dreadfulleſt ſtate and terror that heart can conceive, (and the terror of that day of accounting for all actions, may well be gueſſed by the terror of the day of giving the rule of all actions, Exod. 19, & 20.) and that the Lord ſhall then utter his voice, his mighty voice; it is not to be doubted neither, but this in thunders and dreadful and majeſtick noiſes, (for ſuch are called the voice of God) rather than in any articulate ſound of words: The Talmud in Sanhedrin fol. 97. cited before, ſpeaking of Voices and Thunders that ſhould be a little before the coming of the Meſſias, the Gloſs there ſaith, Theſe are the voices of the Son of David.

I ſhall leave it to the Readers own thoughts to make the moſt feeling and dread commentary upon theſe words that he can, towards the awing of his heart to a preparedneſs againſt that dreadful time when it ſhall come.

Verſ. 30. As I hear I judge: and my judgment is juſt, becauſe I ſeek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which ſent me.

Our Saviour ſeemeth in theſe words to allude to two cuſtoms and traditions of the Jews, and to plead with them from their own principles.

1. The Talmudick tract Sanhedrin, ſpeaking concerning mens inquiring of the Judicatories in matters of difficulty, hath this Tradition: They ask firſt of the Sanhedrin in their own City אם שמעו אמרו If they had heard it, they reſolve them. If not, they go to a Sanhedrin near their City אם שמעו אמרו If they had heard it they reſolve them: If not, they go to that in the gate of the Mountain of the Houſe אם שמעו אמרו If they had heard it they reſolve them, &c. Perek. 11. where by the words, if they had heard, they mean if the Sanhedrin had heard by Tradition what was to be the determination of ſuch a matter, they judge accordingly: but if they had not heard, then the laſt recourſe was to the great Sanhedrin of 71. which was the very Treaſury of Traditions. Chriſt being come now before the Sanhedrin, ſeemeth here to ſpeak to them according to their own rule, As you judge according as you hear and receive by Tradition, ſo I judge as I hear: meaning, either as he had heard and received from the Father in the divine and ſecret Counſels between them, or rather as he received intelligence and warrant for his actions from the Word of God; doing thoſe things that were there written of him: And the words immediately before, I can do nothing of my ſelf, being underſtood of him as God-Man, may be eaſily underſtood, and without ſtraining, in ſuch an expoſition.

2. Rambam in his tract about שלוחין ושותפין Meſſengers and Partners, and the Talmudiſts occaſionally in the Treatiſes about Contracts, Eſpouſals, and Divorces, &c. conclude this for a Maxim, שליח עושה שליחותו כל מעשו קיימין That a Meſſenger that doth that upon which he was ſent, all his acts are good in Law: And שליח שעבר על דברי משלחו לא עשה כלום A Meſſenger that tranſgreſſeth againſt the words of him that ſent him, his act is nulle: upon this very ground Chriſts arguing here is clear and pregnant, and cometh home to their own poſition: My judging is juſt, becauſe I being ſent of the Father, do not mine own will, but do the errand that he ſent me upon and do his will. And to this ſenſe may we alſo interpret his words in *verſ.*24. for the fuller clearing of them, He that heareth my word and believeth him that ſent me, becauſe his words were but the words of him that ſent him, the Doctrine of the Goſpel, being but the ſame with the Doctrine of the Law and Prophets.

Verſ. 31. If I bear witneſs of my ſelf, my witneſs is not true.

This he ſpeaketh alſo according to their own grounds and manner of proceeding in their Courts: Though he did bear witneſs of himſelf, yet his witneſs was true, *Joh.*8.14. but in their Judicatories, a man was not to be witneſs in his own cauſe, but he ſtood or fell by the witneſs of others: And ſo not true here, is to be underſtood ad modum recipientis, they would not accept it as a current teſtimony in his pleading for himſelf to bear witneſs of himſelf; therefore in the verſes following he produceth other witneſſes on his behalf, and this verſe is but a tranſition to the ſecond part of his oration, which was to produce proof that he was the Meſſias: he had in his diſcourſe hitherto, declared his power, authority, and actings, as he was Meſſias. But I know (ſaith he here) that what I ſay of my ſelf will not be a current Teſtimony with you, therefore I ſhall produce you others to witneſs of me, as John the Baptiſt, verſ. 33. the works he wrought, verſ. 36. the Father, verſ. 37. the Scriptures, verſ. 39. and particularly Moſes, in whom ye truſt, verſ. 46.

Verſ. 32. There is another that beareth witneſs of me, and I know, &c.

This is John the Baptiſt, as the verſes following do explain this: to whom they before whom Chriſt is now pleading, had ſent to enquire, as Joh. 1. 19. and he gave teſtimony concerning Chriſt, then near at hand: Now in that he ſaith, I know that his witneſs is true, it will admit of a double conſtruction: either I know that his Teſtimony is current with you, and will paſs for ſufficient; or though you ſhould ſleight his Teſtimony, as invalid, yet I know it is true. And though I need no humane teſtimony, yet do I refer you to his Teſtimony, that if it would be, I might bring you to be perſwaded and to believe that I am what I take on me to be, that ye might be ſaved.

Verſ. 35. He was a burning and a ſhining candle, and ye were willing for a ſeaſon to rejoyce in his light.

Here is a glorious and eminent teſtimony concerning John who was yet alive, though now that burning and ſhining candle was put under the buſhel of an unworthy priſon. It is familiar with Scripture to denote the Miniſtry of the Word and Ordinances in the Church, under the notion of the Lamps or Candles burning in the Golden Candleſtick, as *Zech.*4. Revel. 1. & 11. &c. And according to that tenor of ſpeech doth our Saviour ſpeak here concerning the Baptiſt, &c.

The latter part of the verſe, which is the more difficult, ye were willing for a ſeaſon to rejoyce in his light, is variouſly underſtood. By ſome thus: Ye were taken and affected with his holineſs and exemplary life, but his Doctrine and teſtimony concerning me, ye cared not for: By others, to this ſenſe. You were content to intertain and rejoyce in the doctrine of John, for a while, but would none of the true light when he is come whoſe light laſteth for ever. But by others thus and more near the purpoſe, Though John were ſo bright a candle, yet ye cared for his light but for a while.

It appeareth by the ſtory of the Goſpel, that upon the firſt breaking forth of this light, it was intertained with exceeding great and general applauſe and affection, as ſee *Matth.*3. and Luke 3. and the people received John as a Prophet, Matth. 21. 26. But did the Sanhedrin ſo alſo? (for to them Chriſt is ſpeaking) And if they did ſo, what cauſed them to caſt him off? Anſwer, It is evident by Luke 7.30. that theſe great Doctors and Rulers of the people, refuſed Johns Baptiſm, and yet it is as evident by theſe words, that they rejoyced in his light for a while: which contrary carriages are to be conſidered with theſe reſpects: When the Miniſtry of John firſt appeared, it ſhewed it ſelf in ſo high a demonſtration of power and holineſs, that the Nation, eſpecially the learned that were moſt obſervant, could not but rejoyce to ſee ſo much dawning of Propheſie appear, which had been ſo long nighted, and ſo fair a ſign of the coming of Meſſias which was expected about that time: For though John did no miracles, Joh. 10.41. which might proclaim him for a Prophet, yet was his Doctrine ſo powerful and convincing, his converſation ſo admirably holy and religious, his admonitions ſo free and fearleſs, his ſpeech ſo to the glory of Christ, and not of himself, and the concourse to him so general and wonderful, that it could not but be a rejoycing to them to see so much hopes towards the answering of their long and longing expectation of Messias coming: especially when now they looked that he should shortly appear, Luke 19. 11. and when they also looked for a great change upon his coming, (such a change was Johns baptizing and his doctrine.) But when they found not in John those mistaken carnal characters that they looked after, as that he was neither very Elias from Heaven, nor one of the Prophets from the dead, nor Messias himself, and when they found his doctrine to tend to so dangerous an issue (as they held it) as to the crying down of their self-righteousnes of which they so much triumphed, and of their Pedegree-Privileges, and to the alteration of their frame of Religion, then is John Baptist lost in their repute, and he scandaled to have a Devil, Matth. 11. 18. Observe that Christ saith not Ye were willing to walk in his light, but to rejoyce in it: yea and to rejoyce in it exceedingly, for so the Original word importeth: Not that they took any holy content, or had any joyful inclination to reform according to the Doctrine that John preached, but that they hoped those glorious times of the Messias that they looked for, did now begin to appear in this new risen Prophet, and that they should see and have their share in those pompous and brave businesses that they had fancied to themselves at Messias his coming: It seemeth by Joh. 1. 19, 20, &c. that they had looked upon John with such thoughts and conceit a great while together before they put him to trial who he was, namely from his first beginning to Preach and Baptize, till after Christs forty days of temptation was finished in the Wilderness, which was above seven months: conceiting that it was possible that this was the Messias, Luke 3. 15. (and to this conceit it is that John gives his first No, Joh. 1. 20.) but when they found not all things answering their low and carnal apprehensions concerning the Messias, Johns light was no more regarded by them.

Vers. 36. The same works that I do, bear witness of me.

Here is the second witness that he produceth to prove himself to be the Messias, namely the undeniable testimony of his great works, which he calleth a testimony greater than Johns, partly because John did no miracles, partly because these miracles that he did, carried with them more pregnant conviction than the words of John: It might be some question quoad rem ipsam, whether the testimony of John were not as Divine a Testimony, as the witness of Christs miracles, but he speaketh as referring to the influence and validity of them towards the convincing of the people.

The faithless Jews, for the evading of the undeniable force and argument of Christs miracles, have found out two cursed and damned tergiversations, and they are these.

1. That the Messias when he came should do no miracles at all: this position is asserted in the Talmud in Sanhedrin in that famous Chapter called Helek, where the Gemarists do speak exceeding much concerning the Messias and about his coming: And from thence it is produced by Maymony in Melachin Umilcha moth per. ult. The wretched deceivers having this poor shift to answer to all the miracles that Christ did, which indeed were infinite.

To which they have also 2. joyned another, more visibly blasphemous than indeed this, but both rancorous alike at the heart, and that is, That what miracles Jesus did he did them by the power of the Devil: as Matth. 12. 24. The Pharisees said, This man casteth not out Devils but by Beelzebub the Prince of Devils. And so the Talmudists in the Treatise Shabbath, fol. 104. Did not the son of Satda (so they title our Saviour, and there is a blasphemy in it) bring Sorceries out of Egypt?

What the unprejudiced opinion of the people was in these two points, we may observe in John 7. 31. And many of the people believed on him, and said, When Christ cometh will he do more miracles than this man hath done? In which they conclude fairly and plainly against the two blasphemous and rancorous opinions that have been alledged and assert, That Messias when he came should do miracles; and that the miracles that Jesus did were sutable to those of the Messias: the Scripture spake the former, and his miracles themselves the latter, so plainly that it was not reasonable, but brutish and devillish to deny either: And when our Saviour in the beginning of the verse calls his works, The works which the Father had given him to finish, he both sheweth that his works were from God, and that God had appointed that the Messias should do such works, Esay 53. 10. The pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand: It was the Lords pleasure, and he performed it accordingly.

The

The works that God gave appointment and authority for the Messias to do, were indeed the actions of his whole life, for he was doing the Will of God continually, but those that he meaneth more especially here, when he saith they were given him to finish, may be reduced to these three heads, His fulfilling the Law in the holiness of his life, his Preaching the Gospel, in the demonstration of abundance of the Spirit, and his working miracles for the good of the people: There was none of these three taken singly, but they did resplendently bear witness of him, that he was the person, he took on him to be: much more did they give an undeniable testimony of him, being considered altogether: The Phrase To finish seemeth to reflect upon that Prophesie in *Esa.*42.4. He shall not fail nor be discouraged till he have set judgment in the Earth: Wherein is foretold that the Messias should accomplish and finish whatsoever in the work of his Mediatorship he should undertake: And the title that God puts upon him in the first verse of that Chapter, My servant, declareth that his works were given him to finish by the Father.

1. The holiness of his conversation was so exact, that we need not to go to Testimony of Scripture that doth so highly celebrate it; he himself doth challenge the Jews, who were sufficiently captious, to accuse him of sin if they could, or to find any mote in his holiness, and do their worst.

His lowliness, meekness, zeal, and earnestness to do good, and all these acted in an unfading constancy and in the highest activity, and that to the continual hazard of his person, might be illustrated to this purpose if it were needful. As Johns extraordinary sanctity was the greatest testimony that raised him in the hearts of the people: for miracles he did none, and his Doctrine and Baptizing they could not tell so well what to say to, as to his holiness which was so visible: So Christ in this kind had a testimony beyond him, and as far beyond him, as real and cordial holiness is beyond Ceremonial: For though it is true indeed that John was really and cordially holy, yet that Sanctity that the people admired in him, was in his external and Ceremonial strictness of rayment, dyet and conversation.

2. His Doctrine and Preaching was so parallel to the predictions of the Old Testament concerning the Doctrine that was to be revealed by him, it was so high in discovery of the things of Heaven, it was so clear in opening the hard things of the Law, it was so convincing of the Errors of their false Teachers, it was so Divine in its tenor, it was so gracious in his mouth, and so piercing in the hearts of the hearers, that where wilful malice and mischief had not blinded, they could not but confess, That never man spake like him, Joh.7.46.

3. His miracles were done in such power and number, without difficulty or restriction upon men and Devils, healing all diseases, and denying healing to none that sought it, and all this when working miracles had been dead so long, and in all this he seeking no glory to himself; these gave a testimony so fully of a vertue above humane, nay above Prophetick, that where again malice and mischief had not blinded, they could not deny, that the Messias could not do greater miracles than he did, *Joh.*7.31.

Vers. 37. And the Father himself which hath sent me hath born witness of me.

This is the third Testimony that he produceth for himself, namely the witness of the Father: which may be taken either for the testimony which God had given him of old in the Law and Prophets, or a late by a voice from Heaven when he was baptized: If we understand the words in the former sense, then the context following, Ye have neither heard his voice, &c. may be taken thus, Though God hath never to your eyes nor ears born witness to me from Heaven by any sensible demonstration and evidence, yet hath he given abundant testimony of me in the Word of the Scriptures: But if we take them in the latter sense, than the context speaketh to this tenor. Although it be a most rare thing to hear any audible voice, or to see any visible appearance of God from Heaven, and you never heard or saw any such thing in your Generations, yet for my sake and to bear witness of me there hath been such a voice and appearance: Or if we understand them joyntly both of the Testimony that God gave of the Messias in the Old Testament, and of the witness that he gave by a voice from Heaven, the sense of the words following ariseth to this, The Father of old in the Scriptures, and of late by a voice from Heaven hath born witness of me, but as ye never heard his voice from Heaven, nor saw his shape, so neither do you regard nor retain his Word since ye believe not him whom he hath sent.

Verſ. 39. Ye ſearch the Scriptures, &c.

Beſides thoſe reaſons that have been alledged already out of the words of the verſe it ſelf, to prove that the verb Ἐρευνᾶτε is to be rendred in the Indicative ſenſe, Ye ſearch, rather than Search ye, theſe conſiderations may alſo be added for the confirmation of that conſtruction.

1. That Chriſt is ſpeaking to the Doctors of the Sanhedrin, the moſt acute, diligent and curious ſearchers of the Scripture of all the Nation. Men that made that their glory and imployment: and howſoever it was their arrogancy that they thought their skill in Scripture more than indeed it was, yet was their diligence and ſcrutinouſneſs in it real and conſtant even to admiration: It was exceedingly in faſhion among the Nation to be great Scripture-men, but eſpecially the great Maſters of the Sanhedrin were reputed as the very Foundations of the Law and pillars of inſtruction, as Maymony ſtiles them in the treatiſe Mamrim, cap. 1. And therefore it cannot be ſo proper to think that Chriſt in this clauſe, ſets them to the ſtudy of the Scripture, upon which they ſpent all their wits and time already, as confeſſing their ſtudiouſneſs in Scripture, yet ſheweth them how unprofitably they did it and to little purpoſe.

2. They did exceeding copiouſly and accurately obſerve and take up the Propheſies in Scripture that were of the Meſſias, and though they miſſed in expounding ſome particulars concerning him, yet did they well enough know that the Scriptures did teſtifie of him abundantly.

3. The word that is uſed Ἐρεύνᾶτε, which betokeneth a narrow ſearch, ſeemeth to be intended purpoſely to anſwer the word דרש which they themſelves aſcribe to themſelves in their unfolding of the Scriptures.

4. It was their conceit that the skill and knowledge in Scripture was now in its floure and prime amongſt them, having been reſtored by Hillel who died about the twelfth year of our Saviours age, even as Ezra had reſtored the Law when it was forgotten. Juchaſin. fol. 55. And let us take a ſcantling of the reſt of the Doctors now preſent, by this teſtimony which is given of two of them, namely of Rabban Gamaliel the old, and Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai who were both of the Sanhedrin at this time: From the time that Rabban Jochanan ben Zaccai died, the beauty of wiſdom failed, and from the time that Rabban Gamaliel the old died, the glory of the Law failed, &c. Sotah. per. 9. So that theſe things conſidered, and the verſe next following looked into, the ſpeech of our Saviour in theſe words appeareth, not to be intended ſo much to urge them to whom he ſpeaketh to the ſtudy of the Scripture, as to ſpeak to them in ſuch a reproof as this, for ſtudying the Scripture they knew not how, Ye ſearch the Scriptures and they are the very things that teſtifie of me, and Yet ye will not come unto me, &c. which is much to the ſame tenour and effect that thoſe words are to Nicodemus, Chap. 3. 10. Art thou a Maſter in Iſrael, and yet knoweſt not theſe things?

Now in that he ſaith, In them ye think to have eternal life, he denieth not that eternal life is to be had in the Scriptures, nor doth he that thinketh to have eternal life in them think amiſs, but yet he taxeth the Jews grounds and principles upon which they went, about this matter. They thought that the very ſtudy and knowledge of the things in the Scripture was available to Salvation by the very work wrought. And as they thought that the people that did not know the Law were curſed, Joh. 7. 48. ſo they reputed that they that were skilful in the Law, had bleſſedneſs enough by that very thing though they went no further: It were eaſie to ſhew, how they placed the fruit and efficacy of all duty in opere operato, even as the Romaniſts do about their devotions. How the repeating of their Phylacteries, ſaying over their prayers, reſorting to their Synagogues, &c. were reputed by them as enough done, if they did but do the outward formal work: And as concerning the bare ſtudy and knowledge of Scripture, and the bare hiſtorical belief of them, how far they reſted in that, we need go no further than to Rom. 2. 17, 18, 19, 20. &c. Jam. 2. 19. &c. otherwiſe it might be ſhewed out of their own Authors copiouſly what was their opinion in this point.

In what he addeth, They are they that teſtifie of me, the Emphaſis may not be paſſed unobſerved. He ſaith not only they teſtifie of me, but, they are they that do it: as intimating that the Scriptures are the great, ſingular and intended witneſſes of Chriſt, the fulleſt and the higheſt teſtimony of him, as 2 Pet. 1. 19. And ye ſtudy and ſearch them curiouſly (ſaith our Saviour,) and they are they that do abundantly, and were given purpoſely to teſtifie of me, and yet ye will not come to me: Ye think of having eternal life in the Scriptures, now this life is only to be had by coming to me, and not by the bare ſearching of them, and yet ye will not come to me. And thus doth Chriſt read unto us,

1. The dignity of the Scriptures, as his choiceſt witneſs.
2. The end of them, himſelf.
3. Their work, to bring men to him.
4. And 4. the fruit of all, Eternal Life.

Verſ. 41. I receive not honour from men.

He had ſaid, that he received not teſtimony from men, before verſe 34. and now he ſpeaketh of another matter: He had copiouſly aſſerted himſelf for the Meſſias in the former part of his ſpeech, and had ſhewed what Divine teſtimony he had that aſſerted the ſame in the latter part; and now he cometh to ſhew the end and manner of his actings and demeanor, namely, not to receive honour from men, or that he might be glorified with any worldly glory, but that he might ſeek the glory of God, and the glory which is of God only: as the 43 & 44 verſes help to explain his ſpeech here: In verſe 43. he ſaith he came not in his own Name but in his Fathers, and that doth teach us to conſtrue the words that we are upon, That therefore he ſought not to magnifie his own Name with any humane or mundane honour, but that he ſought Gods glory. And in verſe 44. he oppoſeth ſeeking honour from men and the glory which is from God, as things contrary and inconſiſtent, and therefore when he ſaith here, I receive not honour from men, he diſclaimeth all humane glory and ambition, though he had ſpoken of his equal power and dignity with the Father before, and of the high teſtimony that was of him: And he may be conceived to ſpeak this the rather,

1. Becauſe of the conceptions that the Nation had, of the Meſſias coming in an earthly pomp and glory.

And 2. becauſe of his words that he had ſpoken immediately before, And ye will not come to me, &c. which he would clear from any carnal or ambitious ſenſe, which might be put upon them, as if he deſired to make himſelf the head of a party. No ſaith he, it is not honour from men that I look after, but the glory of God, and to approve my ſelf to him, &c.

Verſ. 42. But I know you that ye have not the love of God in you.

There needeth no much curious inſiſting upon the manner of expreſſion, whether to take the verſe as it lies verbatim before us, or to make only the ſenſe of it (as ſome do) I know that you have not the love of God in you: To take it either way it is very ſharp and cutting, and carries a ſmart and a ſad, but a moſt deſerved cenſure in it, compare Exod. 3. 19. Revel. 2. 2, 7. 13. 19. &c. Joh. 2. 25. &c. The juncture of theſe words with the former (for the word but relates them thither) is firſt to be looked after, and then the intent of the words themſelves. Our Saviour had ſaid before that he received not either teſtimony from men, or glory from men; but that he had his witneſs from God (for this is plainly expreſſed) and that he received honour from God (for that is included:) But he concludeth that they for all this would neither receive that Teſtimony that God had given of him, nor would they regard him himſelf, nor the honour of God that he looked after, and all becauſe they had not the love of God in them.

Were the love of God in them, they would receive him whom God ſent, to whom he bare witneſs and to whom he gave honour, but I know you (ſaith he) that ye have not this love in you.

Herein 1. He taxeth their great hypocriſie, who pretended ſo much religion, and ſo much love of God and godlineſs, when as there was indeed no ſuch matter in them.

2. He meeteth particularly with their pretended zeal about the Sabbath, which they charged him that he had violated, and ſheweth that howſoever they took upon them ſo much forwardneſs in that cauſe of God, yet did it not proceed from any love in them that they bare to God; for they ſeemed to call the Sabbath a delight, but they did not delight themſelves in the Lord, as Iſa. 58. 13, 14.

And whereas he ſaith, He knoweth them, that they are devoid of this love:

1. It may be underſtood in oppoſition to the apprehenſions of others concerning them, who were deluded with their fair outward ſhews, and thought they had abundance of piety and the love of God in them, but he knew them that there was no ſuch thing.

2. He ſpeaketh this as the Meſſias the knower of the heart, and their hearts if they had any ſtirring in them could not but witneſs with him that he ſpake to purpoſe.

3. He might ſpeak this from that viſible evidence and experiment that they gave continually of their want of the love of God, in accepting the perſons of men, and diſregarding thoſe that came in the name of the Lord, as he proſecutes this argment in the verſe following: And thus the Lord is come to his own Temple, as a Refiners fire and Fullers ſope, a ſearcher of hearts and a diſcerner between droſs and ſilver, betwixt him that loveth the Lord and him that loveth him not, Mal. 3. 2. Judging the great Judges of the Sanhedrin, and charging moſt juſtly upon them, who were the great examiners of witneſſes, for deſpiſing the witneſs of God, and who were to be cuſtodes utriuſque tabulæ, that the ſum and tenor of the firſt Table, the love of God, was not at all in their hearts.

Verſ. 43. I am come in my Fathers name, and ye receive me not: if another come in his own name, him ye will receive.

1. Here is a proof and confirmation of what he had ſaid before, that the love of God was not in them, for they received not him that came in the name of God.

2. He ſeemeth to foretel, how ready they ſhould be to embrace falſe Prophets and falſe Chriſts, which would ariſe abundantly amongſt them after they had refuſed the true Meſſias, as Matth. 24. 24. as, to omit all other inſtances, Rabbi Akibah the very head of the Sanhedrin in his time, became even Armour-bearer to Ben Cozba a falſe pretended Meſſias, who drew many thouſands into error and ruine in the time of Adrian.

3. He ſheweth that their principles carried them neceſſarily to deſpiſe thoſe that were ſent of God, and to embrace them that came in their own name, becauſe they looked after and regarded humane glory.

And upon this point our Saviour Chriſt differed from all falſe Prophets, and falſe Chriſts, that had appeared either before or after him, becauſe he ſought not the praiſe of men, but of God. The falſeſt cheats that came, took upon them to come in the name of God, even as he did; and yet he ſaith they came in their own names, becauſe they ſought their own glory and worldly advancement, which he did not. Ben Cozba made wars, obtained great victories, ſtamped coin in his own name, and looked only after worldly pompouſneſs: But our Saviour came poor and lowly, ſought nothing of this world, and aſcribed all he did to the glory of him that ſent him.

How theſe great ones looked after the praiſe of men, not caring to approve themſelves to God, it is intimated in the Goſpel many times over, Matth. 23. 5: All their works they do for to be ſeen of men, Joh. 12. 43. They loved the praiſe of men, more than the praiſe of God, &c. Now this ambitious humor of theirs was as far contrary to believing in Chriſt, as could be poſſible; For their high thoughts and his lowly condition were not conſiſtent, or of capacity to ſuit together: ſince they that were all for vain glory and the praiſe of men, did think it ſcorn to be Diſciples to one of ſo mean a condition as he appeared, Compare James 2. 1, 2, 3. &c. Seeking the honour that cometh from God only, is ſo to approve heart and ways before him, and unto him, as to have his approval, Euge bone ſerve, &c. See Rom. 2. 29.

Verſ. 45. Do not think that I will accuſe you to the Father, &c.

As Elias did Iſrael, Rom. 11. 2. and Eſay did, Chap. 6. 5. Coals (ſaith Rabbi Solomon) are mentioned concerning Eſay and concerning Elias מפני שאמרו דילמוריא על ישראל becauſe they ſpake accuſation againſt Iſrael: the one called them a people of uncircumciſed lips, and the other ſaid, they have forſaken thy Covenant, &c.

Our Saviour in the verſes before, had juſtly taxed theſe men for divers guilts; as, for want of the love of God, for unbelief, for defect of the Word in them, for ambition and ſeeking the praiſe of men and not of God; and upon all theſe he might take occaſion to accuſe them to the Father: But the ſpecial thing that he aimeth at, in theſe words that we are about, is their refuſal of him whom the Father had ſent among them: as verſ. 38. Him ye believe not. verſ. 40. Ye will not come to me. verſ. 43. I am come come in my Fathers name and ye receive me not, whereas another coming in his own name ye will receive, &c. And for this might he deſervedly make a return of their contempt of him, to the Father which ſent him, by praying and complaining to God againſt them, but Think not that I will accuſe you, &c.

Did they think of any ſuch thing? Or did they regard whether he accuſed them to God or no?

Anſw. 1. There might be places alledged out of their Talmudical writers, in which they bring in the Meſſias ſometimes complaining againſt his generation, „ and it is their confeſſion, that in the generation when the Son of David ſhould come קטיגוריא בחח there ſhould be accuſations againſt the Scholars of the Wiſe, Cetuboth in Gemar. ad fin.

2. It might be ſuppoſed they meaſured the temper of Chriſt, by their own diſpoſitions, or by common humane manners. He was now before the High Court, from which whither ſhould he appeal if he be wronged by it, but to God? And ſo would paſſionate and meer men be ready to do, and pray to God againſt, and they might judge that he would be of the ſame temper and practice. But

3. Our Saviours meaning is, that he needed not to accuſe them to the Father for diſregarding him, though the Father had ſent him, for they had their accuſer already, even Moſes in whom they truſted.

Not the perſon of Moſes accuſing them, but his doctrine: As when the Apoſtles are ſaid to ſit on twelve thrones judging the twelve Tribes of Iſrael, it meaneth, by their doctrine, and not in their perſons: They truſted in Moſes doctrine, as looking to be juſtified by the works of the Law: whereas his doctrine tended all along to drive men to Chriſt. And therefore a juſt accuſation lay againſt them even in his writings, which mainly aimed to ſhew juſtification by Chriſt, when they taking on them to be ſo obſervant Scholars of Moſes, yet utterly diſregarded and refuſed him, whom Moſes had clearly, chiefly, and ſolely propoſed as the main and ultimate end of his Law. And ſo our Saviour in theſe words doth apparently aver the Law of Moſes to be a doctrine of Faith.

OBSERVATIONS,

UPON

OF

CHAP. I.

THE Scripture the Word of Knowledge, beginneth with the Story of the Creation, becauſe firſt, the firſt ſtep towards the knowledge of God is by the Creature, Rom. 1. 20. Secondly, the Story of the Creation pleadeth for the juſtice of God, in planting and diſplacing of Nations as he pleaſeth, ſince the Earth is his own and he made it. Thirdly, the Reſurrection is taught by the Creation, and the end of the world from the beginning, for God that made that to be, that never was, can much more make that to be, that hath been before, namely theſe our Bodies, Heaven and Earth, Center and circumference created together in the ſame inſtant, and clouds full of water (not ſuch as we ſee made by evaporation, but ſuch as are called the Windows or Cataracts of Heaven, Gen. 7. 11. 2 Kings 7. 19. Mal. 3. 10.) created in the ſame inſtant with them, verſ. 2. The earth lay covered with waters, and had not received as yet its perfection, beauty and deckage: and that vaſt vacuity that was between the convex of thoſe waters, and the concave of the clouds, was filled as it were with a groſs and great darkneſs, and the Spirit of God moved the Heavens from the firſt moment of their Creation in a circular motion, above and about the earth and waters, for the cheriſhing and preſervation of them in their new begun being, v. 3. Twelve hours did the Heavens thus move in darkneſs, and then God commanded and there appeared light to this upper Horizon, namely to that where Eden ſhould be planted [for, for that place eſpecially is the ſtory calculated] and there did it ſhine other twelve hours, declining by degrees with the motion of the Heavens to the other Hemiſphere, where it inlightned other twelve hours alſo, and ſo the firſt natural day to that part of the world was ſix and thirty hours long, ſo long was Joſhua's day, Joſh. 10. And ſo long was our Saviour clouded under death.

Verſ. 6. When the light began to ſet to the Horizon of Eden, and the evening or night of the ſecond day was come, God commanded that the Air ſhould be ſpread out inſtead of that vacuity, which was betwixt the waters upon the Earth, and the waters in the clouds, and in four and twenty hours it was accompliſhed, and the Air ſpread through the whole univerſe with the motion of the Heavens. In this ſecond days work it is not ſaid as in the reſt that God ſaw it good, becauſe whereas this days work was about ſeparation of waters, they were not perfectedly and fully parted, till the waters which covered the Earth were couched in their channels, which was not till the third day: and there it is twice ſaid that God ſaw it good once for the intire ſeparation of the waters, and again for the fructification of the ground.

Verſ. 9. In the new created Air the Lord thundered and rebuked the waters, Pſal. 104. 7. So that they haſted away and fled all weſtward, into the channels which the Lord had appointed for them. And ſtill as they flowed away, and dry land appeared the Earth inſtantly brought forth Trees and Plants in their ſeveral kinds. This production was only of the bodies and ſubſtances of them, for their verdure and maturity was not till till the ſixth day: And now was Eden planted with the bodies of all trees fit for meat and delight, which by the time that Adam is created are laden with leaves and fruit.

Verſ. 14. The Moon and ſome Stars created before the Sun: She ſhone all the night of the fourth day in her full body, and when the Sun appeared in the morning, then was her light augmented, yet her body obſcured from the World till the ſixt day at even, which was her prime day, and ſhe ſhewed her creſcent and gave light to Adam, who was but newly got at that time out of the darkneſs of his fall, by the luſtre of the promiſe.

Verſ. 21. Whales only of all brutes ſpecified by name, to ſhew that even the greateſt of living creatures could not make it ſelf.

Verſ. 25. Beaſts wild and tame created, and all manner of creeping things, and the World furniſhed with them from about Eden as well as with men: of clean beaſts were ſeven created, three couples for breed, and the odd one for Adams ſacrifice upon his fall, but of unclean only one couple for the propagation of the kind.

Verſ. 26. Man created by the Trinity about the third hour of the day, or nine of the clock in the morning.

CHAP. II. The three firſt verſes, that treat of the inſtitution of the Sabbath, are according to their proper Order of time, to be taken in at the end of the third chapter.

Verſ. 4. &c. On the morning of the ſixth day a miſt, that had gone up from the Earth fell down upon it again in rain or dew, and watered the Earth, with which watering the trees and plants budded to maturity in a trice: this dew being as a natural cauſe thereof, yet the effect being withal exceeding ſupernatural, becauſe ſo ſpeedy.

*Verſ.*7. Of the duſt of the Earth thus watered, God created the body of man, and to this the Pſalmiſt alludeth, The dew of thy youth, Pſal. 110.3. And into that Earth ſo prepared, he breatheth the Spirit of Life and Grace, *Epheſ.*4.24.

Verſ. 10. Eden watered by a river that overflowed it once a year, after the manner of Nilus and Jordan; Chap.13.10.

To Adam thus created and made Lord of the creature, the Lord himſelf bringeth the creatures to receive their names, which he giveth to them agreeable to their natures, and that at the firſt ſight, ſhewing at once his dominion over them, and his wiſdom, among them all he ſeeth no fit match for himſelf, but by ſeeing every one of them mated, and that they came before him by pairs, he is brought to be ſenſible of his own want of a fellow: which thereupon God provideth for him out of his own body of a rib, which part of him might beſt be ſpared. And thus the Creation endeth in the making of the woman.

CHAP. III. The woman thinking it had been a good Angel that ſpake in the trunk of the Serpent, ſhe entreth communication with the Devil: who perceiving her both to add and to diminiſh to, and from the Commandment that was given them, groweth the more impudent to tempt, and ſeduceth her by the luſt of the fleſh and the luſt of the eyes; and the pride of life, as 1 John 2.16. And ſhe perſwadeth her husband, and ſo they both are fallen on the very ſame day that they are created, *Gen.*9.1,2,3. *Pſal.*49.12.

Chriſt is promiſed before the man and the woman are cenſured: and they are queſtioned alſo before they be ſentenced, but ſo was not Satan, for God had mercy in ſtore for them, but none for him. The curſe is not upon man himſelf but upon the Earth, to teach him to ſet his affections on things above and not on the curſed ground, and not to look for an earthly Kingdom of Chriſt on this Earth which the Lord hath curſed.

Adam apprehendeth and layeth hold upon the promiſe by Faith, and in evidence of this his faith he calleth his wives name Eve or Life, becauſe ſhe was to be the mother of Chriſt according to the fleſh, by whom life ſhould come; and of all believers that by faith ſhould live in him, for an outward ſign and ſeal of this his Faith, and for a further and more lively expreſſion of the ſame; God teacheth him the rite of ſacrifice, to lay Chriſt dying before his eyes in a viſible figure: And with the skins of the ſacrificed beaſts God teacheth him and his wife to cloath their bodies. And thus the firſt thing that dieth in the world is Chriſt in a figure.

At the end of this third chapter imagine the three firſt verſes of Chap. 2. concerning the Sabbath to be obſerved, to come in, and ſuppoſe the texture of the ſtory to lye thus. Adam thus fallen, cenſured, recovered, inſtructed and expelled Eden on the ſixth day, the next day following he by Gods appointment keepeth for a Sabbath or an holy reſt, and ſpendeth it only in divine duties. Now the reaſon why it ſtandeth in the place where it doth, Chap. 2. Is partly becauſe Moſes would lay the ſeven days, or the firſt week of the world altogether without interpoſition, and partly becauſe he would ſhew by ſetting it before Adams fall, that had he perſiſted in innocency, yet muſt he have obſerved a Sabbath.

The

The ſeventh day or Sabbath is not bounded in the Text with the ſame limits that the other days are, for it is not ſaid of it as it was of them, The Evening and the Morning were the ſeventh day, becauſe a time ſhould come when it ſhould have a new beginning and end, and though to the Jews it was from Even to Even, yet from the beginning it was not ſo expreſſed.

CHAP. IV. Cain and Abel twins of one birth; and firſt was born he that was natural, and after he that was ſpiritual.

The faith of Abel appeared in the very materials of his ſacrifice; it being of ſlain beaſts and ſo a repreſentation of the death of Chriſt: for this, it is fired from Heaven, and Cain's is not, though his dry ears of Corn were materials far more combuſtible. Cain and Abel were both their own Prieſts, for it cannot be proved that Sacrifices were ever offered but upon emergent occaſions, till the Law fixed it for a common ſervice: and he that had ſuch an occaſion, had liberty to be his own Prieſt, even under the Law, as it appeareth by Gedeon, Manoah, &c. and then much more was that liberty before.

The word Sin, in verſ. 7. ſeemeth rather to ſignifie an offering or attonment for ſin than puniſhment: For firſt God cometh not to deject Cain lower than he was, but to raiſe him from his dejection, as it appeareth both by his deigning to give him an Oracle from Heaven, and alſo by the words wherewith he beginneth. Secondly, If the words, Sin lieth at the door, intend ſuddain Judgment ready to devour him, what dependance can the words following have with theſe? If thou do not well, thou ſhalt certainly be puniſhed, and thy brothers deſire ſhall be ſubject to thee: for this were to threaten poor Abel more, or at leaſt as much as Cain. Thirdly, The Original word Chateath as it ſignifies Sin, ſo alſo doth it the ſacrifice for ſin, as Hoſ. 4. 8. 2 Cor. 5. 21. And all along Leviticus, and it was the cuſtom, according to which Moſes ſpeaketh as beſt known, to lay the Sacrifice at the Sanctuary door.

Verſ. 14. Cain ſenſible of his puniſhment though he was not of his ſin, beggeth of God, that he might die to eaſe him of it, Therefore let any one that findeth me kill me, but this God denyeth to him reſerving him to a lingring puniſhment: and Cain being aſſured of long life, giveth himſelf to all ſenſuality, to ſweeten it as much as he can, and this is the way of Cain, Jud. verſ. 11.

Verſ. 23. Lamech in horrour of Conſcience for his Polygamy, which now began to be examplary to the general corruption of the world, acknowledgeth his ſin ſeventy times greater than Cains, and his deſert of puniſhment proportionable: for Cain had ſlain but one man and but the body, but he by his evil example had killed old and young and their very ſouls: and therefore he maketh his complaint to his two wives that had brought him to it.

CHAP. V. A Chronicle of 1556 years: and all the years are reckoned compleat but only Noahs five hundreth year, in verſ. 32.

Verſ. 3. Seth born in Original ſin: the Father of all men in the new world after the flood, Numb. 24. 17.

Verſ. 23. Enoch liveth as many years as be days in a year.

Thoſe that lived nearer the flood lived the longer, unmarried becauſe they would not generate many children for the water.

Verſ. 29. Noah a comforter, becauſe in him liberty ſhould be given to the World to eat fleſh.

CHAP. VI. In the general corruption of the World, Noah the eighth perſon in deſcent from Enoch, in whoſe time profaneneſs began, as 2 Pet. 2. 5. Eſcapeth the abominations and deſolation of the times.

CHAP. VII, VIII, IX. The flood: the Beaſts in the Ark live without enmity, which ſheweth how the words, Gen. 3. 15. about enmity with the Serpent, are to be underſtood, the Serpent and Noah are now friends each to other: this is alluded to, Eſay 11. 6, 7. Noah is in the Ark juſt a compleat and exact year of the Sun, but reckon'd in the Text by the Lunary Months. Univerſal darkneſs all the forty days rain. The door of the Ark under water: The Ark draweth water eleven cubits. The waters when they came to abate while they lay above the Mountains, fell but one Cubit in four days, but far faſter afterward. After their coming out of the Ark for a whole half year together, Noah and his family, and all the Creatures live upon proviſion that was ſtill in the Ark, for they came out juſt upon the beginning of Winter, when there was neither graſs corn nor fruits fruits till another ſpring: The forbidding to eat fleſh with the blood, condemneth the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation.

CHAP. X, XI. Seventy Nations diſperſed from Babel, but not ſeventy Languages: the fifteen named in Act. 2. were enough to confound the work, and they may very well be ſuppoſed to have been the whole number. Sem as he ſtandeth in the front of the Genealogy of the new world, hath neither Father nor Mother named, nor beginning of days nor end of life. Nahors life is ſhortned for Idolatry.

CHAP. XII. Abraham at 75 years old receiveth the promiſe, and cometh into Canaan and juſt ſo many years did Sem live after Abrahams coming thither, and ſo might well be Melchizedeck in Chap. 14.

Verſ. 6, 7. Abraham buildeth an Altar near, if not upon Mount Gerizim the hill of bleſſing: and verſ. 8. Another Altar he buildeth near unto, if not upon Mount Ebal, the hill of curſing, Deut. 27. And ſo taketh poſſeſſion of the land by faith in the very ſame place, where his ſons the Iſraelites did take poſſeſſion of it indeed, Joſh. 8. 12. &c. 30.

Verſ. 11. When he is ready to enter into Egypt whither famine drave him, as it did his poſterity afterward, he is afraid of his life in regard of Sarah, who being a white woman would ſoon be taken notice of by the Egyptians who were Blackmoors. This was one main inticement to Joſephs Miſtreſs to caſt an eye of luſtfulneſs upon him, becauſe he was a white Man and ſhe a Moor. Of the ſame complexion was Pharaohs daughter whom Solomon took to wife: of whom that in the firſt and literal acceptation is to be underſtood, which ſpiritually is to be applied to the Church, Cant. 1. 5, 6. I am black but comly: and I am black becauſe the Sun hath looked on me, and that Pſal. 45. 13. The Kings Daughter is all glorious within: for ſhe was a Blackmoor without.

Verſ. 20. Pharaoh plagued for Sarah's and Abrahams ſake who was an Hebrew Sheepherd, giveth charge to the Egyptians, making it as it were a law for time to come, that they ſhould not converſe with Hebrews nor with forrain Sheepherds, in any ſo near familiarity as to eat or drink with them, which the Egyptians obſerved ſtrictly ever after, Gen. 43. 32. & 46. 34.

CHAP. XIII. Abraham and Lot quarrel, and part in the valley of Achor: and this is at the very ſame time of the year that Iſrael came into the Land, viz. in the firſt month of the year, or Abib.

CHAP. XIV. Noah in the bleſſing of his ſon Sem, maketh him in a ſpecial manner Lord of the Land of Canaan, Gen. 9. Hither therefore came Sem, and built a City, and called it after his own peaceable condition Salem: here he reigned as a King, but ſo quietly and retiredly as that he was a Prieſt alſo. In this ſequeſtration of the father from worldly cares and affairs, Elam his eldeſt ſon and heir apparent, though he were ſeated far diſtant in the Eaſt, yet it concerneth him to have an eye to Canaan, and how matters go there, for the land by bequeſt of his grand-father Noah, deſcended to him as by the Common Law. This title bringeth Chedorlaomer an heir of Elam from Perſia into Canaan, when the five Cities of the plain rebel. Into this war he taketh three partners younger brothers of the Houſe of Sem, Amraphel of Arphaxad, King of Chaldea, Arioch of Lud, King of Ellaſar bordering upon Babylonia, and Tidal of Aſſur King of Nations, and late built Niniveh. Theſe four thus banded together, and all children of Sem, and all in claim of his land againſt the uſurping Canaanites are reſolved to march over and ſo they do, all that Country both within Jordan and without. Their firſt inrode is upon the Rephaims that lay moſt North and lay firſt in their way; and ſo over run, the Zuzims in Ammon, Emims in Moab, Horites or Hivites that were Troglodytes or dwelt in the rocky Caves of Mount Seir in Edom, as Jer. 49. 10. Obad. ver. 3. And all the Canaanites South-Eaſt and full South to Hazezon Tamar a point below the dead Sea: There they turn in to the land of Canaan properly ſo called, and as they had ſubdued all the Countries from North to South without Jordan, ſo now they intend to do from South to North within. And ſo they did: but when they were come to Dan the North out-going of the land, Abram overtaketh them and conquereth the conquerors, and now he is doubly titled to the land, namely by promiſe and by victory. This Sem or Melchizedeck obſerveth upon his return with triumph, and perceiveth that it was he and his poſterity to whom the Lord had deſigned that Land in the prophetick ſpirit of Noah, and had refuſed the heirs that were more apparent in Common Law and reaſon: and therefore he bringeth forth bread and wine the beſt fruits of the land, and tenders them as livery and ſeiſin of it, to him, whom he perceived that God had choſen and pointed out for the right heir.

CHAP.

CHAP. XV. All fear of claim by any of Sems ſons was now paſt, becauſe of the late conqueſt, but only of Aram the youngeſt, who had no chalengers or children; in the war of him was Eliezer deſcended who was Abrahams chief ſervant, and whereas the title by Sems reſignation, was to deſcend to Abram and his heirs, Eleazer was like to be next if Abram had no child of his own. When this jealouſie ſomewhat troubleth Abram, God removeth it by the promiſe of a Son of his own Loyns: and by a Covenant with ſacrifice, even of all manner of creatures that were to be ſacrificed.

CHAP. XVI. Abram aſſured of a ſon of his own body (but not whether by Sarah or not) taketh Hagar to compaſs the promiſe, ſhe wearied out by Sarai's ſtrictneſs, is travailing to her own Country Ægypt, and by the way hath a viſion of the Angel of the Covenant, which was ſtrange to her to have viſions out of Abrams houſe: therefore ſhe called the Name of the Lord that ſpake unto her; Thou art the God of viſion: for ſhe ſaid, Did I here alſo look after a viſion, in a place ſo far diſtant from Abrams family? And the well alſo where he ſpake unto her was called, The well of the lively one of viſion.

CHAP. XVII. Circumciſion inſtituted in Hebron, and about the time of Eaſter, the place and time of the year where and when the Baptiſt was born, who was to bring in Baptiſm inſtead of Circumciſion. Abram and Sarah upon Circumciſion, ſaith Rabbi Menahem, were as new creatures, and therefore alſo muſt they have new names.

CHAP. XVIII. The three Perſons in the Trinity in the ſhape of three men appear to Abraham and dine with him, and eat the Firſt fleſh that is mentioned eaten in all the Scripture. Abraham beggeth for Sodom till he thought he had been gotten within the compaſs of righteous ones in Lots family, and then he ceaſeth.

CHAP. XIX. The Son and the Holy Ghoſt come into Sodome to deſtroy it, and now they are called Angels, becauſe they were ſent, by the Father. Lots wife is ſtruck dead with lightning, and ſtiffened and fixed in the place where ſhe ſtood, and of a ſalt and brackiſh ſmell, and therefore called a pillar of ſalt: Sodom deſtroyed by a ſtrange fire, and the memorial of ſo great a Judgment preſerved to this day by as ſtrange a water; Jordan before that time had an iſſue further, but from that time it pleaſed God to ſtop it, and to lay that valley up on a fatal pool. Lot had two Daughters at the leaſt that periſhed in the fire and brimſtone, as well as he had two that eſcaped. It is obſervable how ſoon after the inſtitution of Circumciſion thoſe Cities came to deſtruction, which ſo hideouſly abuſed that member, wherein the Covenant for the land was ſealed.

CHAP. XX. XXI. Abraham flitteth into the Land of the Philiſtims, that Iſaac might be born out of the Land of Canaan properly ſo called for the greater myſtery to his birth. God himſelf cometh in viſible form, as chap. 18. Sarah hath once a greater meaſure of the Spirit of Propheſie than Abraham, namely in the matter of caſting out the bond woman and her ſon. There is good probability of Iſmaels ſalvation. Abraham conſecrateth a grove at Beerſheba, that he might have hallowed wood, for his ſacrificing fires, as well as holy fire for his ſacrifices.

CHAP. XXII. Abraham paſſed through ten temptations, and the ſacrificing of his ſon the laſt and greateſt.

CHAP. XXIII. When Rebeccahs ſon is riſen in the laſt Chapter. Sarah ſets in this. The firſt foot of Land, and all the Land that Abraham hath in Canaan in poſſeſſion is only a place of burial: God by this very thing drawing him, and his to look after the ſpiritual part of the promiſe.

CHAP. XXV. At what time Abraham married Keturah is uncertain: the Text hath laid it after Iſaacs marriage, becauſe it was fit that all the actions of Abraham which any whit concerned the promiſe, ſhould be handled firſt and together, before the other which either did not at all or did it the leſs. But that Abraham was married to this woman, long before Iſaacs marriage or Sarahs death, is probable upon theſe conjectures. 1. He that held it ſtrange to have a ſon at an hundred years old, it is not like he would marry at an hundred and forty. 2. In chap. 24. 36. when the ſervant is to make the match for Iſaac, he ſaith that Abraham had given all his eſtate to Iſaac, which had been unneceſſary to mention, had he had no more children but Iſmael who was gone from his houſe long before.

Abrahams diſpoſing of his ſons into the Eaſt Countries of Arabia, was not upon uſurpation, but upon juſt claim by conqueſt, chap. 14. All theſe Countries were of the Land of Canaan, and of the promiſe, and therefore are circumciſed ones ſeated in them inſtead of Canaanites.

When the Text hath recited theſe ſons of Abraham and their ſettlement, it bringeth him and Iſmael to their graves: Not that they died before the birth of Jacob, and Eſau, as the Text hath laid it, for Abraham lived till they were fifteen years old, and Iſmael till they were at their climacterical year of ſixty three, but now hath Moſes no more to ſay of them, and therefore he concludeth their ſtory at once. Eſau born all hairy over like a Kid, but of a reddiſh colour, and therefore they called him Eſau, Factus, made, and perfected already, as having both his beard and pubes as ſoon as he was born.

In a ſore year of famine in the Land, Eſau ſelleth his birth-right for want of meat.

CHAP. XXVI. The famine that had cauſed him to part with his birth-right cauſeth Iſaac his father to part out of the Land of Canaan. The Philiſtims (Africans by deſcent, *Gen.*10.14. and tawny like them) do ſoon eſpy the beauty of Rebeccah a white woman.

CHAP. XXVII. Iſaac being arrived at the age of one hundred and thirty ſeven years, at what age Iſmael his brother had died, by his example, beginneth to think of his own death, and to diſpoſe himſelf for that. He ſendeth Eſau to hunt for veniſon for a trial, whether he ſhould bleſs him or no; for miſſing of veniſon before, he had loſt his birth-right, and if he miſs to day as he did then, it would be a ſure ſign that he muſt loſe the bleſſing: And ſo though Iſaac had paſſed away the main bleſſing at unawars, yet when Eſau cometh home ſped of a prey, he ſeeth that it was the will of God he ſhould have ſome bleſſing, and ſo bleſſed him alſo. Eſaus garments in which Jacob obtained the bleſſing, were the garments of the Prieſthood which belonged to the firſt born.

CHAP. XXIX, XXX. Jacob ſtronger than three men, and rolleth away the ſtone from the wells mouth alone, which they could not do with all their ſtrength united: he is deceived by Laban by a ſuborned perſon, and imbraced Leah thinking he had imbraced Rahel, as he deceived his father by a ſuborned perſon, taking on him to be Eſau when he was Jacob: He ſerveth in hardſhip in his marriage week, and bringeth feſtivity to others but labour to himſelf; Joſeph, Zebulun and Aſher were in their mothers wombs at the ſame time, but Joſeph born laſt; Dinah was not born in theſe ſeven years, unleſs ſhe were a twin with Zebulun. Reuben about five years old following the reapers findeth Mandrakes and bringeth the Apples thereof to his mother, for which poor rate Jacob is in manner ſold for a time by Rahel.

CHAP. XXXI. Rahel ſtealeth Labans Teraphim for a civil uſe: to preſerve the memory of ſome of her anceſtors whereof they were the pictures, and which Laban had impiouſly Idolized.

CHAP. XXXII. Jacob for diſtruſt in the Promiſe ſo far, upon Eſaus approach, that he ſendeth him above a thouſand cattel of all ſorts, of which he had vowed the Tithes to the Lord, and before he paid them, is met by the way by the Lord, and in danger to be killed by him: but by prayer and ſupplication he prevaileth with the Lord, and eſcapeth only with a lame leg. This lameneſs of Jacob was not reputed to him for a maim, but like the honourable ſcars of a valiant Captain, for a ſpecial dignity. For at Bethel he exerciſeth the part and office of a Prieſt, which if his halting had been reputed for a maim, he had been diſabled to do, and his poſterity in all ſucceeding ages, reſerve the honorable memory of this his lameneſs, in not eating the ſinew that ſhrank. That was the firſt Ceremony that diſtinguiſhed Iſrael for a peculiar people, becauſe with this his lameneſs Jacob is firſt dignified with the name of Iſrael. Circumciſion differenced them not from the other ſeed of Abraham, by Hagar and Keturah, but this curioſity in meats firſt beginneth Judaiſm. They refrained not to eat the joint where the ſinew was, as a leg of Mutton or of Beef, for the legs of the Paſsover were to be eaten, *Exod.*12. 10. but they ſpared the ſinew. And that not in abomination or abhorring of it, but in honour and ſpecial reſpect, becauſe it bare the memorial of their firſt naming Iſrael: The portion of meat that Elkanah gave to his beloved Hannah, Manah Ahhath Appaiina the portion of repreſentation may not unfitly be underſtood of this joint, and the ſame piece of the meat did Samuel reſerve for Saul, in honour, The Cook took up the leg, 1 Sam. 9. 24.

CHAP. 33, 34. Shechem an Hivite by original, chap. 34. 2. is an Amorite by habitation, *chap.*48. 22. So Anah the Hivite by deſcent, chap. 36. 2. Beeri the Hittite by habitation in one place, chap. 26. 36. and an Horite by habitation in another, chap. 36. 30, 24.

Judah was not at the murder at Shechem, but at Chezib upon the borders of the Philiſtims, married and reſident there, many miles diſtant.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXV. The Proſelytes of Shechem admitted to Jacobs family by Baptiſm, for circumciſion to the Shechemites was become deadly.

Benjamin born by the ſtrength of the promiſe, verſ. 11. for Jacob was now paſt the natural vigour of generating, and therefore he juſtly calleth his name Benjamin, the ſon of the right hand.

CHAP. 36. Strange alteration of names in this Chapter, from what they are in others, Judith, Chap. 26. 34. called Aholibamah becauſe of her Idolatry. Anah her father, Chap. 36. 2. an Hivite by original, is Beeri an Hittite, Chap. 26. 34. becauſe he dwelt among them about Beer-la-hai-roi. Baſhemath, Chap. 26. 34. is Adah here, to ſhew Gods diſlike againſt Eſaus matches Mahalath, is Paſhemath to ſhew the Canaanitiſh qualities of a daughter of Iſmael.

Compare this genealogy in this Chapter with the ſame in 1 Chron. 1. and Timna which is here a woman and a mans concubine, is there made that mans ſon, for the Scripture uſeth to ſpeak ſhort in known ſtories.

CHAP. 37. When the Text hath diſpatched with Eſau the hater of his brother that loſt his birth-right by his own fault, it falleth upon Joſeph the hated of his brethren, that obtained the birth-right by the fault of another. He feeding the flocks with his brethren joyneth in company with the ſons of the handmaids, for Leahs children cared little either for them or him. Among them where he thought to have reſpect, he found hardſhip, for they made him as their ſlave or ſervant, Vehu nagnar, and he was a ſervant with the ſons of Bilhah and Zilphah, verſ. 2. This evil report of his brethrens uſage of him he told his father, whereupon he made him a coat of divers colours as a badge of the birth-right which his father intended to confer upon him, that his brethren for this ſhould reſpect him the more. But this procureth their greater hatred, Reuben only excepted who ſought his good though he had gotten his birth-right, which ſheweth that the inceſtuous man was now become a penitent and holy.

CHAP. 38. Judah puniſhed in his children and his own ſhame for the ſale of his righteous brother. He was married about eight years before Joſeph was ſold, being then not above twelve years of age if he were ſo much. Therefore the words in the beginning of the Chapter, At that time, have not ſo much any reference to the exact time of Judahs marriage, as to the miſcarriage of Er and Onan, which befel not long after Joſeph was ſold, and ſo teach of his requital in his children for the ſale of his righteous brother.

CHAP. XXXIX, XL, XLI. Joſeph made a ſlave: his Blackmoor miſtreſs luſteth after his beauty and whiteneſs. By the interpretation of other mens dreams he is promoted as by the relating of his own he was ſold into miſery. Pharaoh giveth him a new name after their Oracular God Baal Zephon, Zophnath Paanea.

CHAP. XLII. Joſephs words חי פרעה verſ. 15, 16. not an oath by the Creature but an apprecation and prayer for Pharaohs life: So let Pharaoh live as ye are ſpies, as Lev. 25. 36. helpeth to explain the verb.

CHAP. XLVII. Pharaoh having never ſeen ſo old a man as Jacob, nor ſo grave a head nor ſo gray a beard in all his life, in admiration aſketh him no other queſtion but concerning his age.

CHAP. XLVIII. The birth-right which Jacob intended for Joſeph before his ſale is conferred and confirmed upon him, when Ephraim and Manaſſeh are taken by him for his ſons, as Reuben and Simeon: and hence came Ephraim to be firſt born among the Tribes, and therefore Moſes chooſeth Joſhua one of that Tribe for their conductor into Canaan.

CHAP. XLIX. Jacob bleſſeth every one of the Tribes, verſ. 28. therefore in his words to Reuben, Simeon and Levi, which are the moſt bitter, we muſt find a bleſſing or we loſe his ſence. His words alſo concern the future events of the Tribes, as much or more than the twelve Patriarks that ſtood before him, verſ. 1. Theſe ground-works being then thus laid for the underſtanding of theſe his laſt words as neceſſarily they muſt, let it be tolerated to touch upon ſome of them of the moſt difficulty, as far as Grammatical conſtruction, and truth of hiſtory will warrant and juſtifie.

Reuben thou art my firſt born, my might and the beginning of my ſtrength. There is a remnant of dignity for thee, and a remnant of ſtrength: For ſo the word יתר ſignifieth many times in the Bible, and ſo was Reuben dignified in leading the Van in the wars of Canaan, Verſ. 5. Simeon and Levi brethren, their traffickings are inſtruments of cruelty, for their pretence of trading with Shechem they made an inſtrument to execute their bloodineſs.

Verſ. 6. For in their anger they ſlew a man, as for their will they would hough an ox. For they uſed Circumciſion, as a means to maſter and murder me, as if they ſhould have cut the ſinews of an Ox to bring him under to their will.

Verſ. 13. Zebulon ſhall dwell at the haven of the Seas: the Sea of Galilee or the lake of Genezaret Eaſt, and the Sea of Phœnicia or the Mediterranian North-Weſt.

Verſ. 14. Iſſachar is an Aſſe of bone couching down between two burdens of the Kingdom of Phœnicia on the one ſide, and the Kingdom of Samaria on the other.

Verſ. 22. Joſeph is a ſon of fruitfulneſs, his fruitfulneſs in ſons ſhall be by the well: In daughters it goeth even to the Enemy. This Interpretation of that part of Joſephs bleſſing be referred to the cenſure of the learned Reader as conjectured at, rather than boldly averred, and that upon theſe conſiderations. Firſt, That there is a plain Antitheſis betwixt Ben and Bavoth, and therefore is to be conſtrued accordingly of ſons and daughters. Secondly, That the word Ben is by his place in regimine, but by his vowel not, ſo is Porah by his laſt letter in regimine, but not by this place: and therefore both of them to be rendered ſomething anſwerable to this their double condition. Ben-Porath, Joſeph is a ſon of fruitfulneſs, here they have the due of their place, and Porath Ben fruitfulneſs of ſons: here they have the due of their vowels and letters. Thirdly, That Porath alſo is to be underſtood in the latter clauſe, Porath Bavoth, fruitfulneſs in daughters. Fourthly, That Shur ſignifieth natively in Hebrew an Enemy, Pſal. 92. 12. and it is but from the Chaldee idioms that it betokeneth a wall. Joſephs fruitfulneſs in ſons then did chiefly ſhew it ſelf by the well of Shechem, where Joſhua of Joſeph aſſembleth all the Tribes as Prince over them, and there alſo Jeroboam of Joſeph raiſeth up that houſe to a Kingdom. From theſe words of Jacob the inhabitants of Sychar had their warrant to maintain, that their well was Jacobs well, and that his ſons and cattel drank of it. For it might not have been digged of a thouſand years after Jacob was dead and gone, for ought any Samaritane alive could tell, if he fetched not his authority from theſe words of Jacob, who having given that portion of ground to Joſeph, Gen. 48. 22. doth here intimate that there was a well in it, and beſides that well in his houſe ſhould riſe to honour. His fruitfulneſs by daughters you may ſee in Judg. 21. where the daughters of Jabeſh Gilead and of Shiloh, both of Joſeph, make up the breach of an hoſtile Tribe the Tribe of Benjamin, or elſe it had decayed.

SECTION I.

Iſrael afflicted in Egypt about 120 years.

FROM the giving of the promiſe to Abraham, Gen. 12. to the deliverance out of Egypt, and the giving of the Law, were 430 years, Exod. 12. 40. Gal. 1. 17. This ſum of years divided it ſelf into two equal parts, for half of it was ſpent before their going into Egypt, and half of it in there being there. Two hundred and fifteen years were taken up before they went into Egypt, thus: From the promiſe given to Abraham, to the birth of Iſaac, five and twenty years; compare Gen. 12. 4. with Gen. 21. 5. From the birth of Iſaac to the birth of Jacob, threeſcore, Gen. 25. 26. from thence to their going down into Egypt a hundred and thirty, Gen. 27. 9. The other two hundred and fifteen years they ſpent in Egypt, namely ninety four, before the death of Levi the longeſt liver of all the twelve Tribes, and a hundred and twenty one betwixt his death and their deliverance.

For Levi and Joſeph were both born in the ſeven years of Jacobs ſecond apprentiſhip, Gen. 29. & 30. Levi in the fourth, and Joſeph in the ſeventh, ſo that there were three years between them: Now Joſeph when his Father and brethren came down into Egypt, was nine and thirty years old. Compare Gen. 41. 46. 51. & 45. 6. And then was Levi forty three. And Levi lived an hundred thirty and ſeven years, Exod. 6. 16. out of which thoſe forty three being deducted which he had ſpent before their coming down into Egypt, it appeareth they were in Egypt ninety four years before his death: And thoſe ninety four being deducted out of the two hundred and fifteen, which they ſpent in that land, it appeareth alſo that a hundred twenty one years paſſed betwixt his death and their delivery, and till his death they felt no affliction, Exod. 1. 6, 7, 8.

SECTION II.

The 88 & 89 Pſalms, penned in the time of this affliction.

THESE two Pſalms, are the oldeſt pieces of writing that the World hath to ſhew, for they were penned many years before the birth of Moſes, by two men that felt and groaned under this bondage and affliction of Egypt, Heman and Ethan, two Sons of Zerah, 1 Chron. 2. 6. In Pſalm 88. Heman deploreth the diſtreſs and miſery of Iſrael in Egypt in moſt paſſionate meaſures, and therefore titles his Elegy, Gnal Mahalath Leannoth, concerning ſickneſs by affliction, and accordingly he and his brethren are called the Sons of Mahol, 1 King. 4. 31. In Pſal. 89. Ethan from the promiſe, Gen. 15. ſings joyfully their deliverance, that the raging of the Red Sea ſhould be ruled, verſ. 9. and Rahab or Egypt ſhould be broken in pieces, verſ. 10. and that the people ſhould hear the joyful ſound of the Law, verſ. 15.

Object. But David is named frequently in the Pſalm, who was not born of many hundreds of years after Ethan was dead.

Anſw. 1. This might be done Prophetically, as Samuel is thought to be named by Moſes, *Pſal.*99.6. for that Pſalm according to a rule of the Hebrews, is held to have been made by him.

2. It will be found in Scripture, that when ſome holy men indued with the Spirit of God, have left pieces of writings behind them, indited by the Spirit, others that have lived in after times, indued with the ſame gift of Prophecy, have taken thoſe ancient pieces in hand, and have flouriſhed upon them, as preſent, paſt, or future occaſions did require. To this purpoſe, compare Pſal. 18. & 1 Sam. 22. Obadiah, and Jer. 49. 14. and 1 Chron. 16. and Pſal. 96. and 105. and 2 Pet. 2. and the Epiſtle of St. Jude. So this piece of Ethan being of incomparable antiquity, and ſinging of the delivery from Egypt, in after times, that it might be made fit to be ſung in the Temple, it is taken in hand by ſome divine Pen-man, and that ground-work of his, is wrought upon, and his Song ſet to an higher key; namely, that whereas he treated only of the bodily deliverance from Egypt, it is wound up ſo high as to reach the Spiritual delivery by Chriſt, and therefore David is ſo often named from whence he ſhould come.

SECTION III.

The words of the Hebrew Midwives not a lye, but a glorious confeſſion of their faith.

THEY were Hebrew Midwives, but Egyptian Women. For Pharaoh that in an ungodly Councel had deviſed and concluded upon all ways, whereby to keep the Iſraelites under, would not in ſuch a deſign as this, uſe Iſraelitiſh women, who he knew were parties in the cauſe againſt him; but he intruſteth it with women of his own Nation. They are named for their honour, as Mark 14. 9. that whereſoever the Goſpel or the Doctrine of Salvation ſhould be Preached, this faith and fact of theirs ſhould be publiſhed in memorial of them.

The Midwives ſaid unto Pharaoh, Becauſe the Hebrew women are not as the Egyptian women, for they are lively, &c. Theſe words of theirs, proceed from the ſame faith, from whence had proceeded their work of charity, the childrens preſervation. And ſo far are they from being a lye, that they are ſo glorious a confeſſion of their faith in God, that we find not many that have gone beyond it. And the things they ſpake of, ſo far from falſe, that they were moſt admirably and miraculouſly true and really done. They ſaw in very deed the immediate hand and help of God, plainly and really ſhewed to the Hebrew women in their labour, and that whereas other women naturally in that caſe are weak, fainting, and long in pain, theſe were ſtrong, lively, and ſoon delivered. For as the ſtrength of the promiſe ſhewed it ſelf in the Males of Iſrael, in that, the more they were preſſed under ſervitude, and afflicted, the more were they able for generation, v. 2. *Act.*7.17. So did the ſtrength of the promiſe ſhew it ſelf upon the women, in that they were delivered of their children with a ſupernatural and extraordinary eaſe and quickneſs: Therefore the Midwives boldly ſtand out to Pharaoh, to the venture of a Martyrdom, and plainly tell him, that ſince they were not in travel as other women, but lively, and ſtrong, and had ſoon done, it could be nothing but the immediate hand of God with them, which hand they are reſolved they will not oppoſe for all his command, leſt they ſhould be found to fight againſt God. For this confeſſion ſo reſolutely and gloriouſly made before Pharaoh, and for their fact anſwerable, God made them houſes, becauſe they feared him, verſ. 21. that is, married them into the Congregation of Iſrael, and built up Iſraelitiſh Families by them.

SECTION IV.

Moſes his birth, ſupernatural, Exod.2.2.

MOSES was born when his mother by the courſe of nature was paſt child-bearing: For if Levi begat Jochebed at an hundred years old, which is hardly to be conceived, as *Gen.*17.17. yet is Jochebed within two of fourſcore when ſhe bare Moſes. But it was more than probable that ſhe was born long before Levi was an hundred, unleſs we will have Levi to be above half a hundred years childleſs, betwixt the birth of Merari and Jochebed: And thus the birth of Moſes was one degree more miraculous, than the miraculous and ſupernatural birth of the other children of the Hebrew Women, and ſo was his brother Aarons not much leſs wondrous. She then having a goodly child, at ſo great an age, ſaw the ſpecial hand of God in it, and therefore labours his preſervation againſt Pharaohs decree: for by Faith ſhe knew he would be preſerved for ſome ſpecial inſtrument of Gods glory, but the manner of his preſervation ſhe knew not yet.

SECTION V.

Our Saviours allegation of Exod. 3. 6. in Luke 20. 37. cleared.

MOSES in Midian, under the retiredneſs of a Paſtoral life, giveth himſelf unto contemplation of divine things; in one of thoſe raptures, God himſelf appeareth viſibly to him in deed; and that in a flaming fire, now he is about to perform the promiſe, as he appeared to Abraham when he made it: and it came to paſs, when the Sun went down, and it was dark, behold a ſmoaking furnace, and a burning Lamp that paſſed between thoſe pieces. In the ſame day the Lord made a Covenant with Abraham, Gen. 15. 17, 18.

The words which Chriſt here uſeth to Moſes in the buſh, he urgeth again to the Jews, whereby to evince the Reſurrection, Luke 20.37. And that the dead are raiſed, even Moſes ſhewed at the buſh, when he calleth the Lord, the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob, for he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: which words indeed do infer the reſurrection as they lie in themſelves, but far more clearly, if they be laid to, and compared with the Jews own doctrine and poſition.

Rabbi Simeon Ben Jochai ſaith, the holy bleſſed God nameth not his name on the righteous in their life, but after their death, as it is ſaid, to the Saints that are in the earth, Pſal. 16.3. When are they Saints? When they are laid in the earth: For all the days that they live, the holy bleſſed God joyneth not his name to them: And why? Becauſe the holy bleſſed God truſteth them, not that evil affections will not make them to err; but when they be dead, the holy bleſſed God nameth his name upon them: But behold we find that he nameth his name on Iſaac the righteous whilſt he liveth, for ſo he ſaith to Jacob, I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Iſaac. Rabbi Barachiah, and our Doctors: our Doctors ſay, He ſaw his duſt, as it was gathered upon the Altar, and Rabbi Barachiah ſaith, ſince he was blind of his eyes, he is reputed as dead, becauſe he was ſhut up in the midſt of the houſe. Rabbi Tanch. in Gen. 28. Rabbi Menahem in Exod. 3.

SECTION VI.

The power of Miracles, Habbak. 3. 2. and Act. 19. 2. explained.

THE gift of Propheſie or Foretelling things to come had been in the Church ſince the fall of Adam, and now are Miracles added becauſe of unbelief: For obſerve that when Moſes ſaith, Behold they will not believe, the Lord immediately anſwers, What is that in thine hand? This double faculty being given here to Moſes the firſt Prophet of the Church of Iſrael, it alſo deſcended to a ſucceſſion of Prophets in that Congregation from time to time. But with this excellent gift it was alſo given Moſes himſelf to know, and ſo likewiſe them that did ſucceed, that they had this double power not from themſelves, but from another: Moſes his ſtammering tongue taught himſelf and them ſo much for Propheſie, and his leprous hand taught ſo much for Miracles. This ſucceſſion of Prophets began from Samuel and ended in the death of Chriſt, Acts 3.24. Not that there were not Prophets betwixt Moſes and Samuel, but becauſe they were not expreſſed by name, as alſo becauſe viſion in that ſpace of time was exceeding rare, 1 *Sam.*3.1.

Now from the beginning of the rule of Samuel to the beginning of the captivity in Babel, were four hundred and ninety years; and from the end of that captivity to the end of Chriſts life upon earth, were four hundred and ninety years more. The ſeventy years of captivity between, which were the ſeventh part of either of theſe two Numbers, that lay on either ſide, are called by Habbakkuk, The midſt of years, namely, from the beginning of Propheſie in Samuel to the ſealing of Propheſie in the death of Chriſt. Revive thy work in the midſt of the years, in the midſt of the years make known. Then was it juſtly to be feared that the ſpirit of Propheſie would quite have ceaſed from Iſrael when they were captived among the Heathen. This made the Prophet to pray ſo earneſtly, that God would preſerve alive, or revive his work of Miracles in the midſt of years, and in thoſe times of captivity, that he would make known things to come by that gift of Propheſie. And he was heard in what he prayed for, and his ſupplication took effect, in the moſt prophetick and powerful Spirit of Daniel.

The Jews had an old Maxim, That after the death of Zachary, Malachy and thoſe laſt Prophets, the Spirit of God departed from Iſrael and went up. So that from thence forward, prediction of future things and working of miracles were rarities among them. To this aimed the anſwer of thoſe holy ones, *Act.*19.2. We have not ſo much as heard whether there be be any Holy Ghoſt. Not that they doubted of ſuch a perſon in the Trinity, but that whereas they had learned in their Schools, that the Holy Ghoſt departed away after the death of Malachy, they had never yet heard, whether he was reſtored again in his gifts of Propheſie and Miracles till now or no.

SECTION VII.

The two firſt miracles, Exod. 4.

1. THE turning of Moſes rod into a Serpent, did utterly diſclaim any power of the Devil in theſe wonders which he was to work, which power only the Magicians wrought by: For as a Serpent was the fitteſt Embleme of the Devil, as *Gen.*3. and Revel. 12.9. So was it a ſign that Moſes did not theſe Miracles by the power of the Devil, but had a power over and beyond him, when he can thus deal with the Serpent at his pleaſure, as to make his rod a Serpent, and the Serpent a rod as he ſeeth good.

Yet it is worth the obſerving, that he is commanded to take it by the tail, verſ. 9. for to meddle with the Serpents head belonged not to Moſes, but to Chriſt that ſpake to him out of the buſh, as *Gen.*3.15.

His rod at Sinai is ſaid to be turned into Nahaſh, a common and ordinary Snake or Serpent; but when he caſts it down before Pharaoh, it becometh Tannin, *Chap.*7.10. a Serpent of the greateſt dimenſions, be like a Crocodile, which beaſt the Egyptians adored, and to whoſe jaws they had expoſed the poor Hebrew Infants in the River.

2. His Leprous hand diſclaimed alſo any power of Moſes his own in theſe wonders which he wrought, for it was not poſſible that ſo great things ſhould be done by that impure and unclean hand, but by a greater.

3. Both of theſe Miracles which were the firſt that were done by any Prophet in the world, did more ſpecially refer to the Miracles of that great Prophet that ſhould come into the world, by whoſe power theſe Miracles were done by Moſes at this time. For as it belonged to him only to caſt out the power of the Devil out of the ſoul, and to heal the ſoul of the leproſie of ſin, ſo was it reſerved for him firſt, to caſt out the Devil out of the body, and to heal the leproſie of the body. For though the Prophets from Moſes to Chriſt had the gift of doing Miracles, and performed wonders many of them in an high degree, yet could never any of them or any other caſt out a Devil or heal a Leper till the great Prophet came. Eliſha indeed directed Naaman how he ſhould be healed, but he neither touched him nor came out to him at all, that he might ſhew that it was not his power, but ſuch cures were reſerved for Chriſt to come.

SECTION VIII.

Moſes in danger of death, becauſe of diſtruſt, Exod. 4. 24.

THE fault of Moſes that brought him into this danger, was not the uncircumciſion of his Son, as it is commonly held, for that had been diſpenſable withal in him, as it was with thouſands afterwards of the Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs, but his fault was grievous diffidence and diſtruſt. For this is that that makes him ſo much ſo oft, and ſo earneſtly to decline ſo glorious and honourable a meſſage as the Lord would ſend him on, and this was that that brought him into this danger of death, when he was even going on this meſſage. Obſerve therefore his evaſions, and how they found exceeding hollow and empty of belief.

Firſt, Who am I that I ſhould go to Pharaoh? Chap. 3.11. This the Lord anſwereth, I will be with thee, and this my appearing to thee may be an undoubted token to thee that I have ſent thee, *verſ.*12.

Secondly, But who ſhall I ſay hath ſent me? For forty years ago, they refuſed me, ſaying, Who made thee a Prince and a Ruler over us? Chap.4.1. This ſcruple the Lord removeth by giving him the power of miracles.

Thirdly, But I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor ſince thou haſt ſpoken to me, for though I may work miracles upon others, yet is not this wrought upon my ſelf, that I ſpeak any whit better than I did before. This receiveth this anſwer, I will be with thy mouth, verſ.10.11,12.

Fourthly, But I pray thee ſend by that hand that thou wilt ſend or ſtretch out, verſ.13. for thou ſaidſt to me, I will ſtretch out mine hand, and ſmite Egypt, &c. Chap. 3.20. Now therefore I pray thee ſtretch out this hand of thine, for the hand of man is not able to perform it. At this the Lords anger was kindled againſt him, and that deſervedly. For in this he denied the myſtery of the Redemption which was to be wrought by a man, the God-head going along with him.

Now

Now it is time for Moſes to ſet for Egypt when he ſeeth God angry at his excuſing: he doth ſo, but he taketh his diffidence along with him, in that he taketh his wife and children with him. One would think that had been a ſpecial piece of charity, but it being looked into, will prove a ſpecial piece of diſtruſt.

For when God appeareth to him, at the very firſt, he giveth him aſſurance of the peoples delivery, and that they ſhould come in their journies to that very place, When thou haſt brought the people forth out of Egypt ye ſhall ſerve God upon this mountain, Chap.3.12.

Now if Moſes had believed certainly this promiſe, and that undoubtedly he and the people ſhould come thither, he would never have taken wife and children with him to trouble them and himſelf in ſo long a journey, and in ſo earneſt a buſineſs, but would have left them ſtill with Jethro, till he and Iſrael ſhould march up to them. But this he feared, that this his journey would be to no effect, that Iſrael would accept of none, and therefore ſhould obtain no delivery; that this meſſage would produce nothing, unleſs danger to himſelf, and that while he ſpake of delivering others, he might incur bondage himſelf, ſo that if he left wife and children behind him, it was odds he ſhould never ſee them again. And therefore to make ſure work he will take them with him, and for this his diſtruſt the Lord meets him, and ſeeks to kill him.

Nor was this diſtruſt and diffidence little or ſmall in him, but if the circumſtances be conſidered, it will appear to be very great, and his want of faith exceeding much.

Zipporah his wife was now lying in Childbed, a weak woman but lately delivered, and therefore far unfit for ſo long a journey, and the new-born child as unfit, if not unfitter than ſhe: and yet Mother and child in this weak caſe, muſt travel to the hazzard of both their lives, for he durſt not leave them behind him for fear he and they ſhould never meet again: For this it is that Zipporah twice calleth him a bloody husband: before the childs circumciſion, and after: before, becauſe he had hazzarded both their lives in bringing them forth, both of them being in their blouth and blood: and after, becauſe ſhe through him was put to Circumciſe the child, which bloodineſs a tender mother muſt needs abhor: and for this alſo is the word circumciſions in the plural number, *verſ.*26. A bloody husband, Lemuloth, becauſe of the circumciſions.

SECTION IX.

Zipporah but very lately delivered of her child.

THAT Zipporah was ſo lately delivered of child, is plain by obſerving theſe things.

Firſt, That Jethro her Father was circumciſed both he and his houſhold, for he was a Midianite, a Son of Abraham, by Keturah, and all Abrahams children after the fleſh were circumciſed, and that not by uſurpation or unwarrantable imitation, but by the bond and tye of the inſtitution: therefore though Moſes had been abſent never ſo long, or never ſo far off, yet would Jethro have taken care of the childs circumciſion on the eighth day: but now the child may not ſtay, till he be eight days old, and whole again upon his circumciſion, but muſt travel young and uncircumciſed as he is.

Secondly, Obſerve the childs name, which was uſually given at Circumciſion, and if the child were older than we ſpeak of, then had he been ſo long without a name, or had had another name than Eliezer.

Thirdly, He called his name Eliezer, for the God of my fathers, ſaid he, hath been mine help and delivered me from the ſword of Pharaoh, Chap.18.4. Now Moſes was not ſecure of Pharaohs ſword, till juſt at his ſetting for Egypt. For after he came from Horeb into Midian again, the Lord tells him that all thoſe are dead which ſought his life, *verſ.*19. This doth aggravate his diffidence the more. Who though he had ſeen ſuch wonders at Horeb, and heard of other wonders done for him by God in Egypt, in cutting off his enemies there, yet durſt he not truſt the promiſe of God, for his returning to his wife and children, but will take them along with him. For this God brings him into danger of his life viſibly, which Zipporah poor woman thought to have been for the uncircumciſion of her Son, therefore ſhe taketh and circumciſeth him: but Moſes being conſcious of his own infidelity or diſtruſt, in this ſo great a danger, rubbeth up his faith again, and the peril refineth it as ſilver, ſo that now he betaketh himſelf wholly to God, by confidence in the promiſe, and to expreſs this his faith, he calleth his Son when the mother had circumciſed him, Eliezer, God is mine helper; ſo that I ſhall eſcape danger from Pharaoh and the Egyptians in this mine errand: And the Lord ſaw his faith, and let him go.

SECTION X.

Of the name Jehovah, and how it was unknown to the Fathers, Exod. 6. 3.

THIS is the uncommunicable name of God, not given at any time unto the Creature, Esay 42. 8.

This name in its ſound and letters was known unto the Fathers, yea even in its ſignification. Abraham calls mount Moriah, Jehovah Jireh, *Gen.*22.14.

Iſaac called upon the name of Jehovah, Chap. 26. 25. And Jacob ſaith; Jehovah thy God hath brought it to me, Chap.27.20.

The name Jehovah ſignifieth three things,

Firſt, Gods eternal being in himſelf, without dependence or mixture, upon, or with any other thing. For his being undependent, it is rendred, the firſt, and the laſt; and which is, and which was, and which is to come.

For his being without mixture, or compoſition, it is ſaid here, שמי יהוה לא נודעתי Not, By my name Jehovah I was not known: Nor, My name Jehovah was not known: But, My name Jehovah, I was not known, to ſhew that God and his Name are not two things, united by compoſition, but one and the ſame thing.

Secondly, Jehovah betokeneth Gods giving of being to the Creature. To this purpoſe, it is obſervable, that God is never called Jehovah, till all the Creation be perfected, and every thing have received its being, Gen. 2.4.

So in all the ſpeeches that paſs between Job and his friends, God is never called Jehovah but once, where mention is made of the Creatures receiving their being, Job 12. 10.

Thirdly, Jehovah ſignifieth the faithfulneſs of God in his promiſe, and in this ſenſe it is rendred, Amen, true and faithful. In this ſenſe it is ſet after ſo many commands, Thou ſhalt, or thou ſhalt not do thus and thus, I am Jehovah.

And in all theſe ſignifications it is juſtly prefixed before all the Commandments, Exod. 20. I am Jehovah thy God.

As this name is not communicable to any Creature, but only appropriate to the Godhead, ſo it is ſeverally given to every Perſon in the Trinity.

Firſt, To the Father, *Pſal.*110.1. For he is the fountain of being in himſelf.

Secondly, To the Son, *Jer.*23.6. For he is the giver of being to the Creature.

Thirdly, To the Holy Ghoſt: compare Eſay 6. 8, 9, 10. with Act. 28.25,26. For he is the Spirit of Truth, and giver of being to the promiſe.

The name Jehovah, and the ſignificancy of it to the utmoſt, did the holy Fathers know before Moſes. But they ſaw not experience of the laſt ſignification named, namely the faithfulneſs of God in his promiſe made to Abraham concerning his delivery of his ſeed from bondage, and bringing them into a Land flowing with milk and honey: God gave them the promiſe by the name of El Shaddai, God Omnipotent: and they relied upon his omnipotency, becauſe he that promiſed was able to perform: but they beheld it afar of, and taſted not of my performance of it, but now will I ſhew my ſelf Jehovah, faithful to bring to paſs and accompliſh what I promiſed.

SECTION XI.

Putiel, Exod. 6. 25.

MANY, and the moſt of them far fetcht, notations are given upon this name: and when all is ſaid of it that can be ſaid, the laſt reſolution lieth but in a conjecture; and then may we gueſs as well as others.

Eliezer married his wife in Egypt, and of the Egyptian Idiom doth this name of her Father ſeem as probably to ſound as of any other.

Now among the Egyptian names or titles, theſe two things may be obſerved.

Firſt, That among them, Gentry, Nobility, and Royalty, ſeem to have been denoted and diſtinguiſhed by theſe increaſing Syllables, Phar, Phara, and Phara-oh. The Gentry by Phar, as Poti-phar a Captain, *Gen.*41.45. The Nobility by Phara, as Poti-phara, a Prince, *Gen.*41.45. And Majeſty by Phara-oh, the common name of all their Kings.

There was another title of dignity given to the Governour of the Jews in Alexandria in that Land, in after times, namely Alabarcha, as is to be ſeen in Joſephus: which though he and others would derive from Ἅλς, Salt, yet ſince we are yet to ſeek for the latter part of the word, it may as probably be conceived to be compounded of the Article Al, ſo common in the Arabick tongue, and Abrech which hath relation to dignity and honour, *Exod.*41.43.

Secondly,

Secondly, The Egyptians delighted to affix or joyn to their names and titles, the word Poti, or Puti, whether in memorial of their Uncle Put, Gen. 10. 6. or in reverence of ſome Diety of that name, or for what elſe is not ſo eaſily reſolved, as it may be conceived they did the thing, by the names forecited, Potiphar, and Potiphara, and of the ſame nature ſeemeth to be Putiel, the word that is now in hand.

This Putiel therefore may ſeem to have been ſome convert Egyptian, [imagine him to have been of the poſterity of Puti-phera, among whom Joſeph had ſowed the ſeeds of true Religion] who changing his Idolatry, and irreligiouſneſs for the worſhip of the true God, did alſo change the latter part of his name Phera, into the name of that God which he now profeſſed, and inſtead of Puti-phera, to be called Puti-el. The beſt reſolution, as was ſaid before, that can be given in this point, can be but conjectures, and in a matter of this nature, it is as excuſable if we err, as difficult to hit a right.

SECTION XII.

Of Moſes words, Glory over me. Exod. 8. 9.

THE Plagues of Egypt began anſwerable to their ſins, the waters wherein the childrens blood had been ſhed, and they poor ſouls ſprawled for life, are now turned into blood, and ſprawle with Frogs.

The former Plague of blood, was not ſo ſmart as the other of Frogs, for by digging they found freſh water, and ſo had that remedy againſt that Plague. But they had none againſt the Frogs, for they came into every place, and ſeiſed upon all the victuals that lay in their way, and devoured them; nay they ſpared not to raven upon men themſelves: Therefore the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Frogs deſtroyed them.

Yet for all this doth Pharaoh make but a mock at Jehovah in all this his doing: and ſcornfully and in deriſion, bids Moſes and Aaron try what Jehovah could do for the removing of them. To whom Moſes anſwers, Glory over me, mock me hardly with my Jehovah, yet appoint when I ſhall pray, and I will pray, that thou mayeſt know that there is none like my Jehovah. And Pharaoh appoints him the next day for his prayer, which he would never have put off ſo long, had he in earneſt thought that Jehovah could have removed them upon Moſes prayer.

SECTION XIII.

The Plague of Lice. The ſpeech of the Sorcerers, This is the finger of God, Exod. 8. 19. not a confeſſion of the Lord, but an hideous and horrid blaſphemy.

AT the Plague of Lice, the Sorcerers are put to a non-plus, and in the leaſt creature can do nothing, for [beſides that it was the will of God, to bring their devices to nought, and to ſhew himſelf maximum in minimis] if they ſhould have imitated this miracle, they muſt have done two things: firſt, they muſt have produced duſt, and then of the duſt, Lice, for the Text ſaith, That all the duſt of the Land became Lice, throughout all the Land of Egypt, verſ. 17. Neither of which they can do, and therefore ſay, This is the finger of God. For the underſtanding of theſe their words, obſerve theſe things.

Firſt, That in the two foregoing Plagues of blood and Frogs, Moſes gave warning of them before they came, but of this he did not.

Secondly, That the Lice were alſo in the land where Iſrael dwelt, as well as in other parts of Egypt, for there is no ſevering betwixt Goſhen and Egypt mentioned, till the next Plagues of Flies, In that day, I will ſever the Land of Goſhen, in which my people dwell, And I will put a diviſion between my people, and thy people, verſ. 22, 23. whereas none had been put before.

For when Moſes turned the waters of Egypt into blood, the Sorcerers did ſo alſo with their inchantments, and turned the waters of Goſhen into blood likewiſe. Here Pharaoh thinketh his Sorcerers have matched the Jehovah that Moſes ſo talked of, and that they could do as much againſt his people, as he could do againſt theirs.

And ſo when Moſes from Jehovah brought Frogs upon Egypt, the Magitians alſo by their inchantments bring Frogs likewiſe upon Goſhen, and ſtill they think their God is hard enough for Iſraels Jehovah.

Thus is blood and Frogs through all the Land of Goſhen, but neither were theſe real Blood or Frogs, nor was this any puniſhment at all upon Iſrael, for it was not from the Lord, but only vain deluſions permitted by the Lord, that at laſt he might catch the crafty in their own net.

But

But when the Plague of Lice cometh, it cometh alſo upon Goſhen from the Lord himſelf, and this is a Plague indeed upon his own people, laid upon them by him, as well as upon Egypt: For Iſrael that had partaken in ſo many of Egypts ſins, muſt alſo think to partake in ſome of her puniſhments.

For this it is, why the man of God in Pſal. 78. reckoning up the Plagues of Egypt, never mentioneth the Plague of Lice: becauſe that was equally a Plague to Iſrael, as to the Egyptians, they had both Blood and Frogs as well as they, but not as really nor from God, and therefore no Plague to them.

Thirdly, The Egyptians acknowledged a ſupream great Deity, whom they thought they adored in their petty deities, whom they worſhipped. For when they adored an Ox, a Dog, a Crocodile, &c. they adored not the carcaſs, but the good qualities that in theſe creatures conduced to their benefit and good, ſo ſaith Euſebius, that whatſoever was helpful, or furthered the good of humane life, that they accounted a Deity.

Fourthly, They accounted not of Jehovah, the God of the Hebrews, but as a petty, trivial god, ſuch as every Nation had one or more of, that that god could do ſomething, as they ſaw in the Blood and Frogs, but could do no more, if ſo much, as theirs, Chap. 5.2. Who is Jehovah that I ſhould obey him? I know not Jehovah, neither will I let Iſrael go. So that the Magicians words, This is the finger of God, come from them reaſoning thus: When Blood and Frogs came, Moſes gave warning of them before, from his Jehovah, but theſe Lice come and he never gave warning; Hence it is plain, this is none of Jehovahs doing, otherwiſe would Moſes have known it before, but now he did not. Again, when the Hebrews Jehovah brought Blood and Frogs upon our land, he brought none upon theirs, but ſpared his own people: but this Plague of Lice is alſo upon them, as ſoon as upon us, and without our doing: And therefore this cannot be Jehovah, for he would not plague his own people, but this is done by the finger of Elohim the great deity, and the Jehovah of the Hebrews is a God of no value.

SECTION XIV.

The Plague of Boyls, Exod. 9. 9. Two contrary Plagues in one.

MOSES and Aaron muſt take their handfuls of aſhes out of the Furnace, that whence Iſrael had had their ſore affliction, Egypt might receive their corporal puniſhment. Moſes is to ſcatter the four handfuls into the Air towards the four quarters of Heaven, hereupon a double miracle followed. 1. That ſo little or few aſhes were multiplied ſo as to flie throughout all the Land of Egypt, and to light upon every man and beaſt in it. 2. That lighting on them, it was a Plague to them in their bodies.

As the Miracle was double, ſo was the Plague.

1. The Aſhes became Shehin, that is, a burning itch, or an inflamed Scab: for ſo the word ſignifieth, as is plain, Job 2. 7, 8. where the holy mans body is ſtruck with Shehin, ſuch an intolerable dry hot itch, that his nails would not ſerve to ſcratch enough, but he is glad to get a potſheard to skrub himſelf.

2. This Itch had alſo blains and boils broke out with it, [and ſo Jobs had not] ſo that the Egyptians were vexed at once, with intolerable itch and intolerable ach: Their itch called upon them to ſcratch and skrub, and yet they could not do ſo, for the ſoreneſs and aching of their boils.

In the five preceding Plagues, the obduration of Pharaohs heart is attributed to himſelf; in theſe five forward, it is attributed to God: And juſtly [when being puniſhed for his ſins, he hardneth his heart ſo many times] is his heart hardned ſo many times that he ſinneth for a puniſhment.

SECTION XV.

The Plague of darkneſs, Exod. 10. Why firſt named, Pſal. 105.28.

AS the men of the old world, of Sodom and the Jews at the death of Chriſt were ſtruck with darkneſs, before they entred into utter darkneſs; ſo it is with the Egyptians here.

This Plague lay upon them three days, namely, the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth days of the month Niſan. For upon the concluſion of the darkneſs, Moſes being ſent for to Pharaoh giveth him ſuch diſtaſt that he chargeth him never to come into his preſence again, which Moſes ſaith he will not do, I will ſee thy face again no more: but before he goeth out of the preſence, he giveth him warning concerning the ſlaughter of the firſt born to be that night, Chap. 11. Verſ. 4. by which it is clear that the darkneſs ended on the Paſsover day in the morning.

Queſt.

Queſt. Why then ſeeing it was the ninth plague in number hath Pſal. 105. ſet it firſt?

Anſw. Becauſe it was the moſt terrible of all the Plagues that came upon them. For thoſe that had gone before had plagued only their land, or cattle, or bodies; that that came after, light not upon all, but only on the firſt born, but this is a Plague even to the very mind and conſcience, and univerſally ſo to them all.

It was not their ſitting in darkneſs and not ſtirring about their buſineſs for three days together, that plagued them ſo much, for this had been no great torment, but their torture was, that in this darkneſs they ſaw fearful apparitions of Fiends and Devils, and horrible viſions, which ſo hideouſly affrighted and even diſtracted them, that they were as it were in Hell already. For obſerve that Pharaoh that had been nothing at all moved in a manner with all the Plagues that went before, is ſo ſtirred with this, that he ſends for Moſes as ſoon as ever the darkneſs is over, and permits him to depart, *Exod.*10.24. which mear ſitting in darkneſs could not have wrought him to, but thoſe terrors which he ſaw in the dark.

Hence it is that *Pſal.*78.49. nameth not the Plague of darkneſs by its name, but in the place where it ſhould come, he mentioneth that which was the very quinteſſence of it. He caſt upon them the fierceneſs of his anger, wrath, and indignation and trouble, by ſending evil Angels among them.

SECTION XVI.

Iſrael circumciſed in the three days darkneſs. He ſent darkneſs and made it dark, and they rebelled not againſt his word, Pſal. 105. 28.

THIS latter clauſe, they rebelled not againſt his word, is to be underſtood of Iſrael, who in this Plague of darkneſs performed ſome ſpecial part of obedience: And that upon inquiry will be found to be their undergoing of circumciſion. For they had followed the Idols of Egypt, and in Idolatry were become like the Egyptians, ſo were they alſo in uncircumciſion. For when Joſhuah had circumciſed them at their entrance into Canaan, he ſaith, I have rolled away from you the reproach of Egypt, *Joſh.*5.9. or that wherein ye were like unto the Egyptians uncircumciſed to your reproach.

But when God ordaineth the Paſover, he giveth charge for circumciſion, for no uncircumciſed perſon muſt eat thereof, *Exod.*12.48.

Then was required a general circumciſion of all the people, or at leaſt of the moſt of them, for all were uncircumciſed, unleſs it was ſome few that were more conſtant to the Covenant of their God. And that there was a general Circumciſion in Egypt, is inferred in the forenamed place, Joſh. 5. where God commandeth Joſhua to Circumciſe the people a ſecond time, which inferreth that there was a firſt time when they were circumciſed with a general Circumciſion as they were that ſecond time. But in Egypt muſt this firſt Circumciſion be, for the Text in that very place telleth, that in the Wilderneſs there was no Circumciſion at all.

Whilſt then Iſrael ſat ſore of their Circumciſion, God cloſeth up Egypt in three days darkneſs, and in horror, that they might not take the opportunity againſt his people.

SECTION XVII.

The beginning of the year changed, Exod. 12. 1.

THE world from her creation hitherto, had begun her years in Tiſri or September, which was the time of the year when ſhe was created. This will eaſily be ſhewed [againſt thoſe that maintain the world did begin in March] by theſe reaſons.

1. From *Exod.*23.16. The feaſt of in-gathering in the end of the year.

2. From Joel 2.23. The latter rain in the firſt month.

3. Had Adam been created in March he had had no fruits ripe for his food, but in Autumn they were ready for him.

4. Should the months before the Paſover be reckoned to begin from March, it will follow that the general deluge increaſed in the heat of Summer, and abated and dried up in the deep and moiſt of Winter.

5. Had the year begun from March from the beginning, it had been unneceſſary to have commanded them to begin it thence, who never knew where to begin it elſe.

From the creation then the years began from September, but here upon a work greater in figure, as which repreſented the Redemption by Chriſt, the beginning is tranſlated to March. And this is the firſt Commandment given to Iſrael by Moſes.

As that old account began from an Equinox, ſo muſt this, but not alike; That began exactly from the Equinox day, this from the firſt new Moon after, and not from that day unleſs that day was the new Moon. The fourth day of the worlds creation was both Equinox and new Moon: and though the years after began from that day of the Sun, yet were they counted by the months of the Moon.

Their year then beginning thus from a new Moon it plainly ſpeaketh for it ſelf that it was reckoned by Lunary months, which falling ſhort eleven days of the year of the Sun, every third year was leap year, or intercalary of a month added of 33 days, which was called Veadar: So that howſoever it is ſaid that Solomon had twelve ſpecial officers for the twelve months of the year, it meaneth the ordinary year, and not the Emboliſmæan or leap year: for that year, thoſe twelve in their ſeveral months ſerved ſo much the longer, as that the added months might be made up by them, and not a new officer choſen for that month, who ſhould have no imployment when that month was over till three years after.

The equity or life of this Law that their years ſhould begin from March or Abib was becauſe the preaching of the Goſpel ſhould begin, and the redemption be conſummate from that time. For it was juſt at that time of the year when John began to baptiſe, which was the beginning of the Goſpel, Mark 1. 1. Acts 1. 22. And it was at that time of the year when our Saviour ſuffered, and fulfilled that which this prefigured our Redemption.

SECTION XVIII.

Particulars concerning the Paſſover, Exod. 12.

1. THE Paſchal Lamb was Chriſts body in a figure. Compare Exod. 12.46. with John 19. 36. and to this it is that the word hoc, in the words of our Saviour, Hoc eſt corpus meum, had reference and reſpect. They had but newly eaten the Paſſover Lamb, and that had been the body of Chriſt Sacramentally to the Jews hitherto: but now Jeſus took bread, and bleſſed, and brake it, and told them that this hence forward muſt be his body under the Goſpel in that ſame manner that the Paſchal Lamb had been his body under the Law.

Secondly, The Lamb muſt not be eaten raw, verſ. 9. which would never have been forbidden, if the very raw fleſh and blood of Chriſt, as it was upon the Croſs, were eaten in the Sacrament, as Tranſubſtantiation dreameth, for then had the raw Paſſover repreſented it the better. And eſpecially among thoſe People who ſometimes uſed to eat raw fleſh in their haſty meals as the Jews did.

Neceſſity ſometimes transfers the Paſſover to another month, but never further than the next. So the firſt Paſſover but one, was kept by ſome on the fourteenth day of the ſecond month; becauſe uncleanneſs by a dead corps neceſſitated them to forego it at the right time, Numb. 9. 11. And ſo the laſt Paſſover but one that we read of before the Captivity was kept in the ſecond month, 2 Chron. 30. 2. becauſe Hezekiah coming to his Crown but juſt in the beginning of the year, or very little before, could not procure the Temple, and the Prieſts to be ſanctified and purged ſufficiently, and the People to be aſſembled againſt the right Paſſover day. See 2 Chron. 29. 3.

This tranſlation of the Feaſt a month out of its place, did the more enforce its ſignificancy of things future than of things paſt; as rather recording the death of Chriſt to come, than their delivery from Egypt: for the force of the commemoration of that was infeebled much, when it hit not upon the very night. Again, this moveableneſs of this Feaſt, which ſo nearly repreſented the death of our Saviour, received its equity when our Saviour died, not upon the very Paſſover day, but deferred the Sacrificing of himſelf to a day after.

Object. But it ſeemeth that Chriſt did not eat his Paſſover on the fourteenth day, for Joh. 18.28. The Jews went not into the Judgment Hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled: but that they might eat the Paſſover.

Now it is moſt apparent that our Saviour had eaten the Paſſover, over night: which as ſoon as he had done he was apprehended, and arraigned all night, and the next morning early he is brought to Pilate, into whoſe houſe the Jews durſt not come for fear of defiling, but that they might eat the Paſſover: ſo that it appears that either Chriſt or the Jews hit not upon the right Paſſover day injoyned by the Law, either he a day too ſoon, or they a day too late.

Anſw. Neither the one nor the other. For the Text expreſly ſaith, that Jeſus eat his Paſſover, and the Jews theirs upon the ſame night, which was on the fourteenth day at even.

Matth. 26. 17. Now the first day of the Feast of unleavened bread, the Disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the Passover?
Mark 14. 12. The first day of unleavened bread when they killed the Passover, So Luke 22. 7.

So that the Passover which the Jews reserved themselves to the eating of, when they durst not enter into Pilates Judgment Hall for fear of defiling, is not to be understood of the Paschal Lamb, which they had eaten the evening past, but of the Passover Bullock whereof mention is made, Deut. 16. 2. 2 Chron. 35. 7, 8, 9.

Now these Bullocks were indeed slain at Passover time, but not for the Passover beast properly taken, for that must be of a Lamb or Kid unalterably: but these Bullocks were slain as attendants upon the Paschal, from the nature of which Sacrifice they differed in these particulars.

First, the Paschal Lamb was always, and all of him rosted: these were sodden, 2 Chron. 35. 13.

Secondly, the Paschal Lamb was rosted whole, and eaten without breaking the bones, these were broken piecemeal, and so parted among the people.

The Paschal Lamb was a necessary service to which they were bound by command: these were arbitary according to their stay in Jerusalem in the Passover week; for if they would they might return home the next morning after the Paschal Lamb was eaten, Deut. 16. 7. and then they needed no Bullock to be killed for their dyet the rest of the Feast: but if they stayed any more days of the Feast at Jerusalem than the first, then was not their dyet arbitary to eat any thing what they would, but they must eat of these Bullocks, because their dyet must be holy at time. Hence resulteth another difference betwixt the Paschal Lamb, and these, which is this; that these were not of the first institution of the Passover, nor had they any Bullocks slain at the Passover in Ægypt, but Lambs only.

SECTION XIX.

That the Supper in Joh. 13. was not the Passover Supper.

FIRST, It is very commonly held that the Supper in John 13. was the Passover Supper, and that Judas stayed not the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, for that our Saviour having dipped a sop into the bitter or sowre sawce, which they used to the Paschal Lamb, and given it to him, Satan with it entring into him, he packed him away with, What thou doest do quickly: An opinion mistaken in the ground-work that it builds upon, and consequently in the structure built upon it. For that that was no passover at all, the Evangelist makes it most plain in ver. 1. when he saith, it was before the Feast of the Passover, and Matthew in Chap. 26. 2. telleth, it was two days before, and indeed, two miles from Jerusalem, namely in Bethany: The serious Harmonizing of the four Evangelists together, at this place, will make this most clear.

Secondly, if then it were not the Passover Supper, there can be no Paschal Lamb looked for at it, nor no Haroseth, or sawce of bitter herbs to eat it with, but the meat that they were then eating, and the sawce in which our Saviour dipped the sop, was ordinary meat, and ordinary sawce.

Thirdly, Judas when he was packed away with his Quod facis fac cito, went not from Jerusalem to Gethsemanai, where Christ was apprehended by him on the Passover night, but he went from Bethany to Jerusalem, to bargain with the chief Priest, for his betraying, which when he had done, he returned to Bethany again.

SECTION XX.

Borrowing Egyptian Jewels, Exod. 12. 35, 36.

IT may be equally questionable, whether Israel shewed less honesty in borrowing what they meant not to restore, or Ægypt less wisdom, in lending what they knew would not be restored?

For the first, it is easily aswered, that they had the expres warrant of God, who cannot command unrighteousness, and whom to obey in all things is piety.

The second is as easily resolved thus, that Idolaters, in the worship of their Idols, used to deck themselves with Jewels, and Ear-rings, and fine things, thereby to make them as they thought the more acceptable, to their fine decked Diety. So do the Ægyptians now conceive of Israel, that seeing they desired these their fine knacks, being now going to sacrifice, they intended to sacrifice to the Ægyptian gods, as they had done heretofore; and they thought, sure there can be no danger of departing the Land, becauſe they ſtill adhere to our Religion. For Moſes had but ſtill ſpoken of going three days journey into the Wilderneſs to worſhip.

SECTION XXI.

Rameſes, and Succoth, verſ. 37.

THE moſt famous of the Dieties of Ægypt, was their Goddeſs Iſis, mentioned in all Heathen Authors; of her doth the laſt Syllable in Raam-ſes, and Rame-ſes, ſeem to ſound, as being Towns that bare the name of this Goddeſs, and importing the Town or Temple, or ſome ſuch thing of Iſis. For that which the Ægyptians called Ses or Sis, other Languages in pronouncing would augment with a vowel before, for ſo was it ordinary. Ægypt at home was called Cophti, but forreigners did call it Ecopti, and ſo it came to be Egypti. So the Sea that lay among the Gentiles of Greece, was in Hebrew Mare Goiim, the Sea of the Gentils, but other Nations would put E before, and ſo it came to be called Egoiim or Egæum. The Syrian and Arabick Teſtaments, and the writing of Jewiſh Authors are full of examples of this nature. Succoth, is held to have been ſo called, becauſe Iſrael here lodged and pitched their tents in their March out of Ægypt: but they marched too much in ſuſpition of Pharaohs purſuit, to ſettle a Camp, and to pitch tents ſo near him. But it rather ſeemeth to have taken denomination from the cloud of glory coming upon them in this place, which was as a covering to them. Pſalm. 135. 39.

This their Divine conducter, ſtayed with them till Moſes death, ſave that it was taken up for a while, becauſe of the golden Calf: as Moſes death it departed from them; for when they are to march through Jordan, the Ark is to lead the way, which while the cloud was with them it never did, but went in the body and very heart of the Army.

As the cloud departed at the death of Moſes the firſt Prophet, ſo is it reſtored and ſeen apparently at the ſealing of the great Prophet, Luke 9. 34.

SECTION XXII.

The decree at Marah, Exod. 15. 25.

SHAM Sam lo hhok umiſhpat: There he ſet a decree, and a judgment for them: God is beginning now to compoſe and platform the people into a ſetled policy, which while they were under the fear and danger of Pharaoh could not be done; And here he paſſeth a decree and judgment upon them, what they muſt look for in the wilderneſs, according to their dealing with him. If they will diligently hearken to his words, &c. he will heal and keep them free from diſeaſes, as he healed thoſe brackiſh waters, and of bitter had made them ſweet; but if otherwiſe, they muſt expect accordingly. Thoſe that have obſcured this place by queſtioning whether this Ordinance at Marah, were for the Sabbath, or for the red Cow, or for the trial of the ſuſpected Wife, or for the dimenſum of their diet in the Wilderneſs have made obſcurity where there is none at all, and have ſuppoſed this to have been an Ordinance whereafter Iſrael was to walk, whereas it was rather a decree whereafter God would deal with them according to their walking; And anſwerably ſeem the latter words, Veſham Niſſahu, to bear this ſenſe, for there he had tryed them.

The word Hhok, is taken in a ſignification agreeable to this, Pſal. 2. 7. I declare it for a decree, that ſince the Lord hath ſaid unto me, Thou are my Son, &c. That therefore, ye Kings, and Potentates, &c. ſubmit to the obedience of him, or elſe his anger will ſhortly kindle, &c.

SECTION XXIII.

That this ſtory of Jethro is miſplaced, and why.

THAT this ſtory is miſplaced, is plainly by theſe things: Firſt, Jethro, Moſes Father in Law, took a burnt offering, and ſacrifices for God, verſ. 12. Secondly, Now on the morrow, Moſes ſate to judge the people, verſ. 13. and made them know the Statutes of God, and his Laws, verſ. 16.

But as the ſtory lyeth here, there was no Tabernacle nor Altar for Sacrifice yet built; Neither as yet did Moſes know the Statutes and Laws of God himſelf, for as yet they are not come to Sinai.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, Moſes himſelf telleth that the chooſing of Judges and Elders, which was done upon Jethroes Counſel, was not till their departing from Sinai. The Lord your God ſpake unto us in Horeb, ſaying, You have dwelt long enough in this mountain, &c. And I ſpake unto you at that time, ſaying, I am not able to bear you my ſelf alone, &c. Deut. 1. from verſ. 7. to 19.

So that this ſtory ſhould lye at the 10 of Numbers, and come in betwixt the tenth and eleventh verſes of that Chapter, and the ſtory to be conceived thus. When Moſes had received all the Laws which God would give him at Sinai, from Exod. 20. to the Law of the ſilver Trumpets, which was the laſt, Numb. 10. then came Jethro, and brought Moſes's Wife and Children, and ſeeing him toyling in judgment, he adviſeth him to chuſe Judges to eaſe him; which being done, ere long the cloud removed, and they muſt flit from Sinai, verſ. 11. When they are ranked to march, Moſes deſireth Hobab or Jethro his Father in Law to go along with him, which he denyeth, but returneth to his own Country, Numb. 10. 29, 30, 31, 32. compared with the laſt verſe of this Chapter. Thus lyeth the order of the ſtory. Now, the reaſon why it is miſplaced is this. In the laſt verſe of the preceding Chapter, there is a perpetual curſe decreed againſt Amaleck, The Lord hath ſworn that the Lord will have war with Amaleck, from generation to generation. Now the Midianites and Amalekites lived ſo promiſcuouſly together, that they were as one people, and the Kenites, or the family of Jethro, dwelt in the midſt of them, 1 Sam. 15. 6. Therefore that it might be obſerved that Jethro fell not under that curſe of Amaleck, Moſes bringeth him in coming to the Camp of Iſrael, and to God, as ſoon as ever the curſe is uttered, that every eye might preſently obſerve that Jethro was exempted from it.

Object. But Moſes and Iſrael, by this account lay almoſt a twelve month at Sinai, before his Wife and Children came at him, and can this be thought, that they ſhould be ſo unnatural one to another?

Anſw. This was Moſes his doing, not of unnaturalneſs, but piety, to reſtrain their coming, till his great task of receiving and giving the Law, and building the Tabernacle was over; Letters and Viſits paſſed betwixt them there is no doubt, and they kept at diſtance thus by conſent for a ſeaſon.

That letters paſſed may be collected from verſ. 6. 7. And Jethro, Moſes Father in Law, ſaid unto Moſes, I Jethro thy Father in Law, come to thee. And Moſes went out to meet his Father in Law. Jethro ſaid not thus to Moſes his face, I am come to thee: For then why or how upon this tidings, could Moſes go forth to meet him, when they ſpake face to face already? Nor could this ſpeech be delivered by a meſſenger, for it had been an improper and ſenſeleſs ſpeech of a meſſenger to ſay, I Jethro come to thee: but this Jethro himſelf telleth Moſes by letter, before he cometh at him, whereupon Moſes goeth forth to meet him.

SECTION XXIV.

Iſraels march from Rephidim to Sinai. Saint Paul explained. 1 Cor. 10. 4.

Queſt. HOW can it be ſaid that they departed from Rephidim, and came to Sinai, whereas Rephidim and Sinai were all one? For every one knoweth that the mountain whereon the Law was given is called Horeb and Sinai, indifferently: as Exod. 19. 18. compared with Malach. 4. 4. Now when they were at Rephidim, chap. 17. 1. they were at Horeb, verſ. 2. So that to go from Rephidim to Sinai, is to go from Horeb to Horeb.

Anſw. The hill on which the Law was given had indeed two names, and as Bellonius ſaith, two tops, the one ſide of it was called Horeb, from the rocky drought of it, being utterly devoid of water: The other ſide was called Sinai, from the buſhes and brambles that grew upon it, in one of which Moſes ſaw the Lord in a flame of fire; if ſo be it took not the name from Sini the Son of Canaan, Gen. 10. Now when Iſrael lay at Rephidim they lay upon Horeb ſide, and there out of the droughty rock, Moſes miraculouſly bringeth forth water. Their march from Rephidim is at the skirts of the hill from Horeb to Sinai ſide of the mountain. And in the ſame ſenſe is Paul to be underſtood, 1 Cor. 10. 4. They drank of the Rock that followed them. Not that the Rock ſtirred and went along with them, but that the water which miraculouſly guſhed out of the one ſide of the hill Horeb, ran along with them as they marched at the foot of the hill, till they came to the other ſide of the hill Sinai. And ſo is Moſes himſelf to be underſtood. I caſt the duſt of the golden Calf into the brook that deſcended out of the Mount, Deut. 9. 21. Not that the brook guſhed out of the mount on that ſide on which the Calf was erected, but on the other, and at the skirt of the hill came running to that.

SECTION XXV.

The Station and Poſture of Iſrael before Sinai, Exod. 19.

ON the firſt day of the month Sivan, which was towards the middle of our May, in the year of the world 2513. they come from Rephidim to Sinai, and pitch in their main body, more eſpecially on the South and South Eaſt ſide of the Mount, See Deut. 33. 2. and compare the ſituation of Seir in the point of the Compaſs.

In three parts or ſquadrons did their Camp ſit down before it.

1. Next to the hill pitched the Elders or 70 heads of the chief families which had gone into Ægypt, theſe are called the houſe of Jacob, Verſ. 3. as Gen. 46. 27.

2. Next behind them pitched the People in their main body, conſiſting of ſo many hundred thouſands: theſe are called the children of Iſrael, verſ. 3. And this diſtinction is obſerved, verſ. 7. 8. And Moſes called the Elders, &c. And all the people anſwered.

3. On the outſide of all lay the mixed multitude or the Ægyptians that had joyned to them and came out with them.

On the ſecond day of the month, and of their arrival there, Moſes goeth up into the mountain, being called up by the Lord, verſ. 3. and when he cometh down, telleth the people the words of the Lord, verſ. 5. If ye will hear my voyce indeed and keep my Covenant, ye ſhall be my peculiar people: To which the people even before they know what the Commandments of the Lord would be, do promiſe to obey and hearken, not by raſh undertaking to perform they knew not what, as ſome have been bold to tax them, nor yet preſuming upon their own ability to keep the Law, as others have concluded upon them; but having been trained up from their infancy, and inſtructed in the doctrine of Faith, they piouſly conclude, when God cometh to give them a Law and to make a covenant with them, that God would not croſs himſelf in the Doctrine of ſalvation, but that the Law that he would now give them ſhould be a Law conducing and leading to Faith ſtill, a Schoolmaſter to Chriſt, and not an extinguiſher of the doctrine of Salvation by him.

On the third day of the month Moſes goeth up into the mountain again, verſ. 9. and is charged to ſanctifie the people, which accordingly is done on that day; and on the fourth and fifth, and on the ſixth day in the morning the ten Commandements are given.

SECTION XXVI.

The Jews Tenet concerning the Law, Talm. in Maccoth. Rab. Abhuhahh Ner. 1.

THE whole Law, ſay they, was given to Moſes in ſix hundred and thirteen precepts. David in the fifteenth Pſalm bringeth them all within the compaſs of eleven. 1. To walk uprightly. 2. To work righteouſneſs. 3. To ſpeak truth in the heart. 4. Not to ſlander. 5. Not to wrong a Neighbour. 6. Not to entertain or raiſe an ill report. 7. To vilifie a reprobate. 8. To honour them that fear the Lord. 9. That altereth not his oath. 10. Not to lend to uſury. 11. Not to take bribes againſt the Innocent.

The Prophet Iſaiah brings theſe to ſix, in Chap. 33. 15. 1. To walk juſtly. 2. To ſpeak righteouſly. 3. To refuſe gain of oppreſſion. 4. To ſhake hands from taking bribes. 5. To ſtop the ears from hearing of blood. 6. To ſhut the eyes from ſeeing of evil.

Micha reduceth all to three, Chap. 6. 8. 1. To do juſtly. 2. To love mercy. 3. To walk humbly with God. Iſaiah again to two, Chap. 56. 1. 1. Keep judgment. 2. Do juſtice. Amos to one, Chap. 5. 4. Seek me. Habakkuk alſo brings all to one, Chap. 2. 4. The juſt by his Faith ſhall live. Thus the Jews witneſs againſt themſelves while they conclude that Faith is the ſum of the Law, and yet they ſtand altogether upon works; A Teſtimony from Jews exceedingly remarkable.

SECTION XXVII.

Articles of a believing Jews Creed collected out of Moſes Law.

1. I believe that ſalvation is by Faith, not by Works.

WHEN the Talmudick Jews make ſuch a confeſſion as is mentioned inſtantly before, wherein they reduce all the tenor and marrow of the Law under this one doctrine of living by Faith, Hab. 2. 4. The juſt by his Faith ſhall live: it is no wonder if the more ancient and more holy Jews under the Law looked for ſalvation, not by by their own merits and works, but only by Faith: This fundamental point of Religion they might readily learn by theſe two things.

1. From the impoſſibility of their keeping the Law, which their conſciences could not but convince them of, by their diſability to hear it, and by their daily carriage.

2. In that they ſaw the holieſt of their men, and the holieſt of their ſervices, to receive ſanctitie, not from themſelves, but from another. So they ſaw that the Prieſt (who was or ſhould be at leaſt the holieſt man among them) was ſanctified by his garments, and that the ſacrifices were ſanctified by the Altar. From theſe premiſes they could not but conclude, that no man, nor his beſt ſervice could be accepted as holy in it ſelf, but muſt be ſanctified by another.

2. I beleive that there is no ſalvation without reconciliation with God, and no reconciliation without ſatisfaction.

The firſt part of this Article is ſo plain that nature might teach it, and ſo might it the latter alſo; and laying hereto Moſes his lex talionis, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, it made it doubtleſs.

3. I believe that ſatisfaction ſhall once be made.

This they might ſee by their daily ſacrifice, aiming at a time when there ſhould full ſatisfaction be made, which theſe poor things could not do. No leſs did their Jubilee year intimate when men in debt and bondage were quitted; The very time of the year, when the Jubilee year began, calling all Iſrael to think of a Jubilee from ſin and Satans bondage, into which mankind fell at the ſame time of the year.

4. I believe that ſatisfaction for ſin ſhall be made by a man.

This is anſwerable to reaſon that as a man ſinned, ſo a man ſhould ſatifie: but Moſes's Law about redemption of Land by a kinſman, taught Iſrael to expect that one that ſhould be akin in the fleſh to mankind, ſhould redeem for him morgaged heaven: גאל in Hebrew is both a kinſman and a Redeemer.

5. I believe that he ſhall be more than a man.

This they learned from the common ſervice about the Tabernacle, wherein the high Prieſt, a man as fully hallowed and ſanctified as man could be, for his outward function; yet did he offer and offer again for the people and himſelf, and yet they were unclean ſtill. This read a Lecture to every ones apprehenſion, that a meer man could not do the deed of ſatisfaction, but he muſt be more.

6. I believe the redeemer muſt alſo be God as well as man.

The diſability of beaſts to make ſatisfaction, they ſaw by their dying in ſacrifice one after another, and yet mans conſcience cleanſed never the better. The unability of man we ſaw before: The next then that is likely to do this work are Angels. But them Iſrael ſaw in the Tabernacle curtains ſpectators only and not actors in the time and work of reconciliation. From hence they might gather that it muſt be God dwelling with man in one perſon, as the cloud, the glory of God never parted from the Ark.

7. I believe that mans Redeemer ſhall die to make ſatisfaction.

This they ſaw from their continued bloody ſacrifices, and from the covenants made, and all things purged by blood. This the heedleſs man-ſlayer might take heed of, and ſee that as by the death of the high Prieſt he was reſtored to liberty, ſo ſhould mankind be by the death of the higheſt Prieſt to the glorious liberty of the Sons of God. Their delivery from Egypt by the death of a Lamb taught them no leſs.

8. I believe that he ſhall not die for his own ſins, but for mans.

Every Sacrifice read this Lecture, when the moſt harmleſs of beaſts and birds were offered.

9. I

9. I believe that he ſhall overcome death.

This Iſrael ſaw by neceſſary concluſion, that if Chriſt ſhould fall under death, he did no more than men had done before. His Reſurrection they ſaw in Aarons Rod, Manna, Scapegoate, Sparrow, &c.

10. I believe to be ſaved by laying hold upon his merits.

Laying their right hand upon the head of every beaſt that they brought to be offered up, taught them, that their ſins were to be imputed to another, and the laying hold on the horns of the Altar, being ſanctuary or refuge from vengeance, taught them that anothers merits were to be imputed to them, yet that all offenders were not ſaved by the Altar, Exod. 21. 12. 1 King. 2. 29. the fault not being in the Altar but in the offender, it is eaſie to ſee what that ſignified unto them.

Thus far each holy Iſraelite was a Chriſtian in this point of doctrine, by earneſt ſtudy finding theſe points under the vail of Moſes. The ignorant were taught this by the learned every Sabbath day, having the Scriptures read and expounded unto them. From theſe ground works of Moſes, and the Prophets Commentaries thereupon concerning the Meſſias, came the ſchools of the Jews to be ſo well verſed in that point, that their Scholars do mention his very name Jeſus: the time of his birth in Tiſri: the ſpace of his preaching three years and an half: the year of his death the year of Jubile, and divers ſuch particulars to be found in their Authors, though they knew him not when he came amongſt them.

SECTION XXVIII.

The Covenant made with Iſrael: They not ſworn by it to the ten Commandments, Exod. 24.

WHEN Iſrael cannot indure to hear the ten Commandments given, it was ready to conclude, that they could much leſs keep them. Therefore God giveth Moſes privately fifty ſeven precepts beſides, namely Ceremonial and Judicial: to all which the people are the next morning after the giving of the ten Commandments, ſworn and entred into Covenant, and theſe made them a Ceremonial and ſingular people. About which theſe things are obſervable.

1. That they entred into Covenant to a written Law, Chap. 24. 4. And Moſes wrote all the words of the Lord, &c. Againſt traditions.

2. That here was a book written forty days before the writing of the two Tables: Againſt them that hold that the firſt letters that were ſeen in the world, were the writing of God in thoſe Tables. And we have ſeen before alſo two pieces of writing before this of Moſes, viz. the eighty eighth, and eighty ninth Pſalms: And of equal Antiquity with them, or not much leſs was the penning of the book of Job, moſt probably written by Elihu one of the Speakers in it, as may be conjectured from Chap. 32. 15, 16, 17. and ſome other probability.

3. That this firſt Covenant was made with water, and blood, and figurative language: For the twelve pillars that repreſented the people are called the people, Exod. 24. 4. 8. As the words in the ſecond Covenant, this my Body, are to be underſtood in ſuch another ſenſe.

4. That the ten Commandments were not written in the book of that Covenant, but only thoſe 57. precepts mentioned before.

For 1. The Lord giveth the other precepts, becauſe the people could not receive the ten: for could they have received and obſerved thoſe as they ought, they muſt never have had any parcel of a Law more: as if Adam had kept the Moral Law, he had never needed to have heard of the promiſe; and ſo if we could but receive the ſame Law as we ſhould, we had never needed the Goſpel. Now it is moſt unlike, that ſince God gave them thoſe other commands, becauſe they could not receive the ten, that he would mingle the ten and them together in the Covenant.

2. It is not imaginable that God would ever cauſe a people to ſwear to the performance of a Law which they could not indure ſo much as to hear.

3. The ten Commandments needed not to be read by Moſes to the people, ſeeing they had all heard them from the mouth of the Lord but the day before.

4. Had

4. Had they been written and laid up in this book, what neceſſity had there been of their writing and laying up in the Tables of ſtone?

5. Had Moſes read the ten Commandments in the beginning of his book, why ſhould he repeat ſome of them again at the latter end, as Exod. 23. 12.

Let ſuch ruminate upon this, which hold and maintain that the Sabbath as it ſtandeth in the fourth Commandment, is only the Jewiſh Sabbath, and conſequently Ceremonial. And let thoſe good men that have ſtood for the day of the Lord againſt the other, conſider, whether they have not loſt ground, in granting that the fourth Commandment inſtituted the Jewiſh Sabbath. For,

Firſt, The Jews were not ſworn to the Decalogue at all, and ſo not the Sabbath as it ſtandeth there, but only to the fifty ſeven precepts written in Moſes his book, and to the Sabbath as it was there, Exod. 23. 12.

Secondly, The end of the Ceremonial Sabbath of the Jews was in remembrance of their delivery out of Ægypt, Deut. 5. 15. but the moral Sabbath of the two Tables is in commemoration of Gods reſting from the works of Creation. Exod. 20. 10, 11.

SECTION XXIX.

The puniſhment of Iſrael for the golden Calf. Exod. 32.

ISRAEL cannot be ſo long without Moſes, as Moſes can be without meat. The fire ſtill burneth on the top of mount Sinai, out of which they had ſo lately received the Law, and yet ſo ſuddainly do they break the greateſt Commandment of that Law to extreamity of Ægyptian Jewels, they make an Ægyptian Idol, becauſe thinking Moſes had been loſt, they intended to return for Ægypt.

Griveous was the ſin, for which they muſt look for grievous puniſhment, which lighted upon them in divers kinds.

Firſt, the Cloud of Glory, their Divine conductor, departeth from the Camp, which was now become prophane and unclean.

Secondly, the Tables Moſes breaketh before their face, as ſhewing them moſt unworthy of the Covenant.

Thirdly, the Building of the Tabernacle, the evidence, that God would dwell among them, is adjourned and put off, for now they had made themſelves unworthy.

Fourthly, for this ſin God gave them to worſhip all the hoſt of Heaven, Acts 7. 42.

Fiftly, Moſes bruiſed the Calf to Powder, and ſtraweth it upon the waters, and maketh the People drink. Here ſpiritual fornication cometh under the ſame tryal that carnal did. Numb. 5. 24. Theſe that were guilty of this Idolatry the water thus drunk, made their belly to ſwell, and to give a viſible ſign and token of their guilt: then ſetteth Moſes the Levites to ſlay every one whoſe bellies they found thus ſwelled, which thing they did with that zeal and ſincerity that they ſpared neither Father, nor Brother of their own, if they found him guilty.

In this ſlaughter there fell about three thouſand, theſe were ring-leaders and chief agents in this abomination, and therefore made thus exemplary in their puniſhment: upon the reſt of the People the Lord ſent a Plague, verſ. 35.

Aaron had firſt felt the ſmart in this deſtruction, had his action in this buſineſs been as voluntary as was theirs, but what he did, he did in fear of his life.

SECTION XXX.

That Moſes faſted three Faſts of forty days apiece.

IT is a doubt of no ſmall import: Why ſeeing it pleaſed God to appoint the Feaſt of expiation, the ſolemn Feaſt of Humiliation, in that month of the year, in which ſin entred into the world, why he alſo did not appoint it upon the ſame day in which ſin entred, viz. the ſixth day of the month, but on the tenth.

The reaſon of this is to be found out by obſerving Moſes his Faſts in the mount, and the concluſion of the laſt of them.

That he faſted thrice forty days, is not frequently obſerved, as it eaſily may be concluded from his own words.

The firſt Faſt in Exod. 24. 18. And Moſes was in the mountain forty days and forty nights: At the end of theſe days they made the Golden Calf.

The

The Second Faſt, Exod. 32. 30, 31. It came to paſs on the morrow that Moſes ſaid unto the People, Ye have ſinned a great ſin, and now I will go up into the mount, &c. and Moſes returned unto the Lord, &c. which he explaineth, Deut. 9. 18. I fell down before the Lord, as at the firſt, forty days and forty nights, &c.

The Third Faſt when he goeth up with the new hewed Tables, Exod. 34. 28. And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights, &c.

All which being reckoned together from the day after the giving of the ten Commandments, or from the ſeventh day of the month Sivan, it will be found that his laſt faſt, when he had obtained pardon for Iſrael, and the Tables renewed, ended on the tenth day of Tiſri: on which day he came down with the glad tydings of reconciliation: in memorial of which, that day was ever after obſerved for the Feaſt of expiation: upon the tydings of this, and of the making of the Tabernacle the People begin to diſpoſe of their tents, and to build them booths, becauſe it will be long ere the work be finiſhed, and they remove from Sinai: for this the fifteenth day of the month is inſtituted for the Feaſt of Tabernacles, ever after.

Hence forward is the Tabernacle begun, and is half a year in making within a very little.

SECTION XXXI.

The form, or Idea, and repreſentation of the Tabernacle.

THE Form and Fabrick of the Tabernacle is thrice rehearſed in the pattern, in the making, and in the ſetting up, as if by this threefold cord of deſcription, the Holy Ghoſt would draw all to a ſerious obſervation.

Moſes ſaw a glorious Tabernacle pitched in Mount Sinai to be the pattern of his, as his was to be the pattern of a more glorious: According to the exact form of this that he ſaw, was he to make his: This taught Moſes and Iſrael, that the making and ſervice of their Tabernacle, did only ſerve to the Pattern and ſhadow of heavenly things, Heb. 8. 5. Chriſt is the true Tabernacle, by, and in whom God dwelleth among men. Joh. 2. 21. Heb. 9. 11. Now as there was a Tabernacle pitched before God in Sinai, before there was one made in Iſrael, ſo was Chriſts incarnation in the decree of God, long before he was exhibited in the fleſh. Upon the making of Moſes his Tabernacle, this in the mount vaniſhed, as that of Moſes was to do upon the coming of the true one, Chriſt.

The Tabernacle was Iſraels moveable Temple, and ſo at every flitting might teach them to look for one that ſhould not be moved. It conſiſted of three parts, the holieſt, the holy, and the Court, as our Churches do, of the Chancel, Church and Churchyard. It was always pitched Eaſt and Weſt, whenſoever it was ſet down, as our Churches ſtand, but with this difference, that the chiefeſt place in the Tabernacle, or holieſt of all, anſwering to our Chancels, ſtood Weſtward, and Iſrael worſhipped with their faces Weſtward, becauſe they would not imitate the Heathen, who worſhipped towards the Sunriſing. And in their ſervices looked always towards us Gentiles in the Weſt, as expecting us to be joyned to their God with them.

SECTION XXXII.

The dimenſions of the Tabernacle.

THE Tabernacle was thirty cubits long, for twenty planks of a cubit and a half breadth apiece made one ſide, or the length of it, and it was ten cubits broad, as ſhall appear hereafter. But firſt obſerve theſe two things.

Firſt, That thoſe which are tranſlated boards, were indeed planks of a good thickneſs, even of nine inches thick apiece, for it is ſaid, in the faſtning of the ſides of the Tabernacle, that a barr of Shittim wood, ran through the thickneſs of the boards, as they ſtood edging one to another. Now this barr was no ſmall one, for it was the chief ſtrength of the ſide, and therefore muſt have a large hole bored to run through, and conſequently, it muſt be a thick plank that would bear ſuch a hole, and not an inch, or two inch board.

Secondly, The Cubit by which the Tabernacle is meaſured, was but half a yard, or the common cubit, and not the Sanctuary or holy cubit, which was a full yard. For, firſt, it is ſaid that every plank was a cubit and a half broad; if this were a yard and an half, do but imagine where planks of ſuch a breadth ſhould be had: Secondly, every plank was ten cubits long; if this were ten yards, imagine how they ſhould be carryed: Thirdly, every two ſilver Baſes were as long as a plank was broad; now two talents would fall ſhort of reaching to a yard and an half. Laſtly, the Altar of burnt offering offering was three cubits high; if this were three yards, who could reach to ſerve at it? Theſe things conſidered, you find that the cubit here ſpoken of, is but half a yard, and this will help well in meaſuring all the things to be ſpoken of after.

SECTION XXXIII.

The peoples contribution to the ſilver foundation: and its form and poſture.

MEaſure out in your imagination, an unequal ſquare, or a plot of ground, of thirty cubits, or fifteen yards long, and of ten cubits or five yards broad, ſuch was the compaſs of the Tabernacle betwixt Wall and Wall. The Foundation was of maſſy pieces of ſilver, ſhewing the ſolidity and purity of the truth, whereupon the Church is founded; Of theſe maſſy pieces there were an hundred in all, and in every piece was a talent of ſilver. Every man in Iſrael from twenty years old and upward, was to give half a Shekel, towards theſe foundation pieces, whereas for other things they were not bound to a ſet ſum, but to give what their hearts moved them: This might teach them, that to the fundamentals of their Religion, they were all bound, but to other things, each one according to the gift given him. Their manner of giving half a Shekel, you find Exod. 38.26,27,28. thus. There were numbred of Iſrael, from twenty years old, and upward, ſix hundred thouſand, and three thouſand five hundred and fifty men. Reckon thus; The Talent of the Sanctuary, contained one hundred and twenty pound, the pound twenty five ſhekels, or fifty half ſhekels, ſo that every Talent contained three thouſand ſhekels, or ſix thouſand halves: ſo that ſix hundred thouſand half ſhekels, given by ſix hundred thouſand men, do amount to an hundred talents: Now there were three thouſand five hundred and fifty men beſides, which gave ſo many half ſhekels, or one thouſand ſeven hundred ſeventy five whole ones, with which were made the hooks of pillars, &c. Exod. 38. 28. Theſe hundred Talents of ſilver were thus wrought. Each one was caſt into a ſolid piece of thirteen inches and an half long, and nine inches ſquare; in the ſide that laid upward was a morteiſe hole, near unto the end, now two and two were laid cloſe together, end to end, and the morteiſes were not in the ends that joyned, but in the utmoſt ends.

Now every plank, whereof the ſides were made, was in height five yards, but in breadth three quarters, juſt as broad as two of theſe pieces of ſilver were long, at the foot of the plank, at either corner was a tenon made, the plank being cut down, or abating ſo much between the tenons, as the tenons themſelves were in length, ſo that when the tenons were ſhrunk in the morteiſes, the middle of the plank ſetled upon the pieces or Baſes.

SECTION XXXIV.

The walls and juncture of the Tabernacle.

THeſe ſilver Baſes then were thus laid: forty at the South ſide, forty at the North ſide, and ſixteen at the Weſt end, laid as cloſe together as was poſſible, ſo that though there were ſo many pieces, yet was it but one intire foundation; Here are fourſcore and fifteen of the hundred Talents diſpoſed of, in the two ſides and the Weſt end, what became of the four talents remaining, and of the Eaſt end, we ſhall ſee hereafter.

Theſe Baſes thus laid, the planks were ſet in them, one plank taking up two Baſes, twenty planks making the South ſide, and twenty the North, and eight the Weſt end; theſe were five yards long apiece, and ſo when they were ſet up, they made the Tabernacle five yards and a little more, high upon the walls; Now for the making of theſe planks ſure, and to ſtand ſtedfaſt, the two corner planks were great helps, of which firſt, you remember the length of the ſides, namely fifteen yards or twenty planks, of three quarters breadth apiece. The Weſt end had ſix planks intire, beſides a plank at either corner, joynting end and ſides together. Theſe corner planks were of the ſame breadth that all the other were, and thus ſet: The middle of the breadth of the one plank, was laid cloſe to the end of the South ſide, or to that plank that was furtheſt Weſt, ſo that a quarter of a yard of the breadth of the corner plank, was inward, to make up the Tabernacle breadth, a quarter was taken up with the thickneſs of the ſide plank to which it joyned, and a quarter lay outward.

Thus at the South-weſt, juſt ſo was it at the North-weſt corner. Then count; the two corner planks were inward a quarter of a yard apiece, and the ſix planks that ſtood between them of three quarters apiece, behold five yards, juſt the breadth of the houſe between wall and wall. Theſe corners knit end and ſide together, and were the ſtrength of the building, as Chriſt is of his Church, making Jews and Gentiles one ſpiritual Temple.

Beſides theſe corners ſtrengthening the Fabrick, there were ſeven bonds to make all ſure. Firſt, planks to planks were cloſe joynted at the foot, ſo that the Text calls them תאמים or twins. Secondly, each plank was linked to the next, at the top, with a golden link. Thirdly, on the ſide, ſtaples of Gold were faſtned in every plank, ſo that four bars of Shittim wood, overlaid with Gold, were carryed in the ſtaples, from one end of the Tabernacle to another. Beſides theſe, there was alſo another bar of the ſame wood, that ran from end to end, through the body or thickneſs of the planks, a hole being bored through each plank for the purpoſe. By theſe bars Chriſt is fitly reſembled, who is conveyed throughout the whole Scripture, in the rings of divers paſſages and ſtories; In the fourth Chapter of the Epheſians, there are ſeven bonds that bind the Church to unity; Firſt, one Body; ſecondly, one Spirit; thirdly, one Hope of our calling; fourthly, one Lord; fifthly, one Faith; ſixthly, one Baptiſm; ſeventhly, one God and Father of all.

Now view in imagination the body of the Tabernacle, as it ſtands only planked [without any more addition to it] with planks of Shittim wood. The length fifteen yards from end to end, the breadth five yards from ſide to ſide. The ſides and Weſt end planked up five yards high and ſomewhat more, the foundation of thoſe planks, maſſy pieces of ſilver: The top of the houſe, and the Eaſt end left open, till they be covered hereafter: Firſt then of the covering of the top, and ſides, and Weſt end.

SECTION XXXV.

Of the curtains of the Tabernacle.

THE Tabernacle was bounded with Curtains [as lighteſt for carriage] which Curtains covered top and ſides. Theſe Curtains were Tapeſtry work: The ground was of fine yarn dyed blew, Purple, and Scarlet, woven together; the embroydery was of Pictures of Cherubims.

Theſe Curtains were in number ten, each one being twenty eight cubits, or fourteen yards long, and four cubits or two yards broad: They ſewed together five Curtains in one piece, and five in another: ſo that they made two large pieces of Tapeſtry of fourteen yards long, and ten yards broad. Theſe two pieces are called couplings, Exod. 26.5. And theſe two were thus joyned together. In the edge of either, were made fifty loops of blew tape, one anſwerable or correſpondent to another; or one over againſt another; and with fifty hooks or claſps of gold, he linked the loops together, and ſo the two main pieces were made one covering or Tabernacle, *Exod.*36.13.

Queſt. Why are not all the ten Curtains ſewed together on one piece, but five and five ſewed together, to make two pieces, and then thoſe two thus looped together with a button or claſp of gold?

Anſw. Firſt, the Tabernacle conſiſted of two parts; the holy place, and the moſt holy: which two were divided one from another by a vail; of which hereafter: Now according to this diviſion of the houſe, was alſo the diviſion of the Curtains. For Exod. 26.32. it is plain that the vail that parted the holy from the moſt holy, was hung juſt under theſe golden claſps that knit the five and five Curtains together: So that five Curtains lay over the holy place, and the other five over the moſt holy, but with this difference: The holy place was ten yards long, and the five Curtains ſewed together were juſt ſo broad, and ſo they covered only the top and ſides, but hung not down at the end, which was Eaſtward; but the moſt holy was but five yards long, and the five Curtains over, that did not only cover the top, but alſo hung down at the Weſt end, to the ſilver baſes.

Secondly, the looping together of the Curtains, five and five on a piece, with a golden tye, doth ſweetly reſemble the uniting of the two natures in Chriſt, divinity and humanity, into one perſon, which two natures were not confounded, as Curtains ſewed together, but were ſweetly knit together by golden and ineffable union.

Thirdly, this might alſo fully ſignify the two Churches of Jews and Gentiles, knit together by Chriſt, that ſo they make but one ſpiritual Tabernacle.

Now come and meaſure the Curtains again, imagining them thrown length way over the Tabernacle: they were fourteen yards long, and twenty yards broad, when they were all ſewed and looped together: This breadth covered the length of the building, which was fifteen yards, and it hung down behind the Weſt end, even to the foundation. The Eaſt end was ſtill left open. Of the length of them, five yards were taken up in covering the flat top of the houſe, which was five yards broad between wall and wall: A quarter of a yard was taken up on either ſide, with covering the thickneſs of the planks: ſo that on either ſide they hung down four yards and one quarter, which was three quarters of a yard ſhort of the ſilver foundation, or little leſs.

SECTION XXXVI.

Of the Goat-hair Curtains.

TO help this defect, as alſo to ſhelter the rich Curtains from weather, were made Curtains of Goates hair, eleven in number; in breadth each one two yards, as was the breadth of other, but being one Curtain more than the other, they were two yards broader than the other, when they were all coupled together. Each Curtain was thirty cubits, or fifteen yards long, and conſequently a yard longer than thoſe ſpoken of before. Theſe were ſewed, ſix together on one piece, and five on another. Theſe two main pieces were linked together, with fifty claſpes of braſs, as the other were with fifty of gold. But when theſe curtains were laid upon the other over the Tabernacle, they were not ſo laid as theſe brazen loops did light juſt upon the golden ones, over the vail, but three quarters of a yard more Weſtward, ſo that the five curtains that went Weſt did reach to the ground, and half a Curtain to ſpare, Exod. 26. 12. The other ſix that lay Eaſt, reacht to the end, covered the pillars whereon that vail hung, and they hung half a curtain breadth, or a yard over the entrance. Their length of fifteen yards reacht half a yard lower on either ſide, than the other Curtains did, and yet they came not to the ground by a quarter of a yard, ſo that the ſilver foundations were always plain to be ſeen, every where but at the Weſt end.

Thus had the Tabernacle two coverings of Curtains; yet both theſe on the flat roof would not hold out rains, and weather, wherefore there was made for the top a covering of Rams skins dyed red, ſignifying well the blood of Chriſt the ſhelter of the Church.

Above that was alſo another covering of Tahaſh skins, a beaſt not perfectly known what he was, but well Engliſhed a Badger, and gueſſed well becauſe of his during hide. Thus if you view this building erected, and thus covered, you ſee the ſilver foundation always open to view. Half a yard above that hid only under one curtain: all the ſide above that under two, and the top with four.

SECTION XXXVII.

Of the moſt holy place.

THE Prieſts entred into the Tabernacle at the Eaſt end of it, and ſo muſt we; where pace up ten yards forward, and you come to the vail which parted between the Holy place, and the moſt Holy of all. The Holieſt place of all, was filled and furniſhed before the vail was hung up, and ſo it ſhall be firſt handled. This place was five yards long, five yards high, and five yards broad; a perfect ſquare, the figure of firmneſs, herein fitly ſignifying Heaven.

In this place, at the Weſt end, ſtood the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord of all the world, John 3. 11. typifying Chriſt, by whom God is come into Covenant with Gentiles as well as Jews.

The Ark was made like a Cheſt, hollow, that it might receive things within it. It was a yard and a quarter long, and three quarters broad, and three quarters high, made of Shittim boards, and it was gilded both within and without, repreſenting Chriſts purity, both in inward thoughts and outward actions. It had no feet, but the bottom ſtood upon the ground, a figure of Chriſts abaſing himſelf upon the earth. On the outſide of the upermoſt brink was made a Golden Crown round about, repreſenting (ſay the Jews) the Crown of the Law, but moſt fitly, Chriſt Crowned with glory. At each corner was ſtruck in, a ſtaple or ring of Gold, wherein were put two ſtaves of Shittim wood gilded over, to bear the Ark withall, which ſtaves were never to be taken out, but there to ſtay continually, teaching the Prieſts, as ſome ſay, to be ready preſt for their ſervice: but rather ſhadowing out Chriſts Deity, ſupporting his humanity, never to be parted from it. Now for the cover of this Cheſt, or Ark, it was made of pure Gold, beaten or formed to the juſt length and breadth of the Ark, that when it was laid on it touched the Golden Crown round about. At either end was made a Cherub, or the form of an Angel, like a child, ſtanding bowed, with wings reaching over the Ark, ſo that the wings of one Cherub touched the wings of another. They were of Gold, beaten out of the ſame piece that the cover of the Ark was of. Their faces were one to another, and both toward the cover of the Ark. This cover both by the Old and New Teſtament, is called the Propitiatory, vulgarly in our Engliſh, the Mercy-ſeat. So called, becauſe from hence God mercifully ſpake to his People. View this part well, and you ſee Chriſt fully.

First, the two Cherubims bowed toward the Mercy-ſeat. So all Angels to Chriſt.

Secondly, They looked each at other, but both toward the Mercy-ſeat. So both Teſtaments Old and New, look each at other, and both at Chriſt. So do the two Churches, of Jews and Gentiles.

Thirdly, This covered the Law: ſo doth Chriſt that it plead not againſt his people to condemn them.

Fourthly, God ſpeaks to Iſrael from hence, ſo God by Chriſt to us, Heb. 1. 2.

SECTION XXXVIII.

Of the holy place without the vail.

THUS was the Sanctum Sanctorum, or the moſt holy of all: for fabrick and furniture. To ſeparate this from the holy place was hung up a vail, of the ſame ſtuff and work that the rich curtains of the Tabernacle were: The hanging up of this vail was thus: Juſt under the golden claſpes that linked the curtains together, were ſet up four pillars of Shittim wood gilded over, upon four Baſes of ſilver, ſuch as the planks ſtood upon, and theſe make up the hundred pieces, or Talents ſpoken of before: The pillars ſtood a yard from each other, and the two outmoſt ſtood a yard from the wall. At the top of each pillar was faſtned a golden hook, on the which the vail hung, five yards broad, and five yards high; This vail repreſented Chriſts fleſh or humanity, celebrated by four Evangeliſts, the four Pillars that bare up that ſtory.

This place without the vail was ten yards long and five yards broad: Into this might the Prieſts come, and Moſes the Prince by a ſpecial warrant. The furniture of this was, the Shewbread Table, the golden Candleſtick, and the gilded Altar.

SECTION XXXIX.

The Table of Shewbread.

ON the Prieſts right hand, as he walked up this place was the Table of Shewbread, of this form and matter, and for this end.

A table frame was made two cubits long, and a cubit broad, and a cubit and a half high; the matter of it was Shittim wood all overlaid with Gold: Equal with the top of the frame was a curious wrought border of Gold, of an hand breadth; the higher edge equal with the top of the frame, and the border ſo broad below; on the higher edge of this border was ſet a golden Crown, which went quite about the frame, and within this Crown was the cover laid; At each corner or foot was faſtned a ſtaple or ring of gold, cloſe by the lower edge of the golden border. As the feet, ſo theſe rings were four, wherein were put ſtaves of Shittim wood gilt with Gold, to bear the Table.

Upon this Table were ſet twelve Cakes or Loaves, reſembling the twelve Tribes, who had their daily bread from God. As on Aarons ſhoulders, ſix and ſix names of Tribes, ſo on this Table ſix and ſix Cakes, for the Tribes were ſet one upon another. Each Cake had in it two Omers, which meaſure was ſignificative. For ſo much Manna every Iſraelite gathered againſt the Sabbath in the Wilderneſs, Exod. 16. and on the Sabbath were theſe Cakes ſet on the Table, to put Iſrael in mind by the very meaſure and day of their ſuſtenance in the Wilderneſs. Theſe Cakes were called the bread of faces, and the Table, the Table of faces, becauſe they were ſet before God continually; ſhewing that Iſraels proviſion was from and before God.

* מנקיות
* קושות

Under the loweſt Cake was * a golden diſh wherein that Cake lay, and between every Cake was * a golden diſh: on the top of either row lay * a golden diſh whelmed down; and upon that ſtood * a diſh of Gold with Frankincenſe in it. Theſe told Iſrael of Gods ſpecial providence toward every ſeveral Tribe.

SECTION XL.

The Golden Candelſtick.

OVER againſt this Table on the South ſide or on the left hand ſtood the golden Candleſtick of one maſſy piece: The form of it was thus; The foot of it was of Gold, from which there went up a ſhaft ſtreight, which was the middle light; near the foot was a golden diſh wrought Almond wiſe, and a little above that a golden knop, and above that a golden flower.

Then iſſued out two branches on either ſide one, which were carried bowed in equal rate they might be brought up ſtreight to be as high as the middle ſhaft out of which they proceeded.

proceeded. Upon either of theſe brances were wrought three golden Cups Almond-wiſe, that is, on ſharp Scollop ſhell faſhion, for ornament; above which was a golden knop or boſs, and above that a golden flower, and near above that the ſocket wherein the light was to be ſet. Thus were theſe two loweſt branches: Above which, in the middle ſhaft was a golden boſs, and then out came two branches more in form juſt like the other; above the coming out of which in the ſhaft was another knop or boſs, and out came two others like the former; from thence the ſhaft upward was decked with three golden Scollop cups or diſhes, a knop and a flower. Thus the head of all the branches ſtood in an equal height and diſtance. Here were ſeven golden Candleſticks repreſenting the ſeven Spirits of the Meſſiah, ſpoken of Eſay 11. 2. 3. and from thence by the Talmudiſts and Apocalyptique. The variety of ſevens here might remember Iſrael of the ſeven days of Creation. As the twelve Cakes repreſented the twelve Tribes, ſo the light of the Candleſtick ſet before them, ſignified the light of the Law whereby they were to be guided: And the lights always ſtanding here, as well as the Loaves there, tell Iſrael that they have as much need of this as of their daily ſuſtenance.

SECTION XLI.

The Altar of Incenſe.

BEtween the Candleſtick and the Table ſtood the Altar of Incenſe: fitly teaching that it is the incenſe of prayer that ſanctifies both our ſpiritual food ſignified by the light of the Candles, and our bodily food by the loaves. This Altar was made of Shittim wood, overlaid with Gold: It was a cubit long, as much broad, and two cubits high. At each corner it had a horn, made of the ſame piece with the corner poſt; Hornes, top and ſide were all gilded with Gold: On the end of the frame upward was ſet *a golden זר זהב
Crown; at the foot of which Crown, on either ſide were ſtruck two golden rings or ſtaples, in which were put two ſtaves of Shittim wood, overlaid with Gold to bear this Altar withall. This Altar was ſet near the vail, juſt in the middeſt of the breadth of the room (before the middeſt of the Ark which was within the vail) diſtant from either wall two yards and a quarter. On the north ſide of it ſtood the Table, which being ſet length way to the wall, took up half a yard of the breadth of the houſe: ſo between it and the Altar was a paſſage or way a yard and quarter broad. The Candleſtick was of the ſame breadth with his branches ſpread, that the Table was of length, and ſo was ſet over againſt it, ſhewing five inches between every ſocket, wanting one inch at the whole: This being ſet as far from the wall as the utmoſt edge of the Table that ſtood on the other ſide of the houſe, afforded the ſame ſpace between the Altar and it that the Table did. Thus was the furniture of this place called the Holy. Go into it at the Eaſt end, and look juſt before you, and there is the vail and golden Altar: on your right hand nigh the vail twelve loaves on a golden Table: on your left hand ſeven Lamps burning in ſeven golden Candleſticks made of one piece, by which you ſee golden ſnuffers and diſhes for the cleanſing of the Lamps morning and night. Look upon the walls on either ſide, and you ſee nothing but Gold; over your head, and there you behold pictures of Cherubims curiouſly wrought in rich Curtains: It is not fit every eye ſhould ſee ſo rich a room; therefore to prevent this, the Eaſt end had a hanging like the vail within, of the ſame dimenſions, and of the ſame materials wrought with needle. This was hung upon five Pillars of Shittim wood overlaid with Gold, each Pillar was faſtned in a baſe of braſs, and at the top had a golden hook on which the covering hung.

Queſt. Whether was the vail hung within the Pillars or without?

Anſw. Without, ſo that it hid the Pillars from the view of the people, elſe had not the building been uniform, all the Timber of the houſe being hid with hangings, and this not. Thus was the Tabernacle made, with all the furniture of it; Now are we to conſider the outmoſt part of it, or the Court of the people.

SECTION XLII.

Of the Court of the people.

THIS Fabrick of the Tabernacle was incloſed with another pale of curtains hanging round about it. On the South ſide of the houſe, twenty cubits diſtant from the houſe, were ſet a row of Shittim Pillars, twenty in number: Each Pillar was ſet in a baſe of braſs diſtant from each other five cubits, counting from the middle of one Pillar to another. So that the twenty made a length of an hundred cubits: in each Pillar was ſtruck a hook of ſilver, and each Pillar had a border of ſilver wrought about it. Thus were were they on the South ſide, juſt ſo were they on the North. At the Weſt end, thirty five cubits from the houſe were ſet ten Pillars in the ſame manner and diſtance, making the breadth of the Court fifty cubits at either end, for juſt in the middle, the houſe took up ten cubits breadth: juſt ſo were the Pillars ſet at the Eaſt end, at the ſame diſtance from the houſe, and from one another. On the ſides upon the hooks of the Pillars were hangings faſtned, made of linnen well twiſted, of an hundred cubits in length and five in height; At the Weſt end were the like, juſt half ſo long, and juſt ſo high: At the Eaſt end there was ſome difference, for that had three pieces to make it up. On either ſide of the entrance was a piece hung of fifteen cubits long, and of the ſame height: Juſt in the middle was a piece of twenty cubits long; of the ſame height with the other hangings, but of more rich ſtuff; for whereas the other were made only of linnen, this was of the ſame ſtuff that the rich curtains were, curiouſly wrought with the needle. To faſten theſe hangings that they might not flie up in the lower end, there were cords faſtned to them, and theſe cords tied to braſen pins, which pins were faſtned in the ground, and ſo made all ſure. Thus were alſo the curtains that covered the houſe ſerved with pins of the ſame metal, with cords faſtned to them in like manner, to prevent the like inconvenience. So was the Court called the Court of the People, becauſe into this the people had entrance, as well as the Prieſts and Levites.

SECTION XLIII.

Of the Altar of Burnt Offerings.

IN the Court of the people ſtood the Altar of burnt ſacrifice up toward the Tabernacle, that the people might ſtand to behold the ſacrifice offered, with their faces toward the holy place; only the Laver ſtood above the Altar between it and the Tabernacle.

This Altar was made of Shittim wood, five cubits or two yards and a half long, and as much broad, and one yard and a half high, thus made: Firſt a ſtrong frame like the frame of a Table of theſe dimenſions: The open places in the frame were made up with boards. All this bulk was overlaid with braſs, at each corner was a horn made of the ſame wood and piece that each corner poſt was of. Thus ſtood it hollow, and within the hollow, juſt in the middle between bottom and top, was ſet a braſen grate made in manner of a net, that the Aſhes might fall through; upon this grate the fire burnt continually and never went out. At each corner of this grate was a braſen ring, which at each corner came through the Altar frame and hung out of the frame; in theſe rings were ſtaves of Shittim wood overlaid with braſs, put, which made the frame, and the grate ſure together, and ſo were they alſo carried together.

To this Altar belonged divers appurtenances made of braſs: As firſt braſen Pans, in which they carryed forth the Aſhes of the Altar. As alſo braſen ſhovels to ſcrape the Aſhes together. Then braſen baſons wherein to take the blood of the ſacrifice: Braſen hooks, with which they turned the burning pieces into the fire if any part lay out, that ſo every part might be ſurely burnt. Laſtly, braſen diſhes or Cenſors, in which the Prieſts took burning coals from the Altar to carry into the Holy place, there to offer Incenſe.

SECTION XLIV.

Of the Laver for water.

IN this Court alſo ſtood a veſſel of braſs, upon a foot or baſe of braſs, in which veſſel water was kept for the Prieſts waſhing themſelves, &c. The form of this is not expreſſed in the Text, therefore we will look only at the matter and the end. This veſſel was made of braſen bright pieces, which the women uſed to look their faces in: and out of this piece water was taken when a ſuſpected woman was to be tryed. The end why this was ſet ſo nigh the Altar was, that the Prieſts might waſh themſelves when they went about the Service of the Tabernacle, and that they might waſh ſome part of the Sacrifices. This Laver fitly reſembled the water of Baptiſm that admits us to ſacred Myſteries, and chiefly the blood of Chriſt that cleanſeth us from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit.

SECTION XLVI.

High Prieſts Garments.

NEXT unto his fleſh he had a coat wrought checker work, this reacht down to his heels: ſuch a coat as this each one of his Sons had, Exod. 39. 27. This was made of fine linnen: and it was girded to him about his loyns, with a needle wrought girdle, of divers colours. כתונת תשבץ

About this he put another coat, called the coat of the Ephod, becauſe the Ephod, being put upon this did gird it. This coat was of all one ſtuff and colour, namely, of fine yarn dyed purple. This coat he put not on after the ordinary faſhion of putting on coats which were open before, but this he put on like a Surpleſs, over his head, for it had a hole in the top where-through he put his head, and this hole was edged about with an edging of the ſame ſtuff woven in, that the hole ſhould not rent. At the skirts of this coat, were made Pomegranates of linnen and woollen of divers colours, and Bells of gold, ſo that there were a Bell and a Pomegranate, a Bell and a Pomegranate, round about: This coat was not ſo long as the under coat, for then the Bells would have drawn on the ground, and would not have been heard, which to have miſſed had been death to Aaron: this repreſented to the Prieſts, that the ſound of good doctrine, and fruit of good living, muſt always be about them, as theſe Bells and Pomegranates: This coat alſo did fitly reſemble Chriſts humane Nature. Firſt, as this was of one ſtuff without mixture, ſo that, without corruption. Secondly, as this was put on after an extraordinary manner, ſo Chriſt put on humanity by an extraordinary conception and generation. Thirdly, as was the edge about the hole to keep it from renting, ſuch was the unſeparable union of Chriſts two natures. Fourthly, as were the Bells and Pomegranates, ſuch were his life and doctrine. מעיל האפוד

SECTION XLVII.

High Prieſts Ephod.

ABove this he put the Ephod, the materials of which were fine yarn or threds dyed blew, and purple, and ſcarlet, and with every thred of theſe, was twiſted a thred of gold, fitly ſhewing the purity and holineſs of the Prieſt in every action, as alſo moſt fitly reſembling the luſtre of the diety ſhining in each of Chriſts humane actions. אפוד

The word Ephod doth generally ſignifie any thing that girdeth a man, ſo the word originally ſignifies. More particularly it betokens garments or other things uſed in divine ſervice: So Samuel miniſtred before Eli in a linnen Ephod, or a linnen coat girded to him. So David when he brought up the Ark to Jeruſalem, being deſirous to be as Prieſt-like as he might, he was cloathed with ſuch a garment, a linnen Ephod: So the abomination which Gideon made Judg. 8. 27. is called an Ephod. Becauſe he made it to reſemble that Ephod which he had ſeen upon the High Prieſt at Shiloh. Moſt eſpecially the Ephod ſignifies the upmoſt garment of the High Prieſt when he ſerved at the Altar or Tabernacle. The form of this was ſomewhat like the aprons, which ſome workmen wear, tyed over their ſhoulders and covering their breaſt: Such was this, a rich piece of ſtuff, of the materials before named, the breadth of the Prieſts breaſt; at either ſide it had a ſhoulder piece of the ſame piece, which went over the Prieſts ſhoulders and were faſtned behind one to another: Before his breaſt the piece came down to his paps, and there was the lower edg of it, upon which was woven a piece to gird it withall, of the ſame ſtuff and piece, ſo that it was girded over his paps or heart; whence John ſpeaketh, when he ſaith he ſaw Chriſt girded about the Paps with a golden girdle, Apoc. 1. 13. Upon the ſhoulder pieces were two precious ſtones ſet in ouches of gold, one on the one ſide, and another on the other. The ſtones were שהם or Beryl, vulgarly Onyx, the ſtone which among the twelve belonged to Joſeph. In theſe two ſtones were ingraven the names of the twelve Tribes of Iſrael, ſix on one and ſix on another.

Thus when the Prieſt appeared before the Lord, he bare the charge of all Iſrael upon his ſhoulders: A full reſemblance of Chriſt.

Upon the ſhoulder pieces likewiſe were two boſſes of gold near to theſe ſtones, unto which the gold chains that tyed the Breaſt-plate to the Ephod, were made ſo faſt that they might not part one from another. Thus was the curious work of the Ephod, with its girdle and other apurtenances, a full ſignification of the precioufneſs, and yet heavy charge of the Prieſthood.

SECTION

SECTION XLVIII.

The Breaſt-plate.

חשן המשפט UPON the Ephod was the Breaſt-plate faſtned; it was called the Breaſt-plate of Judgement, becauſe from it God anſwered by Urim and Thummim, Numb. 27. 21. The materials of this were the ſame that the Ephods were, viz. Fine yarn or thread, of various colours, and a thread of gold twiſted with each, which thread woven together, made as it were cloath of gold. This Breaſt-plate was of this cloath, of ſuch a piece, as when it was foulded double, was a juſt ſquare of a ſpan every way: Thus as the beſt part of all the Tabernacle, viz. the moſt holy, was a perfect ſquare, ſo is the beſt piece of Aarons garments. This piece was double, becauſe of the weight of the ſtones in it, which required that it ſhould be ſtrong.

In this piece were twelve precious ſtones, ſet in four rows, three in a row, every ſtone bearing upon it the Name of a Tribe.

First, 1. Ruben, 2. Simeon, 3. Levi.
Second, 1. Judah, 2. Iſſachar, 3. Zebulun.
Third, 1. Dan, 2. Naphthali, 3. Gad.
Fourth, 1. Aſher, 2. Joſeph, 3. Benjamin.

SECTION XLIX.

Of the Urim and Thummim.

THat Urim and Thummim ſhould be nothing but the name Jehovah written and put into the Breaſt-plate, as ſome have held, ſavours more of exorciſm than a divine Oracle. Or that the luſtre, or dimneſs of the twelve ſtones ſhould be the Oracle, as others, is as ſtrange a fancy as the former, if we conſider the particulars of Anſwers that have been given; As among others, that of Davids, Whither ſhall I go? the Urim anſwered, to Hebron.

This impoſſibility others having eſpyed, have averred that the Urim conſiſted of the names of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and the Twelve Tribes, and that when a queſtion was asked, the letters that ſerved to give the anſwer, either roſe up above the others, or elſe met ſtrangely together, and made words to give an anſwer. But if the letter Teth were to be ſpelled in the anſwer where was it to be had?

Leaving then theſe and other conjectures, let us ſee what light the Scripture will give us concerning theſe things.

First, Urim and Thummim were not two things, but one and the ſame thing, and for this reaſon, they are called ſometime by a ſingle name, Num. 27, 21. 1 Sam. 28. 6. &c.

Secondly, the ſtones in the High Prieſts Breaſt-plate, are called the Urim and Thummim, Exod. 28. 30.

Thirdly, when God anſwered by Urim and Thummim, the anſwer was not given by any appearance in theſe ſtones, but by the mouth of the Prieſt, Numb. 27. 21.

Fourthly, the Prieſt when he was to receive his anſwer, was to have the Ephod on, 1 Sam. 23. 9.

Laſtly, the Prieſt when he was to receive an anſwer, ſtood before the Ark, Judg. 20. 27, 28.

The manner then of inquiring of the Lord by Urim and Thummim, was thus.

The things to be inquired of muſt be of weight and generalty: for the ſtones repreſented the Judgment of all the people, Exod. 28. 30. therefore the inquiry by them muſt concern the general: Such was the general queſtion at Shiloh, Judg. 1. 2. Who ſhall firſt ſet upon the Canaanites? Such was that of all Iſrael: Shall I ſhall go up againſt my Brother Benjamin? Judg. 20. 23. and divers others.

When ſuch a ſcruple was to be reſolved, it was told to the High Prieſt what he ſhould ask: So did David wiſh Abimelech the High Prieſt at Nob to enquire whether his journey ſhould proſper, 1 Sam. 22. 10. So did the Danites to the fained Idolatrous High Prieſts, Judg. 18. 5. The Prieſt knowing what to ask, put on the Ephod and Breſt-plate, which hung unſeparably at it. This do Davids words mean, when he ſaith to Abiathar the Prieſt, Bring hither the Ephod, 1 Sam. 23. 9. And for this it was that Abiathar made ſure of the Ephod, when he fled from bleeding Nob, 1 Sam. 23. 6. Without the ſtones on his breaſt, the Prieſt enquired not: for the ſtones repreſented Iſrael, and when the Prieſt brought them before the Lord, he brought as it were Iſrael and their matters before him. To go without theſe was to go without his errand. If Sauls conſcience could have told him off no other cauſe why God would not anſwer him, as it might many, yet he might ſee this to be one reaſon undoubted, viz. Becauſe though he had the Ark near him, yet had he neither High Prieſt nor Ephod: and ſeeing his croſs in this that he could not be anſwered, his conſcience might tell him what he did when he ſlew the Prieſts of the Lord.

When

When the Prieſt knew what to enquire about, and had put on theſe habiliments, he went and ſtood before the Ark of the Lord, and enquired about the matter, and the Lord anſwered him from off the Propitiatory from between the Cherubims, and ſo the Prieſt anſwered the People. Now there was ſome difference in the Prieſts manner of inquiring, according to the ſituation of the Ark, when the Tabernacle was up, the Prieſt went into the holy Place, and ſtood cloſe by the vail which parted the holy from the moſt holy, and there inquired, and God from between the Cherubims which were within the vail, gave him an anſwer.

But when the Tabernacle was down, or the Ark diſtant from the Tabernacle, travelling up and down, then did the Prieſt in his Robes ſtand before the Ark, as it ſtood covered with the curtains, and enquired, and the anſwer was given him, in behalf of Iſrael whom God ſaw on his breaſt: For this reaſon the ſtones, for whoſe ſakes the perfect light of reſolution was given, are called the perfect light or Urim and Thummim, and the anſwer given from the Prieſts mouth is called the anſwer by Urim and Thummim.

David once enquired of the Prieſt, having the Ephod, but wanting the Ark, and God anſwered him, and ſhewed that God was not bound to means. On the contrary Saul once enquired of the Ark, wanting the Ephod, and God anſwered him not, ſhewing him how God honoured his Prieſts whom Saul had diſhonoured, even to the Sword.

Thus have we ſeen the Breaſt-plates form, richneſs and glory. Form, four ſquare a ſpan every way: the richneſs, it was ſet with twelve precious ſtones: the glory, that for the ſake of theſe ſtones, that is, for their ſakes whoſe names theſe ſtones bare, God revealed ſecrets to his people. See this breaſt-plate faſtened to the Ephod, and you ſee Aaron the High Prieſt arrayed in his glorious garments. At each corner of the breaſt-plate, was a golden ring faſtned. On the upper ſide of the piece, juſt upon the edge, was laid a little golden chain, which ran like an edging lace upon the edge, and was brought through the two rings, which were at either corner one, and the ends of the chains were made faſt to boſſes or loops of gold which were on the ſhoulder pieces of the Ephod by the Onyx ſtones. At the lower edg of the breaſt-plate was an edging chain, carried juſt in the ſame manner that the other was, through two gold rings, and the chains tyed to the embroidered girdle of the Ephod, as the other were to the ſhoulder pieces. Breaſt-plate and Ephod might not be parted, no more than might the Staves and Ark.

SECTION L.

The erection of the Tabernacle.

IN the year of the World two thouſand five hundred and fourteen, which was the ſecond year current of Iſraels departure out of Ægypt, in the month Abib, or the firſt month Stilo novo, in the firſt day of the month, Moſes ſet up the Sanctuary under mount Sinai, and this was the manner of his ſetting it up.

He laid the ſilver foundations in their ranks, and in them he ſet up the planks and ſtrengthened them with the five bars, linking them alſo together at the top with a golden haſp. He ſet up the four Pillars in the houſe whereon to hang the vail, and the five pillars at the Eaſt end whereon to hang that vail alſo. He ſet the Ark in the moſt holy place, hanging up the vail before it. In the holy place he ſet the Table and Shew-bread on the North ſide, and the Candleſtick on the South, and the Altar of perfume, juſt in the middle betwixt them: And at the Eaſt end he hung up the vail to keep theſe things from vulgar eyes.

The Altar and Laver he ſet up before the entrance, and incompaſſed them, and the Tabernacle it ſelf with a pale of hangings round about.

Thus was the Sanctuary erected, and was lovely to them that beheld it, being the glory and the ſtrength of Iſrael. Then did the cloud of glory flit from off the Tent of Moſes, and lighted upon the Sanctuary, and dwelt there more glorioufly than on the other.

And thus endeth Exodus in a cloud, under which we are to look for a more perfect Tabernacle, not made with hands, nor of this building, in which the God-head ſhould dwell bodily.

THE

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

CHAP. I.

Verſ. 1. The former Treatiſe have I made, &c.

THE Syrian and Arabick render it, The former * book have I written: and ſo is the Greek word λόγος uſed in Heathen Authors, not only for an oration by word of mouth, but alſo for a Treatiſe or Diſcourſe that is done in writing; as might be proved by many examples. I ſhall only give one as parallel to the phraſe that we have in hand; as the Author himſelf is unparallel to our Evangeliſts in matter of truth; and that is, Lucian in his title of the firſt book of true Hiſtory, Ἀληθῶς ἱστορίας λόγος πρῶτος.

* כתבא by which word they render βίβλος: *Matth.*1.1.

Now the Evangeliſt at his entry into this Hiſtory, mentioneth the former Treatiſe of his Goſpel, becauſe this Treatiſe of The Acts of the Apoſtles taketh at that; and as that contained the Life and Doctrine of our Saviour himſelf, ſo doth this the like of his Apoſtles. And therefore the words immediately following, Of all that Jeſus began to do, may not unfitly be interpreted to ſuch a meaning, that Jeſus began, and his Apoſtles finiſhed: though it is true indeed, that in Scripture phraſe to begin to do, and to do, do ſound to one and the ſame ſenſe, as *Matth.*12.1. compared with Luke 6.1. Mark 6.2. compared with *Matth.*13.54. &c.

Now the method that the Evangeliſt preſcribes unto himſelf, and followeth in this Book is plainly this. From the beginning of the Book to the end of the twelfth Chapter, he diſcourſeth the ſtate of the Church and Goſpel among the Jews; and from thence forward to the end of the Book he doth the like, of the ſame among the Gentiles: and therfore accordingly, although the title of the Book be The Acts of the Apoſtles, as of the Apoſtles in general; yet doth he more ſingularly ſet himſelf to follow the ſtory of the two Apoſtles Peter and Paul: Peters to the 13 Chapter, and Pauls after; becauſe that theſe two were more peculiarly the fixed Miniſters of the circumciſion, and of the uncircumciſion, *Gal.*2.8. and ſo doth Moſes intitle a reckoning of the heads of the Fathers houſes of all the Tribes of Iſrael in general, *Exod.*6.14. and yet he fixeth at the Tribe of Levi, and goeth no further; becauſe the ſubject of his Story lay eſpecially in that Tribe, in Moſes and Aaron.

§. Of all that Jeſus began to do and to teach.

Not that Luke wrote all things that Jeſus did, nor indeed could they be written, John 21.25. but that, 1. He wrote all thoſe things that were neceſſary, and not to be omitted. Theophylact and Calvin. 2. πάντα may be taken for πολλά, all for many; as it is frequently done in Scripture. 3. And chiefly, that he wrote ſomething of all the heads of Chriſts actions and doctrine; for he ſaith not πάντα, but περὶ πάντων, Camerarius. Or, 4. As the woman of Samaria ſaith, that Chriſt had told her all things that ever ſhe did, Joh. 4. 29. whereas he told her but ſome few particulars; but they were ſuch, as whereby ſhe was convinced he could tell her all: So though Luke did not ſpecifie all and every action and doctrine of Chriſt that ever he did and taught; yet did he write of ſuch, as whereby it was moſt clear that Chriſt was the Meſſias.

Year of Christ XXXIII. Vers. 2. After that he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments to the Apostles whom he had chosen.

There is some diversity in pointing and reading this Verse: some take it in the order and posture that our English hath it; applying the words through the Holy Ghost, to Christs giving commandments; and read it thus, after he had given commandments through the Holy Ghost: and so doth the Vulgar Latine, Theophylact, Marlorat, and indeed the pointing, in the best Copies. Others, as the Syrian, Arabick, and Beza, with them conjoyn it thus, Giving commandments to the Apostles whom he had chosen by the Holy Ghost. Now in the main thing it self, there is not so much difference, as to make any great scruple or matter how the words are pointed; for Christ may as well be said to command his Disciples by the Holy Ghost, as to chuse them by the Holy Ghost; and so e contra. But it is material to consider,

First, That it is more proper by far to conceive Christ acting the Holy Ghost upon the Disciples, and that when they were called; than his acting him in himself in calling them.

Secondly, That there is no mention at all of such an acting of the Holy Ghost in the Disciples choosing; but there is expresly at their receiving their charge; and therefore not only the pointing of the Text, and the consent of divers Copies, Expositors and Interpreters that read as our English doth; but even the very thing it self, and truth and evidence of Story require that it should be so read: Now, why Christ should be said to give commandment through the Holy Ghost; and what commandment this was that was so given to them, is much in controversie.

There is mention indeed of Christ breathing of the Holy Ghost upon them, Joh. 20.22. and of a commandment or two given them afterward, as To go teach all Nations, Matth. 28.19. and to abide at Jerusalem till the promise of the Father, Act. 1.4. And the exposition and interpretation that is commonly given of these words doth sense them thus, That Christ by the vertue of the Holy Ghost in himself did give them these commands: Whereas it is far more agreeable to the stile and phrase of Scripture, to expound them in another sense; namely, that Christ by the Holy Ghost infused into his Disciples did command them; not by the words of his own mouth, but by the direction of his Spirit within them: and so the Prophets were commanded, Zech. 1.6. where the LXX use the same Greek word.

For, first, else to what purpose did he breath the Holy Ghost upon them, and bid them receive it? Sure they had something beside the Ceremony of breathing, bestowed upon them; and what can that be conceived to be, if not the Holy Ghost, to inform them of what they yet knew not, and to direct them what he would have them to do?

Secondly, It is therefore observable, that on Pentecost day they received Δύναμιν, vers. 8. and Luke 24.49. Power and abilities to execute their charge: for indeed their charge was given them by Christ before. Now Christ was not with them continually to talk with them and to instruct them, but came by times among them, and away again: and therefore on the very first night that he appeared unto them, he distributed the Holy Ghost among them, to be their constant instructer, and injoyner what they were to do, in that calling and employment to which they were ingaged: and the fruit of one of these instructions and injunctions by the Holy Ghost within them, was the choosing of Matthias.

And

And (p) they entred into the Cave, and found not the Body in the Sepulchre; but there they see (q) two Angels more in shining garments; the one at the head, and the other at the feet where the body had lain, (r) who spake to them, Why seek ye the dead among the living? Year of Christ XXXIII.

(s) *Ibid.*9. Mark 16.8. (t) Joh.20.2,3, 4, &c. (u) *Ibid.*10.11. &c.

So that the first apparition of our Saviour being risen was to her alone, Joh. 20. vers. 11. to 19. 1. Apparition.

The same day he appeareth to the two men that went to Emmaus, Luke 24. 13. the one of them was Cleopas, *vers.*18. the Father of James and Joses, and the husband of the other Mary; Compare John 19. 25. and Matth. 15. 40. and the other was Simon Peter, Luke 24.34. 1 *Cor.*15.5. 2. Apparition.

That night he appeareth to the twelve, as the Apostle calls them, 1 *Cor.*15.5. or to the eleven, and them that were with them, Luke 24.36,39. 3. Apparition.

John 20. 19, 20. and sheweth them his hands and feet, and eateth a piece of broiled fish and an honey-comb with them, Luke 24.43.

Eight days after he appeareth to the Disciples, and convinceth Thomas, *Joh.*20.26. 4. Apparition.

At the Sea of Tiberias he appeareth again to seven of his Disciples, and fore-telleth Peter of his suffering for the Gospel, Joh. 21. This John calleth his third appearing, *vers.*24. namely, which he had made to any number of his Disciples together, and which John himself had mentioned. 5. Apparition.

On a mountain in Galilee he sheweth himself to the eleven, *Matth.*28.16. and to five hundred brethren at once, 1 *Cor.*15.6. for so it may be supposed; seeing Galilee and this mountain was the place of rendevouz that he had appointed, not only from the time of his resurrection, *Matth.*28.7. but even before his passion, Matth. 26.32 and to this convention seemeth the word συναλιζόμενος in the next verse to have reference: of which in its proper place. 6. Apparition.

The Apostle mentioneth another appearance of his to James, 1 Cor. 15. 7. But neither do any of the Evangelists tell when, or where it was, nor make they mention of any such thing; nor doth Paul determine which James it was. 7. Apparition.

Lastly, He appeared to all the Apostles, 1 Cor. 15. 7. being gathered to Jerusalem by his appointment, Acts 1.4. and thence he led them forth to Bethany, and was taken up, Luke 24. 50. 8. Apparition.

§. By many infallible Proofs.

Ἐν πολλοῖς τεκμηρίοις, By many Signs, say the Syrian and Arabick: Arguments, saith the Vulgar Latine: But the word includeth Signs of undoubted truth, and arguments of undoubted demonstration; and accordingly hath our English well expressed it, By infallible proofs. These were very many, exhibited and shewed by Christ, which evidenced his resurrection: and they may be reduced to these three purposes.

First, To shew that he was truly alive again, as his eating, walking, conferring and conversing with his Disciples.

Secondly, To shew that he had a true and real body, as offering himself to be handled, as Luke 24.39.

Thirdly, To shew that it was the same body that suffered, when he sheweth the scars in his hands, feet, and sides, as *Joh.*20.20,27.

Every apparition that are reckoned before, and are mentioned by the Evangelists, had one or more of these demonstrations; and yet were there certain appearances, and divers such proofs, which are not recorded, *Joh.*20.30.

Δι' ἡμερῶν, saith Theophylact, not ἐν ἡμέραις: For that Christ was not continually conversing with his Disciples, but he came among them at certain times; Yet do the Syrian and Arabick, translate it in Forty days.

Forty years after this, a year for a day (as *Numb.*14.33,34.) was Jerusalem destroyed, and the Nation of the Jews rooted out; because they would not believe in Christ, who had so mightily declared himself to be the Son of God, by his Resurrection from the dead, and who had so plainly declared his Resurrection from the dead, by so many appearings, and infallible proofs for forty days.

Year of Christ XXXIII. And that the sin might be fully legible in the Judgment, they were besieged and closed up in Jerusalem, at a Passover, as at a Passover they had slain and crucified the Lord of life: Now, that this remarkable work of the Lords Justice upon this Nation, in suiting their judgment thus parallel to their sin and unbelief, in regard of these years, and this time of the year may be the more conspicuous to the mind of the Reader; for the present, it will not be much amiss to lay down the times of the Roman Emperors from this time thitherto; for even by their times and stories, this time and truth may be measured and proved: and in the progress of the discourse to come, the particulars both for year and time may be cleared more fully.

Now the times of the Roman Emperors, that came between the death of Christ, and the destruction of Jerusalem, are thus reckoned by the Roman Historians themselves.

Tiberius began to reign about August the 18.
He reigned 22 years, 7 months, and 7 days. Dion. And died in the 23 of his reign. Suet.
He died March 26. Dion. Or the 17 of the Calends of April. Sueton.

Caius Caligula began March 27.
Reigned 3 years, 9 months, 28 days, Dion. Or 3 years, 10 months, 8 days, Sueton.
Died January 23, or the 9 of the Calends of February. Suet.

Claudius began January 24.
Reigned 13 years, 8 months, 20 days. Dion. He died in the 14 year of his reign. Suet.
Died October 13. Dion. Or the 3 of the Ides of Octob. Suet.

Nero began Octob. 14.
Reigned 13 years, 8 months, Dion.

Galba reigned 9 months, 13 days, Dion. Died in his 7 month, saith Suet.

Otho reigned 90 days, Dion. 95 days, Suet.

Vitellius reigned 1 year wanting 10 days, Dion.

Vespasian reigned 10 years wanting six days, Dion.
In his second year Jerusalem is destroyed by his son Titus, Joseph. de Bello Judaic. lib.7. cap. 18.

And now if we cast up the times, from the 18 of Tiberius to the second of Vespasian; and compare and parallel them with the years of our Saviour, we shall find them running together in this manner,

Vers.

Year of Christ XXXIII.

Verſ. 4. And being aſſembled together with them.

There is no ſmall difference among Interpreters about rendring this clauſe out of the Original. Some read συναλιζόμενος μετ' αὐτῶν, others leave the words μετ' αὐτῶν out; as thinking the word συναλιζόμενος ſufficient: ſome render it Eating with them, as the Syrian, Arabick, Oecumenius, Chryſoſtome, Vulgar Latine, Deodate, and our Engliſh in the Margin, the Rhemiſts, and thoſe that follow the Vulgar, which Valla thinketh was miſtaken, and read conveſcens in ſtead of converſans. Others, Aſſembling them, or being aſſembled with them, as Beza, Camerarius, Deodate, and our Engliſh in the Text; the Tigurine, Spaniſh, French, Eraſmus, and others; Epiphanius as he is cited by Camerarius, readeth it, συναυλίζομενος, and Valla as he is cited by Eraſmus ſaith, it is ſo written in ſome Greek Copies. For the ſetling therefore of the right conſtruction of this place;

Firſt, It is the concurrent agreement of all men, this laſt excepted; to read the word συναλιζόμενος, and not συναυλίζομενος; which word indeed the thing it ſelf will not bear, for though Chriſt converſed, and was much among his Diſciples after his Reſurrection, yet do we not read that he ever lodged with them; which the word συναυλίζειν doth properly import.

Secondly, In the difference about the tranſlation, whether to render it eating, or being aſſembled with them; the current of Greek Authors in the uſe of the word, do vote for the latter ſenſe, and not at all for the former, as Beza and Camerarius do prove at large; and more proofs might be given, were it needful.

Now this phraſe ſeemeth to refer to Chriſts meeting his Diſciples on the mountain of Galilee, which he himſelf had appointed for a meeting place, Matth. 28. 16. And the words μετ' αὐτῶν may not be wanting. For in other of his appearings, it was accidental and unexpected when he came among them; but upon this mount he was aſſembled together with them upon appointment. And here it is like were the five hundred Brethren mentioned by Paul, and ſpoken of before; for where was it ſo likely ſo many ſhould have the ſight of Chriſt at once; as in that place where he had promiſed that he would meet them, and had appointed to aſſemble with them.

§. Commanded them that they ſhould not depart from Jeruſalem.

Not that they were at Jeruſalem when they received this command, but that he commandeth them now to Jeruſalem, and there to contine. Till they were come into Galilee, they had no warrant to ſtay at Jeruſalem at all, but command to the contrary; for he commanded them away from thence into Galilee, *Matth.*28.7.16. becauſe he would appear to all thoſe at once, that had been moſt conſtant Auditors of him; for there had been his greateſt converſe; and being there aſſembled together with them, according to his promiſe and his appointment, he then chargeth them to return to Jeruſalem, and not to depart from thence till the promiſe of the Father be come.

Chriſt confineth them to Jeruſalem, for the receiving of the Holy Ghoſt. 1. Becauſe of the Propheſie, Eſay 2.3. Out of Zion ſhall go forth the Law, &c. 2. Becauſe there would be the greateſt company to be ſpectators of that great work, and to be wrought upon by it, as is proved by the ſequel. 3. Becauſe that this great work of Chriſts power, was fitteſt to be ſhewed there, where had been his great humiliation: and that thoſe that would not be convinced by the reſurrection, might be convinced by this miraculous gift of the Holy Ghoſt.

Verſ.6. They asked of him, ſaying, Lord wilt thou at this time reſtore again the Kingdom to Iſrael?

This was and is the great deluſion of that Nation unto this day, and not a few Chriſtians do ſide with them in it; ſuppoſing that at the Jews converſion, they ſhall be brought home to Canaan, there inhabit with Chriſt viſibly among them, Jeruſalem built again; and their peace and proſperity ſo great, as never the like; and ſo conſtant, as never interrupted. To this tune ſpake the petition of Salome, the wife of Zebedee, and James and John her two ſons, *Matth.*20.20. and the ſpeech of Cleopas, Luke 24.21. And how common this Doctrine is among the Jewiſh Authors, it is needleſs (for it might be endleſs) to recite; it is evidence enough, in that we ſee it the common and general quære of all the Diſciples met together: Chriſt ſince his Reſurrection had ſpoken to them of the things that concerned the Kingdom of God, and they find belike, that he had paſſed a great Article of their belief unſpoken of, about reſtoring the Kingdom of Iſrael. Our Saviour anſwers their curioſity with a check, as he had done Peter, Joh. 21.22. and diverts their thoughts to the more needful conſideration of the calling that he would ſet them

Year of Chriſt XXXIII. them about, as in the next verſe; and ſheweth that the Kingdom of Chriſt, which they miſtook, ſhould be a ſpiritual power, which even juſt now was to begin; and of this power he tells they ſhould receive and dilate, and carry on his Kingdom.

§. Certain Articles or Poſitions tending to the confutation of the Jews in this point, and the Millenaries that concur in many things with them.

1. That the Book of Daniel ſpeaketh nothing of the ſtate of the Jews, beyond the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Titus.

2. That the Revelation intendeth not the ſtories and times that are written in Daniel, but taketh at him and beginneth where Daniel left, to diſcourſe the ſtate of the new Jeruſalem when the old one was ruined.

3. That the fourth Monarchy in Daniel, is not Rome, nor poſſibly can be, *Dan.*7.11, 12. well weighed together.

4. That the blaſphemous horn in Dan. 7. 8, 25. &c. is not Antichriſt, but Antiochus.

5. That Antichriſt ſhall not be deſtroyed before the calling of the Jews, but ſhall perſecute them, when they are converted, as well as he hath done the Church of the Chriſtians: And that the ſlaying of the two Prophets, *Rev.*11. aimeth at this very thing, to ſhew that Antichriſt ſhall perſecute the Church of Jews and Gentiles, when towards the end of the world they ſhall be knit together in profeſſion of the Goſpel.

6. That the calling of the Jews ſhall be in the places of their reſidence among the Chriſtians, and their calling ſhall not cauſe them to chang place, but condition.

7. That Ezekiels New Jeruſalem is bigger in compaſs by many hundreds of miles, than all the land of Canaan ever was in its utmoſt extent.

8. That the earth was curſed from the beginning, Gen. 3.17. and therefore Chriſts Kingdom not to be of the curſed earth, *Joh.*18.36.

9. That the Kingdom everlaſting that began after the deſtruction of the fourth beaſt, *Dan.*2.44. & 7.14.27. was the Kingdom of Chriſt in the Goſpel, and began with the Goſpel, preached among the Gentiles.

10. That the binding of Satan for a thouſand years, beginneth from the ſame date.

11. That his binding up, is not from perſecuting the Church, but from deceiving the Nations, *Rev.*20.3,8.

12. That multitudes of thoſe places of the Old Teſtament that are applied by the Jews and Millenaries, to the people of the Jews, and their earthly proſperity, do purpoſely intend the Church of the Gentiles, and their ſpiritual happineſs.

Verſ. 8. But ye ſhall receive power after the Holy Ghoſt is come upon you.

§. 1. How many of the Diſciples were ſpectators of Chriſts aſcenſion.

It is apparent by this Evangeliſt, both in this place, and in his Goſpel, that there were divers others that were ſpectators of this glorious ſight beſide the twelve. For in the 14 verſe he hath named both the women and the brethren of Chriſt; which number of men in verſ. 15. he hath ſummed to 120 as we ſhall ſee there: And ſo likewiſe in his Goſpel, Chap. 24. he hath ſo carried the Story, as that it appeareth by him, that the beholders of his firſt appearing after his Reſurrection, were alſo the beholders of his Aſcenſion: for at verſ. 33. he ſpeaketh of the eleven, and them that were with them, and from thence forward he hath applied the ſtory until the aſcenſion indifferently to them all. And this thing will be one argument for us hereafter to prove that the whole hundred and twenty mentioned verſ.15. of this Chapter received the Gift of Tongues, and not the twelve only.

Verſ. 9. While they beheld, he was taken up.

The time of Chriſts converſing upon earth cometh into diſpute (viz. whether it were 32 years and an half, or 33 and an half) mainly, upon the conſtruction of this clauſe, Luke 3.23. Jeſus began to be about 30 years of age when he was baptized: For though it be agreed on, that the time of his Miniſtry, or from his Baptiſm to his ſuffering, was three years and an half; yet is it controverted upon that Text, whether to begin thoſe from his entring upon his 30 year current, or from finiſhing that year compleat. The Text ſpeaketh out for the former; and in that it ſaith, He began to be thirty; it denieth his being thirty compleat; and in that it ſaith, He began to be * ὡσεὶ, thirty after a certain reckoning, or, as it were thirty; it denieth his drawing upon thirty compleat likewiſe: For

* So ὡς ἔτῶν τριακοντα, Act. 13.20.

For if he were full thirty, it were improper to say, he began to be thirty; and if he were drawing on to full thirty, then were it proper to have said, he began to be thirty indeed; and not began to be, as it were thirty. Therefore the manner of speech doth clearly teach us to reckon, that Jesus was now nine and twenty years old compleat, and was just entring upon his thirtieth year when he was baptized: and so doth it follow without any great scruple, that he was crucified, rose again, and ascended, when he was now thirty two years and an half old compleat, which we must write his thirty third year current. Year of Christ XXXIII.

We have shewed elsewhere, that these great things of our Saviours suffering and exaltation came to pass in the year of the world 3960 then half passed; or being about the middle. It will be needless to spend time to prove and confirm it here. The summing up these several sums which were as so many links of that chain will make it apparent.

From the Creation to the Flood	1656	Gen. 5. 6, 7. &c.
From the Flood to the Promise to Abraham, Gen. 12.	427	Gen. 11. & 12.
From the Promise to the Delivery from Egypt	430	Exod. 12. 40. Gal. 3. 17.
From the coming out of Egypt to the founding of Solomons Temple	480	1 Kings 6. 1.
From the founding to the finishing of the Temple	7	1 Kings 6. 38.
From finishing the Temple, to the revolt of the ten Tribes	30	1 Kings 6. 38. & 11. 42. compar.
From the revolt of the ten Tribes to the burning of the Temple	390	Ezek. 4. 5, 6.
From the burning of the Temple, to the return from Babel	50	Jer. 25. 11, 12. & 2 Chron. 36. 6. 9, 10. 2 King. 25. 2, 3. presly compar.
From the return from Babel to the death of Christ.	490	Dan. 9. 24, &c.
Total	3960

And hereupon it doth appear, that as the Temple was finished by Solomon, just Anno Mundi 3000. So that it was fired by Titus, just Anno Mundi 4000. Jerusalem being destroyed exactly 40 years after Christs death, as was shewed even now.

Vers. 12. Olivet, which is from Jerusalem a Sabbaths days journey.

§. 1. Why the Evangelist doth measure this distance at this time.

This is the first matter of scruple in these words: and it is material to take notice of it, the rather, because that this same Evangelist hath made mention of the Mount of Olives in his other book, and yet never taketh notice of the distance of it from Jerusalem before, as Luke 19. 29. 37. & 22. 39.

§. 2. Why the Evangelist doth measure this distance by a Sabbath days journey, rather than any other measure.

This also is not impertinent to take notice of, because neither the present time, nor the present action had any reference to the Sabbath day at all: For had it been either the Jews Sabbath, or the Christian Sabbath, when this thing was done; it were easie to see why the measure of the distance betwixt these two places, is by such a standard; but since it was in the middle of the week when our Saviour ascended, and near neither the one Sabbath nor the other, it cannot but breed some just scruple why the Evangelist should mention a Sabbath days journey here.

But before we can give satisfaction to these two scruples, it is in a kind necessary to resolve one or two more which are of no less, if not of a greater difficulty: and those are;

§. 3. Whether

Year of Christ XXXIII.

§. 3. Whether the Evangelist intend to measure the distance from the Mount Olivet to Jerusalem, or from the place where our Saviour ascended on Mount Olivet, to Jerusalem.

§. 4. What space a Sabbath days journey was.

This last, must first fall under determination, and it is not of small obscurity in regard of the different measures that are made of it, and in regard of the different glosses that are made upon this Text.

The Syriack readeth it thus, Which was from Jerusalem seven furlongs. And this hath bred some difficulty more than was in the Text before; for that Josephus saith, Mount Olivet was but five furlongs from Jerusalem, Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 6. And John the Evangelist saith, Bethany was 15 furlongs from Jerusalem, Joh. 11.18. And certain it is that Luke in this place speaketh of the distance from Olivet, or from Bethany, or from both; and yet the Syriack glos upon him, hath found out a measure that agrees neither with Josephus, nor with John.

There is a like difference betwen their opinions that come to measure this space not by furlongs, but by another measure; some holding it to be two thousand paces, or two miles; others two thousands cubits, or but one mile: This latter to have been the measure of a Sabbath days journey, namely, two thousand cubits, is apparent in the Talmud, and it may be confirmed out of other Writers of the same Nation; for this position is in the Tractate of Erubbin, Chap. 4. מהלך אלפים פסיעות כינוניות וזו היא תחום השבת a journey of two thousand middle paces is the bound of the Sabbath: And the Scholiast there saith, פסיעה כינונית דרך הליכתו של אדם אמה A middle pace in the way of a mans walk, namely a cubit. And so the Chaldee paraphrast on the first of Ruth, אתפ קרנא למטר שביא ויומי טבא בדיל דלא להלכא בר מתרין אלפין אמין: We are commanded to keep the Sabbaths and the holy das; so as to go not above two thousand cubits. And this tradition or custom seemeth to be fetched from that place in Josh. 3. 4. where, because the people in their march after, and on either side the Ark, were to keep two thousand Cubits distance off it; it is thereupon concluded, that they pitched at that distance when the Ark and they were encamped; and so that that was the space that they went from their Tents to the Tabernacle on the Sabbath day: it is not worth the labour, to examine the truth of this opinion in this place; because we have not here so much to deal with it, as with a custom built upon it: and it is not so material whether that was the distance betwixt their Tents and the Tabernacle in their encampings in the wilderness (for some of them were double, treble that distance) as certain it is, that a custom was grown from this opinion of travelling no further than two thousand Cubits on the Sabbath day; and to this custom the Evangelist speaketh, and that is it that we must look after. Now if we 'count these two thousand Cubits for whole yards, then was the space a mile, and above half a quarter, or somewhat above nine furlongs in all: but if for half yards, which was the common Cubit, then was it but half so much, and neither of these sums agree with the Syriacks seven furlongs, nor with Johns fifteen. But the latter agreeth very well with Josephus his five, and so do I understand the measure to be.

For, first, it were easie to prove that the Cubit by which the Tabernacle was measured at the building of it, both for its own body, and for the ground it stood upon, and its Court, and all things about it, was but the common Cubit of half a yard; and it is most likely that those two thousand Cubits that did distance the people from it in the wilderness, and that measured out a Sabbath days journey now, were Cubits of the same size.

Secondly, The Text of Luke exactly measures the distance from the Mount of Olives to Jerusalem, and it is very questionable whether he intend the space from that place upon the Mount where our Saviour ascended, or no. He saith in the last Chapter of his Gospel, that Jesus led the Disciples out, ἕως εἰς Βηθανίαν, Vers. 50. not towards Bethany, but as far as unto it, as our English, and the Syriack, the Vulgar, Beza, and others do truly render it: now Bethany was about fifteen furlongs from Jerusalem, Joh. 11.16. and let us take the two thousand Cubits how we will, either common or holy Cubit, either half yard, or yard; or Ezekiels Cubit, of a Cubit and hand breadth: Yet will none of these measures reach to so many furlongs.

Now howsoever Beza hath sought to heal this difference by a supposal that Bethany was not only the name of a Town, but also a tract or a space of ground that lay about the Town, as a Lordship or Parish lieth about the Village; and that though the Town it self lay fifteen furlongs from Jerusalem, yet that the grounds and demeans that carried the same name, reacht within half that space to Jerusalem; the grounds of such a supposal are yet to seek; nay, there is good ground to the contrary.

For

For first, it is rare in Scripture to find open fields called by the name of a Town, when there is no expression that the fields are meant: particularly, if we should reckon up all the Towns named in the Bible that bear a Beth, in the beginning of them, as Bethlehem, Bethshemesh, Bethsaida, Bethel, and all the rest that are of the like beginning, we could never find that they signifie any thing but the very Town it self; and why Bethany should be singular, I see no reason.

Secondly, In all the mentioning of Bethany in other places in the Gospel, it is past peradventure that the Town is meant; as *Joh.*12.1. *Matth.*21.17. Mark 11.11. *Matth.*26.1. &c. and why it should not be so also in Luke 24 50. had need of cogent reasons to demonstrate.

Thirdly, It is very questionable whether Bethphage lay not betwixt Jerusalem and Bethany; or if it did not, it lay very little aside the way, as might be shewed out of the story of Christs riding into Jerusalem, Matth. 21.1. Luke 19.29. compared with *Joh.*12.1. and therefore that was like to cut off the name of Bethany, that it should not reach far in the fields towards the City: For Christ lay in Bethany all night, *Joh.*12.1. and on the morning was gone some way towards Jerusalem before he met with the Ass on which he rode, which he had commanded his Disciples to fetch from Bethphage, which was κατέναντι before them, as the Syrian well renders it; that is, either directly in their way to Jerusalem, or very little off it; as they were now setting out of Bethany thither. And this is confirmed by the gloss upon the Gemars in Sanhedrin, *Perek.*1. where mention being made of Bethphage in the Text, the Scholiast saith, Bethphage was a place before the wall of the City, and governed as Jerusalem in all things.

It is therefore of the most probability, that Christ when he ascended, led out his Disciples to Bethany Town, fifteen furlongs from Jerusalem, or thereabout, and that very way that he had ridden triumphantly into the City seven and forty days ago, he goeth now again to ride more triumphantly into Heaven. The Text then that we have in hand doth not measure the space from the City to Bethany where Christ ascended, but from the City to the foot of Mount Olivet, on which Mount, Bethany stood; and the measure he maketh of it is two thousand common Cubits, or about five furlongs. And so we have done with two of the Queries that were proposed. But now why he should measure this space at this time rather than any other, and why by the title of a Sabbath days journey, rather than any other measure, remaineth yet to be inquired after.

This Evangelist hath divers times in his Gospel mentioned this Mount, as was shewed before; but never shewed the situation or distance of it from the City till now, and that may be a reason why he doth it here, being the last time that ever he is to mention it in all his writings; and that one place might explain another: Namely, That from this Text the several passages done on Mount Olivet which are mentioned in his Gospel, might receive some illustration, and it might be known how far they were acted from Jerusalem; or at the least guessed how far, it being from hence determined, how far the foot of Olivet was distant from it: It had been indeed as ready to have said they returned from Bethany, which was from Jerusalem about fifteen furlongs; but the Holy Ghost is not so careful to measure the distance from the place of Christs Ascension (it may be for the same reason that he concealed the grave of Moses, for fear of superstition) as to measure from Olivet where so many, and remarkable occurrences besides Christs Ascension had passed, and been done by him.

Why he measureth it by the title of Sabbath days yourney, rather than by any other measure, as of paces, furlongs, or the like, since this day that was spoken of is not a Sabbath, we dare not be too curious to determine: Only to conjecture, it is very probable, that this was the common walk of the people of Jerusalem on the Sabbath day in pleasant weather for their meditations, when they had done the publick duties of the day: For so it is said of Christ, that he often resorted to a garden of Gethsemani with his Disciples, *Joh.*18.2. and though it be not certain whether he did on the Sabbath, yet it is certain that he did on the Passover night, after he and his Disciples had done the work of the day and Ordinance. And that time of the day fell under the same obligation that the Sabbath did in this particular. For, as was observed even now out of the Chaldee Paraphrast, not only on the Sabbaths, but also on other holy days it was not lawful to walk above two thousands Cubits; and this time that our Saviour set thither, was the beginning of such a day: namely, of the first day in the Passover week, which was to be observed as a Sabbath, Lev. 23. 7. and that day was begun at that even when our Saviour went out to Gethsemani to pray. And though Judas slipt from behind his Master after they were risen from the Table and come out of the House, and when he should have gone out of the City with him, he stept aside into the City, and got his cursed train up to go to apprehend Jesus; yet the Text allures us, Joh. 18. 2. that Judas knew where to have him, though he went not to observe whither he would go; because that that was our Saviours common retiring place upon such occasions. And so may we conceive conceive it was the common haunt of others of the City, upon such times, and such occasions of prayer and meditation to resort thither, for the delightsomness of the place, and the helpfulness of it by the delight and solitariness to contemplation. And therefore the Evangelist may be conceived to use this expression for the measure betwixt it and the City, A Sabbath days journey; because it was most remarkably so; not only upon obligation, but for delight, and the peoples common Sabbath days walk.

Vers. 13. They went up into an upper room.

This was not that room in which Christ ordained his last Supper; for that was ἀνάγαιον, Mark 14. 15. Luke 22. 12. this was ὑπερῶον, and certainly the difference of words, argues difference of the thing it self: for ἀνάγαιον seemeth to signifie any room above stairs, be it but the first story, but ὑπερῶον the highest room in all the House, as Act. 20. 8, 9. which was the third story. Nor is it probable that this was the House of John Mark, mentioned Act. 12. 12. For though some Disciples were then assembled there, yet were the Apostles in another place. What place this was, is not worth the labour of searching; because it is past the possibility of finding out: be it in what house it would, this was the place where this society of Apostles and Elders kept as it were their College and Consistory, while they staid at Jerusalem, and till persecution scattered them. And therefore it is said, ἦσαν καταμένοντες, they were there abiding: This was not the meeting place in publick Worship for all the Believers in the City, which ere long, if not at this very time, were several Congregations: but this was the meeting and sitting place for the Presbytery of these Elders that took care of all those Congregations.

§. Both Peter, and James, and John, &c.

The Syrian readeth, Peter, and John, and James; and for Bartholomew, and Matthew, he and the Arabick read Mathew and Bartholomew; the reason best known to themselves.

§. James the Son of Alpheus.

The word Son, is not in the Greek, neither here, nor Matth. 10. 3. nor Mark 3. 18. nor Luke 6. 15. but it is only thus, James of Alpheus, and so reads the Vulgar. But the Syrian, Arabick, Beza, our English, and divers others have very warrantably put in the word Son.

Now this Alpheus and Cleopas, mentioned, Luke 24. 18. were but one and the same man: the Syrian חלפי serving indifferently to frame his name into Hebrew, or into a Greek pronunciation, Chalphi and Cleophi, as Pauls double name founded after these two languages: This Cleopas or Alpheus, was the Husband of Mary, Joh. 19. 25. and she the mother of James the less, and of Joses, Matth. 15. 40. and of Judah and Simon, Mark 6. 3. and from hence is warrant sufficient to call James the Son of Alpheus; though the Text hath not spoken out the word Son.

This James is he, that was commonly called James the less, mentioned, Acts 12. 7. & 15. 3. & 21. 18. Gal. 2. 9. &c. and so often called by the Ancients, the Bishop of Jerusalem, but upon what misprision shall be conjectured afterward.

§. And Simon Zelotes.

He is called Simon the Canaite, Matth. 10. 4. Mark 3. 18. which in Hebrew signifieth zealous, as is more apparent by the Syriack and Arabick writing of it, than the Greek: It is like he was so called from Canah in Galilee, the place of his abode; and the Evangelist translateth this proper Hebrew name, into a Greek appellative, as John doth Siloam, Joh. 9. 7. This Simon was the Son of Alpheus also, and so likewise was Judas mentioned instantly after, Mark 6. 3. And so hath Alpheus three sons that were Apostles, and Joses the fourth, is in fair choice to be one too, vers. 23.

Vers. 14. With the Women.

Some render it, With their Wives, which may indeed be very true; for the Apostles and Disciples which had Wives, took them with them, 1 Cor. 9. 5. but it is too strait: for doubtless there were some with them, that had either no Husbands at all, or none there, see Luke 8. 23. & 23. 49. & 24. 22.

§. And

§. And Mary the mother of Jesus.

We have no more mention of her in Scripture: it is like she continued under the care of John the Evangelist, to whom our Saviour had committed her, Joh. 19. 26, 27. and at the last in some persecution was taken away by martyrdom, as Simeon had prophesied of her, Luke 2.35.

§. And his Brethren.

That is, his Kinsmen; for by this term doth the Scripture use to express such relations: it is needless to shew examples: and to shew who these Kinsmen were, will be more proper for another place.

Vers. 15. And in those days Peter stood up in the midst.

Peter both in this place, and divers others, and indeed generally through so much of this Book as concerns the Church of Judea and Jerusalem, is ever brought in as the chief speaker, and chief actor; nay, commonly the sole speaker and actor upon all occasions: Not that the rest of the Apostles were either any whit inferior to him, either in authority or in forwardness to promote the Gospel; but upon these two most singular and peculiar grounds.

First, Peter was designed by a more special deputation and appointment to be the Minister of the Circumcision, *Gal.*2.8. and therefore while the Story stayeth among the Circumcised, it still mentioneth Peter above all the other: as when it cometh to speak of the uncircumcised, then it fixeth solely on the story of Paul.

Secondly, Peter was considerable under a notion that none of the rest of the twelve had fallen under, namely one that had denied and foresworn his Master: and therefore it was in some kind necessary that some special evidences of his perfect recovery again should be given. And whensoever he is thus honoured by mention of him, when the rest are not mentioned, it is not for that he outstript them either in dignity, or zeal; but to shew that he had recovered that ground which he had lost of them in his grievous fall. And these two considerations do mainly resolve, why you read hardly of any mans speeches, or any mans actions but only Peters. He is the speaker in *Act.*2. at the first conversion of the three thousand souls; and he is the speaker in *Act.*3 at the second conversion of five thousand more; not that the rest of the company did not preach and speak as well as he; as we shall prove for that first Sermon on Acts 2. and as the Holy Ghost it self approves for that second, Acts 4.1. But because, at these first fruits of the Gospel among the Circumcised, the Lord more especially holdeth out the mention of the Minister of the Circumcision.

And so in this motion for the choice of a new Apostle, and in that doom again on Ananias and Sapphira, Peter of all other is the Man: for how fully and how fitly doth it shew his perfect recovery, when he that of all the rest, had fallen next to Judas, doth censure Judas; and he that had denied his Master with an oath, doth strike those dead for a lie?

§. The number of names together.

Names, is held by divers in this place, and in Rev. 3.4. & 11. 13. to signifie only persons without any distinction of sex: whereas it rather signifieth men distinct from women: and so it seemeth that the Syriack and Arabick understand it here; and the latter addeth that they were men of name or repute.

For, first, in Scripture account, most constantly the reckoning is of men; and women very rarely brought in in the number: nay sometime the reckoning plainly shewed to be contradistinguished to women.

Secondly, The name of a family continueth in the males, but is lost in the females; and therefore in the Hebrew, a male is called Zacar, from remembrance; and women Nashim, from forgetting; and in the New Test. Greek, men are called Names upon the like reason.

§. Were about an hundred and twenty.

This summeth the men that are spoken of in the verse preceding; the twelve Apostles, the seventy Disciples, and about thirty eight more, all of Christs own kindred, country, or converse.

Year of Christ XXXIII. These one hundred and twenty here spoken of, are not to be reputed or accompted as the whole number of believers at Jerusalem at this time; but only those that had followed Christ continually, Vers. 21. were of his own Country, stood in more near relation to him, as being of his own family and society, and appointed by him for the Ministry.

The Believers at Jerusalem no doubt were many hundreds, if not thousands at this time; though we read of no converts in this book, till the next Chapter. For what fruit or accompt can else be given of all Christs preaching and pains bestowed in that City? Let but Joh. 2. 23. & 3. 2. & 4. 1. & Mar. 3. 8. & Joh. 7. 31. & 8. 30. & 11. 28, 45. & 12. 19. 42. and divers other places be well weighed, and it will be utterly unimaginable that there should be less believers in Jerusalem now than many hundreds, much more unimaginable that these one hundred and twenty were all, who were all Galileans, and no inhabitants of Jerusalem at all.

This number therefore mentioned by the Evangelist of one hundred and twenty, is not to be thought all the Church in that City; but only the society and company that were of Christs own train and retinue whilst he was upon earth, that companied with him all the time that he went in and out among his Disciples, Acts 1. 21. And this company though it be mingled and dispersed among the Congregations in the City for preaching the Word, and administring the Sacraments, and joyning in acts of worship; yet did they keep together as a more intire and peculiar society, and standing Presbytery, Act. 4. 21. and of the rest durst none joyn himself unto them, Acts 5. 13. and thus they continued till the persecution at Stephens death dispersed them all but the Apostles, Acts 3. 1.

Vers. 16. This Scripture must needs have been fulfilled.

I apprehend not what the word [have] doth in this clause, for it had been both more proper for the sense and more facil for the reader, to have it read, This Scripture must needs be fulfilled. Now the application of these places so pertinently and home to Judas, sheweth the illumination and knowledge that the breathing and giving of the Holy Ghost, Joh. 20. 22. had wrought in the Disciples.

Vers. 18. This man purchased a field with the reward of iniquity.

Not that he himself bought this field, for Matthew resolves the contrary, Matth. 27. 7. and tells that it was bought by the Chief Priest for his damned bribe: Nor was any such thing in his intention when he bargained for his money; but Peter by a bitter irrision sheweth the fruit and profit of his wretched covetise; and how he that thought to inlarge his Revenues, and to settle his habitation by such horrid means, came home by it with the contrary, his revenues to purchase land for others, his habitation to be desolate, and himself to come to so sad an end.

§. And falling headlong, &c.

Universality, antiquity and consent have so determinately concluded that Judas hanged himself, that there is no gainsaying: yet hath the Greek word Ἀπήγξατο left it so indifferent, whether he hanged himself, or were strangled by the Devil, that if I were not tied up by the consent of all to the contrary, I should the rather take it the latter way: And if I durst so interpret it, I should render πρήνης γενόμενος, to this purpose: that Satan took him away bodily, strangled him in the air; and then flung him headlong and burst out his bowels. For πρήνης φέρεται, Qui vel a seipso vel ab alio præcipitatur, saith Stephanus. And to this purpose may that verse of Matth. 27. 5. be very well interpreted; And he cast down the silver pieces in the Temple, and departed, and going away he was strangled: the Devil catching him away and stifling him, and then casting him headlong, and bursting out of him with the eruption of his intrals, and this terrible occurrence would soon be noted of all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, Acts 1. 19.

Vers. 19. Aceldama.

חקל דמא, a field of blood: by a double relation; First, Because it was bought with a price of blood, Math. 27. 7.

And secondly, Because it was sprinkled with his blood that took that price: for so this verse intimateth.

Vers.

Year of Chriſt XXXIII.

Verſ. 21. Wherefore of theſe men that have companied with us.

§. Obſervations upon the election of Matthias.

First, That there was a neceſſity the Apoſtles be twelve. Δεῖ ἓν ἕνα τούτων, &c. and this, that the Founders of the Chriſtian Church might be parallel to the twelve Tribes, the founders of the Jewiſh; for now Jews and Chriſtians were to join together: and this is hinted in the twenty four Elders, the repreſentative body of the Church ſo often mentioned in the Revelation; and ſpoken out Rev. 21.12.14.

Secondly, That Matthias and Joſes being choſen to be preſented to the Apoſtles, the election was not the choice of the whole Church, as if every member of the Church, and believer in Jeruſalem, either did or might give his vote to the chooſing of them; but it was only the choice of the whole Presbytery, or the hundred and eight among themſelves: for ſo is it moſt plain, verſ. 15. & 21. being compared together. Obſerve the phraſe, Of theſe men that have companied with us.

Thirdly, That the Apoſtles could not ordain an Apoſtle by impoſition of hands, as they could ordain Elders; but they are forced to uſe a divine lot, which was as the immediate hand of Chriſt impoſed on him that was to be ordained: that opinion took little notice of this circumſtance, that hath placed Biſhops in the place of the Apoſtles, by a common and ſucceſſive ordination.

Verſ. 25. Joſeph called Barſabas, who was ſirnamed Juſtus.

This ſeemeth to be he that is called Joſes, Mark 6. 3. & 15. 40. the brother of James the leſs: and the rather to be ſo ſuppoſed, becauſe he is ſurnamed Juſtus, as James was. And ſo ſaith Beza, one old Copy readeth Joſes here; and the Syriack for Joſes, readeth Joſeph, in Chap. 4. 36. ſo indifferently are the names uſed one for another. And from this indifferency, have ſome concluded, that Joſeph here, and Joſes in that Chapter, are but one and the ſame perſon, the nearneſs of the ſound of Barſabas and Barnabas helping forward that ſuppoſal.

But, firſt, that Joſes, or Joſeph in Chap. 4.36. was born in Cyprus; this Joſeph, or Joſes here, was born in Galilee.

Secondly, Although the Apoſtles belike had named theſe two Joſephs to diſtinguiſh them, the one Barſabas, and the other Barnabas; two names that are not far aſunder in ſound and utterance; yet are they in ſenſe, and in the Apoſtles intention, if they named the one as they did the other: Barnabas is interpreted by the Evangeliſt himſelf υἱὸς παρακλήσεως, rendred generally the Son of conſolation; but the Greek may as well bear, the Son of exhortation; for ſo it is known well enough the word familiarly ſignifieth. The Syriack uſeth indeed בויאא for conſolation, Luke 6.24. Phil. 2.1. Rom. 12.8. 2 Cor. 1.4, 5. and in the place in hand; and נביאא in the place laſt cited before it: but whether Barnabas may not equally be deduced from נבא to propheſie, or inſtruct, I refer to the Reader: Be it whether it will, certain it is, the Etymology and notation doth very far recede from that of Barſabas. Some conceive that this ſignifieth the ſon of an Oath; others the ſon of fulneſs; but the notation to me ſeemeth to be the ſon of wiſdom, בר סבאא. And if we would be critical, we might obſerve the various qualifications of a Paſtor and Teacher from theſe two ſurnames, the one a ſon of wiſdom, and the other of exhortation; but our intention only is to ſhew that the two Joſephs in mention, differed in perſon, for they differed in name.

§. And Matthias.

Who, or whence this man was, we cannot determine; certain it is, the ſenſe of his name is the ſame with Nathaneel, though not the ſound: and I ſhould as ſoon fix upon him for the man, as any other, and ſome probabilities might be tendred for ſuch a ſurmiſal; but we will not ſpend time upon ſuch conjectures.

CHAP.

Year of Christ XXXIII.

CHAP. II.

Verſ. 1. And when the day of Pentecoſt was fully come, they were all together with one accord in one place.

§. 1. The time, and nature of the Feaſt of Pentecoſt.

THE expreſſion of the Evangeliſt hath bred ſome ſcruple; how it can be ſaid, Συμπληρῶσθαι ἡμέρεν, the day to be compleated, or fulfilled, when it was now but newly begun: and the ſight of this ſcruple it is like hath moved the Syrian Tranſlater, and the Vulgar Latine, to read it in the plural number, When the days of Pentecoſt were fulfilled: Calvin ſaith compleri is taken for advenire, to be fulfilled, for to be now come: Beza accounts the fulneſs of it to be, for that the night, which is to be reckoned for ſome part of it, was now paſt; and ſome part of the day alſo. In which expoſition he ſaith ſomething toward the explanation of the ſcruple, but not enough.

Luke therefore, in relating a ſtory of the feaſt of Pentecoſt, uſeth an expreſſion agreeable to that of Moſes, in relating the inſtitution of it, *Lev.*23.13. And ye ſhall count unto you from the morrow after the Sabbath; from the day that ye brought the ſheaf of the wave-offering; ſeven Sabbaths ſhall be compleat: Even unto the morrow after the ſeven Sabbath, ſhall ye number fifty days.

It will not be amiſs to open theſe words a little, for the better underſtanding and fixing the time of Pentecoſt.

Firſt, The Sabbath that is firſt mentioned in the Text, in theſe words, Ye ſhall count unto you from the morrow after the Sabbath, is to be underſtood of the firſt day of the Paſſover week, or the fifteenth day of the month Niſan; the Paſſover having been ſlain on the day before. And ſo it is well interpreted by the Chaldee Paraphraſt, that goeth under the name of Jonathan, and by Rabbi Solomon upon this Chapter, at the 11 verſe; And he ſhall wave the ſheaf before the Lord after the holy day, the firſt day of the Paſſover.

And it was called a Sabbath, be it on what day of the week it would. (as it was on the Friday at our Saviours death) becauſe no ſervile work was to be done in it; but an holy convocation to be held unto the Lord, verſ. 7. and the Paſſover Bullock, Deut. 16. 2, 7. 2 *Chron.*30.24. & 35.8 to be eaten on it, *Joh.*18 28. as the Lamb had been eaten the night before; and this Bullock was alſo called a Paſſover, and the day the preparation of the Paſſover, *Joh.*19 14. as well as the Lamb, and the day before had been.

This helpeth to underſtand that difficult phraſe, *Matth.*28. 1. about which there is ſuch difference and difficulty of expounding, Ὀψὲ σαββάτων, In the evening of the Sabbath, ſaith the Syriack and the Vulgar: And o utinam! for then would the Lords day be clearly called the Sabbath, the Sabbath of the Jews being ended before the evening or night of which he ſpeaketh, did begin. In the end of the Sabbath, ſaith Beza, and our Engliſh, but the Sabbath was ended at Sun-ſetting before. It is therefore to be rendred, after the Sabbaths, for ſo ſignifieth * ὀψὲ, after, in Greek Writers, as well as the Evening: and the plural number of σαββάτων, is to have its due interpretation, Sabbaths. Now there were two Sabbaths that fell together in that Paſſover week in which our Saviour ſuffered; this Convocational or Feſtival Sabbath, the firſt day of the Paſſover week, and the ordinary weekly Sabbath, which was the very next day after: the former was a Friday, and on that our Saviour ſuffered, the latter a Saturday, or the Jewiſh Sabbath, and on that he reſted in the grave, and ὀψὲ σαββάτων, after theſe Sabbaths; early in the morning on the firſt day of the week he roſe again.

* ὀψὲ τῆς βασιλέως χειρώνος, Plutarch. poſt regis tempora. ὀψὲ τῶν τρωικῶν, poſt tempora Trojana. ὀψὲ νυκτὸς, poſt noctem, &c.

Secondly, The morrow after this Sabbath of which we have ſpoken, or the ſixteenth day of the month Niſan, was the ſolemn day of waving the ſheaf of the firſt-fruits before the Lord, and the day from which they began to count their ſeven weeks to Pentecoſt, *Lev.*23.11. *Deut.*16.9.

This day then being the Δευτέρα, or ſecond day in the Paſſover week, and being the date from whence they counted to Pentecoſt, all the Sabbaths from hence thither, were named in relation to this day: as the firſt Sabbath after it is called Δευτεροπρῶτον, Luke 6. 1. Not as it is rendred, the ſecond Sabbath after the firſt, but the firſt Sabbath after this ſecond day: the next Sabbath after was called Δευτερόδευτερον: the third Διαδευτερεῖον, and ſo the reſt accordingly.

Thirdly, Now in their counting from this morrow after the Sabbath, or this day of their firſt-fruit ſheaf, to Pentecoſt, ſeven Sabbaths or Weeks were to be compleat: whereupon R. Solomon doth very well obſerve, that the count muſt then begin at an evening; and ſo this day after the Sabbath was none of the fifty; but they were begun to be counted at Even when that day was done: ſo that from the time of waving the firſtfirst-fruit sheaf, Pentecost was indeed the one and fiftieth day; but counting seven weeks compleat, when an evening must begin the account, it is but the fiftieth. Year of Christ XXXIII.

Fourthly, To this therefore it is that the phrase of the Evangelist speaketh, συμπληροῦσθαι ἡμέραν πεντηκοστῆς, which our English hath very well uttered, the day of Pentecost was fully come; thereby giving an exact notice how to fix the day that is now spoken of from our Saviours death, and to observe that he speaketh of the time of the day indeed, and not of the night which was now over, and the day fully come.

The dependence of Pentecost upon this day of waving the first-fruit sheaf, was upon this reason; because on this second day of the Passover, barley harvest began; and from thence forward they might eat parched corn, or corn in the ear; but by Pentecost their corn was inned and seasoned, and ready to make bread, and now they offered the first of their bread. This relation had this Festival in the common practise, but something more did it bear in it as a memorial; for it recorded the delivering of the Law at Mount Sinai, which was given at the very same time: And thus the giving of the Law at Sinai, for the bringing of the Jews into a Church, and the gift of the Holy Ghost at Sion for the like of the Gentiles, did so nearly agree in the manner of their giving, both in fire, and in the time, both at Pentecost. Only, as the Christian Sabbath was one day in the week, beyond the Jewish Sabbath; so this Pentecost when the Holy Ghost was given, was one in the month beyond the Pentecost at the giving of the Law, that being on the sixth day of the month Sivan, and this on the seventh.

§. 2. The Pentecost on which the Holy Ghost was given, was the first day of the week, namely, Sunday, or the Lords day.

As our Saviour by rising on the first day of the week had honoured and sealed that day for the Christian Sabbath, instead of the Jewish, which was the day before; and as is said by the Psalmist, that was the day which the Lord had made, when the stone refused, was become the head of the corner; so did he again augment the honour, and set home the authority and dignity of that day, in pouring out the Holy Ghost upon the Disciples, and performing the great promise of the Father on it. Which that it may be the more clearly seen, it will not be amiss to lay down the time from our Saviours passion, to this time, in manner of a Calendar, that the readers eye may be his Judge in this matter.

And let it not be tedious to take in the account of five or six days before his passion: which though it may be a little Parergon, or besides this purpose, yet may it not be useless or unprofitable: nay, in some respect it is almost necessary, since we cannot in reason but begin our Kalendar from the beginning of the month Nisan, though our Saviour suffered not till the fifteenth day of it.

Saturday, or Jews Sabbath. IX. This night our Saviour suppeth at Bethany, where Mary anointeth his feet, and Judas repineth at the expence of the ointment, Joh. 12. 1.

X. The next day he rideth into Jerusalem, &c, Joh. 12.12. Matth. 21.1. to vers. 17. Mark 11.1. to vers. 11. Luke 19.29. to vers. 45.

Sunday. At night he goeth again into Bethany, Matth. 21.17. Mark 11.11.

Munday. XI. The next day he goeth to Jerusalem again, and curseth the Fig-tree, Matth. 21. 18, 19. Mark 11.12,13,14. and coming to the Temple casteth out buyers and sellers, Mark 11.15,16,17,18. Luke 19. 45, 46, 47. &c.

At Even he goeth to Bethany again, Mark 11.19.

Tuesday. XII. He goeth to Jerusalem again, Mark 11.20. Peter, and the rest of the Disciples note the withred Fig-tree, Mark 11. 20, 21. &c. Matth. 21. 20. &c. They come to the Temple, and the Scribes and Pharisees question his authority, Mark 11.27. &c. Matth. 21.23. Luke 20. 1. which he answereth with a question about the Baptist, Matth. 21.24. &c. Mar. 11. 29. &c. Luke 20. 3. Propounded the Parable of the Vineyard, Matth. 21.28. to the end, Mark 12.1. &c. Luke 20.9. &c. And he speaketh all contained in Matthew 22, &c 23 Chapters; and Mark 12. from verse 13 to the end, and Luke 20. from verse 20. to verse 5. of Chap. 21.

At night he goeth towards Bethany again; and on Mount Olivet looketh on the Temple, and uttereth all contained in Matth. 24, & 25. and Mark 13. and Luke 21. from verse 5. to the end.

This night he suppeth in Bethany with Simon the Leper, Matth. 26. 1, 2, 6. Mark 14. 1, 2, 3. and hath ointment poured on his head: after Supper he riseth from the Table, and washeth his Disciples feet, and giveth Judas the sop, Joh. 13. 2, 26. &c. With the sop the Devil entreth into him; and he goeth in the dark from Bethany to Jerusalem, and bargaineth for the betraying of Jesus.

The sop given to Judas not at the Passover nor at Jerusalem, but two days before the one, and two miles from the other.

Wednesday. XIII. Christ is still at Bethany, Judas having done his hellish work with the Chief Priests, is returned to Bethany again.

Thursday. XIV. The Passover: Christ eateth it this day as well as the Jews, Mark 14.12. Luke 22.7. After the Passover he ordaineth the Sacrament, Mark 14. 22. Judas received the Sacrament, Luke 22. 14, 21. Upon our Saviours hinting of his treacherousness, a question ariseth among the Disciples about it, and that breedeth another question among them which of them should be the greatest, Vers. 23, 24.

That debate Christ appeaseth: telleth Peter again of his denyal: maketh that divine speech contained in the fifteenth, sixteenth, seventeenth Chapters of John; singeth the 113 or the 114 Psalm, goeth into the Mount of Olives, is apprehended: brought to Annas the head, or chief Judge in the Sanhedrin, by him bound and sent to Caiaphas, Joh. 18. 13, 14. &c. and there is in examination, and derision all the night.

Friday. XV. The forenoon of this day was the preparation of the Passover Bullock, Joh. 19. 14. the afternoon is the preparation of the Sabbath, Luke 23.54. Mark 15.42. Early in the morning Christ is brought to Pilate the Roman Deputy, Mark 15.1.

At nine a clock he is delivered to the Souldiers and common Rabble, Mark 14. 25. and brought out to the Jews, Joh. 19.1. to 13.

At twelve a clock, or high noon he is condemned, and presently nailed to his Cross, Joh. 19. 13, 14. the time of the day that our first Parents eat and fell.

Now began the darkness, Luke 23. 44. and lasted three hours; the very space that Adam was under the darkness of sin, without the Promise.

At three a clock in the afternoon Christ yieldeth up the Ghost, Mark 15.34. the very time when Adam had received the promise of this his passion for his redemption.

At Even he is buried, Matth. 27.57.

This day being the first in the Passover week, was called a Sabbath, Lev. 23. 11. and a very solemn day it should have been, and no work done in it; but observe how far, and how vilely the Jews did violate it, and that law at this time.

Saturday the Jews Sabbath. XVI. Christ resteth in the grave this day, being the Sabbath: But the Jews rest not from their villany. For on this day they compact with Pilate to make sure the Sepulchre, Matth. 27. 62. And observe that Matthew doth not there call it the Sabbath, but the day that followeth the day of the preparation: by the very Periphrasis, deriding their hipocrisie, who would be so observant of the Sabbath, as to have a day of preparation for it before it came, and yet to be thus villainous on it when it was come.

This was the Antitez, the famous second day in the Passover week, in which the first-fruit sheaf was waved before the Lord, Lev. 23. 11. and from this day they began to count their seven weeks to Pentecost, Deut. 16.9.

Sunday, the Lords day. XVII. 1. Christ riseth from the dead, and he becometh the first fruit of those that slept, 1 Cor. 15. 20. He appeareth first to Mary Magdalen, Joh. 20. 15. then to Peter and Cleopas, or Alpheus, as they go to Emmaus, Luke 24. 13, 18, 34. 1 Cor. 15. 5. and at night to all the Disciples, Luke 24. 33, 36. this is the first of the fifty to Pentecost:

Year of Christ XXXIII.

§. 3. That many, if not all of the 120 received the Holy Ghost, and the gift of Tongues on Pentecost day; and not the twelve only.

For first, divers, if not all of them, were appointed by Christ to be Ministers of the Gospel, as well as the Apostles, Luke 10. and for this purpose had received the power of miracles, as well as they, vers. 17. they had received the Holy Ghost on the resurrection day, as well as they, Joh. 20. 22. compared with Luke 24. 33, 36. had conversed with Christ both before and after his resurrection as well as they; had received the promise of the Father as well as they: Nay, they were to preach to people of strange languages as well as they: and then what possible reason can be given, that they should be denied this qualification of the gift of Tongues, fitting them for that purpose, any more than the twelve?

That divers of them were Ministers, if not all, there can be no scruple, what else was become of the seventy Disciples? And that, if they must preach, they must preach to some of strange Tongues, there can be as little, since experience sheweth, Jerusalem it self so full of this variety; and since a few years will let all the Preachers loose to preach to the Gentiles as they met with occasion. Nay, we shall find this justified by the practise of certain of them, as we go along.

Secondly, It is true indeed, which is objected by some, that these words, They were all together, do come so near to the last verse of the former Chapter, which mentioneth only the twelve, that it may seem to speak of them only together at this time: yet doth both that verse and this as fully refer to the 120 in the 15 verse.

For, 1. The Evangelist doth lay that number from the very first, as the subject of his History, though his aim be more especially at the twelve Apostles: as in his history of the twelve Apostles, his History fixeth chiefly on Peter and John.

2. What should keep and separate the 108 from the company of the Apostles at this time above all others? The Text tells us they were καταμένοντες, & προσκαρτερῦντες, abiding and continuing together, in one place, and in one Society, Chap. 1. 13, 14. and so the progress of the story giveth us assurance they were till persecution parted them, Chap. 8. and it is very strange, that on this day, above all days, the high day of Pentecost, the holy day of the Christian Sabbath, the likeliest day of expecting the promise of the Father, that on this day they should be parted from their Society.

Thirdly, Look but upon the qualifications of the seven Deacons, how they were full of the Holy Ghost, Acts 6.3. how Stephen was full of power, and miracles, and wisdom, and an irresistible spirit, vers. 8, 10. and how Philip was of the like qualifications, Acts 8. 6. and when, and where, and how can it be supposed that these men came by these gifts, if not upon Pentecost day, and jointly with the twelve Apostles? If it shall be answered, that it may be they received them from Christ, when he sent them to preach before his passion, as Luke 10.17. then let it be shewed how Barnabas came by his variety of Languages, to be able to preach intelligibly whersoever he came, if not on this day?

It being therefore not to be denied, that there were divers others besides the twelve, if not the whole hundred and twenty (which I rather think) that received the Holy Ghost in the gift of Tongues at this time, and that they were Ministers as well as the Apostles: it argueth, first, that there were divers Congregations in Jerusalem from hence forward, or else how should so many Ministers there have employment in their calling? And secondly, that those that went up and down preaching upon the dispersion by persecution, Acts 8.4. & 11. 19. were not ordinary members of the Church, or as we have used to call them, meer lay-men, but these men of the Ministerial function, and of Christs own designation for that calling.

§. 4. The reason of the use of the word ὁμοθυμαδὸν, so often in this Story.

The intent of this word is the rather to be looked after, by how much the less it is used in all the New Testament beside, and by how the more frequently in this Story. It is used in reference to the twelve Apostles alone, Chap. 1. 15. it is used here in reference to the whole hundred and twenty; and to the whole number of believers, Chap. 2. 46.

Now the reason why the Evangelist doth so often harp upon this string and circumstance of ὁμοθυμαδὸν, or of their conversing together with one accord, may be either in respect of the twelve, and one hundred and twenty, or in respect of all the believers.

First, The Apostles had been exceedingly subject in the lifetime of Christ, to quarelsomness and contention about priority, and who should be the chiefest, as Mark 9. 34. Mark 20. 24. Yea, even at the very Table of the Lords last Passover and Supper, Luke 22. 24. And therefore it hath its singular weight and significancy, and sheweth a peculiar fruit of Christs breathing the Holy Ghost upon them, Joh. 20. 22. when it is related related that they now so sweetly and unanimously converse together without emulation, discord, or comparisons. Year of Christ XXXIII.

Secondly, The 108 Disciples were in a subordinate or lower form, in regard of some particulars, to the twelve Apostles; and yet was there no heart-burning, scorning, or envying, no disdaining, defying, or controlling of any one towards another; but all their demeanor carried in the unity of the Spirit, and the bond of Peace.

Thirdly, If those two places in Chap. 2. 46. & 5.12. be to be applied to the whole multitude of believers (of the latter there may be some scruple) the word ὁμοθυμαδὸν there doth singularly set out the sweet union that the Gospel had made among them, though they were of several Countries, several conditions, and several Sects; yet in ἁπλότητι καρδίας, in singleness of heart, as they did convenire in the tertio of the Gospel, so did they convenire affectionately inter se. And this began to be the accomplishment of those prophesies that had foretold the peacemaking of the Gospel, as *Esa.*11.6. & 60.18. & 65. 25. & 66.42. *Zeph.*3.9. &c. and it was an eminent fruit of Christs doctrine, Joh. 15.12. of his prayer, *Joh.*12.17. and of his legacy, *Joh.*14.27.

Vers. 2. Cloven Tongues like as of fire.
Vers. 3. They began to speak with other Tongues.

§. Of the gift of Tongues.

The confusion of Tongues was the casting off of the Heathen, *Gen.*11. For when they had lost that language in which alone God was spoken of and preached, they lost the knowledge of God and Religion utterly, and fell to worship the Creature in stead of the Creator, *Rom.*1.

Two thousand two hundred and three years had now passed, since that sad and fatal curse upon the world, the confusion of Languages; and millions of souls had it plunged in Error, Idolatry, and Confusion: And now the Lord in the fulness of time is providing, by the gifts of Tongues at Sion, to repair the knowledge of himself among those Nations that had lost that Jewel, by the confusion of Tongues at Babel.

The manner of exhibiting this gift, was in Tongues of fire, that the giving of the Holy Ghost at the initiating of the Christian Church, might answer and parallel the giving of the Law at the initiating of the Jewish; and so it did both in time and manner, that being given at Pentecost, and in appearing of fire; and so likewise this, as was said before.

Vers. 5. And there were dwelling at Jerusalem, Jews, &c.

It was indeed the Feast of Pentecost at this time at Jerusalem, but it was not the Feast of Pentecost that drew those Jews from all Nations thither.

First, It was not required by the Law, that these Jews that dwelt dispersed in other Nations should appear at Jerusalem at these Feasts.

Secondly, It was not possible they should so do, for then must they have done nothing else but go up thither, and get home again.

Thirdly, These Jews are said to dwell at Jerusalem, and they had taken up their residence and habitation there: but those that came up to the Festivals, stayed there but a few days, and so departed to their own homes.

The occasion therefore of these mens flocking so unanimously from all the Nations of the world, was not the Feast of Pentecost, but the general knowledge and expectation of the whole Nation of the Jews, that this was the time of Messias his appearing and coming among them.

This they had learned so fully from the Scriptures of the Old Testament, especially from *Dan.*9. that both the Gospel, and their own writers witness, that this was the expectation of the whole Nation, that the Messias was now ready to appear.

In the Scripture, these passages assert this matter, Luke 2.26. 38. & 3. 15. & 19. 11. and Joh. 1. 20, 21.

In the Hebrews own writings we may find divers that speak to the same matter, as that The Son of David shall come about the time when the Romans have reigned over Israel nine months, from Mic. 5.3. that his appearing shall be under the second Temple, that it shall be not very long before Jerusalem should be destroyed; and many such passages; fixing the time of the Messias his coming, to the very time that Jesus of Nazaret did appear and approve himself to be the Christ, as may be seen in Sanhedrin. cap. Helek. Galat. lib. 4. Jeronym. a Sancta Fide, Mornæus de Veritat. Christ. rel. And this so clearly and undeniably, that when the wretched and blasphemous Jews cannot tell what to say to their own Doctors, that assert the time so punctually agreeable to the time of Christs appearing, they have found out

Year of Christ XXXIII. out this damnable and curſed way to ſuppreſs that truth, as to curſe all thoſe that ſhall be induſtrious to compute theſe times; for they have this common execration תפח רוחן של מחשבי קצין Let their ſpirit burſt, or expire, that compute the times.

And to theſe aſſertions of the Jews own Authors concerning this opinion of their Nation; we may add alſo the teſtimony of Suetonius, affirming the very ſame thing, Percrebuerat Oriente toto, ſaith he, vetus & conſtans opinio, eſſe in fatis ut eo tempore Judea profecti rerum potirentur: In Veſpaſ. And ſo likewiſe Tacitus, Pluribus perſuaſio inerat, antiquis ſacerdotum literis contineri, eo ipſo tempore fore, ut valeſceret Oriens, profectique Judea rerum potirentur, Hiſtor. lib. 5. That is, An old and conſtant opinion had grown through the whole Eaſt, that it was foretold, that at that time ſome coming out of Judea ſhould obtain the rule of things: And many were perſwaded, that it was contained in the old records of the Prieſts, that at that very time the Eaſt ſhould prevail, and ſome coming out of Judea ſhould obtain the rule: which, though the blind Authors apply to Veſpaſian and Titus their obtaining of the Empire, yet there can be no Chriſtian eye but will obſerve, that this opinion that was ſo prevalent, regarded matters of an higher nature, namely, the coming of Chriſt, and the conqueſt of the world by the Goſpel, which came forth from Judea, and the word of the Lord from Jeruſalem.

And to theſe might be added that Eclogue of Virgil, which is titled Pollio, in which he doth clearly ſpeak of a new world then beginning, of a child to come from Heaven, of a wondrous repair of the world in point of happineſs, and the like; that it cannot be doubted but this ſame opinion was got into the Weſt alſo, as well as in the Eaſt, very many of the Jews being there alſo, and raiſing this expectation, as well as in the other place.

So that this expectation and thought being ſo general among all the Nations of the Jews, yea, among other Nations alſo; that this was the time that the Kingdom of God in the coming of Chriſt ſhould appear; this was it that brought ſuch multitudes to Jeruſalem about this time out of all Nations under Heaven, to ſee the accompliſhing of thoſe things that they ſo earneſtly and eagerly longed and looked after: and this made them to take up their dwellings and reſidence in Jeruſalem, and to reſolve to ſettle there; for that though they were acquainted with the time of Chriſts coming, yet were they not acquainted with the manner of his Kingdom, but expected that it ſhould be earthly and pompous, and his Royal ſeat in Jeruſalem, as the Diſciples themſelves opinionated; yea, even after long converſe with Chriſt himſelf, Matth. 20. 20. Acts 1. 6. And therefore theſe men make ſure to get into Canaan out of other Countries, and to get houſes in Jeruſalem, that they might ſhare in this pomp and proſperity which they expected.

It was not therefore Pentecoſt that brought them thither, nor were they flitting Gueſts there, to be gone home as ſoon as Pentecoſt was over, but they were κατοικοῦντες dwellers and reſident there, and when they were converted to the Chriſtian Faith by thouſands, they had their Congregations.

Verſ 9. Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, &c.

The Text ſpeaketh of Jews of all Nations under Heaven now dwelling at Jeruſalem, and yet it reckoneth but fifteen here, which were not all the Nations in the World; no, nor all that were in the Roman Empire, by very many: but to omit the Hyperboles that the Scripture uſeth very commonly, as Cities walled up to Heaven, ſhooting at an haire, and not miſs, &c. The languages here ſpoken of, took up all the Nations where it is imaginable any Jews were ſcattered at this time through the world. [If ſo be they were not alſo all the languages that were ſpoken at Babel:] as to take example of one or two; the Parthian, Median, Perſian, and Meſopotamian, were the Tongues that ſerved all the Eaſtern diſperſion; and all the Jews that had been Captivated by the two firſt Monarchies, Babylonian and Perſian, whereſoever they were, in Eaſt or North, ſpake ſome of theſe Languages, throughout the vaſt ſpace of that their ſcattering. For to inſtance in the Meſopotamian only; how many large and mighty Countries ſpake that one Tongue? Aſſyria, Chaldea, Meſopotamia, Syria, Cæloſyria, to inquire no further; all theſe ſpake that Chaldee Language, ſo certainly, that there needeth not the leaſt pains to prove it. And Judea was faln into the ſame Tongue now alſo; but with ſo much difference from the Meſopotamian, Syriack, or Chaldee, that here it is nominated as a Language diſtinct: And this ſheweth the reaſon of the Phraſe, κατοικοῦντες τὴν Μεσοποταμίαν Ἰουδαίαν: that he might diſtinguiſh the Syriack of Judea and of Chaldea aſunder: that thoſe that dwelt in Meſopotamia heard their Syriack, and thoſe that dwelt in Judea heard theirs. Or if we ſhould inſtance in the Cretan Tongue, that is here intended: the Iſland of Crete was but of a ſmall compaſs, but the Language of Crete reacht all over Greece, not to ſearch how far it reacht further. And the like might be obſerved of other of the Tongues that are here mentioned.

So

So that it is hard to find, if not impossible, any Jews at this time under Heaven, where one or other of these Languages here mentioned were not spoken vulgarly in that Country where they were; and so may we very properly understand that phrase, there were Jews of all Nations under Heaven, now gathered to Jerusalem. Year of Christ XXXIII.

Now as it was impossible for these to understand one another in the Languages of the Countries where they were born; for it was impossible an Arabian should understand a Cretan, or a Cretan an Arabian, a Parthian a Roman, or a Roman a Parthian; and so in the most of the rest; so was it impossible they should all of them understand any one Tongue, either Hebrew or Syriack, which are the likeliest to suppose, or whatsoever else may be supposed.

For first, how easie is it to shew how the Hebrew Tongue was utterly lost among them from common use; and how the Syriack which was in common use in Judea, yet was unknown to them in other Countries, as appeareth by the necessity of the Chaldee Targum, by the most familiar use of the Septuagint, by the writings of Philo and Josephus, and others of the Jews themselves.

Secondly, If they could have understood any one Language, which was as the common Language of the Nation; then was the gift of Tongues most utterly needless: for why should the Apostles speak divers Languages to them that could have all of them understood one Tongue? Tongues indeed were given for a sign, 1 Cor. 14.22. but this was not the proper end for which they were given, but for instruction and edification; and as was said before, for acquainting those Nations with the knowledge of God, which had lost it and him, by the loss of the Hebrew Tongue. And if the Jews had understood all of them one Tongue, this gift had been needless to have been given till the Apostles were to go to preach to the Heathens.

This then being past all denial, that these Jews of several Nations, could neither understand one another in the Tongue of the Country where they were born, nor understand any one Language as common to them all; it is past all denial also, that when they were converted to Christianity, they were severed into divers Congregations; for else it was impossible for them to joyn together in Publick Worship.

Vers. 13. Others mocking said, these men are full of new Wine.

Malice is often sensless and reasonless in her accusations, especially, when it is bent against Religion: Yet can I not hold these men so stupid and sensless, or so shameless and impudent, as either to think that drunkenness could make men speak Languages which they never understood before: or if they thought not so, yet to go about to perswade the people so. But their words proceed from this occasion as I should suppose; these Folks that mocked were Natives of Jerusalem or Judea, and not understanding the Languages of the Nations there present, they could not tell that the Disciples spake those strange Languages when they did speak them; but conceived they had babbled some foolish gibberish, and canting, they themselves could make nothing of, as drunken men are used to do. And this caused their so wretched a construction of so Divine a Gift. For the Jews of the strange Nations and Languages, that perceived and understood that the Disciples did speak in their Languages; were amazed, and said one to another, What meaneth this? Vers. 12. But these other Jews, Natives of Jerusalem and Judea, that understood only their own Syriack, and did not understand that they spake strange Languages indeed, these mocked and said, These men are full of new, or sweet wine: grounding their accusation the rather, because that Pentecost was a feasting and rejoycing time, Deut. 16. 11.

And according to this conception it is observable, that Peter begins his speech, Ye men of Judea.

Vers. 14. But Peter standing up with the eleven said, &c.

Reason it self, if the Text did not, would readily resolve, that it was not Peter alone that converted the 3000 that are mentioned after; but that the rest of the Apostles were sharers with him in that work: For if Peter must be held the only Orator at this time, then must it needs be granted, that either the 3000 which were converted were all of one Language; or that the one Language that he spake, seemed to the hearers to be divers Tongues; or that he rehearsed the same speech over and over again in divers Languages; any of which to grant, is sensless and ridiculous; and yet unless we will run upon some of these absurdites, we may not deny, that the rest of the twelve preached now as well as Peter.

But the Text, besides this, gives us these arguments to conclude the matter to be undoubted:

First,

Year of Christ XXXIII. Firſt, It ſaith, Peter ſtood forth with the eleven, verſ. 14. Now, why ſhould the eleven be mentioned ſtanding forth, as well as Peter, if they ſpake not as well as he? They might as well have ſitten ſtill, and Peters excuſe of them would as well have ſerved the turn. It was not Peter alone that ſtood forth to excuſe the eleven, but Peter and the eleven that ſtood forth to excuſe the reſt of the hundred and twenty.

Secondly, It is ſaid, They were pricked in their hearts, and ſaid to Peter, and to the reſt of the Apoſtles, What ſhall we do? Why ſhould they queſtion and ask counſel of the reſt of the Apoſtles as well as Peter, if they had not preached as well as he?

Thirdly, And it is a confirmation that ſo they did, in that it is ſaid, Verſ. 42. They continued in the Doctrine of the Apoſtles; of the reſt, as well as Peter.

Fourthly, If that were the occaſion that we mentioned why they ſuſpected the Apoſtles and the reſt drunk; then will it follow, that Peter preached and ſpake in the Syriack Tongue, chiefly to thoſe Jews of Judea and Jeruſalem that would not believe, becauſe they could not underſtand that the Diſciples ſpake ſtrange Languages, but thought they canted ſome drunken gibberiſh: And to give ſome probability of this, not only his preface, Ye men of Judea; but alſo his laying flatly the murder of Chriſt to their charge, Verſ. 22. 23. do help to confirm it; and the concluſion of his Sermon, and of the ſtory in the Evangeliſt doth ſet it home, that if Peter preached not only to theſe Natives of Judea, yet that he only preached not at this time, but that the others did the like with him, in that it is ſaid, They that gladly received his words were baptized; and then as ſpeaking of another ſtory, he ſaith, there were added about the ſame day 3000 ſouls.

Now the reaſon why Peters Sermon is only recorded, and the ſtory more ſingularly fixed on him, we obſerved before.

§. Brief obſervations upon ſome paſſages in Peters Sermon.

Verſ. 15. [It is but the third hour of the day] And on theſe ſolemn Feſtival days, they uſed not to eat or drink any thing till high noon; as Baronius would obſerve out of Joſephus and Acts 10.

Verſ. 17. [In the laſt days] The days of the Goſpel: becauſe there is no way of ſalvation to be expected beyond the Goſpel: whereas there was the Goſpel beyond the law; and the law beyond the light of the ages before it. Yet is this moſt properly to be underſtood of thoſe days of the Goſpel that were before Jeruſalem was deſtroyed: And the phraſe the laſt days uſed here and in divers other places is not to be taken for the laſt days of the world, but for the laſt days of Jeruſalem: the deſtruction of which and the rejection of the Jews is reputed the end of that old world, and the coming in of the Gentiles under the Goſpel, is as a new world, and is accordingly called a new Heaven and a new Earth.

[Upon all fleſh] Upon the Heathens and Gentiles as well as upon the Jews, Act. 10.45. contrary to the axiome of the Jewiſh Schools: שכינה לא שורה בחוצה לארץ The divine Majeſty dwelleth not on any out of the Land of Iſrael.

Verſ. 20. [Before the great and notable day of the Lord come.] The day of Jeruſalems deſtruction, which was forty years after this, as was obſerved before: ſo that all theſe gifts, and all the effuſion of the Spirit that were to be henceforward, were to be within the time, betwixt this Pentecoſt and Jeruſalem deſtroyed. And they that from hence would preſage prophetick and miraculous gifts, and viſions, and revelations to be towards the end of the world, might do better to weigh, what the expreſſion, The great and terrible day of the Lord, meaneth here and elſewhere in the Prophets.

The blood of the Son of God, the fire of the Holy Ghoſts appearance, the vapour of the ſmoke in which Chriſt aſcended, the Sun darkned, and the Moon made blood at his paſſion, were all accompliſhed upon this point of time; and it were very improper to look for the accompliſhment of the reſt of the propheſie I know not how many hundreds or thouſands of years after.

Verſ. 24. [Having looſed the pains of death;] or rather, Having diſſolved the pains of death; meaning in reference to the people of God; namely, that God raiſed up Chriſt, and by his reſurrection diſſolved and deſtroyed the pangs and power of death upon his own people.

Verſ. 27. [Thou wilt not leave my ſoul.] οὐκ ἐγκαταλείψεις, i. e. Thou wilt not give my ſoul up. And why ſhould not the very ſame words, My God, my God, ἵνα τί με ἐγκατέλιπες, be tranſlated to the ſame purpoſe, Why haſt thou left me, and given me up to ſuch hands, and ſhame and tortures; rather than to intricate the ſenſe, with a ſurmiſe of Chriſts ſpiritual deſertion?

[In Hell,] Gr. Hades: the ſtate of ſouls departed: but their condition differenced, according to the difference of their qualities; Καὶ γὰρ εἰς ᾅδου δύο τόπους νομίζομεν· Μίαν δικαίων, ἑτέραν δ' ἀδίκων εἶναι ψυχῶν. Diphilus apud Clem. Alex. Strom. 5.

Verſ.

Vers. 38. [Be baptized in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ.] Not that their Baptism was not administred in the Name of the Father and the Holy Ghost also; but that he would specially work them up to the acknowledgment of Christ. For the Father and the Holy Ghost they acknowledged without any scrupling, but to own Christ for God, whom they had crucified, and to be initiated into Jesus of Nazaret; was the great work that the Apostles went about to work upon them: and therefore especially endeavour to enter them into Jesus, and to have them baptized in his Name. Year of Christ XXXIII.

[Be baptized and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.] Not that every one that was baptized, was presently indued with these extraordinary gifts of Tongues and Prophesie, for they were bestowed hence-forward by imposition of the Apostles hands; save only when they first fell from Heaven upon the company of Cornelius, to compleat that Prophesie which now had its beginning, I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; but Peter inviteth them into Baptism, and then should they be capable of those gifts; and no doubt they were bestowed upon some of them by the Apostles hands.

Vers. 42. And in breaking of Bread.

The Syriack expresly understandeth this of partaking of the Lords Supper, for he useth the very Greek word Eucharistia here. And so divers take that to be the meaning of this phrase, both here, and in some places else in the New Testament: Yea, even they that suppose that it meaneth partaking of their common meals and food; yet do they think that they had the Sacrament added to it, as our Saviour added it to the Passover. And indeed the manner of speech doth signifie both the one and the other, both ordinary meals, and the receiving of the Sacrament, as in Luke 24. 35. He was known of them * in breaking of bread; here it meaneth a common Supper in the Inn at Emmaus: 1 Cor. 10.16. The bread which we break is it not the communion of the body of Christ? Here it betokeneth the receiving of the Sacrament. But it may be conceived to intend the Sacrament the rather, and chiefly, if not only.

* ב importeth the time here, and so the Syriack reads it, כד קצא As he was breaking bread.

First, Because the phrase of breaking of bread for common eating, is very rare both in the Old Testament and Jewish Authors; but eating of bread is the expression that speaketh that.

And secondly, because breaking of the bread in the Sacrament, is a concomitant that cannot be parted from it, for Ἀνακλάσας ἔκλασε, he blessed and brake, and said, this is my body which is broken, 1 Cor. 11.24.

Vers. 44. And all that believed were together.

This Greek word ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ is of frequent and of various use in the Septuagint. It sometimes betokeneth the meeting of persons in the same company, as Josh. 11.5. Judg. 6.33. & 19. 6, &c. so of Beasts, Deut. 22. 10. Sometimes their concurring in the same action, though not in the same company or place, as Psal. 2.2. & 34. 3. & 49.2. & 74. 6. & 83.3. &c. Sometimes their concurring in the same condition, as Psal. 46. 10. & 62. 9. Esa. 66. 17. Jer. 6. 12. And sometimes their knitting together though in several companies, as Joabs and Abners men, though they sat at distance, and the pool of Gibeon between them, yet are they said συναντᾶν ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, 2 Sam. 2. 13. And in this sense is the word to be understood in this story: For it is past all imagination or conceiving, that all those thousands of believers that were now in Jerusalem, should keep all of one company and knot, and not part asunder, for what house would hold them? But they kept in several Companies or Congregations, according as their Languages, Nations, or other references did knit them together. And this joyning together, because it was apart from those that believed not, and because it was in the same profession and practise of the duties of Religion; therefore it is said to be ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ, though it were in several companies and Congregations. And to such a sense doth Rabbi Solomon understand the ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ in Deut. 25. 5. as indeed it must of necessity be understood, not of brethren dwelling in the very same place, but of brethren מיוחדים בנחלה that are united in inheritance; as these believers were now in the Gospel. And so is the building of the Jews to be understood, Ezra 4. 5. ἡμᾶς αὐτοὶ ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ οἰκοδομήσομεν, in separation from the Samaritans, and in joyning in the action, though they were of several companies in the building, and those companies far distant one from another, Neh. 3. per totum. & 4. 19.

Vers. 46. Continuing daily with one accord in the Temple.

This is not to express, that the Temple was their meeting place, either for hearing of their Sermons, or administring the Sacraments, for neither of these would have been indured there, as appeareth, Chap. 4.1. but this is to shew that they had not yet shaken off all

Year of Christ XXXIII. all the Worship of the Temple, nor the observance of Moses, but resorted thither to the duties of Religion, at the hours of prayer, as they had done before. For many years after this, the believing Jews were still tenacious of the Law, and reverential of the Temple, Acts 21.20. which they might lawfully be while the Temple stood, if their observance of Moses did not destroy in them the doctrine and application of their justification by faith in Christ. And hence was it that the Apostles did so far comply with them both in that place in Acts 21. and also in Acts 15. because Moses was to stand till the Temple fell, those Rites not nullifying the death of Christ, if rightly used.

ACTS. CHAP. III.

Vers. 1. Peter and John went up together into the Temple.

IT may be this was likewise on Pentecost day; and ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ doth signifie identity of time: as it doth, 2 Sam. 21.9. and in the Chaldee of Jonathan on *Deut.*25.5. And the ninth hour mentioned here in reference to the third hour in preceding story, Chap. 2.15. at nine a clock in the morning was that conversion of 3000, and at three a clock in the afternoon this of 5000. Howsoever, whether it were on that day, or no; certainly it was on some solemn day, either a Sabbath or Festival, as appeareth by the number that were then present in the Temple, when so many of them were converted. For ordinarily on the common days of the week, the company that was in the Temple was very few, besides the Priests and the Stationary men (אנשי מעמד as they are called by the Rabbins) which were a number of men chosen to be constantly there, to represent the whole Congregation, in laying their hands on the heads of the Sacrifices in their behalf. This concourse of people on such a solemn day, was a fit subject and opportunity for these Apostles to work upon; and that in all probability was the main induction that brought them into the Temple at this time. That they should go thither to institute the Canonical hours by their own example, as Baronius dreameth, is a fancy that far better deserveth laughter, than any answer.

Vers. 2. The gate of the Temple which was called Beautiful.

This was the Gate that entred into the second Court, or out of the Court of the Gentiles, into the Court of the Jews: And there this Creeple lay, begging of the Jews that came into the Temple, but disdaining, as it seemeth, to beg of the Gentiles. This seemeth to be that gate that Josephus calleth the Corinthiack Gate, and which he describeth to be of so much gorgiousness and bravery, *de Bello Jud. lib.*5.14. and which we shall have occasion to describe in another work, fully and on set purpose.

Vers. 11. The porch called Solomons.

Not that the very porch built by Solomon was now standing, for that was burnt and destroyed by the Babylonians, as well as the rest of the Temple, but because this was built on the very same pile that his was built upon. For the Temple standing upon an high and steep hill, with a deep and sharp precipice about it; Solomon to make room for the floor of the mount, which was too strait, filled up the ditch on the East side with huge stones strongly joynted together, and he built his porch upon that pile; and because this of Herods was erected also upon that very same foundation, it therefore is called Solomons porch. It was the first gate or entrance into the mountain of the House; and not only the very building of the porch, but the Court within bare the same name, Josephus ubi supra.

Vers. 12. And when Peter saw it, he answered, &c.

Here Peters Sermon is registred again, but Chap. 4. 1. it is said, As they spake, which resolveth that John preached as well as he.

Vers. 16. Through faith in his name, &c.

Faith is twice named in this verse, because of the Apostles faith in doing, and the Creeples faith in receiving the miracle; the former was πίστις διὰ χριστοῦ: the latter πίστις τῷ χριστῷ or τῷ ὀνόματι.

Vers.

Year of Christ XXXIII.

Vers. 17. Through ignorance ye did it.

So Christ said himself, Luke 23.34. Father forgive them, for they know not what they do. This their ignorance proceeded mainly from mistaking the place of Christs birth, for they supposed it had been Nazaret; and from mistaking the Kingdom of the Messias, for they expected it would have been pompous, and full of worldly glory; the title on the Cross, Jesus of Nazaret King of the Jews, spake out both the ignorances that carried them on to so wretched an act.

Vers. 19. When the times of refreshing shall come.

Ὅπως ἂν ἔλθωσι: The Syriack readeth it, That your sins may be blotted out, and the times of refreshing may come: and so the Arabick and Ireneus, or at least his interpreter cited by Beza; the Vulgar, ut cum venerint, but concludeth not the clause to make it sense. Beza, postquam venerint, but what sense he would make of it, I do not well understand. He pleadeth much to prove that ὅπως ἂν doth signifie postquam, and it is not denied him, but he cannot deny withal that it signifieth ut likewise: and so may it best, and most properly be understood, That your sins may be blotted out, so that the times of refreshing may come. The Apostle Peter taketh his speech from *Esa.*28.12. where the Prophet at once propheseth of the gift of Tongues, vers. 11. of the preaching of the Gospel, *vers.*12: and the infidelity and obduration of the Jews, *vers.*13. and speaketh of these very times and occasions that are now in hand: And accordingly is the Apostle to be understood that speaketh from him, concerning the present refreshing by the Gospel, and Gods present sending Christ among them in the power and Ministery of that, and not of a refreshing at the calling of the Jews which is yet to come; and Gods sending Christ personally to come and reign among them, as some have dreamed, and it is but a dream: For let but this Text be seriously weighed in that sense that opinion would make of it; Repent therefore and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come: As meaning this, Repent you now, that your sins may be blotted out, 2000, or I know not how many hundred years hence, when the calling of the Jews shall come: If this be not the sense that they make of this Text, that produce it to assert Christs personal reign on earth for a thousand years; I know not why they should then produce it; and if this be the sense, I must confess I see no sense in it. The words are facil and clear, and have no intricacy at all in them, if the Scripture may be suffered to go upon its own wheels; and they may be taken up in this plain and undeniable Paraphrase; Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out; so that the times of refreshing by the Gospel may come upon you from the presence of the Lord; and he may send Jesus Christ in the preaching of the Gospel to you, to bless you in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.

Vers. 20. And he send Jesus Christ.

As Vers. 26. God having raised his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you: Now this cannot possibly be understood of Christs personally and visibly coming among them; for who of this audience ever saw him after his Resurrection? But of his coming among them now in this means and offer of Salvation: and in the same sense is this clause in hand to be understood: and so the 22 verse interpreteth it of the sending of Christ as the great Prophet, to whom whosoever will not hearken must be cut off: Not at the end of the world when he shall come as a Judge; but in the Gospel which is his voice, and which to refuse to hearken to, is condemnation. Peters exhortation therefore is to repentance, that their sins might be blotted out, so that refreshing times might come upon them, and Christ in the Gospel might be sent among them, according as Moses had foretold, that he should be the great instructer of the people.

5. Which before was preached unto you.

The very sense of the place confirmeth this reading: for though Beza saith, that all the old Greek Copies that ever he saw, as also the Syrian, Arabick, and Tertullian read it προκαταισεσμένον, fore-ordained; yet the very scope and intention of Peters speech in this place doth clearly shew that it is to be read, προκεκηρυγμένον, which before was preached to you, namely by Moses, or the Law, *vers.*22. and by all the Prophets, *vers.*24.

Year of Christ XXXIII.

Verſ. 21. Until the reſtitution of all things.

Or the accompliſhment of all things, and to that ſenſe the Syriack tranſlates it, until the fulneſs of the time of all things, &c. And the Arabick did not much different, until the time in which all things ſhall be perfected, or finiſhed, &c. The Greek word ἀποκατάστασις indeed ſignifieth a reſtitution to a former eſtate, a repairing, or an amending, as might be frequently ſhewed in Greek Writers, but in Scripture doth not ſo properly ſignifie this, as what the Rabbins would expreſs by קיומות or התקיומות a fulfilling or accompliſhing: and the Prepoſition ἀπὸ doth not ſo much ſtand in the force of Re, or again, but it ſtands in oppoſition to ἀ privative in ἀνάπαυσις, which ſignifieth unſetled or unconfirmed, and ſo ἀποκατάστασις πόλεως is oppoſed to κίνημα, Polyb. Hiſt. lib. 4. Settlement of a City to tumult. And to take up theſe two places where this word is uſed in the New Teſtament, Matth. 17. 11. and here. Elias indeed ſhall firſt come, ἀποκαθιστάνει πάντα: and ſhall reſtore all things: What? To their former eſtate? Nay, that the Baptiſt did not, for he brought them into a clean different eſtate to their former: or he ſhall amend all things? That is true indeed, ſo the Baptiſt did, but how will this place in hand bear that ſenſe, which ſpeaketh not of the mending of all things, but of their ending? And how improper would either of theſe ſenſes run in this verſe, Till the reſtoring of all things to their former eſtate, which God hath ſpoken by the mouth of his Prophets? Or till the amending of all things which God hath ſpoken by his Prophets: But clear and facil is that ſenſe that is given, Till the accompliſhment of all things that God hath ſpoken by the mouth of his Prophets? The things which God had ſpoken by the mouth of his Prophets from the beginning of the world were, Chriſts victory over Satan in the Salvation of all his people; his conqueſt of the laſt enemy, Death; the calling of the Jews, the fulneſs of the Gentiles, &c. and how can theſe things be ſaid to be reſtored, or amended? They may moſt fitly be ſaid to be accompliſhed, perfected, or performed: and ſo muſt the ſame words be rendred of the Baptiſt, Elias truly cometh and accompliſheth all things, that are written of him, and ſo muſt the Son of man do all things that are written of him; as Mark follows the ſenſe, Mark 9. 12.

Verſ. 24. All the Prophets from Samuel.

He is reckoned the firſt of the Prophets after Moſes.

Firſt, Becauſe Propheſie from the death of Moſes to the riſing of Samuel was very rare, 1 Sam. 3. 1, 2.

Secondly, Becauſe he was the firſt Prophet after Moſes that wrote his Propheſie. From the beginning of Samuels rule, to the beginning of the captivity in Babel, was 490 years, and from the end of that captivity to the death of Chriſt, 490 years more, and the 70 years captivity, the midſt of years between, as I have ſhewed elſewhere: But I muſt advertiſe the Reader here, that the beginning of Samuels Propheticknes in this reckoning, is not from the death of Eli, but from one and twenty years after. And here let me take up a verſe of as much difficulty, and of as little obſerving of it, as almoſt any in the Old Teſtament: as that is 1 Sam. 7. 2. And it came to paſs while the Ark abode at Kiriath-jearim, that the time was long; for it was twenty years: and all the houſe of Iſrael lamented after the Lord. Now the Ark was undeniably above forty years in Kiriath-jearim; namely, all the time from Elies death, till David fetcht it to Jeruſalem, which was ſeven and forty years, and ſomewhat above, only that firſt excepted, in which it was ſeven months in the Land of the Philiſtims, 1 Sam. 6. 1. and a little time in Bethſhemeſh; what then ſhould be the reaſon that it is ſaid to be in Kiriath-jearim only twenty years? Why, the meaning is not that that was all the time that it was there, but that it was there ſo long a time, before the people ever hearkned after it. Their idolatry and corruption of Religion had ſo tranſported them, that they thought not of, nor took regard to the Ark of God for twenty years together: Then all the houſe of Iſrael lamented after the Lord: for ſo muſt it be rendred; and not, And all the houſe of Iſrael, &c.

And ſo have we one and twenty years taken up from the Death of Eli till this time of Iſraels repentance, which yet are counted to Samuels forty, but are not reckoned in the account of Habakkuk, of the extent of the race of the Prophets.

Upon this place therefore we may take up theſe pertinent obſervations.

Firſt, That God did now on a ſuddain pour a ſpirit of Reformation generally upon all the people of Iſrael after a long time of prophaneneſs and Idolatry. They had been exceedingly prophane in the time of Elies ſons: And therefore the Lord in juſtice forſook his Tabernacle in Shiloh, the Tent which he had pitched beſides Adam, when Iſrael paſſed through Jordan, Joſh. 3. 16. Pſal. 78. 60. and he gave the Ark into the Enemies hand; yet was not Iſrael humbled for it, The Ark was reſtored to them, and was among them them twenty years together, and they continued in their Idolatry still, and never sought after it, nor took it to heart. At last, upon a suddain, and with a general conversion, Israel begins to turn to the Lord, and lament after him, and forsake their Idols. Year of Christ XXXIII.

Secondly, Here was a strange and wondrous spirit of conversion poured upon the people at the beginning of the race of the Prophets, as there was at the end of it, in these Chapters of the Acts of the Apostles.

Thirdly, As the practise here in the Acts, was to repent and to be baptized; so was it then with Israel; as that expression may most properly be interpreted, vers.6. They drew water and poured it out before the Lord, as washing or baptizing themselves from their Idolatry.

Vers. 25. Ye are the children of the Prophets.

That is, the Scholars or Disciples of them, as the phrase, The children of the Prophets, is ordinarily used in the Old Testament, 2 King. 2. &c. and Amos 7. 14. I was neither Prophet, no Prophets son; that is, nor Prophets Scholar. And Matth. 11.19. Wisdom is justified of her children; that is, of her Disciples.

ACTS. CHAP. IV.

Vers. 1. The Captain of the Temple.

THIS was the Captain of that Guard, or Garison which was placed in the Tower of Antonia, for the guard of the Temple. This Tower stood in the North-east corner of the wall that parted the mountain of the House from the City. It was built by Hyrcanus the Asmonean, the High Priest, and there he himself dwelt, and there he used to lay up the holy Garments of the Priest-hood, whensoever he put them off, having done the Service of the Temple, Joseph. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 6. Herod repaired this Tower, and bestowed much cost upon it, and in honour of Antony, named it Antonia; and fortified it, that it might be a guard for the Temple; and as in former times, so still were the holy Robes laid up there all his time, and all the time of Archelaus his Son: after the removal of Archelaus, from his Kingdom, and the confiscation of his estate, this Tower came into the Romans hands, and was kept as a Guard or Garison by them; and the High Priests garments laid up there under their power, till Vitellius, as we shall see hereafter, did restore them to the Jews own keeping. Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 15. So that the Captain here meant, is the Captain that was over the Company that kept this Castle: a Roman Commander, and he joyning with the Priests and Sadduces to hinder the Gospel, and imprison the Disciples; the Jews and Romans do again conspire, as they had done against Christ, so now against his Apostles, *Psal.*2.1,2.

There was a chief Captain that was Governour of the whole Garison at Hierusalem, as Chap.21.33. & 24.7. and his several Companies lay placed in several Courts of Guard about the City; among the rest this was one, within the virge of the Temple, the greatest badge and sign of all other of the Jews present servitude and subjection, when their very Temple and service had a heathen bridle put upon it. And thus did the abomination of desolation begin to creep in, and to stand in the place where it ought not.

Vers. 2. Being grieved that they taught the people.

This grievance of the Priests, Sadduces, and Captain of the Temple, proceeded from several principles and causes. The Captains distaste was for fear the business should tend to innovation or tumult: the Sadduces, because they preached the Resurrection of the dead, which they denied, Chap.23.8. the Priests, because they being private men, went about to teach the people; and chiefly, because they preached the Resurrection through Jesus.

Through Jesus the Resurrection from the dead.

Though the whole Nation did so generally assert and hold the Resurrection of the dead (the Sadduces only excepted) that they made the deniers of this point, one of the three Parties that should never have part in the world to come: as they speak in the Talmud, in the Tractate of Sanhed. Perek. Helek. These are they that have no portion in the world to come, he that saith, The Resurrection of the dead is not taught from the Law, and he that saith, That the Law is not from Heaven, and Epicures: Yet was this no less than heresie in their esteem; to teach that the Resurrection of the dead was either ἐν τῷ Ἰησοῦ, proved and experienced in Jesus; or ἐν τῷ Ἰησοῦ, by the power and efficacy of Jesus; that either Jesus was risen, or that he should be the Author of the Resurrection.

Year of Christ XXXIII.

Vers. 4. And the number of the men was about five thousand.

The 5000 mentioned here, were the number of Converts, and not of Auditors; and they were a single number by themselves, and not an addition to the 3000 mentioned before, to make them five thousand.

For, first, the Holy Ghost intendeth in this Book to shew the power of the Gospel, rather than the bare preaching of it, and how many it converted, rather than how many heard it.

Secondly, The juncture of the verse is so close and facil that none can understand it any otherwise than of the number of believers, unless it be for very captiousness; for the Text saith, that many of them that heard the word believed. And how many was that many? Namely, 5000 men.

For, thirdly, how ridiculous were it to interpret that the Holy Ghost should tell us, that there was an audience in the Temple of 5000 men? Why, Josephus saith, that generally, every course of the Priests contained so many: And it would be utterly strange, if the Holy Ghost, which in all the Bible never numbred an audience at the Temple, no, not when he was intentionally writing of the service and assembly there, should do it now when he is purposely upon a story of men converted to the Gospel.

Again, That this is an intire sum different from the 3000 in the second Chapter, is plain by the very story in hand.

For, first, it is a discourse concerning a miracle done by Peter and John; and all the Chapter to the three and twentieth verse, keeps close to that relation: and what reason possibly can be given, that this clause only should start from it?

Secondly, It were an uncouth manner of reckoning, and such as the Scripture is utterly unacquainted with, to number 5000, and to mean but 2000; and never to give any notice that it so meaneth.

Thirdly, The number of the men were 5000. Of what men? Of those which heard the word. What word? The word preached by Peter and John, vers. 1. and not the word preached on Pentecost day by all the Apostles. Thus is the Church become 8000 numerous by two Sermons; besides the multitudes that were believers before, and those whose conversion is not summed.

Vers. 5. Their Elders, Rulers, and Scribes, &c.

In this Councel and Consistory that was now gathered, the Evangelist exhibiteth variety of members:

First, Their Rulers: or the Chief Priests, the heads of the twenty four courses.

Secondly, Scribes: or other Doctors of the Tribe of Levi.

Thirdly, Elders: or the Seniors and Senators of the other Tribes.

Fourthly, Annas, the Nasi; or President of the Sanhedrin.

Fifthly, Caiaphas the High Priest, the Ab beth din, the father of the Court.

Sixthly, John, as it seemeth, the son of Annas: the Governour of Gophins and Acrabatena in the time of Nero, Joseph. de bello, lib. 2. cap. 25.

Seventhly, Alexander, called also Lysimachus and Alabarcha, of whom we shall have occasion to discourse afterward.

Eighthly, As many as were of the High Priests kindred, Brethren or Cosens of that family: so that by this concourse of all these at this time, divers of whose employment and residence was at distance, it may be the rather supposed that this was at some solemn Festival that had brought them all to Jerusalem.

Vers. 7. And when they had set them in the midst.

The Sanhedrin sate in half the floor in a circle, Rambam. Sanhedrin, Per. 1. Those who had any thing to do in the Court, stood or sate in the midst of them, Luke 2.46.

§. By what name have you done this.

So did they very foolishly conceit that the very naming some names might do wonders, as Acts 19.13. and the Talmud. in Shab. forgeth that Ben Satda (they have a blasphemous meaning in this expression) wrought miracles, by putting the mutterable name within the skin of his foot, and there sewing it up.

Vers. 11. This is the stone which was set at nought.

In Psal. 118.22. which is the place from which this speech is taken, is λίθον ὃν ἀπεδοκίμασαν, the stone refused, and so is it, Matth. 21.42. and that according to the Hebrew Text: but here the Apostle heightens the expression, that he may set home their abuse of Christ nearer to their hearts, and may shew the humiliation of Christ the more. The Syriack mindeth not this, but translates this place, and Matth. 21. 42. by the same word refused.

The Chaldee interpretation of the Psalm from whence the phrase is taken, is exceedingly conceited, it runneth thus. The youth which the builders refused among the sons of Jesse, obtained to be set for King and Governour. This was from the Lord, said the builders, and it is wondrous before us, said the sons of Jesse. This is the day which the Lord hath made, said the builders. Let us be glad and rejoyce in it, said the sons of Jesse. Save us now, said the builders. Prosper us now, said Jesse and his wife. Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, said the builders. Let them bless you from the house of the Lord, saith David.

The Lord give us light, said the Tribes of the house of Judah.

Tie the youth for a Festival sacrifice with cords, until ye offer him up, and pour his blood at the horns of the altar, said Samuel the Prophet, &c.

At which Psalm and place, how far the Chaldee in Bibliis Regiis, and the Chaldee in Bibliis Buxtorfianis, and Venetis do differ, it is worth the Learneds observation.

Vers. 13. And ignorant men.

Gr. ἰδιῶται a word exceedingly much taken into use by Jewish writers, and both in them and in Greeks, it signifieth, Private men, or men in no publick employment, and men of inferiour rank, and men ignorant or unskilful. Examples of all these significations might be alledged. Lucian, ὁ μὲν πολὺς ὄμιλος ἃς ἰδιώτας οἱ σοφοὶ καλοῦσι. The common multitude, whom wise men call Idiotæ. Galen. ἰατρικῆς ἰδιῶται, unskilful in Physick. Aben. Ezr. on Levit. 13. vers. 2. Aaron, that is, the Priest anointed in his stead, or one of his sons, that is, הכוהנים הריוטים Sacerdotes Idiotæ, the inferiour Priests. Rab. Sol. on Levit. 1. 1. To what purpose served the pausings? To give Moses space to understand between division and division, sense and sense קו להדיוט הלומר מן ההדיוט much more to a private man that learneth from a private man. זוקנפה.

In all these senses may it very well be applied here; and it is more than probable, all these senses were in the thoughts of the Councel concerning Peter and John at this time; they saw they were unlearned, private, inferiour, ignorant men, and thereupon they could not but wonder at the miracle and cure that they had wrought.

Vers. 23. They went to their own company.

That is, to the Society of the one hundred and twenty mentioned, Acts 1.15.

Vers. 25. Who by the mouth of thy Servant David, hath said, &c.

The second Psalm which owns not its Author in the Title, the Holy Ghost ascribeth here to David: and seemeth by this very passage to give us close intimation, that every Psalm that telleth not in its title who was the Author and Penman of it, is to be ascribed to David as the Penman. The rule of the Jews (that every Psalm that bears not the author of it in the title, is to be reputed of his making who was last named in a title before) is at a nonplus at these two first Psalms, and helps us nothing at all to understand who made them: and thereupon Aben Ezra conceiveth not that this second Psalm was made by David, but by some of the Singers. But this passage of the Apostles in their prayer, doth not only own David for the Compiler of this Psalm, but also teacheth us to own him so of every Psalm, whose Author is not mentioned in the title of it; as might be further confirmed if it were ad hic & nunc, from Psalm 96. & 105. & 107. & 132. compared with 1 Chron. 16. 7. The ancient Rabbins, and Doctors of the Jews, interpreted this Psalm concerning Christ, even as the Apostles do here, as it is confessed by Solomon Jarchi at his entrance into it, though himself, and some other latter Jews apply it to David, and it may be in spite to Christ.

Vers.

Year of Christ XXXIII.

Vers. 32, & 33. Community of goods.

This community of goods, howsoever it sorted and suited with the present state of the Church at Jerusalem at that time; yet can it not be taken up for an example or president for the time to come.

For, first, the thing was not done by command, but at the free disposal of whosoever was minded so to do, Acts 5.4.

Secondly, The Lands that were sold, were many of them out of the Land of Canaan; for the converts were Jews from all Nations, and one instance is given in the Land of Barnabas in Cyprus; now when these men were resolved to cleave to the Apostles, and not to return to their own Country; what good would their Lands in those forain Countries do them?

Thirdly, If these Lands and Houses were in Judea, as it is undoubted many of them were, it may be supposed that the faithful owners thereof took notice of the threatned destruction of Jerusalem, spoken of by our Saviour, and so would part with their estates for the benefit of the Church, before they should be surprized by the enemy.

And fourthly, Thus did God provide against persecution to come; that neither the poor of the Church should fall off through penury, nor the rich start back through worldly mindedness; but by a competent distribution among them, the one might have enough, and the other not too much.

And lastly, Such was the state of the Church at this time, as never was the like to be again. It was but newly born, it was all in one City, the most of the people far resident from their own houses, all in a possibility to be scattered by persecution, they could not tell how soon: and therefore that present administration of the Church in such a case, cannot be any copy for times to come either to follow as a command, or to imitate as a perfection.

This very year was a Jubilee among the Jews in the very proper sense, it being the eight and twentieth that the Land had had since their setling in it: and these people now converted to the Gospel, are so far from returning to their possessions, if they had sold or mortgaged them, as the Jubilee priviledged them, that they part with their possessions that they had in their hands; having by this time learned that the earthly Canaan and inheritance, was not that possession that was to be looked after, and that the Kingdom of the Messias should not be earthly.

Vers. 36. Barnabas a Levite, and of the Country of Cyprus, &c.

As Saul a Benjamite of the Country of Tarsus, yet educated and lived at Jerusalem: so did Barnabas in Canaan, though a Cypriot born. He had land to sell though he were a Levite, for the Levites might purchase Lands of their own, even in the Land of Canaan: much more might they in forain Countries. Samuel a Levite, was born upon his Fathers own Land which had been purchased by his great Grandfather Zuph, 1 Sam. 1.1. & 9.5. Now Barnabas had one motive more to sell his Land, than other of the common believers had; namely, those words of our Saviour to those Disciples that were to be Preachers, Provide neither silver nor gold, &c. Matth. 10. 9,10. and this was the ground of Peters answer, Silver and gold have I none, Chap. 3. 6.

ACTS. CHAP. V.

Vers. 1. But a certain man named Ananias.

AMong the offerings of others that sold their Lands, there creepeth in the hypocrisie of Ananias and Saphira, a couple that at once would have served God and Mammon; Vain-glory, or Policy, or both, did here strive with covetousness and distrust, or rather to speak truly indeed, did conspire. They had the formality to sell their Lands as others did, but they had not the sincerity to part with the money as others had. Their double dealing both in word and deed, is fearfully punished with suddain death at this beginning of the Christian Church (as Nadab, Abihu, and the Sabbath-breaker were at the beginning of the Jewish) that future times might learn from this to beware dissembling with God, and not to dishonour and shame the gifts of the Holy Ghost.

Vers.

Year of Christ XXXIII.

Vers. 3. To lye to the Holy Ghost, or rather, to belie the Holy Ghost.

It was not the sin only, barely, and simply considered, that provoked and procured so fearful a Judgment upon him, but the sin, as it was circumstantiated and aggravated by some respects. For it seemeth that Ananias was not a common or ordinary believer, but one of the Ministerial rank, and one that had received the gift of the Holy Ghost, as well as the rest of the 120. And considerable to this purpose are these two things.

First, That as soon as the Evangelist hath mentioned the pious and upright dealing of Barnabas (which was a Preacher) in the sale of his Lands, he cometh to the story of Ananias, as a man of the same function, and relateth his wretchedness in the sale of his.

Secondly, That though it be said in vers. 4. ἐψεύσω θεῷ, that he lied to God, yet is he said in the third verse ψεύσασθαι τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον, To belie the Holy Ghost. By which Phrase it seemeth that he had received the Holy Ghost among the rest that did receive it; and yet for all that excellent gift in himself, and the excellent gift that he knew in the Apostles; he durst by this base dissembling belie and shame the gifts that were in himself, and tempt the power of the Holy Ghost that was in Peter.

And thus was Ananias much like Judas, exceedingly qualified and eminently gifted with the gifts of the Spirit, but like him undone with covetousness, and for it perished by an exemplary end. There was none among all the twelve so fit to give sentence upon this fact as Peter: as who might hereby shew his own repentance for his lying and perjury in denying his Master, and that he was intirely repaired and recovered from it, when he durst pass so heavy a doom and judgment upon a lie.

Vers. 13. And of the rest none durst joyn himself unto them.

It is some difficulty to resolve, who these rest were that durst not knit themselves to the Apostles: the matter may be construed so many ways that it is hard to fix which is the right.

First, It is understood by Beza of such as were as yet out of the Church, and yet not strangers to the Kingdom of God, but such as for fear durst not shew themselves, either because of the Jews, or because of the judgment afflicted on Ananias.

Secondly, It may be understood of those that were within the Church, yet durst not joyn themselves in Consistory or Presbyterial society with the 120 Disciples, but kept their distance in regard of judging, though they knit with them in communion.

Or thirdly, It may be understood of the 108 Disciples, that were appointed by Christ to be Ministers, and kept in continual society and consistorial association with the Apostles, yet durst not joyn themselves to them in the form or dignity of Apostleship, nor durst offer to parallel themselves to that rank, yet the people magnified them also: And this I take to be the very meaning of the place, and that upon these grounds.

First, Because the word λοιπῶν seemeth to import a residue or the rest of their own company, and not the people that were out of the Church, for of them it had been more proper to have said ἀπὸ τῶν ἄλλων than ἀπὸ τῶν λοιπῶν, as the skilful in the Greek language will readily judge.

Secondly, The joyning here spoken of in regard of the object to whom, is to the Apostles, and not to the Church, as is apparent by the very Grammatical construction.

Especially, thirdly, The word Ἅπαντες in vers. 12. being understood not of the Congregation or whole company of believers, but of the Apostles, as the words immediately before might argue, or rather of the whole number of the 120 as it is taken, Chap. 2. 1. And so the sense of all redounds to this; that besides that terrible and dreadful work that was done by Peter upon Ananias and Sapphira, all the other eleven Apostles did great and wondrous miracles among the people, and the whole College and Presbytery of the 120 were unanimously in Solomons Porch joyning together in association and advancing the Gospel, but the rest of the 120 durst not one of them joyn themselves to the twelve in the peculiar office and dignity of Apostleship properly so called, having seen so lately the dreadful judgment that one of the twelve had brought upon Ananias one of their own number, and seeing the continual wonders that they did in an extraordinary manner among the people, howbeit the people magnified them also, they also having the admirable and wondrous gifts of the Spirit upon them.

Vers.

Year of Chriſt XXXIII.

Verſ. 15. §. Peters ſhadow.

Many miracles were wrought by the Apoſtles hands, and many as it ſeemeth by Peters ſhadow: but the Text hath left it ſo indifferent, that it is hard to determine whether it is to be taken in a good ſenſe or a bad, and indeed ſome that have taken it the better way have made it the worſt of all. Luke ſaith only thus, They brought forth the ſick into the ſtreets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the leaſt the ſhadow of Peter paſſing by might overſhadow ſome of them. But it neither telleth who they were that laid them, nor a word at all that thoſe were healed that were laid. And it may be thought they were unbelieving Jews that laid them as well as otherwiſe: for believers might have brought them to the Apoſtles, or brought the Apoſtles to them: And it may poſſibly be thought that they laid them there either out of a ſuperſtitious blindneſs, thinking his ſhadow to be miraculous as well as his perſon, or out of a cheating perverſneſs, thinking to gain by his power though they would none of his doctrine: and that none of their ſick were healed becauſe there is no mention of any ſuch healing at all. If we ſhould thus underſtand the ſtory, ſurely we ſhould do leſs wrong to the Text, and to our own underſtandings than ſome have done that have taken it in a better ſenſe. For be it, that God intending to magnifie Peter the Miniſter of the circumciſion in the eyes of the circumciſed, did give him a more extraordinary power of miracles, for their ſakes that ſtood upon miracles ſo much, ſo that not only himſelf, but his ſhadow alſo could heal diſeaſes, yet how ridiculous and ſenſleſs is that which Baronius would infer hereupon, namely, That Peter therefore was Prince of all the Apoſtles: and that therefore the ſhadows or images of holy men are of holy uſe and Religious Worſhip, and that the Pope who is Peters ſhadow and repreſentation hath Peters power and qualification?

Verſ. 20. All the words of this life.

It hath ſcrupled divers Expoſitors why the word πάντης ſhould be added here to ζωῆς as ſeeming to bend the meaning and ſenſe to this preſent and temporal life: and thereupon they have concluded that there is an hypallage or change of conſtruction, and that τὰ ῥήματα τῆς ζωῆς ταύτης, the words of this life, is inſtead of τὰ ῥήματα τῆς ζωῆς ταύτα, theſe words of life, and to this ſenſe is it tranſlated by the Syriack: But the conſtruction is eaſie, and the compoſure of the words will appear moſt proper, if the ſeventeenth Verſe be a little ſeriouſly conſidered, it is ſaid there that it was the Sect of the Sadduces that impriſoned the Apoſtles, a generation that denied the Reſurrection, and the life to come; and to this it is that this divine revelation referreth, when it chargeth the Apoſtles, that they ſhould go again into the Temple where they had been apprehended the day before, and impriſoned for preaching the Reſurrection, and that they ſhould not ſpare to ſpeak and utter the doctrine of this life which the Sadduces ſo much denied.

Verſ. 21. And they called the Councel together, and all the Senate of the children of Iſrael.

The Syriack reads, they called their companions and the Elders of Iſrael: taking Συνέδριον here to mean either their fellows and companions in the ſame Sadducean Opinion and Hereſie, or their fellow Prieſts and Scribes which were not of the Sanhedrin: But ſince Συνέδριον will very harſhly bear either of theſe ſenſes, and conſtantly is uſed in another for the Sanhedrin or bench of Judges of the LXX Elders: I ſhould take it ſo alſo in this place; and by Πᾶσαν τὴν γερουσίαν all the Senate, underſtand the Judges or Elders of the two other Judicatories which were erected, one in the outer Court gate, or in Solomons Porch, and the other in the inner or the beautiful gate of the Temple, conſiſting of three and twenty men a piece. Maymonid. in Sanhed. Per. 1. And ſo did this buſie High Prieſt call together all the three Courts or Benches of Judges in Jeruſalem, an hundred and ſeventeen Elders in all if there were a full appearance, the Lord ſo diſpoſing it, that all his Apoſtles and all his chief enemies might deal it together: And now as that was fulfilled which Chriſt had ſpoken of them; They ſhall bring you before Councels for my name ſake, ſo was alſo that which he had promiſed unto them, that it ſhould be given them what they ſhould ſpeak, that their enemies ſhould not be able to gainſay. But the Judges of the earth would not be wiſe nor inſtructed to ſerve the Lord and to kiſs the ſon, therefore his anger ſhortly kindled, and Jeruſalem periſhed in her unbelief.

Vers. 24. Now when the High Priest.

So is it to be understood though in the Greek it be only Ἱερεὺς the Priest: and the reason is because, first, Annas in this meeting was not the President of the Councel, for which he is called the High Priest elsewhere, for this was not a Sanhedrin, or the usual Court, but an extraordinary and unusual Convocation: Secondly, Mention is made of Ἀρχιερεῖς immediately after: and Ἀρχιερεὺς & ἀρχιερεῖς would scarcely have sounded well so near together.

Vers. 34. A Pharisee named Gamaliel, a Doctor of the Law, had in reputation among all the People.

This was Pauls Tutor, Acts 22.3. the son of Simeon, that took Christ into his arms, Luke 2. and the Grandchild of famous Hillel. He is called Gamaliel the Elder, for there were two others of the same name, one his Grandchild, the other his great Grandchild in the fifth descent; and he is always called Rabban Gamaliel, and so likewise were those two his Grandchildren intitled. These being three of the seven, that only carried this title Rabban. A title which was of the highest eminency and note, of any title among their Doctors, and that very title sheweth the great reputation he had among the people. In the Talmudick Writers there is very frequent mention of Rabban Gamaliel, but scarcely distinguishing which of the three they mean; yet so much to be collected out of them, as to confute that forgery of Lucians Epistle (which yet Baronius hath graced with this Testimonial: Narrat Lucianus in ea quam totus Christianus orbis recepit Epistola) that Gamaliel became a most zealous Christian, and professor of the Gospel; that he received Nicodemus when the Jews had cast him out; and that he buried the body of Stephen, and held a solemn mourning for him seventy days.

In Pirke Abhoth. Perek. 1. this saying is ascribed to this Gamaliel, among the several Adagies of those Doctors עשה לך רב והסתלק מן הספק ואל תרבה לעשר אמרות Procure thy self a tutor, and get thee out of doubting, and do not multiply to pay thy tithes by conjecture.

He is held to have died 18 years before the destruction of the City, or about 22 years after this, and Onkelos the Targumist of the Law is reported to have burnt threescore and ten pound of Frankincense for him being dead: And by this it is more than a conjecture, that he died not a Christian, but lived and died in his Pharisaical opinions, and profession.

Vers. 36. For before these days rose up Theudas.

There is mention of one Theudas in the Talmud in Sanhedr. Perek. Helek. and he is called a Physitian, Theudas the Physitian saith, that neither Cow nor Sow cometh from Alexandria: And there is mention of one Theudas a Sorcerer in Josephus Ant. lib. 20. *cap.*2. When Fadus was Governor of Judea, saith he, a wizard named Theudas perswaded a great company to take their goods and to follow him to the river Jordan, for he said he was a Prophet, and that dividing the river by a command he would procure them an easie passage: and thus saying he deceived many. But Fadus suffered them not thus to enjoy their folly, but sent against them a troop of Horse, which falling upon them unexpectedly, slew many, took others alive, and catching Theudas himself, cut off his head and brought it to Jerusalem.

This were a very ready and easie interpretation of these words of Gamaliel, if this great scruple did not lie in the way: namely, that this Theudas mentioned by Josephus, was about the fourth or fifth year of Claudius: but this Theudas mentioned by Gamaliel was before Judas the Galilean, which was in the days of Augustus: There is a great deal of ado among Expositors what to make of these two stories, so like in substance, but so different in time. Some conceive that Josephus hath missed his Chronology, and hath set Theudas his story many years later than it fell out: Others refuse Josephus his story as not applicable to this Theudas of Gamaliel [though they hold that he hath spoken true in it] because the time is so different, but they think Gamaliels Theudas was some of those villains that so much infested Judea in the times of Sabinus and Varus. Joseph. Ant. lib. 17. c. 12. though Josephus hath not there mentioned him by name.

A third sort conceive that Gamaliels Theudas was not before Judas the Galilean, who rose about the birth of Christ, but a long while after, namely a little before Gamaliel speaketh these words: And they render μετὰ τούτων in the strict propriety, namely that it was but a few days before: and μετὰ τοῦτον, not post eum, after him, but præter eum, besides him.

In

Year of Christ XXXIII. In these varieties of opinions and difficulties, it is hard to resolve which way to take, and it is well that it is a matter of that nature that men may freely use their conjectures in it, and be excusable.

I cannot but observe and conceive these things upon the stories of Gamaliel and Josephus laid and compared together.

First, That Gamaliel meeteth with the double misprision that the present Councel had concerning the Apostles, with a double story. First, They suspected and censured them for false and erroneous Teachers; to this he applies the story of Theudas. Secondly, They suspected them of innovation, and of what might tend to mutiny and insurrection, and to this he applieth the story of Judas.

Secondly, That the miscariages of these two men that he instanceth in, proceeded from two different and dangerous principles; pretence of new lights and revelations; and pretence of liberty of conscience and of persons. Theudas was for the former, Judas for the latter.

Thirdly, That Gamaliels counsel was not of any Christianity that was in him, but of policy, not that he favoured the Apostles, but that he feared if any thing were done to them by violence or injustice, it might incur a Premunire or prejudice; and that is apparent, in that all the Councel consent and entertain his counsel.

Fourthly, That Gamaliel's Theudas and Josephus his is not all one: their descriptions indeed are very agreeable, for as Gamaliel saith that Theudas took on him τινὰ εἶναι to be some body, of note and eminency, so doth the relation about the Theudas in Josephus. Simon Magus boasted himself τινὰ μέγαν εἶναι to be some special person, Act. 8. 9. and how did he carry on this arrogation? Why, by magick and doing some strange things among the people: and just in the same kind hath Josephus described his Theudas, but yet these two Theudases seem not to be the same.

Fifthly, For Josephus setting the story of his Theudas so late as in the time of Claudius, a dozen years or thereabouts after this speech of Gamaliel, [although it might be said it is no strange thing with Josephus to misplace stories, and to faulter in point of exact Chronology, as Baronius supposeth he hath done in this] yet seemeth it rather to be upon the very native propriety of the time of the story: And the matter to be conceived thus, that as Sects and Heresies, though buried, yet do oft revive, and though dispersed, yet do recollect: and being once begun are not suddenly extinguished, but like quenched fire are ever breaking out in one place or other, that so it was with this business of Theudas. And so also it may be instanced in the very Sect and Opinion of him that Gamaliel speaketh of immediately after, namely Judas of Galilee: He rose up in the days of the tax in the time of Augustus, as Luke 2. He pleaded against the Jews being subject to the Romans, and disswaded them from paying taxes and tribute to them: and maintained they ought to have no ruler over them but God: and so became the original of a fourth Sect among the Jews, besides the Pharisees, Sadducees and Essens, as Josephus reports of him. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 1. and de Bell. lib. 2. cap. 12. Now though Judas himself perished in his error, and as many as obeyed him were scattered abroad, as Gamaliel relateth, yet was not his error extinguished with him, but revived and grew again: So that at the least 40 years after his first appeariug, his two sons James and Simon are crucified for it by Tiberius Alexander, the successor of Fadus. Jos. Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 3. And many years after that, Eleazer a branch of the same Judas appeareth in the same opinion with a desperate company with him, De Bel. lib. 7. cap. 30.

Even so may it be conceived of the Sect of Theudas: that it began before that of Judas, and that the first Author of it took upon him great things, as to be a Prophet, and to work miracles, and the like, but he was soon slain and all that obeyed him were scattered abroad and came to nought. But his folly and fancy perished not with him, but [however at other times] in the time of Fadus one of the same foolery and name, and probably his son, would be a Prophet again and divide Jordan and do I know not what, whom Fadus destroyed and brought his company to ruine. So that Gamaliels and Josephus his Theudas, are very probably two men, but very likely Father and Son, or Tutor and Scholar, agreeing so jump in the same folly and madness that they agreed in the same name: and that name either given to the latter at such an accidency as Parents name their children, or assumed by him in imitation of the former Theudas, whom as he delighted to imitate in his Enthusiastick folly, so delighted he to follow him in denomination. And I am the rather confirmed in this opinion about these two men, because that as soon as ever Josephus hath told the story of the destruction of Theudas by Fadus, he telleth of the destruction of the sons of Judas, by Tiberius Alexander, and I cannot but interpret both the stories in one sense, that as in the latter he speaketh of the off-spring of Judas, whose Sect had begun many years before, so in the former he speaketh of the off-spring of Theudas, whose Sect had begun before that of Judas.

PART II.

The ROMAN Story.

§. 1. The ſtate of the City hitherto.

THE City Rome was built by Romulus in the year of the World 3175. in the fifteenth year of Amaziah King of Judah, and in the firſt year of Jeroboam the ſecond, the King of Iſrael. It had ſtood from the time of its firſt foundation, to this year in which it put the Lord of life to death, ſeven hundred fourſcore and five years; And had undergone and paſſed thorough two different and diverſe kinds of government, and was now but lately entred upon a third.

The firſt was under Kings, for 243 years, and the foundation of this government as of the City it ſelf was laid in the blood of Remus, ſhed by his brother Romulus, who was the founder of the City.

The ſecond was under Conſuls, 467 years from the expulſion of Tarquin the laſt King, to the Conſulſhip of Hirtius and Panſa, which was the year that Auguſtus began to rule, with Antony and Lepidus. This change of the government, was likewiſe founded in blood as the former had been, namely of Lucrece, Aruns, and Brutus, and in the extirpation of Tarquins houſe.

A third manner of government, had the City and Empire now begun upon, and had been under it threeſcore and two years; namely, a monarchy again, but the name only changed from a King to an Emperor. And the foundation of this change was alſo laid in blood as the other had been, namely in the death of Julius Cæſar, Antony and Cleopatra.

The carriage of Tarquin the laſt of the Kings had brought the City into an opinion that Monarchy was an enemy to Liberty: And the growth and flouriſhing of that State under another manner of government had ſo confirmed this opinion, that they were ſooner put out of their Liberty, than out of belief of that Poſition. Brutus and Collatinus, who were the expellers of Tarquin and of Monarchy with him, had found out a government likely enough in all humane judgment to heal all theſe miſchiefs and miſcarriages, that Monarchical Tyranny did bring upon them, when they appointed two ſupreme Governors in ſtead of one, and their Power and Rule to be but annual in ſtead of, for life. The ſucceſs was agreeable to the policy, and ſo happily and proſperouſly did the State grow under theſe rulers, [and ſome others mixt as occaſion urged], that to offer to reduce it to Monarchy again, was infallibly held to be, to reduce it to ſlavery; and Julius Cæſar found how deeply grounded this opinion was in the heart of a Roman, by the loſs of his life: they ſuppoſing his affecting the Empire ſingle, aimed at the loſs of their Liberties.

Year of Chriſt XXXIII. Auguſtus his Nephew and adopted ſon, though he had before his eyes in Julius his death a clear and convincing Lecture, how dangerous and deſperate an attempt it was, to affect the monarchy, yet did he dare it; but managing his deſires and deſigns with ſo much diſcretion and noiſleſneſs, that the government was gotten into his hands alone, and the Empire ſlipt into a monarchical ſubjection even before it was aware.

Tacitus hath deſcribed this ſtrange tranſition to this purpoſe,

"After that Brutus and Caſſius being ſlain, there was now no publick hoſtility; Pom-
"pey was cruſhed at Sicily, and Lepidus being ſtripped of his power, and Antony ſlain,
"there remained now no commander on Julius his party, but only Cæſar, he laying down
"the name of Triumvir, and bearing himſelf as Conſul, and as content with the Tribu-
"nate, for the defenſe of the Commons: when he had won the Souldiers with gifts, the "people with proviſion, and all men with the ſweetneſs of peace, he began to get up by "degrees, and to draw to himſelf the power of the Senate, Magiſtrates and Law, no "man gainſaying him: For the fierceſt perſons were either diſpatcht in the armies or by "baniſhment, the reſt of the Nobles, by how much the more they were the readier for "vaſſallage, by ſo much the more they were preferred with wealth and honours: and be"ing thus inriched by theſe innovations, they deſired rather the ſafe and preſent conditi"on, than the ancient and dangerous. Nor did the Provinces refuſe this ſtate of things,
"they having the rule of the Senate and people in ſuſpition, becauſe of the quarrellings
"of the great ones, and the avarice of the Magiſtrates, the Laws affording no relief, but
"themſelves deſtroyed, by power, prowling or money.

Thus did the very poſture of things as it were conſpire with the deſires of Auguſtus, to bring the Roman ſtate into a Monarchy, and himſelf to be the Monarch; the decrees and determination of Heaven having ſo ordered, that here ſhould begin a fifth Monarchy after the deſtruction of the four, Dan. 2. & 7. which ſhould equal all the four in power, pomp and cruelty, and ſhould be the continual perſecutor of the Church of the Chriſtians, as they had been of the Church of the Jews: And thus doth the Goſpel and the State that ſhould perſecute it in a manner ariſe at once, and Chriſt and Antichriſt after a ſort are born together.

Auguſtus as he had got the ſole government into his hands, by a great deal of wiſdom, and daring, ſo did he keep it with the ſame wiſdom, and as much moderation: He ſat Emperor for the ſpace of four and forty years, honoured and beloved, and died deſired and lamented, though he had thus impropriated, as it was conceived, the whole liberty of the Empire into his own hand: Now whether it were the native gentleneſs and goodneſs of the Emperor, that kept him in ſuch a ſweetneſs and moderation; or whether it were ſome policy mingled with it, as knowing it not to be ſafe to be too buſie and rigid ſo near the change, he ſo demeaned himſelf for the benefit of the City, and love of the people, that as he was the firſt of all the Emperors, ſo in a manner was he the laſt that ſhewed ſuch mildneſs, goodneſs, and nobleneſs, either to people or City.

Tyberius ſucceeded him, his Wives ſon by nature, and his by adoption; a man as incomparably evil, unworthy, and cruel, as Auguſtus had been glorious, noble, and humane. And if that were true which ſome ſuppoſed and believed, That Auguſtus had nominated Tiberius for his Succeſſor, that his own worth might be the better ſet off by the others wickedneſs; and that he might be the better ſpoken of, becauſe the other was ſo odious; this his laſt action was more to his diſhonour than all his former; and howſoever Tiberius might do him honour by his miſcarriage, yet did he do himſelf diſhonour in Tyberius.

This wretch, whoſe Story we are now to follow, was, as his own Tutor uſed to define him, πηλὸς αἱματι πεφυρμένος A lump of clay mingled with blood; and that clay and blood mingled with as much miſchievouſneſs, as it was almoſt poſſible for humane nature to contain.

"A diſſembler he was, beyond all parallels and compariſons, φύσει ἰδιωτάτῃ ἐκέχρητο, ſaith
"Dion, He had a diſpoſition moſt ſingle to himſelf: For he never made ſhew to what he
"deſired; and he never ſpake as he thought; what he deſired he denied; what he ha"ted he pretended to: he ſhewed anger where he loved beſt; he pretended love where
"he hated moſt: he looked ſullenly on his friends, chearfully on his enemies: was fair
"ſpoken to thoſe he meant to puniſh, was moſt ſevere towards thoſe he thought to par-
"don; And it was his Maxim, That a Princes mind muſt be known to no man; for "that by its being known, many evils and inconveniences do follow; but many con"veniences by its being diſſembled: Hence did every man that medled with him, come "into danger; and to underſtand, or not underſtand his mind, was alike perillous. And

"ſome

" ſome have been undone for agreeing to his words, becauſe they agreed not to his Year of Chriſt
" mind: and ſome have been undone for agreeing to his mind, becauſe he perceived they XXXIII.
" had found his mind out. And it was a thing of extreme difficulty, either to conſent to " his words or to gainſay them: when it was his cuſtom to command one thing and to
" will another.

This diſſimulation he began withal at his very firſt entrance to the Empire, pretending great unwillingneſs to take it upon him, and when it was urged on him paſt denial, then pretending to take two partners with him, as to ſhare in the burden and honour: but when Aſinius Gallus took him at his word, and bad him chooſe his part, he took it ſo ill, that he dogd him for it to the death. The ſame diſſimulation he took along with him, when he had taken the Empire on him, carrying it with all mildneſs and moderation, as if he had been a ſecond Auguſtus, whereas indeed the reaſon was, becauſe Germanicus was alive, and moſt dear in the peoples affection, and he feared him leſt he ſhould have been preferred before him.

Yet did his beſt demeanour bewray what he was within, for all his skill in diſſembling, and at the very beſt he gave juſt ſuſpition that he would prove but evil.

He began his reign with the murder of Agrippa, a man once in as high favour with Auguſtus as himſelf. He went on with the murder of a poor man for a piece of wit: For as a corps was carried to its interring, this man came to it and whiſpered in the dead mans ear: and being asked by the ſtanders by what he meant, he anſwered, that he deſired that dead man when he came into the other world, to tell Auguſtus that his Legacies to the people were not yet paid. This coſt the poor man his life, for Tiberius ſaid he ſhould go on that meſſage himſelf, and ſo he ſlew him, but this got the people their Legacies.

It would be infinite to reckon up the murders, oppreſſions, and miſcreancy committed by him in the firſt ſeventeen years of his reign, or before this year that we have in hand: The moſt remarkable were that he raiſed Sejanus purpoſely that he might help to ruine Germanicus and Druſus, though they were his own adopted ſons, and when that was done by Sejanus he ruined Sejanus and all his friends with him. We ſhall have miſchief enough from him in thoſe years that we are to follow him in, namely from his eighteenth and forward, and therefore let the ſtory haſten thither.

§. 3. The year of Tiberius his reign at our Saviours death.

This year is determined by common conſent of Hiſtorians to be his eighteenth: and the matter is paſt all doubt, if it were as certain that Chriſt was Baptized in the fifteenth year of Tiberius, as it is certain that John began to baptize. For whereas John began to baptize about the vernal Equinox, and Chriſt was not baptized till the Autumnal, beginning juſt then to enter upon his thirtieth year, and whereas Tiberius began to reign about the 18 day of Auguſt, as appeareth by the Roman Hiſtorians, the fifteenth year of Tiberius in exact accounting was expired ſome weeks before Chriſt was baptized. And therefore though Luke ſay that in the fifteenth year of Tiberius John came baptizing, Luke 3. 1. yet was it in the ſixteenth year of Tiberius (as it ſeemeth) before Chriſt came to his baptiſm: and ſo ſhould the death of our Saviour fall into Tiberius his nineteenth year. But it is not ſafe to hang the Chronology of all ſucceeding times upon ſo ſmall a pin as this: therefore according to the univerſal conſent and determination of all Chriſtian writers, we will take the eighteenth year of Tiberius to have been the year of Chriſts death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion, and accordingly compute and reckon the times of the ſucceeding Emperors that we have to go through proportionate or agreeable to this beginning.

The Roman Conſuls for this year that we have in hand were Cn. Domitius and Camillus Scribonianus, as is obvious to any eye that counteth, the years and Conſuls in the time of Tiberius.

§. 4. His

Year of Chriſt XXXIII.

§. 4. His luſts and beaſtiality.

HE had certain years before this departed out of Rome, reſolving never to return to it again, which indeed he never did, though often taking on him to come, and drawing very near unto the City. The pretence of his departure, * was the grief that he took on him to take for the death of his two ſons, Germanicus aud Druſus, and the dedication of a Capitol at Capua and a Temple at Nola: but the reaſons indeed were, partly in diſdain of the authority of his mother Livia, partly to avoid the dangers of the City, * partly to outrun the ſhame of his evil actions, and partly that in the retiredneſs of the Country he might be the more freely wicked as not reſtrained by the publick ſhame. This laſt he made good by his badneſs, if ſuch a thing may be ſaid to be made good. For having gotten the liberty of retiredneſs, ſaith * Suetonius, and being removed from the eyes of the City, he now let go looſe all the vices that he had ſo long diſſembled. Uncleanneſs both with Boys and Girls, raviſhing both of wives and maids, new invented arts of lechery, and trades of luſt, obſcene bathings and filthy feaſts, and ſuch horribleneſs of beaſtiality that the mention thereof is not fit for a Chriſtians hearing, nay Rome her ſelf had not heard of none ſuch till this very time.

§. His cruelty, and how forwarded.

Nor, which is wonderful, did he in all this delicacy and effeminateneſs, remit or ungive any thing of his bloodineſs and cruelty, but as in his perſon he plaid the Swine in Capreæ, ſo by his letters did he the Lion at Rome. The cowardize, and fawning of the Senate from which he was run, and which he ſought to deſtroy, did forward his inhumane diſpoſition exceeding much: for as this inhumanity provoked him to do what miſchief he could, ſo did their compliance ſhew him that he might do what his liſt, when things were come to that paſs (ſaith * Dion) that there was no man that could deny, but that he could heartily eat the Emperors fleſh, yet when Cn. Domitius and Camillus Scribonianus were Conſuls (which was the year we have in hand) a thing moſt ridiculous came to paſs. For whereas it had been decreed long before, that the Senate ſhould not ſwear to the acts of the Emperor on the firſt day of January, man by man, but that one ſhould take the oath, and the reſt ſhould give their conſent: this year they did not ſo, but of their own offer, and no one conſtraining, they were ſworn every man in particular.

* Lib. 58.

And there befel alſo a thing yet more ridiculous than this. For they decreed that Tiberius ſhould chooſe out of their order as many as he would: and twenty of thoſe choſen by lot and weaponed he ſhould have for his guard whenſoever he ſhould come into the Senate. Now ſeeing that without the Senate houſe all was well guarded with a band of Souldiers, and that no private man came within, for whom elſe would they or could they have this guard added but for themſelves? Tiberius commended their forwardneſs and gave them thanks for their good will, but the thing it ſelf he declined as a thing unuſual: for he was not ſo ſimple, as to put ſwords into their hands whom he ſo much hated, and of whom he was hated ſo much.

Thus Dion: and thus the Senate, taken in their own net which they had laid too plain; arming Tiberius with ſuſpition, hatred, and power, while they thought to have weaponed themſelves. A far milder nature than his, would hardly have miſſed to have made a domineering uſe of ſuch an opportunity, when their viſible hatred had ſhewed him his own danger, and their cowardly flattery had ſhewed him his power, and how he made advantage of theſe his notions, did appear by the ſequel.

§. 5. Divers cruelties.

Sejanus his high exalted favorite, had been found, or at leaſt ſuſpected by him to go about to undermine him as he had done Druſus by his ſetting on, and he had the laſt year been put to death upon that certainty, or ſuſpition; and now muſt all his friends, creatures, kindred and adherents, which had been exceeding many to ſo great a favorite, come to the ſame reckoning and ruine with him. And this advantage had the old Politician by his kennelling in the ſolitarineſs of the Country, that both he might be as impudent as he would in putting forward his deſigns, for his letters could not bluſh, and reſolute enough in following them to their accompliſhing, for he was far enough from the danger of the diſcontented City.

He

He began with the confiſcation of Sejanus his goods, and went on with the baniſhment of Junius Gallio one of his friends. This Gallio or Gallenus (as Dion calleth him) in a baſe flattery to Tiberius made the motion that the Souldiers of his guard ſhould at the ſhews ſit in the Knights form: A propoſal more full of ſimplicity and fawning than of any danger or ſuſpition: and yet is he ſharply taken up for it by the Emperors letters, as for an overture of ſedition made by a friend of Sejanus as thinking to corrupt the minds of the Souldiers by hope of honours: And for no other fault but this is Gallio baniſhed to Lesbos, but recalled again ere long, becauſe it was thought by the Emperor that he took delight in the pleaſentneſs of the Iſland, and then he was committed to cuſtody in the Magiſtrates houſes. The ſame letters thunderbolt Seſtius Paconius, and either they or the next, do as much for Latiaris the betrayer of Sabinus, and ſhortly are the like come for Cæcilianus a Senator, Quintus Scrvæus once Pretor, and Minutius Thermus a Knight: and if they came not into the ſame black bill, yet did Julius Africanus and Seius Quadratus come into the ſame danger.

Tacit. lib. 6. Annal. Dion ubi ſupra.

Thus came his packets very frequent to the Senate, and ſeldom or never but written in ſome mans blood or other: he being cankered and crafty enough to accuſe and pretend, and the Senate ſo officious and ſerviceable to him, as to condemn and execute. And happy had the condition of the City been, had he reſted there, to have been accuſer only himſelf, but his ſubtle policy had found out a way, and practiſed it, and he thought himſelf happy in it, to ſet ſuch diviſion and ſow ſuch ſeeds of accuſations among the people, that now they do nothing, nor affect nothing more, than to accuſe, impeach and charge one another, and to contrive and compaſs each others death. Cruel and inhumane that he was thus to divide and imbroile his own people and Subjects to deſtroy each other, that the clearer way might be made to his tyranny through their deſtruction; and that he cannot think himſelf an abſolute Prince, nor truly happy, unleſs his people die at his pleaſure or live in miſery. Yet can I not but think of an inviſible hand of juſtice in this deplorate condition of the City and State wrought and brought upon her by her own Prince, that ſhe now periſheth daily and ſadly by her falſe accuſing, and condemning, and deſtroying one another; for at this very time, by falſe accuſation and unjuſt condemning, ſhe had deſtroyed and murdered the Lord of life.

Tiberius inciting the chiefeſt men to miſchief.

Now, ſaith Tacitus, did Tiberius, inciting the chiefeſt men to miſchief, admoniſh C. Cæſtius the father, to tell the Senate what he had written to him: and Cæſtius took upon him to accuſe: A bane which thoſe times brought forth, when the chief men of the Senate would practiſe moſt baſe accuſations, ſome openly, many ſecretly; nor could you then diſcern ſtrangers from kinſmen, friends from men unknown, nor what was new, nor what was obſcure with age: So ſurely were men accuſed of whatſoever they had ſpoken in the open ſtreets or at feaſts, as others could make haſt to prevent, and accuſe them for guilty: ſome for their own refuge, more as infected with contagion and a ſickneſs. So Tacitus.

De benef. lib. 3. cap. 26.

Seneca alſo utters his complaint of theſe doleful times, and alledgeth one example of theſe accuſations, which at once ſheweth the baſeneſs of them and the frequency.

In the times of Tiberius Cæſar, ſaith he, there was a frequent and almoſt common madneſs of accuſing, which more tormented the gowned City, than all their civil wars had done before. Now the words of drunkards were catched at, and the harmleſneſs of jeſters. Nothing was ſafe, every occaſion of being cruel gave content: Nor was there any expecting of what would be the event of thoſe that were accuſed, for they had all one and the ſame. Paulus the Prætorian was at a certain ſupper or feaſt, having the picture of Tiberius graven in the ſtone of his Ring, which ſomething ſtood forth; I ſhould do but very fooliſhly, if I ſhould pump for words to tell, that he took the Chamberpot, which thing Maro one of the ſpies of thoſe times took ſpeedy notice of. But a ſervant of his for whom the trap was prepared took off his Ring when he was drunk. And when Maro took witneſs of the gueſts that Cæſars Image was laid to a filthy baſe thing, and was ready to ſubſcribe the charge, the ſervant ſhewed the Ring upon his own finger.

Exceeding many do the Roman Hiſtories mention and nominate, that came to fatal ends, or heavy dooms under the bloodineſs of this inquiſition, but many and many omitted, ſaith Tacitus, and not named by the Roman writers, either becauſe they were cloyed with multitude of examples, or leſt, as what they ſuffered was much and grievous to themſelves, ſo likewiſe might it be unto the Reader.

§. 7. Desperate boldness, and discreet.

In these so dangerous times of the City, and raging humors of the Emperor, it cannot be omitted for the strangeness of it, how two men came off, Marcus Terentius by a resolute bravery before the Senate, and Lucius Sejanus by a desperate scoff and mocking of the Emperor.

Dion lib. 58. In the sports and feasts of Flora, this Sejanus being Pretor, had caused all things to be performed by baldheaded men, and by no other, and this he did because Tiberius was baldheaded himself. And to make up the scorn to the full, at night, when the company was to depart, he caused five thousand boys with their heads shaven bare, to carry Links and Torches to light them away. And yet Tiberius would take no notice of all this though he knew it well enough, either because he would not second his own derision, by taking it to heart, or because he intended to revenge this scorn at some other time, under some other title, or because by this toleration he would animate more to be saucy with him to their own confusion.

A venerable antiquity for shaven crowns.

But far more brave, because far more necessary and discreet, was the courage of Terentius, who had the sober and well guided valour, not to thrust himself into danger, but to bring him out. He was accused of dependence upon Sejanus, and of complying with him, and he denied not the accusation, but strengthned it, and came off better by extremity of confession than others could do with the utmost of excusing. I loved, said he, and honoured Sejanus, because Tiberius loved him and did him honour: So that if he did well I did not amiss, and if the Emperor that knoweth all things exactly, were deceived, it is no wonder if I were deceived with him. It is not for us to regard or search, for what cause the Emperor promoteth such a man: to him belongeth the property of that judgment, to us the glory of obsequiousness. His treasons against the Commonwealth, and plots against the Emperors life, let them bear the punishment they have deserved, but as for friendship and observance, the same end will acquit Tiberius and us, &c.

And in this strain and boldness proceeded he on, still driving on his affections to Sejanus thorow Sejanus to the Emperor, that he led the accusation the same way to light upon him also, insomuch that in an instant his accusers had changed place with him, for they were accused and he discharged.

§. 8. Other Occurrences of this year.

But Tiberius his humour was too strong to be stopped with such Rhetorick, in behalf of any more, though this prevailed for Terentius himself. For presently come accusatory letters against Sex. Vestilius, as a libeller against C. Cæsar, who to avoid death, by the hand of some other man, would prevent it with his own, and so cut his veins: but tying them up again and repenting his fact he sent a supplicatory petition to the Emperor that he might live: of which receiving but a comfortless answer, he let them open to bleed again. Afterward followed the accusation of Annius Pollio, Apius Silanus, Scaurus Mamercus, Sabinus Calvisius: Vitia the mother of Fusius Geminius late Consul, put to death for nothing but for bewailing the death of her own son; Vescularius and Marinus executed in Capreæ. And Geminius and Celsus came to such fatal ends towards the end of the year. In this year there was a book of the Sibyls offered to the Senate, but he that offered it was sharply checked by the Emperor for his pains. Some scarsity of provision oppressed the City, and plenty of mocks upon the stage jerked the Emperor, but course was taken ere long for the remedy of both, and for the latter sooner than the former. Scribonianus his place of Consulship was often changed according to Tiberius his wavering pleasure, the politician craftily shaking and unsetling that ancient government, that his new one of Monarchy might sit the faster. Flaccus Avilius was made Governor of Egypt, an Iberian by birth as may be collected from Dion, and a future scourge of the Jews, as will appear hereafter. Rubrius Fabatus when he saw the City in so desperate an estate, betook himself to fall to the Parthians, but was apprehended by the way, and yet escaped punishment, being forgotten rather than forgiven.

§. 9. Tiberius perplexed.

Among all the troubles of that City (that hath been ever the troubler of the world) that befel her this year, when she slew the Prince of quietness and peace, it may not be amiss to look a little upon the disquietness of him himself within himself that caused this disquiet to her, and imbrewed her so oft in her own blood: And this we may do by the Anatomy that Tacitus hath read upon his intrals, spying the thoughts of his heart, through the words of a letter, that he wrote in behalf of Cotta Messalinus an old favorite of his, the letter bearing the date of this year, as appeareth by the same Tacitus, and the words this tenour, as is attested both by him and Suetonius. Quid scribam vobis P. C. aut quomodo scribam, aut quid omnino non scribam hoc tempore, Dii me, Deæque pejus perdant, quem perire quotidie sentio, si scio. What I shall write to you O fathers conscript, or how I shall write, or what I shall not write at all at this time, the gods and goddesses confound me worse than I feel my self to perish daily, if I can tell. Whereupon Suetonius saith, that being weary of himself, he almost confesseth the sum of his miseries: But my other author thus largely. Thus did even his villanies and flagitiousness turn to punishment to himself. Nor was it in vain that the wisest of men was wont to affirm, that if the minds of Tyrants were but opened, tortures and stripes might be spied there: seeing that the mind is butchered with cruelty, lust and evil projects, as the body is with blows. For, not solitariness, not fortune, could protect Tiberius, but that he confesseth the torments of his breast, and his own punishment. Sueton in Tiber. c. 67.

PART III.

The affairs of the JEWS.

§. 1. A commotion of them.

IF the Method of Josephus were Chronical, and the order of his ranking of Stories to be presumed for the order of their falling out, at this time or hereabout should be taken in that * famosum ludibrium as Egesippus calleth it, or villanous abuse of Paulina a noble, chaste and vertuous wife and Lady of Rome, by Mundus a Knight, under pretext of the god Anubis in the Temple of Isis: for this hath * he mentioned the very next thing after the mention of our Saviours death, and with this link of connexion. About the very same time another grievance troubled the Jews, and shameful things happened about the Temple of Isis at Rome, &c. But since the story concerning the troubles of the Jews, that he relateth after, seemeth to have some near dependence and consequence to this of the Lady, and that * Tacitus hath laid that occurrence of the Jews expulsion out of Rome thirteen years before this, under the consulship of Junius Silanus and Norbanus Flaccus, we will omit to meddle with them, and will take in another story of the Jews which though Josephus hath placed a little before Christs death, yet Eusebius hath set it after, and upon his word shall it be commended to the reader for its time, and upon the others and Philoes for its truth.

* Annal. lib. 2.

Pilate (as * saith Josephus) having secretly brought into Jerusalem by night certain Images of Cæsar and set them up, the people when the matter was known, repaired to him to Cæsarea, begging that they might be taken down: which when he denied as a thing prejudicial to Cæsar; they fell flat upon the ground, and there lay five days and five nights and stirred not thence. On the sixth day he pretending to give them an answer from the judgment seat, doth suddenly environ them with armed men, threatning their death if they cease not their importunity. But they falling upon the ground again and laying their necks bare, return him this answer. That they would gladly imbrace death rather than transgress the wisdom of their Laws. Whose resolution when Pilate saw, he caused the Images to be fetched away from Jerusalem to Cæsarea. To this purpose Josephus; but Philo far differently thus. * Pilate, saith he, dedicated golden shields in the Palace of Herod in the holy City, not so much for the honour of Tiberius, as to vex the people of the Jews; upon them there was neither picture, nor any thing that was forbidden, but only the inscription shewed who had dedicated them, and to whom. Yet when the multitude had understanding of the thing, and the matter was divulged, they chose choſe certain of the higheſt rank among them for their advocates, who beſought him, that the innovation might be taken away, and that their Laws might not. When he roughly denied, for he was naturally inflexible and ſelf-wilfully ſturdy, they make fair before him as if they would petition to Tiberius. Now that fretted him worſt of all, for he was afraid leſt they ſhould do ſo indeed, and accuſe him for his other crimes, his bribery, wrongs, rapines, injuries, oppreſſions, murders and horrid cruelties, and yet durſt he not take down again what he had dedicated, nor had he any mind to pleaſure the people. Which when they perceived they ſent a moſt humble petition to Tiberius: who underſtanding what Pilate had done and what he had threatned, rebuked and checked him for his innovating boldneſs, and commanded him ſpeedily to take the ſhields away; and ſo they were removed from Jeruſalem to Cæſarea. Thus Philo, and thus differently theſe two Country men, and that in a matter which ſo nearly concerned their own Country: and which alſo befel ſo near unto their own times. For Philo was now alive and in his prime, and ſo was Joſephus leſs than thirty years after. Be it referred to the readers choice which of theſe relations he will take, and when he hath made his choice, another difference falleth under his arbitration concerning the time, betwixt Euſebius which placeth this occurrence after our Saviours paſſion, and Baronius that hath ſet it three years before his baptiſm. The Cardinal certainly too forward in bringing it in in the firſt year of Pilate, for it appeareth by Philo that he had done a great multitude of villanies among the Jews before he did this: and the Father if any whit too backward in ranking it after our Saviours death, yet excuſable for a thing of ſo pregnant application, as to ſhew how ſoon the Jews that had choſen Cæſar before Chriſt, have now their belly full of their Cæſar in his Images.

* Antiq lib. 18. cap 4. & de bello Jud. c. 12.

§. 2. Of James his being Biſhop of Jeruſalem.

The two laſt cited Authors though they differ about the time of the ſtory forenamed, yet have they agreed unanimouſly, and many others with them about this in hand, namely, that James was made this year the Biſhop of Jeruſalem. For thus Euſebius, Eccleſiæ Hieroſolymorum primus Epiſcopus ab Apoſtolis ordinatur Jacobus frater Domini. But Baronius far larger, that he was ordained Biſhop by Peter, that his chair was preſerved and reverenced to poſterity, that he wore a plate of gold upon his head like the High Prieſt in the Law, from whence he would derive the Miter: that he alone might go into the Sanctum Sanctorum, that he refrained from wine and fleſh, that he was a Nazarite, that his knees were hardned with continual praying till they were unſenſible, and ſuch like ſtuff for which he citeth his ſeveral Authors, that if common ſenſe were not a better informer than common fame, we ſhould be made to believe any thing whatſoever. The queſtion indeed whether James were ever Biſhop of Jeruſalem at all or no, is very well worth taking into ſome conſideration, but that will be moſt proper to handle when we come to thoſe places in the Acts of the Apoſtles, where a ſingular mention of James hath given occaſion of this opinion; But as for his prototype of Miters, the peoples woodden devotion to his chair, and the reſt of that legendary invention, he is little acquainted with the officiouſneſs of ſuperſtition, that knoweth not out of what mint that cometh, and he hath little to do that ſhould go about to examine the truth of it, but he hath the leaſt of all to do that ſhould believe it.

Sect. An account of the Chronologie.

ALthough the proper reckoning of every year of our Saviour, be from September to September, (for at that time of the year he was born) and so his three and thirtieth year should have been ended by us, within 4 months or little more after the giving of the Holy Ghost, yet because it will not be possible to date the times of things in any of the three stories that we have in hand, from such a beginning, and because both the Roman Historians do reckon the years of their City, as also the Christian Histories, the years of Christ from January to January, I have chosen to follow that computation and manner of accounting, or rather (to speak properly indeed) I have been inforced to follow it, there being not only various and pregnant helps both from Romans and Christians to forward us in that manner of reckoning, but there being also an utter impossibility to reckon or compute from any other beginning or calculation: now as for those stories that we are to follow in the Acts of the Apostles, the holy Ghost hath not been so punctual and exact, to give us the times of the things, as to give us things themselves; The Chronicle chain of the times indeed is drawn up by the Scripture from the Creation, to the death of our Saviour (which was the fulness of time) with all care and accurateness: but from thence forward not so strictly or observantly exhibited and held forth, nor indeed was it requisite that it should so be. To annalize therefore the story of this book of the Acts, as it cannot but prove a matter of great difficulty, so will it prove but a matter of conjecture when we have done what we can, and both these proceed from this ground and reason, because the holy Ghost hath been very sparing, if not utterly silent, in giving account of the times in the new Testament from the death of Christ forward, that great business in his death being accomplished and fulfilled, for which alone the succession of times was reckoned and recorded: we shall therefore in the casting of passages and occurences into several years, as we go along, present them under their proper notion of conjecture, yet shewing some ground work and reason of what we do: and though it may be we may not always hit aright, in fixing every thing to its proper year, yet hope we to find here and there some such main pins as whereon to hang a sum of divers years joyned together, and to settle them fast, although we cannot so perfectly find a general nail whereby to fasten the occurrences of every several year by it self.

We may take an instance in the story at which we now are, the choosing of the seven Deacons: It is not possible, positively to determine at what time this was done, it may be it was before the three and thirtieth year of our Saviour was expired, namely, before September next after his Ascension, it may be again it was not before September, but betwixt it and January next following, or it may be it was not before January but after it, in this year that we are entring upon; there is alike uncertainty in all these things, if we should come to try the times of this particular thing by it self, but when we shall come to examine and take up the time of Pauls conversion, then will some steadiness of the time of this appear, and the nail that fastneth that, will so clench up all the stories betwixt that and the descension of the Holy Ghost, or all the stories from the end of the second Chapter to the beginning of the ninth, that they will not hang altogether loose, but have some fixedness to their proper time.

Acts VI.

Vers. 1. There was a murmuring of the Grecians.

IN the Greek it is, Of the Helenists: which word is also used, Chap. 9. 29. and 11. 20. and is of no small controversie for the sense, whether it mean Greeks that lived among the Jews, or Jews that lived among the Greeks. Whether Greeks that were converted to the Jewish Religion, or Jews that used the Greek tongue; but the latter seemeth to be the proper meaning of it upon these grounds.

1. Because proselyted Greeks (which some think Hellenistæ means) are expresly called Ἕλληνες, John 12. 20. and τὸς Ἕλληνὰς, Joseph. Ant. lib. 18 cap. 4. And not Hellenistæ.

2. Because the very form of the word Hellinista doth more properly import a Jew ingrafted into the Greeks, than a Greek ingrafted into the Jews.

3. Because whereas Judæus and Hellen distinguish the two nations Jew and Greek all along in the Scripture, Hebræus and Hellenista must needs signifie something else here.

5. Because

4. Because if by Hellenistæ had been meant the converted Greeks, it had been most proper in contradiction to them to have said πρὸς τοὺς Ἰουδαίους and not πρὸς τοὺς Ἑβραίους.

5. Because the story from the beginning of this book hither maketh the Church to consist most especially of Jews, as Chap. 2. 5, 22. and 3. 12. and though it mention proselytes among them, yet seemeth it most improbable that their number shall be so great as to have seven Deacons chosen for them.

6. Because Nicolas one of the seven, is expressly called a Proselyte of Antioch, which had been somewhat improper if all the business had only concerned Proselytes.

By these and some other reasons that might be produced, it is most proper to apprehend and conceive that these Hellenists were Jews of the Grecian dispersion and plantations, that lived among the Greeks, and used their language: and which may be called the western dispersion, not only in regard of the situation of their dwellings; but chiefly in difference from the Eastern captivities carried away by the Assyrians and Persians: and also because they used Western tongues. And to this sense it soundeth when it is said the Hellenists murmured against the Hebrews: namely that both they that murmured and they that were murmured against were Jews, but the one party called Hebrews and the other Hellenists in reference to their language and residence. The Hebrews in Judea or in the Countries of the Eastern dispersion, and the other in the Countries and Colonies of the Western. And in this sense is that easily understood which is spoken of Paul, Chap. 9. 29. that he spake and questioned with the Hellenists, namely, because he spake their language, the Greek tongue, he being born in Tarsus, where they had Greek Schools. And that in Chap. 11. 19, 20. They that were scattered spake the word to none but to the Jews only, and yet some spake to the Hellenists at Antioch, they that spake being themselves Hellenists by birth, or Jews born in Cyprus and Cyrene, in Greek Colonies, and so dealt with them of Antioch that were of the same native reference that they were.

Sect. Were neglected in the dayly ministration.

That is, in the daily distribution of Alms, or the stock of the Church, as the Text and reason it self maketh it plain enough, though some have conceived that it is to be taken passively, as if these widdows had been hindred from ministring to the Apostles as women had ministred to our Saviour.

Vers. 2. Then the twelve called the multitude of the Disciples unto them.

Not the whole multitude of believers, which at this time were grown to very many thousands: but the whole number of the Presbytery or the 108 of whom mention hath been made before. For 1. how needless was it that eight or ten thousand people should meet togther about this business to choose six or seven men? And 2. how impossible was it there should be a joynt choice, where the distance and diversities of Countries and Languages had made them so great strangers one to another; and when some discontents had driven them into murmurings already? 3. They that chose the seven are bidden to look out among themselves, men full of the Holy Ghost, which among the number of common believers was very hard, if at all possible to find: for we cannot ever find, that the Holy Ghost had come down upon any but the 120. And whereas they are required to be of honest report and wisdom, it doth not infer that any of the 108. were otherwise, but because there was difference of eminencies and excellencies among them.

Vers. 3. Seven men.

This number may seem to refer to the seven Nations of the Western Jews who had made the complaint, Cappadocians, Ponticks, Asians, Phrygians, Pamphilians, Romans, and Cretans.

Sect. The Office of Deacons.

1. It was not ministerial or for the preaching of the word, but for providing for the poor; for as the occasion of their election was complaint of the poor, so the end of their choice was to provide for their relief. It is true indeed that these seven men, at the least two of them, Stephen and Philip, were Preachers of the word as well as overseers of the poor: but this their ministerial function they had before their Deaconry, not with it. For it

it is not only the opinion of Epiphanius, but even ſenſe and reaſon do give their vote with him, that theſe men were of the number of the Seventy, or at the leaſt of the 108. that had been Chriſts conſtant followers and diſciples: and ſo had received their miniſterial function from Chriſt and not from the Apoſtles, and it was not an addition to their Deaconry, but their Deacon to it: For the Text telleth plainly that they were full of the Holy Ghoſt before they received the impoſition of hands, and ſo had in all probability, yea indeed paſt denial, received the Holy Ghoſt when the 120. did, they being ſome of that number.

2. Thoſe tables for which the office of Deaconry was ordained, were not holy Tables but common. For 1. The twelve ſet an inconſiſtenc between ſerving theſe Tables, and preaching the Word, Verſ. 2. which they would never have done, if ſerving of Tables had been the attending upon the Sacrament of the Lords Supper. 2. The ſerving of Tables that they mean, they put over from themſelves to the Deacons, but none can think that they would ever reſign or give over the adminiſtring the Sacrament. 3. There were Miniſters enough already for the adminiſtration and attending upon the Sacrament, and there needed no new ordination or office for it.

3. The office of the Deacons was to take care of the poor according to their ſeveral wants; to gather and receive collections for them, to diſtribute to them, to overſee them, and to miniſter to them in their neceſſities, and therefore it is no wonder if the Apoſtles were ſo circumſpect in their election, and ſo obſervant in their ordination. For theſe ſeven were to take this work of the Apoſtles out of their hands, and to diſpoſe of the ſtock the Church, and upon whoſe care the ſupport of the poor was to depend, and their welfare upon their incorruption, and then it is no marvel if they were choſen men of good report: and they were to converſe with variety of languages and nations, and therefore it was needful they ſhould be full of the Holy Ghoſt, inabling them to converſe with them in their divers tongues.

Sect. The book of the life of John the Evangeliſt under his name forged.

Of Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon and Parmenas there is no mention in Scripture. The book that beareth the name of Prochorus, concerning the life, miracles and aſſumption of John the Evangeliſt, doth juſtly bear this brand in its forehead as it ſtands in Bilioth. Patr. Tom. 7. Hiſtoria hæc Apocrypha eſt, fabuloſa, & indigna proſus quæ legatur. The Author bewrayeth himſelf to be a Romaniſt, by the ſign of the croſs and the local deſcent cap. 3. by Linus and Domitian diſputing about the coming of Chriſt, and by John Port-Latin, cap. 10. and by other viſible ſignes, although he had thought he had put on a vizor ſufficient to have hidden that, when he bringeth in Peter calling John the prime Apoſtle, even in the beginning of firſt Chapter. But that none may loſe ſo much time as to read him over, let him take a patern of the reſt of his pedlary ware out of the twentieth Chapter, where he bringeth in John writing a letter to the Devil that poſſeſſed a man, and by that letter caſting him out.

Sect. Nicolas a Proſelite of Antioch.

He is held to have been the author and occaſion of the Sect of the Nicolaitans, Rev. 2. 6, 15. Iren. lib. 1. cap. 27. Euſeb. hiſt. lib. 3. cap. 29. A ſect that miſconſtrued the doctrine of Chriſtian communitie and Chriſtian liberty, to all uncleaneſs and licentiouſneſs: but whether it began to be ſo miſconſtrued by Nicolas himſelf, or by ſome of his followers, as the Sadduces abuſed a good doctrine of Sadoc to a damnable Hereſie, it is difficult to determine, and this is not the proper place to examine it.

Verſ. 7. A great company of the Prieſts were obedient to the Faith.

I cannot but wonder at the boldneſs of Beza in this place, and indeed in hundreds of other places: for he doth rather ſuſpect the truth and purity of this Text, than believe the ſtory that ſo many Prieſts ſhould believe: And yet it ſeemeth, among all his Greek Copies there was not one that read otherwiſe. Truly it is a daring that deſerves caſtigation in him, that when he either underſtandeth not the perfect meaning of a place, or findeth difficulty in it, or hath fancied a ſenſe contrary to it, that he ſhould throw dirt into the face of the Scripture, and deny the purity of the Greek text, before he will ungive ungive any thing of his own groundleſs opinion: Honorable is the memory of that man in the Church of God, and his name as a ſweet perfume among us, but I would this his boldneſs which he took to himſelf continually, had not given ſo great occaſion to Jews and Papiſts to bark againſt the purity of the Text and the truth of the Goſpel as it hath done.

Verſ. 9. The Synagouge of the Libertines.

That is, of Jews that were freeborn, (as Paul Act. 22. 28.) viz. the ſons of thoſe Jews that had obtained the Roman freedom: He that from a ſlave or ſervant obtained manumiſſion and liberty, was called libertus, and his child, born to him in this freedom, was libertinus.

Verſ. 15. His face as the face of an Angel.

Stephen is accuſed by the ſtudents of this Libertine Colledge, of blaſphemy againſt Moſes and the Temple, for preaching of the deſtruction of his ceremonies and of that place, whereas he ſpake but what Moſes and an Angel had foretold before, Deut. 28. and 32. Dan. 9. and accordingly his face hath the ſplendor of an Angel, and ſhineth like the face of Moſes.

Acts VII.

Verſ. 2. Men, Brethren.

THAT is, Brethren: for the word men is added only by an Hebrew Elegancy and cuſtom, as Gen. 13. 8. we are Men, Brethren, which our Engliſh hath well rendred, we are Brethren, ſo verſ. 26. of this Chapter.

§. When he was in Meſopotamia.

For Chaldea was alſo reckoned to Meſopotamia: and ſo Pliny accounteth it, Lib.6. Nat. Hiſt. cap. 26. Babylon Chaldaicarum gentium caput diu ſummam claritatem obtinuit in toto orbe, propter quam reliqua pars Meſopotamiæ Aſſyriæque Babylonia appellata eſt. And afterwards, Sunt etiamnum in Meſopotamia Hipparenum, Chaldæorum & hoc, ſicut Babylon: And preſently after, Orchein quoque tertia Chaldæorum doctrina, in eodem ſitu locantur.

Verſ. 3. And ſaid unto him, Get thee out of thy Country.

Divers expoſitors have intricated themſelves into a perplexitie, they cannot well tell how to get out of, by ſuppoſing theſe words, and the words of Moſes, Gen. 12. 1. to be the ſame, and to ſpeak of the ſame time and thing: whereas they are viſibly and vaſtly diſtant and different, and they mean two ſeveral calls of God to Abraham, the one in Chaldea, the other in Charran: In Chaldea God appears to him, and bids him Get thee out of thy Country and from thy kindred, but maketh no mention of leaving his fathers houſe, for that he took along with him, Gen. 11. 31. The Holy Ghoſt indeed hath aſcribed the conduct of this journy to Terah as if he had received the call, and had been the chief mover in the buſineſs, but it is only to ſhew his converſion and forſaking of his native Country and Idolatry, and his readineſs to go with Abram when God calleth Abram: but that the call was to Abram, it is not only aſſerted by Stephen here, and Joſhuah Chap, 24. 2. but alſo confeſſed by ſome of the Jews themſelves, as Aben Ezra on Gen. 12. 1. The Lord commanded Abram whilſt he was yet in Ur of the Chaldees that he ſhould leave his Country. But when God calls him from Haran or Charran, he then bids him depart from his fathers houſe as well as he had done from his country and kindred before, for now he left his brother Nahor and all his fathers houſe behind him. Had this been obſerved, there could never ſo many ſcruples have riſen about Terahs age at Abrahams birth, nor about Abrahams journey, as there have done; nor would there be ſuch ambiguity about tranſlating the word ויאמר Gen. 12. 1. as there hath been: The ſtory in Geneſis runs current and in a continuation: and may be illuſtrated in this Paraphraſe: God in Ur of the Chaldees appeared to Abraham and ſaid unto him, Get thee out of thy Country and from thy kindred, but take thy fathers houſe with thee and go to a land which I ſhall ſhew thee: And when Abram told Terah of this command, Terah condeſcended and conſented; And

Terah

Terah took Abram, and Lot and Sarai, and they (Terah and Abram) went with them from Ur to Haran and dwelt there: And Terah died in Haran; And then God ſaith to Abram, Get thee out of thy Country and from thy kindred, and from thy fathers houſe alſo now, and go into Canaan, &c. And to take away all cavils that might be made againſt the matter in this reſpect, in that both Ur and Haran, are called Abrams country and kindred, Stephen hath laid them both in Meſopotamia, as is noted before.

Verſ. 5. Not ſo much as to ſet his foot on.

As Deut. 2. 5. Abram was forced to buy a place of burial, though all the land was given him by promiſe.

Verſ. 6. And intreat them evil four hundred years.

There is a double ſum of years mentioned concerning the ſeed of Abraham, namely four hundred, and four hundred and thirty, Gen. 15. 13. Exod. 12. 40. The four hundred and thirty was from Abrams receiving of the promiſe, to the delivery out of Egypt. And the four hundred was from the fifth year of Iſaac to that delivery: Then did Iſmael mock and then began affliction to Abrahams ſeed, and from thence they were in affliction and ſojourning, in a ſtrange land Canaan and Egypt, four hundred years: See the LXX at Exod. 12. 40.

Verſ. 7. And ſerve me in this place.

This clauſe is here alledged by Steven as if it had been ſpoken to Abraham, whereas it was ſpoken to Moſes four hundred years after, but the holy Ghoſt uſeth to ſpeak ſhort in known ſtories, as Matth. 1. 12. 1 Chron. 1. 36. Mark 1. 2, 3. &c.

Verſ. 14. Threeſcore and fifteen ſouls.

Whereas Moſes ſaith that all the ſouls of the family of Jacob that went down into Egypt were but threeſcore and ten, Gen. 46. 27. Exod. 1. 5. Deut. 10. 22. Stephen inlargeth the number, and ſaith threeſcore and fifteen: and herein he followeth the septuagint who in the two firſt cited places have that ſum: and they make up the account in Gen. 46. by fetching the names of five children of Joſeph out of the book of Chronicles, which Moſes mentioned not, and which indeed were not born at their going into Egypt but after, and theſe are Machir, Giliad, Shutelah, Tahen, and Eden: and the reaſon of this their reckoning I have ſhewed elſwhere, viz. In Harm. of Evang. at Luke 3. 36.

Verſ. 16. And were carried over into Sichem, &c.

The ſhortneſs of the Language in this verſe hath bred ſome difficulty, and as Stephens ſpeaking more than Moſes in the Verſe foregoing, was the cauſe of ſome obſcurity there, ſo is it a cauſe of more in this verſe, for that he hath not ſpoken ſo much. Moſes hath told that Jacob was buried in Hebron, Stephen here ſpeaks as if he had been buried in Sichem. Moſes maketh Jacob the buyer of the land of Emor the father of Sichem, Steven ſeemeth to make Abraham the buyer of it: And in concluſion to make Jacob and his twelve ſons to lie in one Sepulcher, and Abrahams and Jacobs purchaſe to be but one and the ſame. Now Stephen and Moſes ſpeak but the ſame thing, and intend the ſame meaning, only Stephen uſeth ſhortneſs of ſpeech in relating a ſtory which was ſo well known that a word was enough for a ſentence: and he ſpake in a language which had its propriеties and Idioms, which thoſe that heard him, eaſily underſtood.

[And were carried over into Sichem.] The Syriack and Arabick apply this only to Jacob, for they read it in the ſingular number, He was tranſlated, directly croſs and contrary to Moſes who telleth plainly that Jacobs burial was in Hebron, Gen. 50. 13. And in Hebron Joſephus would have all the ſons of Jacob buried likewiſe, Antiq. lib. 2. cap. 4. and by his report they were buried there before Joſeph, for that they were brought thither as they died, but Joſephs burial was put over, till all the Nation came out of Egypt: Now it is not to be imagined that Stephen, a man ſo full of the Holy Ghoſt, would ever have ſpoken a thing in which every ordinary man, woman or child that heard him, could ſo eaſily have confuted him, as they might have done if the twelve Patriarks had been buried in Hebron, much leſs when he ſpake to the Councel and to men of learning and underſtanding, that would readily have tript him, if he had faltered in ſo plain and common a ſtory: therefore it is paſt all doubting, that Sichem was knownly and generally reputed the place of the Patriarks burial: For as, although there be mention only of Moſes bringing up the bones of Joſeph, Exod. 13. 19. yet R. Solomon well obſerveth that we may learn from that very place that the bones of all the Patriarks were brought up with him: ſo though there be mention of the burial of Joſeph only in Sichem, Joſh. 24. 32. and no record of the burial of the reſt of the twelve there: yet might it very well be ſuppoſed, had not Stephen aſſerted in that they were alſo buried there with him. For we may prove the bringing of their bones out of Egypt, yea though Stephen had not told it;

For, 1. The ſame cauſe that moved Joſeph to deſire burial in the land of Canaan could not but move the other of the twelve to deſire the like: were it in faith in the promiſe, or becauſe of the intereſt in the Land, or in hope of the reſurrection, all the reſt had the very ſame principles to move them to it that Joſeph had.

2. The reſt of the Tribes bare the ſame honour to their Patriarks, that the Tribe of Joſeph did to him, and therefore if they, in honour to Joſeph would preſerve his bones (that at their removal, they might be taken out of Egypt) the children of thereſt of the Tribes would do ſo by their Patriarks alſo.

3. To which might be added the kind of neceſſity which there was that the twelve Fathers of the Church of Iſrael, and heirs of the Land of Canaan ſhould have their interment in that Land, and not be left in the land of bondage.

So likewiſe may there be arguments ſufficient to prove that they were buried with his bones in Sichem. As 1. There was no reaſon they ſhould be ſevered in the burial who had been united in their removal. 2. Joſephs bones were moſt regardable, and the ſame Sepulcher that ſerved him, would have beſt befit them. 3. The convocation of all Iſrael by Joſhua was to Sichem, and there, upon their poſſeſſing of the land he makes a covenant betwixt them and God, and it is incomparably more probable that they ſhould bury the bones of all the Patriarks there, than in Hebron, where we do not read that Joſhua ever came but to deſtroy the City.

Now the reaſon why Stephen ſpeaking of the burials of Jacob and his ſons which were in diſtant and different places, doth yet couch their ſtory ſo cloſe together, as if they were all laid together in the ſame place, is,

1. Becauſe treating of two numbers ſo unequal, as twelve and one, he firſt followeth the ſtory of the greater number.

2. He uſeth the ſingular number for the plural, Sepulcher for Sepulchers, which is a thing ſo common, as that nothing is more common in the Scripture Language.

3. He uſeth an Ellipſis or cutting off of the conjunction Van or And, which alſo is exceeding common in the ſame Language, as 1 Sam. 6. 19. Pſalm. 133. 3. 2 Kings 23. 8. and divers other places.

So that though he ſpake ſo very curt and ſhort as he did, yet to them that were well enough acquainted, both with the ſtory it ſelf, and with ſuch Hebraiſms, his ſhortneſs would breed no obſcurity, but would they readily take him in this ſenſe: And Jacob and our Fathers died, and were removed to Sichem, and were laid in Sepulchers, in that which Abraham bought for mony, and in that that was bought from the ſons of Emmor, the Father of Sichem.

Verſ. 20. And was exceeding fair.

Gr. [Fair to God] He was a goodly child, ſupernaturally born, when his mother was paſt the natural courſe of childbearing.

Verſ. 22. And Moſes was learned in all the wiſdom of the Egyptians.

This Steven ſpeaketh by neceſſary conſequence from his Princely education.

Verſ. 23. And when he was full forty years old.

There are that ſay that Moſes was forty years in Pharaohs Palace, forty years in Midian, and forty years in the wilderneſs. Tauchuna in Exod. 2.

Verſ. 43. Ye took up the Tabernacle of Moloch, &c.

I. In Amos the words lie thus, Chap. 5.26. ונשאתם את סכות מלככם ואת כיון צלמיכם which the Rabbins Kimchi and Iarchi conſtrue in the future Tenſe, and take it for a threatning of their puniſhment as much as an upbraiding of their ſin: as if he ſhould have ſaid unto them, ye would not take up the Commandments of the Lord to bear them, but you ſhall bear your Idols into captivity with you, and your enemies ſhall lay them upon your ſhoulders: And this might have been a very plauſible and fair ſenſe, but that Steven hath taught us to conſtrue the Verb in the time paſt, and not in the time to come, and to read it thus, ye have born or taken up, &c.

II. Now the fixing of this time when Iſrael took up this Idolatry is ſomewhat difficult: It is ſome facilitating of the matter if we can be ſure it was not in the forty years in the Wilderneſs: And that appears to be ſo, by the very ſcope of Stevens ſpeech: for 1. he telleth that they made a golden calf in the verſe before: and that God for this Idolatry gave them up to worſhip all the hoſt of heaven: whereupon it is evident, that this Idolatry with the calf, was neither of theſe mentioned in this verſe, neither with Moloch nor Remphan: but as it were a cauſe of theſe, for, for it the Lord gave them up to theſe. 2. He ſeemeth to handle this juſtice of God upon them in giving them up to Idolatry under theſe two heads: 1. In neglect of Gods own ſervice in the Wilderneſs, ye offered me no ſacrifice for forty years. And 2. in their chooſing of Idols to worſhip afterward. So that the two verſes ſeem to run in this ſenſe, O houſe of Iſrael ye were not content to offer me ſacrifices for forty years together in the wilderneſs, but ye were well content to ſacrifice to Idols and to worſhip all the hoſt of heaven afterward.

III. The Tabernacle of Moloch: In the Hebrew in Amos it is Siccuth Malkekem: which is rendred by ſome, Siccuth your King, by others, the Tabernacle of your King: by a third ſort, the obſervance of your King: as if it were derived from the word הסכת Deut. 27. 9. Vid. Ab. Ezr. in loc. & Kimchi in Michlol; The Seventie in the unprickt Bible read it Succoth a Tabernacle, which Steven followeth, and they both do not croſs but illuſtrate the ſenſe of the Hebrew.

Now Molech or Moloch, was the Idol of the children of Ammon, 1 King. 11. 17. prohibited to Iſrael in a ſingular manner, Lev. 18. 21. and 20. 2. yet did they worſhip him moſt familiarly, 2 Chron. 28. 3. Jer. 7.31. And Solomon built an high place for him, on mount Olivet before Jeruſalem, 1 King. 11.7. The Valley between was called Tophe and the Valley of the Sons of Hinnom, 2 King. 23. 10, &c. This Idol and Idolatry is thus deſcribed by the Rabbins: Our Rabbins of happy memory ſay: Although all houſes of Idolatry were in Jeruſalem, Moloch was without Jeruſalem, and the Image was made hollow, ſet within ſeven Chappels: Now whoſoever offered flower, they opened to him the firſt of them: who ſo offered Turtles or Pigeons, they opened to him the ſecond: whoſoever offered a Lamb, they opened to him the third: whoſoever offered a Ram, they opened to him the fourth: whoſoever offered a Calf, they opened to him the fifth: whoſoever offered an Ox, they opened to him the ſixth: but whoſoever offered his Son, they opened to him the ſeventh. Now his face was like a Calf, and his hands were ſtretched out, as a mans that reacheth out to receive ſomething from his neighbour: And they ſet him over a fire, and the Prieſts took the child, and put him between the arms of the Idol, and there the child gave up the Ghoſt, D. Kimch. on 2 King. 23. 10. He was made of braſs and was heat with fire under till he was glowing hot, and then the Prieſts put the child into his arms, and there he was burnt, and the Prieſts made a noyſe in the mean while with Drums, that the Father might not hear the childs cry: And therefore it was called Tophet from Toph, a Drum or Taber, Vid. R. Sol. on Jer. 7. 31.

Theſe ſeven Chappels (if there be truth in the thing) help us to underſtand, what is meant by Molechs Tabernacle, and ſeem to give ſome reaſon why in the Prophet he is called Siccuth, or the Covert God, becauſe he was retired within ſo many Cancelli, (for that word Kimchi uſeth) before one could come at him. And ſo the tranſlation of the Seventy, is but a gloſs or expoſition of that phraſe in the Prophet, ye took up Siccuth or the Covert God your King, which they render, according as the Nation readily underſtood the thing, the Tabernacle of Moloch, that Idol you ſo highly prize as your chiefeſt King. Now Molech or Moloch, or Milchom or Malcham (for all theſe names are but one and the ſame) was alſo called Baal in a ſpecial and diſtinctive ſenſe, as is apparent by Jer. 7.31. and 19. 5. compared together: and this conſideration helpeth to underſtand divers places where the word Baal is ſingly uſed, as 1 King. 16. 31, 32. and 18. 19, &c. And according to this ſenſe ſhould I underſtand the matter of Baal-peor in which Israel was joyned to him, to have been sacrificing their children to Molech. And answerably should I interpret that speech of the Psalmist, They ate the sacrifices of the dead, Psal. 106. 28. that is, sacrifices offered up when they offered up their children to be burnt: And this was the first time, they committed this horrid Idolatry in the very close of the forty years in the Wilderness, in which forty years they had not cared to offer any sacrifices to God: And this abomination with Molech they committed also presently after they were come into the Land, Psal. 106. 35, 36, 37. Judg. 2. 13.

IV. [And the Star of your God Remphan.] Here is the main difficulty of this Verse, and that not only in regard of the difference of these words of Stephen from those of Amos, but also in regard of the obscurity of the matter it self: Amos readeth thus: Chijun your Images, the Star of your God. Now the question in the first place is, what is meant by Chijun, and it may be scrupled whethere it be the proper name of an Idol, as some think, or a word appellative, to another sense: I should rather take it the latter way [although I know generally it is construed for an Idols name, either for Hercules, who among the Egyptians was called Chon: or for Saturn, who among the Arabians was called Chevan, as see Aben Ezra on Amos, and Beza on this place.]

For there are two things in this passage of Stephen and Amos very considerable toward the understanding of this place.

1. That Stephen saith, God gave them up to worship all the host of heaven: now if Chijun betoken but one Idol, or one Planet, this cometh very short of the intent that he aimeth at their worshipping of all.

2. That Amos saith Chijun Tsalmekem, the latter word in the plural number, and as it seemeth by the very posture of it, the latter of two Substantives, and not in appositi-on: For if Chijun were but one Idol, it is somewhat improper to say Chijun your images, as speaking of more.

I should therefore construe Chijun appellatively for the ordering or disposing of their Images, as that it meaneth thus, that they had their Τύπους, or representations as Stephen calls them, of the whole heaven and host of it in one Series, or in one body (as see Ezek. 8. 10.) beset with variety of Stars and Figures, representing this or that Planet, and this or that constellation: And that Amos meaneth thus, you took up Siccuth your King, and the frame or disposal of your Images in one compact piece, the stars of your Gods which you have made to your selves: shewing that when they would worship all the host of heaven in Images and representations, that they made a fabrick and compacture in one bulk or in one room, representing in several fashions and forms in it, the several planets and constellations of Heaven: and this he calleth Chijun Tsalmekem, the ordering or disposing of your Images. See 2 King. 23. 4, 5.

V. Now for the word Remphan, in which lieth the most obscurity of all, many conjectures are given upon it. The Seventie hath rendred Chijun Ῥαιφάν: mistaking one piece of a letter, as it is conceived by Buxtorfius, and reading ר for כ and רִיּוּן for כִּיּוּן Beza conceiveth it was purposely done, for that by רפא Ῥεφά which signifieth a Giant is to be understood Hercules: and yet he scrupleth whether it should not be rather read Ῥεμμάν than Ῥεμφάν, as aiming at the God of the Syrians, 2 King. 5. 18. But not to insist upon producing such variety of conjectures upon this matter, which are to be seen in several authors: it seemeth to me, 1. that Stephen doth something follow the Seventy in this word, as well as he doth in the rest of the Text: and for the new Testament to follow them, differently from the Hebrew Text is no wonder, and needeth nothing to be said upon it. 2. That Stephen doth add a letter to the word, or doth a little change it from those very Syllables that the Septuagint use, that he might give the sense of the Prophet the more clearly, and speak out the matter he hath in hand the more plainly. And the word Remphan seemeth to be compounded either of an Hebrew and a Greek word, or of two Hebrew words together, and to mean either the high shiner, of רם and φαίνω, or the high representation of רם and פנים and the latter the more probable: For as the Prophet in the word Chijun expressed the Fabrick of the host of heaven, which the Idolatrous people had wrought and represented in one piece, so would Stephen speak to the very same sense, and therefore forsaketh the word Ῥαιφάν which he found in the Septuagint, and taketh up, or formeth it into Ῥεμφάν, which signifieth the high face or high representation, or that whole piece that represented the whole heaven, which he calleth their God, because in that they adored all the Stars and hosts of Heaven at once, and so, τὸ ἄστρον is but one number put for another, one star for many.

VI. [I

VI. [I will carry you away beyond Babylon] Both in the Hebrew of Amos, and in the Greek of the Septuagint, it is, Beyond Damascus: which Stephen seemeth purposely to have changed into beyond Babylon: because that as he had treated in the beginning of the Chapter of Abrahams coming out of those parts into that land, he would now shew e contra, how they for their Idolatry should be carried out of that land into those parts again.

Acts VIII.

Vers. 1. And there was a great persecution, &c.

§. 1. Persecution.

THE spite and cruelty of the adversary was not quenched by the blood of Stephen, but rather inflamed. Stephens confuting and confounding the great Scholars of the Synagogue of the Libertines, Cyrenians, Alexandrians and Cilicians, had bred in them so hateful a disdain of being put to a nonplus; and his cutting words at his death to all the people, Acts 7. 51, 52, 53. had galled them so sore; And especially his denouncing of ruine to Moses ceremonies, and to the Temple as they charged him with it, had so exasperated their blind zeal, that it is not sufficient as they think to have Stephen put to death only, but it is not fit that others should live who were of the same heresie and blasphemy with him, for so they construed it: Hence ariseth a bitter persecution to destroy the Church at Jerusalem, because it held an opinion that Jerusalem and the rites there should be destroyed.

In this Tragedy was Saul a chief actor, sparing neither place from search, Sex from apprehension, nor the apprehended from torture or imprisonment. Such a Testimony doth Luke give of him, Acts 8.3. and such a confession doth he make of himself, Act. 22. 4. and 26. 11. By which the Epistle of Lucianus concerning the finding out of the body of Stephen may again be challenged for forgery, when it maketh Gamaliel a most zealous convert and professor of the Gospel, and that at this time, insomuch that he took care for the burial of Stephen, and received Nicodemus when the Jews had cast him out, which will prove incredible, in regard of his scholar Saul.

For who can believe either that the scholar should be so great a persecutor when the master was so great a professor, or that if it were so, Gamaliel of all other should scape with his life, when his scholar of all other could not but know where to find him out and how to follow him close? or who can imagine that Paul when he was answering for his life for being a Christian, should plead his education under Gamaliel, if he were as notorious a Christian as he? This had been to bring his master into danger and not himself out, and to mar another mans cause not mending his own.

Vers. 1. And they were all scattered abroad except the Apostles.

§. 2. Dispersion upon the persecution.

Out of the darkness of persecution, the Lord bringeth forth the light and the propagation of the Gospel: Providing at once for the safety of some by their flight, and for the calling home of many more by their dispersion. At that time, saith Luke, there was a great persecution against the Church that was at Jerusalem, and they were all scattered abroad throughout the Regions of Judea and Samaria except the Apostles. Where, as the preservation of the Apostles in the very centre of the Tyrant is admirable, so the scattering of the other into their several places is considerable. For that they travailed into Judea and Samaria, Damascus, Phœnicia, Cyprus and Syria, the Text is plain in this and in other places, but since it mentioneth none of their journeys any further, what is said of them more, is but groundless conjectures, or rather ridiculous Fables. For though it were granted that they scattered through other Countries of the Heathen, yet to bring them as far as France and England as some do, is almost as far from reason as these places are distant from Jerusalem, unless some other cause can be alledged of this their flight than to avoid the danger. Yes, it may be said they took so long a journey to preach the Gospel; but 1. the Text saith that the dispersed preached to the Jews only, of which I believe these Countries afforded a very small number. And 2. the legend saith, that Mary Magdalen, Martha and Joseph of Arimathea and others were the travailers, who where they had a calling to the ministery is yet to seek.

These

These persons and others with them are driven by the blast of a common report, to Marseils in France, Aix in Provence, Glastenbury in England, and I know not whither. It would be sufficient to give the reader but some particulars of the Legend, and then would he easily judge of the whole, but it is not worth the labour. It is more pertinent to consider who they are that the Evangelist meaneth, and whose story he followeth, when he saith here they were all scattered, and in Chap. 11. 19. that they travailed as far as Phenice, &c. Certainly it cannot be meant of the whole Church of Jerusalem, or of all the members of it, which were now many thousands, but of the 108. that were of the Presbtery or society with the Apostles.

For 1. The Evangelist setteth himself to follow the story of the hundred and twenty from the very beginning of the book, and he keeps to it still.

2. By instancing so suddenly in Philip he sheweth what kind of men he meaneth when he saith they were all scattered.

3. He saith they went every where preaching, εὐαγγελιζόμενοι which word is never used but of Preachers by function.

4. Persecution would far sooner look after the Preachers than the common members.

5. There were common members at Jerusalem, while Paul stayed there, vers. 3. and yet the all that the Evangelist meaneth were scattered before.

Vers. 5. To the City of Samaria.

Samaria here and in otherplaces in the new Testament, is not the name of a City but of the Country. And so is Luke to be understood here, Philip came down to the City of Samaria: that is, to the Metropolis of that Country, which indeed was Sychem: and so saith Josephus, Antiq. lib. 11. cap. 8. Σαμαρεῖται μητρόπολιν τότε τὴν Σίκιμα ἔχοντες, The Samaritans had then Sichem for their Metropolis. And in the same Chapter he saith again Ἑβραίοι μὲν εἶναι χρηματίζειν δὲ οἱ ἐν Σικίμοις Σιδώνιοι; which his Latine interpreter hath rendred thus, Illis [Samaritis] dicentibus Hebræos quidem se esse: sed Sichimitas vocari a Sidoniis; which translation how true it is, and whether Josephus mean not, that the Samaritans said that they were indeed Hebrews, but were called Sidonians that dwelt at Sichem, and whether in that story they call not themselves so for advantage, let the learned censure: This City John the Evangelist calleth Sychar instead of Sychem, Joh. 4. 5. not that the text is there corrupted as some have held, but that the Jews seem to have pronounced the word so corruptly in derision of the Samaritans to whom they were bitter enemies. For by this name they reviled them for drunkards, for so the word signifieth, and this taunt seemeth to have been taken up from Esay 28. 1. woe to the drunkards of Ephraim, of which Sichem was the chief City.

Vers. 6. And the people gave heed &c.

§. 3. Samaria converted.

Our Saviour gave it in lesson to his disciples both by precept and his own example, that they should preach, first in Jerusalem, then in Judæa, and then in Samaria: For so did he himself, Joh. 1. and 2. and 4. So commanded he them to do Acts 1. 8. and so do they now: Act. 8. Philip one of the seven, travailing in the common affliction, and in preaching the Gospel as the rest of the 108. did, being backed with this warrant of his master, goeth down to Samaria and preacheth there though they were enemies to the Jews. It was but three years or little more, since Christ had been there among them himself, Joh. 4. and whether it were the good remembrance of what he had taught them then, or the extraordinary hand of God with what was delivered now, or both together, such effect have Philips doctrine and miracles that the City for the general doth believe and is baptized.

Vers. 13. Simon himself believed.

§. 4. Simon Magus.

He who had long caused the people to wonder at his miraculous delusion is now himself amazed at Philips real miracles. But conceiving that he had wrought them by a Magical faculty above his own, and desiring to fish and get the trick out of him, he insinuateth himself the more nearly into his company by taking on him to believe, so that he is baptized: for any other belief of Simon Magus is not imaginable.

For

For when he saw that Peter and John exceeded Philip, as he thought Philip did exceed himself, (for to Apostles only belonged to bestow the Holy Ghost) the whole venome and mischief of his heart brake forth at once; first, by offering mony for the same Apostolical power, and then in a scornful intreaty of the Apostles to pray for him, when they advised him to repent and pray, for so should I understand his words, Vers. 24. Pray ye to the Lord for me, for an Ironical taunt, and finally by open Heresie and opposal of the Gospel.

He had a whore which he led about with him, was called Helena, or as some will have it, Selene, of Tyrus: Of whom if we understand, Rev. 2. 20. which speaketh of Jezabel, that called her self a Propheteſs, it would not be unconsonant, for as Simon like Ahab was of Samaria, so Helena like Jezable was of Tyre: Nor were there doctrines much different, for the one seduced men to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to Idols, and the other taught them to do what they would, and not to fear the threats of the Law, for that they should be saved by the grace of Simon: Many such monsters of Doctrine and Hydra's of opinion, did this Lerna of Heresie breed, and this firstborn of Satan vomit forth. As these, that in Judea, he was the Son of God, in Samaria, the Father, and in other Nations, the Holy Ghost. That Helena bred Angels, and Angels made the world: That he himself came down from Heaven for his Helena, and that she was the lost sheep mentioned in the Gospel, and that she was that Helena that occasioned the destruction of Troy: And a great deal more of such hideous and blasphemous matter, recorded by Irenius, Epiphanius, Augustine, Philastrius and others.

Histories have traced this Magical wretch, from Samaria to Rome, and there have brought Simon Peter and him contending before Nero in working of miracles, and Peter bringing him to harm and shame, which shall be tried in its proper place.

§ 5. The Holy Ghost given, vers. 17.

The Apostles at Jerusalem hearing the glad tydings of the conversion of Samaria, send down unto them Peter and John. And why these two rather than any other of the twelve, is not so easie to resolve, as it is ready to observe that if in this imployment there was any sign of Primacy, John was sharer of it as well as Peter. Being come, they pray, and lay their hands upon them, and they receive the Holy Ghost. Here Episcopacy thinketh it hath an undeniable Argument for proof of its Hierarchy, and of the strange rite of confirmation. For thus pleadeth Baronius for the former. From hence, saith he, it may be seen that the Hierarchical order was instituted in the Church of God even in this time; for Philip doth so baptize those that believe, that yet he usurpeth not the Apostolical priviledge, namely the imposition of hands granted to the Apostles. And thus the Rhemists both for it and for the latter in their notes on Act. 8. 17. If this Philip had been an Apostle, saith S. Bede, he might have imposed his hands that they might have received the Holy Ghost, but this none can do saving Bishops. For though Priests may baptize and anoint the baptized also with Chrisme consecrated by a Bishop, yet can he not sign his forehead with the same holy oyl, because that belongeth only to Bishops, when they give the Holy Ghost to be baptized. And after this testimony of Bede they subjoyn their inference. This imposition therefore of hands, together with the prayers here specified (which no doubt was the very same that the Church useth to that purpose) was the ministration of the Sacrament of Confirmation.

Now let the Reader with indifferency and seriousness but ruminate upon these two Queries, and then judge of those two inferences;

First, whether Apostleship were not an Order for ever, unimitable in the Church: for besides the Reason given to prove that it was, upon the choosing of Matthias, others may be added to make it the more clear: As 1. the end of their Election was peculiar, the like to which was not to be in the Church again; for they were chosen to be with Christ, Mark 3. 14. to be eye-witnesses of his resurrection, Acts 1. 22. & 2. 32. & 10. 41. as they had been of his actions and passion, Luke 1. 2. And therefore Paul pleading for his Apostleship, That he had seen the Lord, 1 Cor. 9. 1. and in the relation or story of his calling, this particular is singulary added, That he saw that just one, and heard the voice of his mouth, Acts 22. 14.

Secondly, the name of Apostles keepeth it self unmixed or confounded, with any other Order. It is true indeed that the significancy of the word would agree to other Ministers that are to preach, but there is a peculiar propriety in the sense that hath confined the title to the twelve and Paul, as any indifferent eye will judge and censure upon the weighing of it in the New Testament.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, when Paul reckoneth the several kinds of Ministry that Christ Jesus left in the Church at his ascension, Ephes. 4. 11. and 1 Cor. 12. 28. there is none that can think them all to be perpetuated, or that they should continue successively in the like order from time to time: For within an hundred years after our Saviours birth, where were either Prophets or Evangelists, miracles or healings? And if these extraordinary kinds of Ministration were ordained but for a time and for special occasion, and were not to be imitated in the Church unto succeeding times; much more, or at the least as much were the Apostles, and Order much more, at least, as much extraordinary as they.

Fourthly, the constant and undeniable Parallel which is made betwixt the twelve Patriarchs the Fathers of the twelve Tribes, and the twelve Apostles, not only by the number it self, but also by the New Testament in the four and twenty Elders, Rev. 4. 4. and in the gates and foundations of the new Jerusalem, Rev. 21. 12, 14. doth argue and prove the latter order, as unimitable as the first. These things well considered, if there were no more, it will shew how improbable and unconsonant the first inference is, that is alledged, that because there was a subordination betwixt the Apostles and Philip; that therefore the like is to be reputed betwixt Bishops and other Ministers, and that Bishops in the Church, are in the place of the Apostles.

A second Quære, and very material to the matter in agitation is, whether imposition of hands were ever used by the Apostles, but for ordination to some Office in the Church: For whereas their giving of the Holy Ghost to Samaritans in this story, and to others elsewhere, is adduced as an example and argument for that which is now called confirmation, and which hath been indifferently given to all (for it is good cheap) that this act of the Apostles aimed not, nor intended to any such thing, may be reasonably conjectured and guessed at by these considerations:

First, that the Holy Ghost thus given, meaneth not his ordinary work of Sanctification and confirming in Grace, but his extraordinary gifts, of Tongues, Prophecying, and the like. And this is evident by the meaning of that Phrase the Holy Ghost in the Scriptures, (when it denoteth not exactly the Person of the Holy Ghost, or the third person in the Trinity) For as it is a Rabbinick expression, very common in the writings of the Jews, and in the use of the Nation; and evermore in their use and sense meaneth only the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit mentioned: so doth it constantly signifie in the Scripture; and it is very hard, if not utterly impossible to find it signifying any other sense.

Secondly, it is yet more evident by the very historical relation of Luke concerning the matter in hand; for in Acts 19. 6. telling how Paul laid his hands upon certain men at Ephesus, and they received the Holy Ghost, he instantly explaineth what were the gifts of the Holy Ghost that they received, for they spake with tongues, saith he, and prophecyed. And it is not possible to think but that Simon Magus (when he offered money for this fruit of the imposition of his hands; that he might give the Holy Ghost) saw some visible apparent sign of the gift by the hands of the Apostles, which if it were only sanctifying or confirming grace, how could he have seen it? So did they of the Circumcision perceive when the gifts of Holy Ghost fell upon the Gentiles, Acts 10. 45. For they saw it by their speaking with tongues, and magnifying God, vers. 46.

Fourthly, it being then thus undeniable that the gifts conferred by the imposition of hands, were the extraordinary ones of the Holy Ghost; it can as little also be denyed that they were imparted only to some singular and particular persons, and not to all whatsoever without distinction. For otherwise, 1. It must be granted that Simon Magus received them as well as others, which I know not who will grant; for by his familiarity with Philip and the Apostles (he having also been baptized with the rest, and his wickedness and his villany not yet broken forth) he might have gotten a precedency in this gift before others, if it had been general.

2. It would bring women under imposition of hands, which can hardly be dreamed of, or ever was any one. It is true indeed that women might, and did receive some of these extraordinary gifts, but it was by immediate influence from Heaven and not by any imposition of hands.

So that now if we look upon this Story, and upon others of the like nature, through these spectacles, it will appear that this Imposition of the Apostles hands was not upon all the Samaritans, but upon some selected number, nor upon those selected ones for their confirmation in grace, but for their ordination to the Ministery, and with the imposition of hands they received the Holy Ghost to inable them for that work.

Vers. 26. Which is desart.

This is to be applyed to the way to Gaza, and not to Gaza it self, and so the Syriack and Arabick apply it expressly and warrantably, seeing the way was through the wilderness of Judah, and there was but one Gaza.

Vers. 27. A man of Æthiopia.

There is mention of a double Cush or Æthiopia in Scripture, for so is it rendred, the one in Arabia, and the other in Africk; and Homer even in his time speaketh of a twofold Æthiopia, Odyss. 1. but it is questionable whether he mean the same with the Scripture, or no, since he calleth them Eastern and Western; whereas these were East and South. Now this man is held, and that upon good ground, to be of Æthiopia in Africk, where the name of Candace is renowned even in Heathen Authors.

Vers. 33. Who shall declare his generation.

This Prophecy of Esay which the Eunuch was reading, is exceedingly much mistaken by the Jews, and this clause of the Prophecy is exceedingly controverted among Christians. The Jews understand it, some of them concerning Josiah, others concerning the whole people of Israel, but the Holy Ghost hath in this place put us out of all doubt of whom it speaketh. But as for the sense of this clause, some Christians understand it concerning the ineffablity of Chirsts Eternal generation: others concerning the ineffability of his incarnation, or the generation of his humane Nature united to the Godhead: others concerning the wondrous generation of the Church and faithful; for it followeth, For he was cut off from the Land of the Living, and yet the generation of his faithful ones increased. But it seemeth to me that the word דורו & דור is to be understood of the age and generation in which Christ lived, rather than of his own generation or descent: and so is it used by the Holy Ghost in other places, as Gen. 6.9. Acts 13.36. &c. and so is it intepreted here by the Chaldee and other Jewish glossaries: Now the meaning of the verse and of this clause is to this purpose, He was taken away and hurryed from Prison, and from Judgment to Execution, and as the LXX hath enlarged the sense by change of Phrase, In his poor and dejected estate, his Judgment was utterly taken away, and no right done him; and who can sufficiently speak of the looseness and wickedness of that generation, (called in the Gospel the viperous, adulterous, wicked, untoward generation) which dealt so unjustly and wretchedly with him, as to take and cut him off from the Land of the Living?

Vers. 39. And the Eunuch went on his way rejoycing.

Dorotheus in Synopsi, if he might be believed, will tell you what became of this Eunuch afterward; as that he preached the Gospel in Arabia, in the Isle of Taprobane, and all about the red Sea; and that he is reported to have suffered matyrdom gloriously, and to have been buried there, Biblioth. patr. tom. 7. But believe it that list; for this I observe to be the constant and common officiousness of Superstition, to make any man that is mentioned in the New Testament with a good report, to become a Preacher, and commonly a Bishop, and constantly a Matyr.

Acts IX.

§ 1. Paul converted.

IN this year must be placed the conversion of Paul, and the reasons to prove time, shall be given anon. A man, a wonder (for so will * some have his name to signifie) in whom was shewed as much as can be seen in man, both for want of grace, and for abundance. Inferior to none in wickedness, but only in this, that it was not final; and inferiour to none in holiness, no not to the greatest Apostles. A scene on which at one time corrupt Nature shewed her cursed vigor; and at another time sanctifying Grace her sacred power; and both to such an extent, as not many parallels. He was born in Tarsus of Cilicia a free City of the Romans, and himself a Freeman of that City.

* Hieron.

2 Cor. 11. 21. Phil. 3. 5. Rom. 11. 1. City. His Parents were both Jews; and therefore he calleth himself an Hebrew of the Hebrews, or an Hebrew both by Father and Mother. His discent was of Benjamin, which from the general division under Jeroboam the first, had adhered constant to the Tribe of Juda, and so kept Registers of their Genealogies, as that Tribe did. According to his double Nation, he also bare a double name, Saul, as he was an Hebrew by birth, and Paul as he was a Roman by freedom: His education was in the Schools of Tarsus, where as Strabo recordeth were Scholars no whit inferiour to the Students in Athens. Here he attained the Greek Language and Learning, and grew expert in their Philosophy and Poems, his skill wherein he sheweth, in alledging Epimenides, Aratus, and Menander. From thence he was sent to the University at Jerusalem, for the study of Divinity and of the Jewish Law. His Tutor was Gamaliel a Pharisee, a man of special note and reverence among the people. His proficiency was above many of his equals of his own Nation, he being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of the Fathers. From his youth he also learned a handy trade of making Tents, and joyned the working in that by some vicissitudes with his studies: which thing was common with the Scholars of the Jews, partly for the earning of their maintenance, and partly for the avoiding of idleness and sin. So Rabbi Juda the great Cabalist, bare the name and trade of Hhajat a Shoomaker or Taylor.

Tit. 1. 12. Acts 17. 28. 1 Cor. 15. 33. Act. 22. 3. Gal. 1. 14. Acts 18. 3.

Yet was the learning of this great Scholar but gorgeous ignorance, and his forward zeal, but the more excellent impiety. When he thought he followed holiness, he persecuted it, and when his studies should have overtaken the truth, then had he lost both them and it and himself and all.

Acts 8. 3. and 22. 4. Acts 26. 11. As for Saul, saith Luke, he made havock of the Church, entring into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison. He began now to write his positions in blood, and it must be no less than death or abjuration not to be of his opinion. Neither was this his fury confined within the walls of Jerusalem, or the compass of Judea, but overflowed also unto forreign Cities: where the Jewish Synagogues acknowledging subjection to the metropolitan See, submit to her letters, and are too ready to perform her will. Among the rest he obtaineth commission for Damascus, whither a poor Church having but lately overrun persecution, is ready now to be overrun by it again: But by the way, he is met with by Christ, and from a Lion made a Lamb, and he that went to lead captivity is himself captived.

In the story of this great wonder, the Text and the matter it self calleth upon us to consider these things.

1. That the most notorious persecutor that the Gospel had yet found, is chosen of all others to be the Doctor of the Gentiles: that even his own example, or rather the glorious example of Gods mercy in his conversion, might be a comfortable Doctrine to those notorious sinners of the Gentiles as well as his preaching.

2. That the like divine violence was never used for the converting of a sinner either before or since: but 1. it was necessary that he should see Christ, as Vers. 17. because it was a necessary ingredient toward the making of an Apostle, to have seen the Lord, 1 Cor. 9. 1. And 2. it was needful, that the Lord should appear to him in such daunting power, not only for his own quelling, but also for the terrour of all persecutors for the time to come.

3. This appearance of the Lord unto him, was not so much in his person as in his glory, nor what he saw of him, besides the light that stroke him blind, was with the eyes of his body but of his spirit.

4. The place was near Damascus from whence had sprung one of the sharpest persecutors that Israel had groaned under, 2 Kings 11. 32. Amos 1 3. compare Gen. 14. 15.

5. The manner is so plainly set down in the Text, that it is needless to insist upon it: only these two or three things may not unfitly be touched upon and taken to thought. 1. That more was spoken from heaven, than Luke hath here related, as appears by Pauls own relation of it, Acts 26. 16, 17, 18. but the Holy Ghost frequently useth to speak out stories to the full, some parts in one place, some in another, challenging the readers pains and study, to pick them up. 2. That whereas in Chap. 6. 7. it is said that those that travailed with Paul heard the voice, but in Chap. 22. 9. that they heard not the voice, it is to be understood, that they heard the voyce of Paul speaking to Christ, but not Christs voice to him: or if they heard the voice from heaven, yet they understood not what it said. 3. Whereas in Chap. 9. 7. it is said these men stood speechless, but in Chap. 26. 14. that they fell all to the ground: the word ἱστήκεισαν in Chap. 9. 7. standeth in opposition to their going forward and not to their falling to the earth, and meaneth, that their amazedness fixed them that they could not flee nor stir.

§ 2. The year of his conversion.

Some have conceived that he was rapt into the third heaven, and learned the Gospel by revelation, as 2 Cor. 12. in those three days that he was blind after the sight of this glorious light, and whilst he fasted and prayed, Act. 9. 9. And from this conceit hath another grown, as a supporter of that that bred it, namely that he was not converted till seven years after our Saviours Ascension. This latter opinion was first invented, that his writing of the second Epistle to the Corinthians might be brought within the compass of about fourteen years after his conversion; for so long a time and no more he setteth betwixt his rapture and that Epistle, 2 Cor. 12. 2. and it was also originially grounded upon this supposition, that his rapture was in the time of that his blindness. Two surmises probable and plausible enough to behold at distance, but approaching nearer to them they will lose of their beauty, and upon serious weighing they will prove but a shadow. The question how he came to the knowledge of the Gospel so soon, in so much that he so soon preached it, very likely gave the first occasion of the first opinion, namely of his rapture in his three days blindness.

A question to which an answer may be easily given, and yet no such consequence concluded upon it. 1. It is true indeed, that he received not the knowledge of the Gospel of man, nor was he taught it but by the revelation of Jesus Christ, as himself saith, Gal. 1. 12. yet might he have such a revelation, without any such rapture: For there were three other special ways whereby God used to reveal himself and his will to his Prophets and Servants, and those were by dreams, by visions and by a suddain and immediate suggestion or revelation, which is called telling in the ear, as 1 Sam. 9. 15,17. 2 King. 20. 4. And as for raptures they were the most extraordinary and the least familiar of all other: And how easily might Paul be taught the mistery of the Gospel by some of the other means, especially since the Text hath expresly told that he had his visions? Acts 9. 12. 2. Paul himself telleth of an extasie or rapture that he was in, as he was praying in the Temple at Jerusalem, Acts 22. 17. Now that that was in the second year of Claudius (as shall be shewed by and by) when he went to carry the almes of the Disciples to Jerusalem, Acts 11. 30. it may be confidently concluded upon, because that God in that his rapture telleth him that he must thence forward go far away to preach unto the Gentiles, Acts 22. 21. and when he returneth from Jerusalem to Antioch, he is sent by the Church upon that imployment, by a special charge of the Holy Ghost, Acts 13. 2. And that from that time to the time of his writing the second Epistle to the Corinthians, were about fourteen years as himself summeth it, we shall evidence by some particulars, before we part from this Subject. Thus then in the first place we see that neither his rapture was at the time of his conversion, nor that his conversion is to be cast six or seven years forward that it may be within fourteen of that Epistle in regard of his rapture. But not to intricate our selves any more in the variety of opinions, that have fixed some one time, some another to the conversion of this Apostle, the next, readiest and surest way that I have found to resolve upon this doubtful question and to determine this scruple, is to go by these collections and degrees.

1. That the famine prophecied of by Agabus, and which is said to have fallen out in the time of Claudius the Emperour, Acts 11. 28. fell out and came to pass in his second year: And for this we have the testimony of a Roman Historian, even Dion Cassius who under the Consulship of Claudius II. and Caius Largus which was in the second year of Claudius his reign speaketh of λιμῷ ἰσχυρῷ, which his translater hath rendred fames ingens, Dion. lib. 60. Now although it might seem that that famine only referred to the City of Rome, and was caused there through the unnavigableness of the River Tiber, which should have brought in Provisions; because he saith, Λιμοῦ τε ἰσχυροῦ γενομένου ὁ μόνον τῆς ἐν τῷ ἄστει παρούσης ἀφθονίας τῶν τροφῶν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς εἰς πάντα τὸν μετὰ ταῦτα αἰῶνα ὠφελείας ἐπεμήσατο, &c. that Claudius provided not only for the present famine, but also for future times, by mending the Haven and clearing the River: yet Suetonius writing the very same story, ascribeth the cause of the famine, not to the fault of the River or Haven, but to a constant sterility or barrenness, and so inlargeth the extent of it further than Rome: Arctiore autem annona ob assiduas sterilitates, &c. In Claud. cap. 18. Josephus, Antiq. lib. 20. ca. 2. speaketh of this great famine in Judea, and relateth how Helena the Queen dowager of the Adiabeni, and Izates her son then reigning, she being at Jerusalem in her own person and he in his own kingdom, did bring in provisions in an exceeding plenty to the Jews at Jerusalem for their sustenance in the famine, for they were both converted to the Jews Religion and Izates circumcised. Eusebius hereupon hath set this famine in Claudius

Claudius his fourth year, and after the death of Herod Agrippa, becauſe that he found that Joſephus had placed it after Agrippa's death, which was in Claudius his third. But we find not in Joſephus any thing that may fix it to that year, more than the ſubſequence of one ſtory to another, which is an argument of no validity: only this he relateth as concerning the time of Izates, that when he firſt came to the Crown, and found his elder Brethren impriſoned that he might come to the Throne the more quietly, he was grieved at the matter, and on the one hand accounting it impiety to kill them or to keep them priſoners, and on the other hand knowing it unſafe to keep them with him and not impriſoned, he choſe a mean between both, and ſent them for hoſtages to Rome to Claudius Cæſar: And after this he relateth, how he haſted upon his coming to the Crown to be circumciſed; and after his Circumciſion, how his Mother Helena went to Jeruſalem and relieved it, being much affamiſhed. Now in what year of Claudius any of theſe thingswere done, he hath not mentioned, but hath left it at large; and therefore we may as well ſuppoſe, that Izates was made King in the firſt year of Claudius, and Helena his Mother went to Jeruſalem in his ſecond, as Euſebius may, that ſhe went thither in his fourth.

II. That Paul going at that time of the famine to Jeruſalem, to bring the almes and collection to the poor Brethren of Judea, had his trance in the Temple, Acts 22. 17. and in that trance he was rapt into the third Heaven, 2 Cor. 12. 2. It may be thought indeed by the juncture of Story that Luke hath made, that this his trance, was at his firſt journey which he took to Jeruſalem after his converſion, which journey is mentioned, Acts. 9. 28. and Gal. 1. 18. for having from the ſixth verſe of Acts 22. and forward, related the Story of his converſion, and of Ananias coming to him and baptizing him, he preſently ſubjoyneth this, when I was come again to Jeruſalem, and was praying in the Temple, I was in a trance; as if that had been the very firſt time, that ever he came there after he was converted. But beſides, that it is very common with Scripture to make ſuch juncture for times and Stories, as if they were cloſe together, when often times there is very much ſpace of time betwixt them, as Mat. 19. 1. Luke 4. 13, 14. Acts 9. 20, 21, 26, 27. the proper intent of the Apoſtle in that Oration of his, Acts 22. is to vindicate himſelf from the accuſation laid againſt him for polluting the Temple; and chiefly to plead his authority and commiſſion, and why he had to deal among the Gentiles, and therefore he inſiſts upon two particular Commiſſions, one to preach, and the other to preach to the Gentiles; and this is the reaſon why he joyns his converſion, and his rapture in the Temple ſo cloſe together, and not becauſe they were ſo in time. Now this ſcruple being thus removed, and that conſidered which was ſaid before, that in this trance in the Temple, God ſaid he was to ſend him to the Gentiles; and that accordingly he was diſpatched to that work as ſoon as he came to Antioch; it cannot but be concluded that his trance in the Temple was in the ſecond of Claudius, and that this was his rapture into the third Heaven, ſince we read not of any rapture or trance that he had, but this.

III. That this trance or rapture was ſomewhat above fourteen years before he wrote his ſecond Epiſtle to Corinth, 2 Cor. 12. 2. Now in that he ſaith it was πρὸ ἐτῶν before, or above fourteen years ago, he ſpeaketh not of an indefinite time, for then for ought any reaſon can be given to the contrary, he might as well have let the mention of the time alone, but that it was but a little above that ſpace, though it were ſomewhat above exact fourteen years.

IV. When he wrote that ſecond Epiſtle to Corinth he was in Macedonia, as is apparent by very many paſſages in that Epiſtle, chap. 1. 14. and 2. 13. & 7. 5. & 9. 2, 4. And thither he went upon the hubbub at Epheſus raiſed againſt him, Acts 20. 1. where he had even the ſentence of death in himſelf, 2 Cor. 1. 9.

V. Now to count fourteen years compleat from the ſecond of Claudius, in which was Pauls rapture, it will bring us to the ſecond year of Nero. And let us but caſt and compute thoſe ſhreds of time that we can find hinted in the Acts of the Apoſtles, and we ſhall find them agreeing with this account, and giving ſome light unto it. As firſt, it is ſaid by Paul, that after he had been at Jeruſalem, he muſt alſo ſee Rom, Acts 19. 21. Now this doth argue the death of Claudius: for if he had expelled all the Jews out of Rome, as it is averred both by the Scripture, Acts 18. 2. and by Suetonius in Claud. chap. 25. and never revoked his Edict for ought we can read in any Story; it is very unlikely, and unreaſonable to think, that Paul ſhould think of going thither if Claudius were alive: for thither could he neither go without evident and inevitable danger of his own life, nor could he find ſo much as one perſon, of his own Nation in the City when he came there. By this therefore may be concluded that Claudius was now dead, and Nero was going on his firſt year, when Paul publiſheth his reſolution to go for Rome.

And

And the times from hence to his apprehension at Jerusalem may be cast by these Counters. After this his declaring his intention for Rome, he stayeth in Asia for a season, Acts 19.22. Now that this season was not long, both the preceding and following Verses do help to confirm; for in the Verse before Paul is in a manner upon his motion toward Macedonia, and so to Jerusalem already. And it is very likely that the feast of Tabernacles which was in September induced him thither; but the danger that he was in at Ephesus before his parting, Acts 19. 23, 24. &c. disappointed him of his journey thither, he being now put off from providing accommendation for his voyage, and put to shift for life and liberty. About the middle of October, Nero's first year was out: and Paul by that time it is like is got to Macedonia, and while he continues there he writes this Epistle; as the subscription of it in the Greek, Syriack, Arabick, and divers other Translations do reasonably well aim it here; howsoever they do it in other places: Or if we should yeild to Baronius, that it was written from Nicopolis, Tit. 2. 12. it maketh no difference, as to the thing in hand, or at least very little, since we are upon the time, and not upon the place; and the time of difference will not be above a month or two. Paul wintering so little at Nicopolis, as that he was in motion again about the beginning of January, if not before, for his three months travail of Greece, brings it up to the Passover time, or near upon, Acts 20. 3. 6. And after the Pasover week Paul sets for Jerusalem, as the Story plainly leads him thither; and thence is he shipt for Rome, toward the latter end of our September, or about the Fast and solemn day of humiliation, Acts 27. 9. And this was in the second year of Nero, now almost expiring, or very near unto its end: And to this sense seemeth that account in Acts 24. 27. to be understood, After two years Portius Festus came into Felix room. Not after two years of Pauls imprisonment, for that is utterly without any ground or warrant in the world, nor after two years of Felix Government, for he had been Governour in Judea many years, Acts 24. 10. but after two years of Nero's Empire, or when he had now sitten Emperour about two years; for that the Scripture sometime reckoneth from such unnamed dates, might be shewed, from Ezek. 1. 1. 2 Sam. 15. 7. 2 Chron. 22. 2. And that it is so to be understood, may be confirmed out of Josephus Antiq. lib. 20. cap. 7. &c.

So that this time being fixed of Pauls apprehension at Jerusalem, to be in Nero's second; as Eusebius and others have well held, and his writing the second Epistle to Corinth proving to be about the beginning of that year; and so the fourteen years mentioned 2 Cor. 12. 2. measured out.

VI. We must now count backward from this time to the Councel at Jerusalem, and as near as we can, cast up what time might be taken up, betwixt those two periods, in the motions and stations of the Apostle, that the Text hath expressed betwixt the fifteenth Chapter of the Acts and the twentieth: Or rather let us count forward for the more facil and methodical proceeding, and take up what may be guessed to be every years work and passage as it cometh to hand.

Paul cometh from Jerusalem to Antioch with Judas, Silas and Barnabas, Acts 15. 20.
Judas and Silas stay there a space, vers. 33.
Judas stayeth after they be gone away, vers. 35.
Some days after he departeth, vers. 36, 40.
He goeth through Syria and Cilicia confirming the Churches, vers. 41.
To Derbe and Listra, chap. 16. 1.
Through the Cities, and delivereth the Apostles decrees, vers. 4.
Throughout Phrygia, vers. 6.
Throughout the Region of Galatia, vers. 16. To all these journeys we may allow one year; and certainly if the movings and stayings of the Apostle, and the distance of the places, and the work he did be considered, there can no less than a whole year be allowed for all this progress.

After his passage through Galatia, Paul goeth to Mysia, Acts 16. 7. To Troas, vers. 6.
To Samothrace, Neapolis and Philippi, vers. 11, 12.
At Philippi he continueth many days, vers. 13, 16, 18.
Thence he passeth through Amphipolis and Appollonia, chap. 17. 1.
Cometh to Thessalonia, and is there three Sabbath days in quiet, vers. 2.
Afterward is persecuted, vers. 5.
Goeth to Berœa and converteth very many, vers. 10. 12.
Goeth from thence to Athens, vers. 15.
There waiteth for Silas and Timothy, vers. 16.
From thence goeth to Corinth, Acts. 18. 1. For all these journeys and actions we will allow him half an year, and I cannot see how they could take so little.

At

At Corinth he continueth a year and an half, Acts 18. verſ. 11. And this makes up three years ſince the Councel at Jeruſalem.

After this long ſtay at Corinth he is perſecuted, yet tarryeth a good while after, Acts 18. 18.

From thence he ſaileth to Epheſus, but ſtayeth little, verſ. 19.

Goeth thence to Cæſarea.

To Jeruſalem.

To Antioch, and ſpendeth ſome time there, Acts 18. 22, 23.

Goeth over all the Country of Gallatia,

And Phrygia in order, Acts 18. 23. To theſe paſſages I ſuppoſe there is hardly any that can allow him leſs than a whole year; that ſhall but ſeriouſly conſider of the things that are mentioned, and the length of the journeys.

After his paſſing through Phrygia he cometh to Epheſus, Acts 19. 1.

And there continueth three years, Acts 19. 8, 10, 21, 22, & 20. 31.

After this he goeth into Macedonia, Acts 20. 1. from whence he writeth that ſecond Epiſtle to Corinth in the beginning of the ſecond year of Nero. So that yeelding theſe ſeven years for the travails of this Apoſtle, betwixt that time and the Counſel of Jeruſalem, Acts 15. (and leſs than ſeven, it is not poſſible to allow, ſeeing that four years and an half of that ſpace was taken up in the two Cities of Corinth and Epheſus) and it will reſult that the Councel at Jeruſalem was in the ninth year of Claudius: Now Paul himſelf reckoneth ſeventeen years from his converſion to this Councel, Gal. 1. 18. & 2. 1. which ſeventeen counted backward from the ninth of Claudius it falleth out almoſt paſt all controverſie that Pauls converſion was in the next year after our Saviours aſcenſion; as may be ſeen by this enſuing Table.

PART II.

The Roman Story.

§ 1. Velleius Paterculus.

TIBERIUS keepeth himſelf ſtill in the Countrey, but not ſtil at Capreæ: *for this year he draweth near unto Rome, and haunteth in ſome places about four miles off, but cometh not at all unto the City. This ſeemeth to be his firſt journey towards it, that Suetonius ſpeaketh of *when he came by water to the Gardens beſide the Naumachy, or the Pool in Tiber where they uſed their ſporting ſea-fights, and returned again, but the cauſe not known. The firſt thing mentioned of him under theſe Conſuls, both by Tacitus and Dion, is his marrying forth the Daughter of Druſus, which they name not; and Julia and Druſilla the Daughters of Germanicus; Druſilla to L. Caſſius, Julia, to M. Vinicius. This was a Son of that M. Vinicius to whom Paterculus dedicated his ſhort and ſweet Roman Hiſtory. And the nearneſs of the time would very nearly perſwade that this was that very Vinicius himſelf, but that Paterculus ſheweth that his Vinicius was Conſul when he wrote his book to him; and that (as himſelf, and Dion agreeing with him ſheweth) An. V. C. 783. or the next year after our Saviours Baptiſm; but this Vinicius, Tiberius his Son in Law, (as Tacitus intimateth) was only a Knight, but a Conſuls Son. Howſoever, in theſe times ſhone forth and flouriſhed the excellent wit, and matchleſs pen of that Hiſtorian, an Author known to all learned men, and admired by all that know him: His Original was from the Campanians, as himſelf witneſſeth not very far from the beginning of his ſecond book, when he cometh to ſpeak of the Italian war in the time of Sylla and Marius. No pen is ſo fit to draw his pedegree and Character as his own, and therefore take only his own words; Neque ego verecundia, domeſtici ſanguinis gloriæ dum verum refero ſubtraham, &c. Nor will I for modeſty derogate any thing from the honour of mine own blood, ſo that I ſpeak no more than truth; for much is to be attributed to the memory of Minatius Magius my great-Grandfathers Father, a man of Aſculum; who being *Nephew to Decius Magius, a renowned Prince of the Campanians, and a moſt faithfull man, was ſo truſty to the Romans in this war, that with a Legion which he had banded, Pompey took Herculaneum, together with T. Didius; when L. Sulla beſieged, and took in Conſa. Of whoſe vertues both others, but eſpecially and moſt plainly Q. Hortenſius hath made relation in his Annals. Whoſe Loyalty the people of Rome did fully requite, by enfranchiſing both him and his, and making two of his Sons Pretors. His Grandfather was C. Velleius, Maſter of the Engeneers to Cn. Pompey, M. Brutus and Tyro; a man, ſaith he, ſecond to none in Campany, whom I will not defraud of that Teſtimony which I would give to a ſtranger: He at the departure of Nero (Tiberius his Father) out of Naples, whoſe part he had taken for his ſingular friendſhip with him, being now unweldy with age and bulk of body, when he could not accompany him any longer, he ſlew himſelf. Of his Fathers, and of his own rank and profeſſion, thus ſpeaketh he joyntly: At this time (namely, about the time that Auguſtus adopted Tiberius) after I had been Field-Marſhal, I became a Souldier of Tiberius, and being ſent with him General of the Horſe into Germany, which Office my Father had born before; for nine whole years together, I was either a ſpectator, or to my poor ability a forwarder of his moſt celeſtial deſigns; being either a Commander, or an Ambaſſadour. And a little after: In this war, (againſt the Hungarians and Dalmatians, and other Nations revolted) my meaneſs had the place of an eminent Officer. For having ended my ſervice with the Horſe, I was made Queſtor; and being not yet a Senator, I was equalled with the Senators. And the Tribunes of the people being now deſigned, I led a part of the Army delivered to me by Auguſtus, from the City to his Son. And in my Queſtorſhip, the lot of my Province being remitted, I was ſent Ambaſſidour from him to him again. Partner in the like employments and honours, he had a brother named Magius Celer Velleianus, that likewiſe attended Tiberius in the Dalmatian war, and was honoured by him in his Triumph, and afterward were his Brother and he made Pretors. When he wrote that abridgement of the Roman Hiſtory which which we now have extant, he had a larger work of the ſame ſubject in hand, of which he maketh mention in divers places; which he calleth juſtum opus, and juſta volumina, but ſo far hath time and fortune denyed us ſo promiſing and ſo promiſed a piece; that this his abſtract is come ſhort home and miſerably curtailed to our hands. So do Epitomes too commonly devour the Original, and pretending to eaſe the toil of reading larger Volumes, they bring them into neglect and loſs. In the unhappineſs of the loſs of the other, it was ſomewhat happy that ſo much of this is preſerved as is; a fragment of as excellent compacture, as any is in the Roman tongue; wherein ſweetneſs and gravity, eloquence and truth, ſhortneſs and variety, are ſo compacted and compounded together, that it findeth few parallels either Roman or other.

§ 2. Troubles in Rome about Uſury.

This year there was a great diſturbance in the City about Uſury, the too common, and the too neceſſary evil of a Common-wealth. This breed-bate had ſeveral times heretofore diſturbed that State, though ſtrict and rigorous courſes ſtill were taken about it. At the firſt, the intereſt of mony lent, was proportioned and limited only at the diſpſal of the lender, a meaſure always inconſtant, and often unconſcionable. Whereupon it was fixed at the laſt by the twelve Tables to an ounce in the pound, which is proportionable in our Engliſh coin, to a penny in the ſhilling. Afterward by a Tribune Statute it was reduced to half an ounce, and at laſt the trade was quite forbidden. But ſuch weeds are ever growing again, though weeded out as clean as poſſible; and ſo did this: Partly, through the covetouſnes of the rich, making way for their own poſit; and partly through the neceſſities of the poor, giving way to it for their own ſupply.

Gracchus now Pretor, and he to whom the complaint was made at this time, being much perplexed with the matter, referreth it to the Senate as perplexed as himſelf. He perplexed becauſe of the multitude that were in danger, by breach of the Law; and they, becauſe they were in danger themſelves. Here was a prize for the greedy appetite of Tiberius, when ſo many of the beſt rank and purſes, were fallen into his lurch, and their moneys lent fallen into forfeiture, becauſe of their unlawfull lending. The guilty Senate obtain the Emperours pardon, and eighteen moneths are allowed for bringing in of all mens accompts: In which time the ſcarcity of mony did pinch the more, when every ones debts did come to rifling: and in the nick of that there followed a great diſturbance about buying Lands, which before was invented for a remedy againſt the former complaints. But the Emperour was glad to ſalve up the matter by lending great ſums of mony to the people gratis for three years.

With this one dram of humanity, he mingled many ounces of cruelty and blood-ſhed. For Conſidius Proculus as he was celebrating his birth day without fear and with Feſtivity, is haled out of his own houſe, brought to the bar and condemned: and his Siſter Sancia interdicted fire and water. Pompeia Macrina baniſhed; and her Father and Brother condemned and ſlew themſelves. But this year there is no reckoning of the ſlaughtered by name, for now their number grew numberleſs. All that were impriſoned and accuſed for conſpiracy with Sejanus, he cauſeth to be ſlain every mothers ſon. Now, ſaith mine Author, there lay an infinite maſſacre of all ſexes, ages, conditions, noble and ignoble, either diſperſed, or together on heaps. Nor was it permitted to friends or kindred to comfort, bewail, or behold them any more: but a Guard ſet, which for the greater grief abuſed the putrified bodies till they were haled into Tiber, and there left to ſink or ſwim, for none was ſuffered to touch or bury them. So far was common humanity baniſhed, and pity denyed even after death, revenge being unſatisfied when it had revenged, and cruelty extended beyond it ſelf. Nor did the accuſers ſpeed better than the accuſed, for he alſo cauſed them to be put to death as well as the other, under that colour of juſtice and retaliation, ſatisfying his cruelty both ways to the greater extent. It were to be admired, and with admiration never to be ſatisfied (were it not that the avenging hand of God upon the bloody City is to be acknowledged in it) that ever a people ſhould be be ſo univerſally bent one againſt another, ſeeking the ruine and deſtruction one of another, and furthering their own miſery, when they were moſt miſerable already, in him that ſought the ruin of them all. A fitter inſtrument could not the Tyrant have deſired for ſuch a purpoſe than themſelves; nor when he had them ſo pliable to their own miſchief, did he neglect the opportunity, or let them be idle: For as he ſaw accuſations encreaſe, ſo did he encreaſe his Laws to breed more: inſomuch that at the laſt it grew to be capital, for a ſervant to have fallen before, or near the image of Auguſtus, or for any man to carry either coin or ring into the Stews, or houſe of Office, if it bare upon it the image of Tiberius.

§. 3. A wicked accuſation.

Who can reſolve whether it were more vexation to ſuffer upon ſuch fooliſh accuſations, or upon others more ſolid; but as falſe as theſe were fooliſh? That was the fortune of Sextus Marius an intimate friend of the Emperours; but as it proved, not the Emperour ſo of his: This was a man of great riches and honour, and in this one action of a ſtrange vain-glory and revenge. Having taken a diſpleaſure at one of his Neighbours, he inviteth him to his houſe, and there detained him feaſting two days together. And on the firſt day he pulleth his houſe down to the ground, and on the next he buildeth it up far fairer and larger than before. The honeſt man when he returned home found what was done, admired at the ſpeed of the work, rejoyced at the change of his houſe, but could not learn who had done the deed. At the laſt Marius confeſſed that he was the agent, and that he had done it with this intent, to ſhew him that he had power to do him a diſpleaſure, or a pleaſure, as he ſhould deſerve it. Ah blinded Marius, and too indulgent to thine own humours! ſeeſt thou not the ſame power of Tiberius over thee, and thy fortunes pinned upon his pleaſure, as thy neighbours upon thine? And ſo it came to paſs that fortune read him the ſame lecture, that his fancy had done another. For having a young beautiful Daughter, and ſuch a one, as on whom the Emperour had caſt an eye, and ſo plainly, that the Father ſpyed it, he removed her to another place, and kept her there cloſe and at diſtance, leſt ſhe ſhould have been violated by him, who muſt have no denyal. Tiberius imagined as the thing was indeed, and when he ſeeth that he cannot enjoy his love, and ſatisfie his luſt, he turneth it to hate and revenge. And cauſeth Marius to be accuſed of inceſt with his daughter whom he kept ſo cloſe, and both Father and Daughter are condemned, and ſuffer for it both together.

§ 5. A miſerable life and death.

In theſe ſo feareful and horrid times, when nothing was ſafe, nothing ſecure, when ſilence and innocency were no protection, nor to accuſe, no more ſafeguard than to be accuſed, but when all things went at the Emperours will, and that will always cruel, what courſe could any man take not to be intangled, and what way being intangled to extricate himſelf? The Emperours frowns were death, and his favours little better; to be accuſed was condemnation, and to accuſe was often as much; that now very many found no way to eſcape death but by dying, nor to avoid the cruelty of others, but by being cruel to themſelves. For though ſelf-murder was always held for a Roman valour, yet now was it become a meer neceſſity; men chooſing that miſerable exigent to avoid a worſe, as they ſuppoſed, and a preſent end, to eſcape future evils. So did Aſinius Gallus at this time for the one, and Nerva the other. This Gallus about three years ago, coming to Tiberius upon an Ambaſſy, was fairly entertained and rovally feaſted by him, but in the very interim he writeth letters to the Senate in his accuſation. Such was the Tyrants friendſhip; and ſo ſour ſawce had poor Aſinius to his dainty fare. A thing both inhumane and unuſual, that a man the ſame day ſhould eat, drink and be merry with the Emperour, and the ſame day be condemned in the Senate upon the Emperours accuſation. An Officer is ſent to fetch him away a Priſoner; from whence he had but lately gone Ambaſſadour. The poor man being thus betrayed, thought it vain to beg for life; for that he was ſure would be denyed him, but he begged that he might preſently be put to death, and that was denyed alſo. For the bloody Emperour delighted not in blood and death only, but in any thing that would cauſe other mens miſery, though it were their life. So having once committed one of his friends to a moſt miſerable and intolerable impriſonment; and being ſolicited and earneſtly ſued unto, that he might be ſpeedily executed and put out of his miſery, he flatly denyed it, ſaying, That he was not grown friend with him yet. Such was the penance that he put poor Gallus to: a life far worſe than a preſent death; for he ought him more ſpite and torture than a ſuddain execution. The miſerable man being impriſoned and ſtraitly looked to, not ſo much for fear of his eſcape by flight, as of his eſcape by death, was denyed the ſight and conference of any one whoſoever, but him only that brought him his pitiful dyet, which ſerved only to prolong his wretched life, and not to comfort it; and he was forced to take it, for he muſt by no means be ſuffered to dy. Thus lived (if it may be called a life) a man that had been of the honourableſt rank and office in the City; lingring and wiſhing for death, or rather dying for three years together; and now at laſt he findeth the means to famiſh himſelf, and to finiſh his miſerable bondage with as miſerable an end; to the ſore diſpleaſure of the Emperour, for that he had eſcaped him, and not come to publick execution.

Such an end alſo choſe Nerva one of his near friends and familiars, but not like the other, becauſe of miſeries paſt or preſent; but becauſe of fear and foreſight of ſuch to come. His way that he took to diſpatch himſelf of his life, was by total abſtinence and refuſal of food; which when Tiberius perceived was his intent, he ſits down by him, deſires to know his reaſon, and begs with all earneſtneſs of him, that he would deſiſt from ſuch a deſign: For what ſcandal, ſaith he, will it be to me, to have one of my neareſt friends to end his own life, and no cauſe given why he ſhould ſo die? But Nerva ſatisfied him not either in anſwer or in act, but perſiſted in his pining of himſelf, and ſo dyed.

§ 6. The miſerable ends of Agrippina and Druſus.

To ſuch like ends came alſo Agrippina and Druſus, the Wife and Son of Germanicus, and Mother and Brother of Caius, the next Emperour that ſhould ſucceed. Theſe two, the Daughter in law, and Grandchild of Tiberius himſelf, had about four years ago been brought into queſtion by his unkind and inhuman accuſation, and into hold and cuſtody, until this time. It was the common opinion that the curſed inſtigation of Sejanus, whom the Emperour had raiſed purpoſely for the ruine of Germanicus his houſe had ſet ſuch an accuſation on foot; and made the man to be ſo cruel towards his own family; but when the two accurſed ones had miſerably ſurvived the wicked Sejanus, and yet nothing was remitted of their proſecution, then opinion learned to lay the fault where it deſerved, even on the cruelty and ſpite of Tiberius himſelf. Druſus is adjudged by him to die by famine, and miſerable and woeful wretch that he was, he ſuſtaineth his life for nine days together, by eating the flocks out of his bed, being brought to that lamentable and unheard of dyet, through extremity of hunger. Here at laſt was an end of Druſus his miſery, but ſo was there not of Tiberius his cruelty towards him; for he denyed the dead body burial in a fitting place; he reviled and diſgraced the memory of him with hideous and feigned ſcandals and criminations, and ſhamed not to publiſh in the open Senate, what words had paſſed from the pining man againſt Tiberius himſelf; when in agony through hunger he craved meat, and was denyed it. Oh what a ſight and hearing was this to the eyes and ears of the Roman people, to behold him that was a child of their darling and delight Germanicus, to be thus barbarouſly and inhumanely brought to his end, and to hear his own Grandfather confeſs the action and and not diſſemble it!

Agrippina the woeful Mother, might dolefully conjecture what would become of her ſelf, by this fatal and terrible end of the poor Prince her Son. And it was not long, but ſhe taſted of the very ſame cup, both of the ſame kind of death, and of the ſame kind of diſgracing after. For being pined after the ſame manner, that it might be coloured that ſhe did it of her ſelf (a death very unfitting the greateſt Princeſs then alive,) ſhe was afterward ſlandered by Tiberius for adultery with Gallus that died ſo lately, and that ſhe cauſed her own death for grief of his. She and her Son were denyed burial befitting their degree, but hid in ſome obſcure place where no one knew, which was no little diſtaſt and diſcontentment to the people. The Tyrant thought it a ſpecial cauſe of boaſting and extolling his own goodneſs, that ſhe had not been ſtrangled, nor dyed the death of common baſe offenders: And ſince it was her fortune to die on the very ſame day that Sejanus had done two years before, viz. Octob. 17. it muſt be recorded as of ſpecial obſervation, and great thanks given for the matter, and an annual ſacrifice inſtituted to Jupiter on that day.

Caius her Son, and Brother to poor Druſus took all this very well, or at leaſt ſeemed ſo to do, partly glad to be ſhut of any one that was likely to have any colour or likelyhood of corrivality with him in his future reign; and partly being brought up in ſuch a School of diſſimulation, and grown ſo perfect a Scholar there, that he wanted little little of Tiberius. This year he married Claudia the daughter of M. Silanus, a man that would have adviſed him to good, if he would have hearkned; but afterward he matched with a mate and ſtock, more fitting his evil nature, Ennia the Wife of Macro, but for advantage reſigned by her Huſband Macro, to the adulterating of Caius, and then to his marriage.

§ 7. Other Maſſacres.

The death of Agrippina drew on Plancina's, a Woman that never accorded with her in any thing, but in Tiberius his diſpleaſure, and in a fatal and miſerable end. This Plancina, in the univerſal mourning of the ſtate for the loſs of Germanicus, rejoyced at it, and made that her ſport, which was the common ſorrow of all the State: How poor Agrippina reliſhed this, being deprived of ſo rare a Huſband, can hardly be thought of without joyning with her in her juſt and mournfull indignation. Tiberius having a ſpleen at the woman for ſome other reſpect, had now a fair colour to hide his revenge under, to call her to account, and that with ſome applauſe. But here his revenge is got into a ſtrait: for if he ſhould put her to death, it may be it would be ſome content to Agrippina: and therefore not to pleaſure her ſo much, he will not pleaſure the other ſo much neither as with preſent death, but keepeth her in lingring cuſtody till Agrippina be gone, and then muſt ſhe follow; but her reſoluteneſs preventeth the Executioner, and to eſcape anothers, ſhe dieth by her own hand.

Let us make up the heap of the ſlaughtered this year, in the words of Dion, Such a number of Senators, to omit others, periſhed under Tiberius, that the Governours of Provinces were choſen by lot, and ruled, ſome three years, ſome ſix, becauſe there were not enough to come in their room.

PART I.

§. 1. Thankleſs officiouſneſs.

OF the ſtate and occurrences of the Church this inſtant year, there is neither any particular given by S. Luke, nor any elſe where to be found in Scripture, ſave only what may be collected from the words of Paul concerning himſelf, namely that he is this year either in Arabia or Damaſcus or both, ſpending one part of it in the one place, and the other in the other. The Church (now this great perſecutor is turned Preacher) injoyed no doubt a great deal of eaſe in the ceaſing of the perſecution, and benefit by the earneſtneſs of his Miniſtry. And ſo let us leave her to her peace and comfortable times now growing on, and turn our ſtory to the Romans.

Tiberius his reign being now come to the twentieth year, the preſent Conſuls L. Vitellius, and Fabius Priſcus, do prorogate or proclaim his rule for ten years longer. A ceremony uſed by Auguſtus, whenſoever he came to a tenth year of his reign, but by Tiberius there was not the like cauſe. One would have thought the twenty years paſt of his inhumane and barbarous reign ſhould have given the City more than enough of ſuch an Emperor: and have cauſed her to have longed rather for his end then to have prolonged his dominion. But ſhe will make a virtue now or complement rather of neceſſity, and will get thanks of him for continuing of that which ſhe cannot ſhake off, and is willing that he ſhall reign ſtill, becauſe ſhe knew he would do ſo whether ſhe will or no. It is the forlorn way of currying favour, to pleaſe a man in his own humour, when we dare not croſs it. The flattering Conſuls received a reward befitting ſuch unneceſſary officiouſneſs, for they kept the feaſt, ſaith Dion, that was uſed upon ſuch occaſions, and were puniſhed. Not with death, for the next year you ſhall have Vitellius in Judea, but with ſome other infliction which it may be was pretended for ſome other reaſon, but intended and impoſed upon a profound policy.

policy. For while they thus took on them to confirm his rule they did but ſhake his title as he conceived, and told him a riddle that he reigned by their courteſie and not by his own intereſt: but when he puniſhed them that would take on them to confirm this ſuperiority he proved it independent, and not pinned upon their will.

§. 2. Cruelties.

The vein of the City that was opened ſo long ago, doth bleed ſtill and ſtill as freſh as ever. For Slaughter ſaith Tacitus was continual, and Dion addeth that none of them that were accuſed were acquitted, but all condemned: ſome upon the letters of Tiberius, others upon the impeachment of Macro (of whom hereafter,) and the reſt only upon ſuſpition. Some were ended by the executioner, others ended themſelves by their own hands, the Emperor all this while keeping out of the City, and that, as was thought, leſt he ſhould be aſhamed of ſuch doings there. Among thoſe that periſhed by their own hands was Pomponius Labeo, and his wife Paxæa, who being accuſed for corruption in his government of Mæſia, cut his own veins and bled to death, and his wife accompanied him in the ſame fatal end. To the like end, but upon different occaſions and accuſations came Mamercus Scaurus and his wife Sextia. He ſome years before having eſcaped narrowly with life upon a charge of treaſon, is now involved again in other accuſations, as of Adultery with Livilla, magical practices, and (not at the leaſt) for libelling againſt Tiberius. For having made a Tragedy which he titled Atreus, and in the ſame, bringing him in, adviſing one of his ſubjects in the words of Euripides, That he ſhould bear with the folly of the Prince: Tiberius not ſo guilty indeed of ſuch a taxation of being a fool, as ready to take on to be guilty, that he might have the better vie againſt the Author, perſonated the matter to himſelf, crying out that Scaurus had made him a bloody Atreus, but that he would make an Ajax of him again: which accordingly came to paſs: for the Tragedian to prevent the executioner, acted his own Tragedy, and died by his own hand, his wife being both incourager and companion with him in the ſame death. But among theſe lamentable ſpectacles ſo fearful and ſo frequent, it was ſome contentment to ſee the accuſers ſtill involved in the like miſeries with thoſe whom they had accuſed: for that malady of accuſing was grown Epidemical and infectious, ſparing none, and as it were catching one of another. The tokens hereof appeared in the baniſhment of Servilius and Cornelius the accuſers of Scaurus, and of Abudius Rufo that had done the like by Lentulus Getulicus. This Getulicus was then commander of the Legions in Germany, and being charged with ſo much intimacy with Sejanus, as that he intended to have married his daughter to Sejanus his ſon, he quitted himſelf by a confident letter to Tiberius. In which he pleadeth that his familiarity and alliance to Sejanus had begun by the Emperors own advice and privacy: and he was ſo far from crouching, that he profereth terms of partition to Tiberius, namely that he ſhould enjoy the Empire, and himſelf would enjoy the Province where he was: This it was to have Arms and Armies at his diſpoſal, for, for all this affront, the Emperor is neceſſarily calm, conſidering partly his own age, partly the hatred of the people, but chiefly, that he ſtood in that height and ſway and power that he was in rather by the timorous opinion of others than by any ſtrength or firmneſs of his own.

This year there aroſe a feigned Druſus in Greece: a man as it ſeemed, neither led by common policy that might have told him, that ſo great a Prince of Rome could not poſſibly have been ſo long obſcured, nor by common opinion which greatly ſuſpected, that Druſus was made away by the Emperors own conſent: He found a party as inconſiderate as himſelf, for he was intertained by the Cities of Greece and Ionia, and furniſhed with aid, and had like to have come into Syria and ſurprized the forces there, had he not been deſcried, taken and ſent to Tiberius.

To conclude with ſome other rarity, beſides theſe of cruelty, there was ſeen a Phœnix in Egypt this year, as Tacitus hath laid it, (but as Dion two years after) which then exerciſed the wits of the Philoſophical Greeks interpreting the preſage either to the State or to the Emperor as their fancy led them: and in after times it exerciſed the pens of Chriſtians, applying it as an Embleme of the reſurrection of Chriſt.

PART II.

The Affairs of the JEWS.

§. A commotion of the Jews cauſed by Pilate.

BEſides the tumult mentioned before, cauſed by Pilate among the Jews about ſome images of Cæſar, Joſephus hath alſo named another raiſed by the ſame Spleen and rancor of his, againſt that people, which becauſe Euſebius hath placed it at this year, be it recommended to the reader upon his Chronology. Pilate a conſtant enemy to the Nation of which he was Governor, ſought and dogged all occaſions whereby to provoke them to diſpleaſure, that the diſpleaſure might provoke them to do ſomething that would redound to their own diſadvantage. At this time he took in hand a great work of an Aquæduct, or watercourſe, to Jeruſalem, to bring the water thither from a place two hundred furlongs or five and twenty miles off, (as Joſephus reckoneth it in one place, but in another he croſſeth himſelf, and doubleth the meaſure to four hundred) and for this purpoſe he took the money out of their Corban or holy treaſure to expend upon this his fancy. The people diſpleaſed with what was done, come together by multitudes, ſome crying out againſt the work, and others plainly againſt Pilate. For they of old did know his conditions, that his affection was not ſo much to the people or to do them good by his Aquæduct, as it was to tyrannize over their conſciences which were nailed to their ancient rights and rites. But he ſuborning ſome of his Souldiers in the common garb and garments, and they hiding clubs under their coats diſpoſed themſelves ſo about the multitude that they had them within them. And then, when the people continued ſtill in their outrage and railing, upon a ſignal given, they fall upon them, and beat without diſtinction all before them, both thoſe that were ſeditious and thoſe that were not: ſo that many died in the place and the reſt departed away ſore wounded. This is the tenour of the ſtory in Joſephus in Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 4. & Bell. Judaic. lib. 2. cap. 14. In the allegation of which Hiſtory by Baronius, to omit his placing of it in the firſt year of Pilate about which he ſheweth himſelf indifferent, I cannot paſs theſe two things without obſerving. 1. That he ſaith that Pilate took the head of his watercourſe three hundred furlongs off, whereas in the Greek there is no ſuch ſum in either of the places where the ſtory is related, but in the one, two hundred and in the other four. 2. That whereas the Greek readeth the tranſition to the next ſtory, de Bell. Jud. l. 2. cap. 15. κὰν τύτῳ καπάρ@ Ἡρώδ@, &c. At that time Agrippa the accuſer of Herod went to Tiberius, &c. His Latin readeth it, Atque ab hoc accuſator Herodis Agrippa, &c. loſing both ſcantling of the time which the Author hath given and Euſebius followed, and ſeeming to bring Agrippa to Rome about this matter of Pilate.

In the twentieth year of Tiberius hath the ſame Joſephus placed the death of Philip the Tetrarch, although he hath named it after the entrance of Vitellius upon the Government of Syria, which was in the next year; but ſuch tranſpoſitions are no ſtrange things with him. This Philip was Tetrarch of Trachonitis, Gaulonitis, and Batanæa, he died in the City Julias and was interred with a great deal of funeral pomp. His tetrarchy was added to Syria, but the tributes of it were reſerved within it ſelf.

PART I.

§. Affairs of the Jews, Vitellius their Friend.

Vitellius the laſt years Conſul at Rome is ſent this year Proconſul into Syria, to govern that and Judea which was incorporated into that Province. A man more Honorable abroad than at his own doors, renowned in his youth, but ignominious in his old age, brave in ruling in forain parts, but baſe in officiouſneſs and flattery at Rome. At the time of the Paſsover, he cometh up to Jeruſalem, whether induced by curioſity to ſee the Feſtival, or by the opportunity of the concourſe, to behold the whole body of his Dominion collected in ſo ſmall a compaſs, and to diſperſe among them his commands, or for what other cauſe let him keep it to himſelf: But ſo well did he like his intertainment, and the people that had given it him, that he remitted to all the inhabitants, the Toll or Impoſt of all the fruits bought and ſold: and he permitted to the Prieſts the keeping of the High-Prieſts garments, which of late had been in the cuſtody of the Romans. For Hircanus the firſt of that name, having built a Tower near unto the Temple, and living in it himſelf, and after him, ſome of his ſucceſſors, he laid up there thoſe holy garments, which they only might wear as in a place moſt convenient, both where to put them on when they came into the Temple, and to put them off when they went into the City. But Herod in after times ſeiſing upon that Tower and repairing it, and naming it Antonia in honour of the great Antony, he ſeiſed alſo upon the cuſtody of thoſe robes, when he found them there, and ſo alſo did Archelaus his ſon. But the Romans depoſing of Archelaus and uſurping his whole Dominion (if reaſſuming of that which they had beſtowed before, may be called uſurpation) they alſo as he had done, kept theſe ſacred garments under their hands: Laying them up in a room under the ſeals of the Prieſts, and the keepers of the Treaſury: and the keeper of the Tower ſet up a Candle there every day. Seven days before any of the Feaſts, they were delivered out by the ſame Keeper, and purified becauſe they came out of heathen hands, and uſed the firſt day of the Feaſt, and reſtored the ſecond, and laid up as before. Vitellius graciouſly reſtored the cuſtody of them to the Prieſts as had been uſed of old. But Joſeph who was alſo called Caiaphas who ſhould have firſt worn them after, was removed by him from the High Prieſt-hood, and Jonathan the ſon of Ananus placed in his ſtead. And thus is one of the unjuſt Judges of our Saviour judged himſelf, and the next year, and by this ſame Vitellius we ſhall have the other judged alſo.

PART II.

§. 1. Affairs in the Empire. A rebellion in Parthia, &c.

AT this year hath Euſebius in his Chronicle, placed the Spleen of Sejanus againſt the Jews, which was ſome years before: and the ſpleen of Herod againſt James and Peter, which was ſome years after: and * Maſſæus in his Chronicle, hath placed the aſſumption of the Virgin Mary, which was no body knows when. A ſtory firſt publiſhed to the world by revelation, as the common cry went of it, but invented indeed by ſuperſtition, backed by eaſe and love of Holy-days, and grown into credit and intertainment by credulity and cuſtom. As unconſtant to it ſelf for time, as her Sex is of whom it is divulged, for there is ſo great difference about the time when this great wonder was done, that it is no wonder if it be ſuſpected to have been done at no time at all. We will leave to rake into it, till we come to find it in its place, and rubrick in Euſebius, who is the moſt likely man to follow: and for the preſent we will divert the Readers eyes to a matter of far more truth and likelihood; Phraates a King of Parthia of old, had given Vonones his eldeſt ſon for an Hoſtage to Auguſtus: and Auguſtus upon the requeſt of the Parthians afterward, had given him again unto them for their King. At the firſt he was well accepted and well affected by them and among them, as he had been deſired by them, but afterward he was diſliked and diſplaced by Artabanus whom they had called in for their King in his ſtead. This Artabanus having been kept in awe by Germanicus whileſt he lived, and having been a good while ago quitted and delivered of that awe by Germanicus his death, and having at this preſent, a fit opportunity for the ſeiſure of the Kingdom of Armenia, by the death of Artaxias their King, he taketh upon him to place Arſaces his own eldeſt ſon in that Throne, demanding withal ſome Treaſures that Vonones had left in Syria and Cilicia, and challenging the Royalty of Perſia and Macedon, and the old poſſeſſions of Cyrus and Alexander: This was a proud ſcorn and defiance to the Romans, and ſuch as was not poſſible for their victorioufneſs to digeſt, nor ſafe for him to offer, but that he was imboldned to it by conſidering the Emperors old age. But Sinnaces and Abdus and other Nobles of Parthia, not truſting their lives and liberties to the raſhneſs of Artabanus, come ſecretly to Rome and commit the matter to Tiberius: He upon their requeſt and glad of opportunity to correct the inſolencies of Artabanus giveth them Phraates, another ſon of Phraates their old King, who alſo lay for an Hoſtage at Rome, and diſpatcheth him away for his fathers Throne and the Nobles with him. And thus is Artabanus in a fair way of an equal retaliation, to loſe his own Kingdom as he had uſurped another mans. As they were thus travailing homeward with this deſign and plot in their minds and hands, Artabanus having intelligence of the matter counterplotteth again: and fairly inviting Abdus under pretence of great amity to a banquet, preventeth his future deſigns by poiſon, and ſtops the haſte of Sinnaces by diſſimulation and gifts. Phraates the new elected King, the more to ingratiate himſelf to his Countrymen by complying with them in their manners, forſaketh the Roman garb, cuſtoms, and diet, to which he had been ſo long inured, and betaketh himſelf to the Parthian, which being too uncouth and hard for him, eſpecially upon a change ſo ſuddain, it coſt him his life as he was in Syria.

* In Chron. Mundi l. 8.

But this unexpected accident, cauſed not Tiberius to forelet or neglect the opportunity ſo fairly begun, but to follow it the more earneſtly. For chooſing Tiridates a man of the ſame blood, and an enemy to Artabanus, he inveſteth him in the ſame right and challenge to the Parthian Crown, and ſendeth him away for it. Writing letters withal to Mithradates the King of Iberia to invade Armenia, that the diſtreſs and ſtrait of Arſaces there might draw Artabanus thither to his relief and give Tiridates the more eaſie acceſs to his Country. For the better ſecuring of Mithradates to this imployment, he maketh him and his brother Pharaſmenes friends, between whom there had been ſome feud before, and inciteth them both to the ſame ſervice. This they accordingly perform, and breaking into Armenia, they ſhortly make the King away by bribing of his ſervants, and take the City Artaxata with their Army. Artabanus upon theſe tidings ſendeth away Orodes his other ſon, to relieve and to revenge: But Pharaſmanes having joyned the Albanes and Sarmatians to his party, and he and the Iberians by this union being maſters of the paſſages, they pour in Sarmatians into Armenia by multitudes through the ſtraits of the Caſpian mountains, and deny paſſage to any that would aid the Parthian. So that Orodes cometh up to Pharaſmanes, but can go no further, and they both lie in the field ſo cloſe together that Pharaſmanes biddeth him battel at his own trenches: which being ſtoutly and ſtrangely fought between ſo many Nations and ſo differently barbarous, it fortuned that the two Princes met in the heat of the fight, and Pharaſmanes wounded Orodes through the Helmet, but could not ſecond his blow himſelf being born away by his horſe beyond his reach, and the other was ſuddainly ſuccoured and ſheltered by his guard. The rumor of this wound of the King by diſperſion grew to a certain report of his death, and that, by as certain an apprehenſion, grew to the loſs of the Parthians day. Nor was the rumor altogether miſtaken, for the wound though it were not ſo ſodainly, yet was it ſo ſurely deadly, that it brought him to his end. Now it is time for Artabanus to look and ſtir about him when he hath loſt his two ſons, and when his two Kingdoms are near upon loſing. He muſtereth and picketh up all the Forces his Dominions could afford, and thoſe no more neither (if they were enough) than the preſent neceſſity and forlorn eſtate of himſelf and Kingdoms did require. What would have been the iſſue, and where the ſtorm of this cloud, and ſhower of theſe preparations would have lighted, Vitellius gave not leave and time to be determined, for raiſing all the Legions of Syria and thereabout, (for Tiberius upon theſe troubles had made him ruler of all the Eaſt) he pretended an invaſion of Meſopotamia. But Artabanus ſuſpecting whither that war might bend indeed, and his diſcontented ſubjects, upon this conceit of the aſſiſtance of the Romans daring to ſhew their revolt againſt him, which they durſt not before, he was forced to flee with ſome forlorn company into Scythia, hoping that his abſence might remove the hatred of the Parthians, which we ſhall ſee hereafter came accordingly to paſs, and Vitellius without any blow ſtruck, maketh Tiridates King in his ſtead.

§. 2. Tiberius ſtill cruel and ſhameleſs.

He was now got to Antium, ſo near the City, that in a day or nights ſpace he could have, or give a return to any letters: For all his age which the Parthian King had deſpiſed, and for all the troubles that he had cauſed, yet remitted he nothing of his wonted rigour and ſavageneſs. The Seianians were as eagerly hunted after as ever, and it was no eſcape nor help to the accuſed, though the crimes objected were either obſolete or feigned. This cauſed Fulcinius Trio for that he would not ſtay for the formal accuſations which he perceived were coming againſt him, to end himſelf with his own hand, having left moſt bitter and invective taunts and taxations in his laſt Will and Teſtament, againſt Tiberius and his darling Macro. The Executors durſt not publiſh nor prove the Will for fear of the executioner, but the Emperor, when he heard of the contents of it, cauſed it to be openly read and divulged, and prided himſelf in thoſe juſt reproaches. Nor wanted he more of thoſe reproaches from others alſo, but he repaid the Authors in cruel diſcontent, though he ſeemed to hear his own diſgrace with delight. For Sextius Paconianus was ſtrangled in priſon for making Verſes againſt him. It may be they were thoſe in Sueton. Aſper & Immitis, breviter his omnia dicam? Diſpeream ſi te mater amare poteſt, &c.

Granius Martianus, Trebellienus Rufus, and Poppæus Sabinus, were accuſed for ſome other offences, and died by their own hands, and Tattus Gratianus that had once been Prætor was condemned by a Prætorian Law, and eſcaped his own hands indeed, but he did not eſcape the executioners.

ACTS IX.

Verſ. 23. And after that many days were fulfilled, &c.

§. Account of the Chronology.

THE converſion of Paul we obſerved ere while, and proved to be in the year next after our Saviours aſcenſion or Anno Chriſti 34. Now Paul himſelf teſtifieth that three years after his converſion he went up to Jeruſalem, Gal. 1. 18. That ſpace of time he ſpent in Damaſcus, in Arabia and in Damaſcus again. For ſo himſelf teſtifieth in the verſe before. But how long time he took up in theſe ſeveral abodes in theſe places, it is not determinable nor indeed is it material to inquire, ſince we have the whole time of all his abodes ſummed up in that account of three years: Now whereas there is no mention in Lukes relation of his journey into Arabia, but he maketh him (as one would think) to come up to Jeruſalem, at his firſt departure from Damaſcus, we have ſhewed elſewhere that it is no uncouth thing with this and the other Evangeliſts, to make ſuch brief tranſitions, ſometimes in ſtories of a large diſtance: and Paul himſelf plainly ſheweth us in the place alledged, how to make the brief ſtory of Luke full and compleat, and to ſpeak it out: Namely that Paul upon his coming after his converſion into Damaſcus, began there to preach, and increaſed more and more in ſtrength, and confounded the Jews that dwelt at Damaſcus, proving that Jeſus was the very Chriſt: And having preached a while in Damaſcus, he goeth into Arabia, which Country was now under the ſame Government with Damaſcus, (namely under King Aretas) and after a while he returned into Damaſcus again. And then do the Jews there ſeek to kill him, and they incenſe the Governour of the City under Aretas againſt him, ſo that he ſetteth a watch to take him, but he eſcapeth over the wall by night in a Basket, Acts 9.25. 2 Cor. 11.33. We ſhall ſee by and by, that there were preparations for war this year, betwixt Aretas the King of Arabia, and Herod the Tetrarch, and it is not improbable that the Jews in thoſe times of commotion did accuſe Paul to the Governor of Damaſcus under Aretas for a ſpie or for a man that was an enemy to the Kings cauſe, and ſo they intereſt the Governor in a quarrel againſt him: And this very thing being conſidered may help help ſomewhat to confirm this for the year of Pauls coming from Damaſcus for fear of his life to Jeruſalem, if his own accounting the years did not make it plain enough.

Verſ. 26. And when Saul was come to Jeruſalem, &c.

His errand to Jeruſalem, as himſelf teſtifieth, was to ſee Peter, Gal. 1. 18. ἱστορῆσαι Πέτρον: not for any homage to his primacy (as is ſtrongly pleaded by the Popiſh crew) for he maketh no diſtinction betwixt him and James and John in point of dignity, Gal. 2. 9. nay is ſo far from homaging him that he rebuketh and reproveth him, Gal. 2. 11. But his journey to Peter at this time was, that he might have acquaintance with him and ſome knowledge of him, for ſo the word ἱστορῆσαι more properly ſignifieth, and that he deſired the rather, becauſe then Peter was the miniſter of the Circumciſion, as he himſelf was to be of the uncircumciſion, Gal. 2. 8. and becauſe there had been ſome kind of remarkable parallel betwixt them in their recovery, the one from denying and forſwearing Chriſt himſelf, and the other from perſecuting of Chriſt in his members.

§. But they were all affraid of him, and believed not that he was a Diſciple.

This very thing hath cauſed ſome to conceive that Paul had a journey to Jeruſalem a little after his converſion, and before ever he went into Arabia: becauſe they cannot conceive how it ſhould be poſſible, that he ſhould have been a convert and a Preacher of the Goſpel three years together, and yet his converſion and his preſent qualities ſhould be unknown to the Church at Jeruſalem: and the rather becauſe he himſelf ſaith that the wonder of his converſion was not done in a corner, Acts 26. 26.

Anſw. But theſe two or three conſiderations may help to reſolve the ſcruple. 1. The diſtance betwixt Damaſcus and Jeruſalem, which was exceeding great. 2. The quarrels betwixt Herod and Aretas, which were a means to hinder intercourſe betwixt thoſe two places. 3. The perſecution that continued ſtill upon the Church of Judea, which would keep Diſciples of Damaſcus from going thither. And 4. the juſt fear that might poſſeſs the Diſciples at Jeruſalem, in the very time of perſecution: For though it was ſaid before, the Church at Jeruſalem and of Judæa injoyed a great deal of reſt and tranquility after the converſion of Paul their great perſecutor, in compariſon of what they had done before, yet was not the perſecution of the Church utterly extinct to the very time of Pauls coming up to Jeruſalem, but continued ſtill, and therefore it is the leſs wonder if the Diſciples there, be the more fearful and cautelous.

Verſ. 27. But Barnabas took him, &c.

How Barnabas came acquainted with the certainty of Pauls converſion, better than the other Diſciples, is not eaſie to reſolve: It is like that he being abroad for fear of the perſecution, as the other of the Preachers were, (all but the Apoſtles) went in his travails towards Damaſcus or Arabia, and ſo had heard and learned the certainty of the matter: However it is pregnant to our obſervation, that he that was afterwards to be fellow traveller and labourer with Paul in the Goſpel to the Gentiles is now made the inſtrument and means of his firſt admiſſion to the ſociety of the Apoſtles. It is poſſible that there had been ſome acquaintance betwixt theſe two men in former times, they being both Grecizing Jews, the one of Cyprus, the other of Cilicia, and both in all probability brought up and educated at Jeruſalem; but whether it were ſo or no the hand of God is to be looked after in this paſſage, when Pauls future partner in the miniſtry to the Gentiles, is now his firſt intertainer into the ſociety of the Church at Jeruſalem.

§. And brought him to the Apoſtles.

That is, to Peter and James the leſs: for other of the Apoſtles, he himſelf relateth that he ſaw none, Gal. 1. 18. What was become of the reſt of the twelve, is not determinable: it is more than probable they were not now at Jeruſalem, otherwiſe it is hardly poſſible for Paul not to have ſeen them in fifteen days abode there: It is likely they were preaching and ſetling Churches up and down the Country, and Peter and James the two moſt peculiar Miniſters of the Circumciſion, abode at Jeruſalem, to take care care of the Church there: For that theſe were ſo, and in what particular, the diſpenſation of their Miniſtry differed, we ſhall take occaſion to ſhew afterward; only here we cannot omit to take notice of that temper as I may ſo call it, which the Text holdeth out againſt the Primacy and Prelacy that is held by ſome to have been among the Apoſtles: For whereas ſome conceive James to have been Biſhop of Jeruſalem, this Text ſets Peter in the ſame form and equality with him in that place: and whereas it is conceived again, that Peter was Prince of the Apoſtles, this Text hath equalled James with him.

1. And thus that perſecution that began about Stephen had laſted till this very ſame time of Pauls coming to Jeruſalem, for ſo it is apparent, both by the fear and ſuſpitiouſneſs of the Diſciples at Jeruſalem, as alſo by the very clauſure of the Text, Verſ. 31. Then had the Churches reſt.

2. The length of this perſecution by computation of the times as they have been caſt up before, ſeemeth to have been about three years and an half, the renowned number, and time ſo oft mentioned and hinted in Scripture.

3. The company of Diſciples or believers continued ſtill at Jeruſalem, for all the perſecution, as to the generality of them; as was ſaid before: only the Miniſters or Preachers were ſcattered abroad, all of them except the twelve Apoſtles.

4. Some of thoſe Preachers were by this time returned back again, the heat of the perſecution abating, as it is apparent by Barnabas now being at Jeruſalem: and of ſome ſuch men, is it propereſt to underſtand the word Diſciples, Verſ. 26. Saul aſſaied to join himſelf to the Diſciples.

5. Therefore the abſence of the ten Apoſtles from Jeruſalem was not for fear of the perſecution, but for the diſperſion of the Goſpel and ſetling of the Churches.

§. And declared unto them how he had ſeen the Lord in the way.

This is moſt properly to be underſtood of Barnabas, that he declared theſe things to the Apoſtles, though there be, that think it is meant of Pauls declaring them: and they read it thus, And Barnabas brought him to the Apoſtles, and he, that is, Paul, declared unto them.

Verſ. 28. And he was with them coming in and going out.

That is, converſing with them, as Beza hath well rendred it: A phraſe uſual among the Hebrews, as 1 Sam. 18. 13. Act. 1. 21. &c. And the time of this his converſe, Paul himſelf hath told us to have been fifteen days, Gal. 1. 18. where alſo he hath interpreted this Phraſe of coming in and going out, by the term of abiding with, I abode with him fifteen days.

Verſ. 29. And he diſputed againſt the Grecians.

Gr. Againſt the Helleniſts: which very place helpeth again to confirm the interpretation and gloſs we ſet upon this word before, namely, that it meaneth not, Greeks converted to the Jews Religion, but Jews converſing and cohabiting among the Greek Nation. For, 1. There can be none or ſmall reaſon given, why converted Greeks ſhould be ſo furiouſly Jewiſh as to go about to kill Paul for preaching againſt Judaiſm, and we hear not the Jews ſtirring againſt him for it. 2. What reaſon can be given why Paul ſhould bend his diſputations againſt converted Greeks more than againſt Jews? Certainly the Jews had more need of confutation in their Judaiſm than the other had. And 3. It is very queſtionable, how converted Greeks, which were ſtrangers and ſojourners at Jeruſalem and among the Jews, durſt go about to kill a Jew in the midſt of the Jews, and there being not a Jew that had any thing to ſay againſt him. It is therefore more than probable, that theſe Helleniſts were Jews that had lived among the Greeks, or of the Grecian diſperſion, and that they uſed the Greek Tongue: and that Paul choſe to diſpute with them, partly for that they living among the Gentiles, were by a kind of an Antiperiſtaſis more zealouſly Jewiſh, and partly, becauſe of their language, the Greek Tongue, which was the very language Paul had learned from a child.

The times of the ſtories next ſucceeding when the Text hath done with the ſtory of Paul, are ſomewhat unfixed, and uncertain, in what year they came to paſs: namely of Peters raiſing of Æneas from ſickneſs, Dorcas from death, and bringing in Cornelius to the Goſpel: But the beſt conjecture that can be given of the times of theſe ſtories, is by caſting and computing the hiſtory backward: And ſo we find, 1. That the famine prophecied pheſied of by Agabus, was in the ſecond of Claudius, as was ſhewed before. 2. We may then conceive that this prophecy of Agabus was in Claudius his firſt, and that was the year or ſome part of the year that Paul and Barnabas ſpent at Antioch, Act. 11.26. 3. The laſt year of Caius we may hold to be the year of Antiochs firſt receiving the Goſpel, of Barnabas his coming thither, and of his journey to Tarſus to ſeek Saul, Act. 11.20,21,22, 23 24,25. And 4. the third year of Caius which was his laſt year but one, we may ſuppoſe accordingly to have been the year of Peters actions with Æneas, Dorcas and Cornelius, and to that year ſhall we refer the handling of the Texts that concern thoſe actions, and we will carry on the Roman and Jewiſh Story, as they fall in time, till we come thither.

PART II.

The ROMAN Story.

§. 1. The Parthian war not yet compoſed.

Tiridates ſeated in his Throne, as was related before, but as it proved, neither ſure in it, nor in the hearts of all his people, (the firſt of theſe being cauſed by the latter) he taketh in, certain Parthian Towns, and that by the Parthians own conſent and aid. For his Roman education compared with the Scythian carriage of Artabanus made the people to hope accordingly of his demeanour, and to entertain him with preſent applauſe and future expectation. The day of his Coronation being appointed, letters from Phraates and Hiero, two of the chiefeſt commanders in the State, deſire that it might be deferred for a certain ſpace, which accordingly was done in regard of the greatneſs of the men. The King in the mean time goeth up to Cteſiphon the Imperial City, attending the coming of theſe two Nobles, who when they put it off from day to day, Surena, in the preſence and by the approval of very many, Crowneth him on their Country manner. Theſe two Nobles and many others that were abſent from this ſolemnity, ſome for fear of the Kings diſpleaſure, ſome for hatred of Abdageſes, his favorite, and ſome no doubt upon a plot premeditated, betake themſelves to Artabanus their old King again. Him they find in Hyrcania hunting in the woods with his bow for his food, ruſty and dirty in habit and attire, and overgrown with filth and neglect of himſelf. At his firſt ſight of them it is no wonder if he were ſtricken with amazement, but their errand being related, it converted that paſſion into equal joy. For they complain of Tridates his youth, and effeminacy, of the Diadems tranſlation out of the blood, of the potency of Abdageſes, and the loſs of their old King, whom they now are come to deſire again. Artabanus believeth them and conſenteth, and raiſing ſpeedily what Scythians he could, marcheth away towards his Kingdom again. But his Royal apparel he wore not with him, but the poor and rugged garb of his miſery and exile, thereby to move the more to pity: and uſed all his wits and policy to make himſelf a party ſtrong on his ſide all the way as he went. But he needed not all this cauteloufneſs and preparation, for Tiridates but hearing of his approaching towards Seleucia, under colour of going to raiſe up forces, departed into Syria, and parted with his new Kingdom with as much facility as he had obtained it.

§. 2. Artabanus giveth hoſtages to Rome.

When the power and policy of Tiberius, and his agent Vitellius that had ſerved to get Artabanus out of his Kingdom, would not ſerve the turn to keep him thence; they ſend to treat of friendſhip with him, ſuſpecting what trouble ſuch a ſpirit might procure, ſhould it bend it ſelf againſt the Roman Empire. The King wearied with the toils of War, and knowing without a prompter, what it was to defie the Romans, condeſcendeth readily to the motion, and Vitellius and he meeting upon a bridge made over Euphrates for that purpoſe, each, with a guard about him; conclude upon Articles of agreement, and Herod the Tetrarch entertaineth them both, in a pavillion curiouſly ſeated in the midſt of the ſtream. Not long after this Artabanus ſendeth Darius his ſon for an hoſtage to Tiberius; and withal he ſendeth Eleazar a Jew, of ſeven cubits high, for a preſent; and many other gifts.

to

§. 3. A Commotion in Cappadocia.

Whilſt matters went thus unquietly in Parthia, the Calitæ a Nation of Cappadocia, grew diſcontented about paying tribute to the Romans, and ſo departed into the mountain Taurus, and there fortifie, reſolving as they never had uſed to pay ſuch taxations, ſo never to learn, nor to uſe to do ſo. Archelaus was now King, but not now King of them; for the ſtrength of the mountains, and the deſperateneſs of their reſolution, do animate them to withſtand him and to rebel againſt the Romans. When tydings of this was brought to Vitellius into Syria, he diſpatcheth away M. Trebellius with four thouſand legionary Souldiers, and ſome other Forces raiſed otherways, to bring the Rebels to obedience or to ruine. Trebellius invironeth with Works and Men, two hills, Cadra and Davara, where they were the moſt ſtrongly trenched, and thoſe that were ſo hardy as to come forth, he ſubdueth with the ſword, and the reſt with famiſhing.

§. 4. Bloodſhed at Rome.

Theſe diſeaſes of the Roman body were far from the heart, and yet was the heart, the City it ſelf but little the better; for though ſome veins were opened in theſe wars which one would have thought ſhould have turned the blood another way, yet did the City through the cruelty of the Emperor bleed inwardly ſtill. For L. Aurelius and ſome others died by the hand of the Executioner, and C. Galba, two of the Bleſii, and the Lady Æmylia Lepida by their own hands. But the example of the greateſt terror was Vibulcenus Agrippa a Knight, who being at the bar, when he had heard what his accuſers could ſay againſt him, and deſpairing to eſcape, he took poyſon out of his boſom in the face of the Court (Dion ſaith he ſucked it out of his Ring) and ſwallowed it and ſank down and was ready to die, yet was he haled away to priſon and there ſtrangled.

§. 5. Miſhaps.

Beſides this deluge of blood, which overflowed the City continually, there was alſo this year a deluge of water. For Tiber roſe ſo high and violently into the Town, that many Streets became navigable, and where men had walked lately on their feet, they might have paſſed now up and down in ſhips. And a greater misfortune happened this year likewiſe by the contrary element: for a terrible fire conſumed the buildings of the mount Aventine and that part of the Circus that lay betwixt that and the Palace; For the repair of all which again, Tiberius out of his own Treaſure gave a great ſum of money: Tacitus ſaith Millies Seſtertium, which according to the value and reckoning of our Engliſh coin amounted to eight hundred thouſand pounds, within nineteen thouſand. A ſum not ſtrange in an Emperors coffer at Rome, where the vaſtneſs of the Empire brought in vaſt revenues, but ſomewhat ſtrange out of the purſe of Tiberius for ſo good a purpoſe, whoſe covetouſneſs was larger than thoſe whole revenues. And therefore as I cannot but obſerve the difference of Dion about this liberality of the Emperor from Tacitus, and the difference of his tranſlator from his Text; ſo can I not but conceive his computation and account to be the more probable in regard of the niggardiſe of the Emperor. For whereas the ſum of Tacitus is eight hundred thouſand within nineteen, he hath ſo far come ſhort of ſuch a reckoning, that he maketh nineteen thouſand pounds to be the whole account. For Tiberius, ſaith he, gave διςχιλίας ϗ πενταπόσιας μυριάδας, two thouſand and five hundred thouſand, meaning 2500 ſeſtertia, and each ſeſtertium containing a thouſand Seſtertios, this accreweth to about the ſum laſt named, of 19000 l. and yet hath his tranſlator forſaken his Greek, and followed Tacitus Latine, to ſo vaſt a difference.

PART III.

The JEWISH Story.

§. 1. A commotion in Samaria. Pilate out of office.

A Great ſpace of time is paſt ſince we heard any news of Pontius Pilate, and news it is indeed that his malicious and ſtirring ſpirit hath not entertained us with ſome bloody Tragedy or other, of all this while. His Government draweth now near its expiration, for he is going upon the tenth year of it, and it is a kind of miracle if ſo miſchievous an agent, ſhould part without acting ſome miſchief before his exit, and this at laſt he did which put him out of office. There was a certain Impoſtor among the Samaritans (Simon Magus as like as any) that would perſwade the people, that in mount Gerizim he could ſhew them, holy veſſels which Moſes had hid and laid up there with his own hand. The credulous vulgar meet by multitudes at a certain Village called Tirathaba intending when their company was full, to go ſee theſe ſacred reliques. But Pilate before-hand takes the paſſages with his Horſe and Foot, and falling upon thoſe that were thus aſſembled, ſome he ſlew, others he took captive and the reſt fled. Of thoſe that he captived, he cauſed the nobleſt and moſt principal to be put to death. For this fact the chief men of Samaria, accuſe him to Vitellius, who commands him to Rome, there to anſwer before the Emperor what ſhould be objected againſt him; and in his ſtead he made Marcellus a friend of his own, the Governor of Judea: but before Pilate came to Rome, Tiberius was dead. Yet hath Euſebius put off the teſtimony that Pilate is ſaid to have given to Tiberius concerning the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, and concerning the wonders wrought by him, till the next year following. A relation doubtful in it ſelf, but more than doubtful in the iſſue. For firſt, though it be granted that Pilate bare witneſs to the works and wonders done by Chriſt, and gave teſtimony to his Reſurrection, which yet to believe requireth a better evidence than I can find any: Yet ſecondly, the Epiſtle that is pretended for this his certificate by * Hegeſippus, cannot be that original one that Tertullian, and out of him Euſebius do mention, becauſe it is indorſed to Claudius, and not to Tiberius. Thirdly, though both theſe were confeſſed and agreed unto, that Pilate wrote a Letter to Tiberius to ſuch a purpoſe, and that this was the Letter, or ſome other that Tertullian had ſeen; yet can I never find the Emperor of ſo good a nature, and reſpective a diſpoſition, as to give the deſert of goodneſs its due, be it never ſo eminent and conſpicuous, or be it in what kind ſoever. Fourthly, and laſtly, that which maketh all the reſt of the ſtory to be doubted of, and which may juſtly hinder the entertainment of it, is, what is added in the common relation of the ſtory. That Tiberius referring this matter to the Senate, with his vote, that Chriſt ſhould be numbred among the Gods, and Chriſtianity among their holy things; the Senate croſſed him in it with flat contrariety, becauſe Pilate had written of it to him, and not to them. Now in the Stories that have been related before concerning the ſtate and affairs of Rome, and by other ſtories that might be produced in other years, it is but too miſerably evident, that the Senate was in too great a fear and ſlavery to the Tyrant, than to dare to affront him ſo palpably and plainly. Pilate after this, as * Euſebius alledgeth out of the Roman Hiſtorians, falling into many miſeries, ended himſelf with his own hand, the common and deſperate Roman remedy againſt diſtreſs. * Caſſiodorus hath placed his death under the Conſulſhip of Publicola and Nerva: And the common report hath given it in, that the place was Vienna.

§. 2. Agrippa his journey to Rome.

This Agrippa was the ſon of Ariſtobulus (who died by the cruelty of his father Herod) and he was a man that had ſufficiently tried the viciſſitudes of fortune heretofore, but never ſo much as he is about to do now. A good while ago he had lived in Rome, and in the familiarity of Druſus the ſon of Tiberius: That great acquaintance cauſed great expences; partly in his own port and pomp, and partly in gifts and benificence beſtowed upon upon others. When Druſus died, then Agrippa's eſtate is not only dead, but his hopes alſo: ſo that he is forced to flee from Rome into Judea for debt and poverty; and thence into a certain Tower in Idumea for ſhame and diſcontent. His wife Cyprus by ſollicitation and ſuing to Herodias, obtaineth Herods favour ſo far, that he was removed to Tiberius, made a chief Governor or Officer of the City, and allowance given him for his Diet. But this laſted not long ere Herod and he fell out; whereupon he removed away, and betook himſelf to Flaccus the then Governor of Syria, who had been his old acquaintance at Rome: Long he had not continu'd there neither, but Ariſtobulus his brother wrought him out of his favour and abode there. From thence he went to Ptolomais, intending to have ſet from thence for Italy, but was forced to ſtay till he had borrowed ſome monies before: Being now furniſhed and ſhipped, he was again ſtopped by Herennius Capito, the Governor of Jamnia, for ſome money that he ought to the Treaſury of Tiberius. And what muſt he do now? He muſt not go till he have paid the ſum, and when he hath paid it, then he cannot go for want of more. He taketh on him to obey the arreſt while it was day, but at night he cut cables, and ſet away for Alexandria: There he reneweth his borrowing again of Alexander Alabarcha and obtaineth of him five talents for his viaticum: and now this year (namely as Joſephus noteth it, the year before Tiberius his death) he ſetteth away for Italy again. This Alabarcha is not the proper Name of any man, but the title of men that bare Rule over the Jews in Alexandria. For I obſerve that as Joſephus in one place, calleth it Alabarcha, and Alabarchus, ſo in another he calleth it Ἀλαβαρχῶν & Ἀλαβαρχήσας, fixing it thereby as a title rather to any man that bare ſuch an Office, than as a proper name to any man at all. And if conjecture may read its denotation and Etymology, it ſeemeth to be compounded of the Arabick Article Al, which they fix before all their Nouns, and the Egyptian word Abrech which in that language importeth dignity and honour (as we have obſerved elſewhere) as may be collected from the proclamation before Joſeph, Gen. 41.43.

Agrippa being arrived at Puteoli, ſendeth to the Emperor to Capreæ to certifie him of his coming, and of his deſire to wait upon him there. Tiberius giveth him admiſſion and entertainment according to his mind: till Letters from Herennius Capito ſpoiled that chear: For the Emperor underſtanding by them how he had ſlipped the collar at Jamnia, from his Officer, and from his own debt, he doth flatly forbid him any more acceſs unto him till the money be paid. Now is Agrippa in a worſe caſe than ever: for there is no paltering with Tiberius, though there were with Capito; and no ſhifting from Capreæ, though he had found ſuch an opportunity at Jamnia. Nor is there any ſuch thought to be entertained. For now his life and fortunes, and all lay in the hand of Tiberius; and when he findeth him inclinable to uſe him kindly, there is no loſing that favour, for want of paying ſuch a ſum: Of Antonia the mother of Germanicus, and the old friend and favourer of Bernice the mother of Agrippa, he borroweth the money, and getting out of the Emperors debt, he getteth into his favour again. Inſomuch that he commendeth him to the converſe, acquaintance, and attendance of Caius his Grandchild that was to ſucceed him.

§. 3. His Impriſonment.

Happy might now Agrippa think himſelf, if he can but hold ſo: For he hath obtained the inward friendſhip of Caius, and with it retained the outward favour of Tiberius. Antonia and Claudius a future Emperor and all favour him, but he becomes an enemy to himſelf. Whether it were in love or flattery to Caius, or to himſelf and his own hopes, he caſteth himſelf into a preſent danger upon a future expectation. For Caius and he being very intimate and private together, whether more affectionately, or undiſcreetly, he himſelf beſt felt; he brake out into this dangerous wiſh, That Tiberius might ſoon die, and Caius as ſoon come to rule in his ſtead. Theſe words were heard by Eutychus his ſervant, and a while concealed; but when Agrippa proſecuted him for ſtealing ſome of his cloaths, which he had ſtoln indeed, he then brake forth and revealed all: for fleeing for his theft, and caught and brought before Piſo the Sheriff of the City, and demanded the reaſon of his flight, he anſwered that he had a great ſecret to impart to Cæſar, which concerned his life. Piſo therefore ſent him bound to Tiberius, who alſo kept him bound and unexamined a certain ſeaſon: Now began Agrippa to haſten and ſpur on his own miſery and vexation: Whether having forgotten the words that he had ſpoken, or not remembring the preſence of his ſervant, at the ſpeech; or not ſuſpecting that his tale to Cæſar would be againſt himſelf; or which was likelieſt, thinking to make his cauſe the better by his confidence, he ſolliciteth his old friend Antonia, to urge the Emperor for a tryal of his ſervant. Tiberius declineth it, though he ſuſpected the matter; not ſo much belike for Agrippa's ſake, as for Caius ſake, whom the familiarity that was betwixt them made him ſuſpect to be acceſſary, if any thing ſhould prove otherwiſe than well. But being ſtill importuned by Antonia, at laſt when he had uttered theſe words, Let the gods witneſs O Antonia, that what I ſhall do, I do not of my own mind, but by thy ſolicitation: He commanded Eutychus to be brought forth, who being examined, confeſſed readily that ſuch words were ſpoken by Agrippa to Caius, himſelf being preſent, adding others no leſs dangerous, that were ſpoken about young Tiberius. The Emperor as readily believed the matter; and preſently called out to Macro to bind him. Macro not underſtanding that he meant Agrippa, prepared to bind Eutychus more ſtrictly for examination: but Tiberius having walked about the place, and coming to Agrippa, it is this man ſaith he, that I commanded to be bound. And when Macro asked him again who? Why, ſaith he, Agrippa. Then did Agrippa begin to find how he had forwarded his own miſhap, but it was too late. And then did he begin to pray him now, whom he lately prayed againſt, but that was too late alſo. For Tiberius was not half ſo averſe to have tried his ſervant, as he is now to forgive the Maſter: and he cannot be much blamed, for he had wiſhed his miſchief, and procured his own. Well, Agrippa is tied in bands, and led away to priſon as he was, in his purple robes, a garment very incompatible with chains, unleſs of Gold. Being exceeding thirſty with heat and ſorrow, as he went towards the priſon, he ſpied one Thaumaſtus a ſervant of Caius, carrying a Tankard of water, and he deſired ſome to drink; which when the ſervant freely and readily gave him, If ever, ſaith he, I eſcape and get out of theſe bonds, I will not fail to obtain thy freedom, who haſt not refuſed to miniſter to me in my miſery and chains, as well as thou didſt in my proſperity and pomp. And this his promiſe he afterward performed.

§. 4. The death of Thraſyllus the Mathematician.

This man Thraſyllus had indeared himſelf to Tiberius, by his skill in Aſtrology long ago, even while he lived in Rhodes, before the death of Auguſtus, but with the imminent hazard and peril of his own life. For Tiberius being very much given to thoſe Chaldean and curious arts, and having got leaſure and retiredneſs in Rhodes for the learning and practiſe of them, he partly called, and partly had offered to him, thoſe that profeſſed to be skilful in that trade and myſtery. His way to try their skill was deſperate and terrible, but ſuch an one as beſt befitted ſuch as would take upon them to foreſee things to come, and it was this: when he conſulted of any buſineſs, ſaith Tacitus, he uſed the top of his houſe, and the privacy of one only ſervant, a man utterly unlearned, and of a ſtrong bulk of body: when he had a mind to try any mans skill, this Lubber was to go before him over craggy, ſteep and dangerous Rocks that hung over the Sea, and over which his houſe ſtood: and as they returned again, if there were any ſuſpition that the Prognoſticator had given an anſwer fraudulent or lying, he flung him into the Sea, leſt he ſhould reveal the ſecret that he had been queſtioned upon. Thraſyllus at his firſt coming, being brought to this dangerous trial, and having preſaged Tiberius ſhould be Emperor, and having foretold other things to come, he was asked by him whether he could calculate his own nativity; which when he went about to do, and had ſet a figure, upon the ſight and ſtudy upon it, he was firſt in a muſe and then in a fear, and the more he viewed it, the more he feared: and at laſt cryed out that ſome ſtrange and ſuddain danger was near and ready to ſeize upon him. Then Tiberius imbracing him commended his skill, ſecured him againſt the danger, and retained him ever after for his intimate familiar. This year (as Dion doth place it) befel this great Wizzards death, and as it proved, a forerunner of the Emperors: With whom he did more good with one lie, near his latter end, than he had done with all his Aſtrological truths (if he ever told any) all his life long. For aſſuring him by his skill, that he ſhould yet live ten years longer, though in his heart he thought no ſuch thing, he cauſed him to be ſlack and remiſs in putting divers men to death, whoſe end he had haſtned, had he known the haſte of his own, and ſo they eſcaped.

§. 5. War

§. 5. War betwixt Aretas and Herod.

There had been a long grudge betwixt Aretas the King of Arabia Petræa, and Herod the Tetrarch, and a field had been fought between them before this. For Herod having put away his wife which was Aretas daughter, and having taken Herodias (the wife of his own brother Philip and he yet living) in her ſtead, it is no wonder if Aretas dogged him for revenge for this indignity to his Daughter and himſelf. Wherefore he beginneth to quarrel with him and to ſeek occaſion of war, by challenge of a territory controvertible, and they come to a pitched battel, in which Herods Army is utterly overthrown, by means of ſome treachery wrought by ſome fugitives from his brother Philips Tetrarchy which had taken up Arms to fight under his colours: And here, as Joſephus hath obſerved, It was the obſervation of divers that this his Army utterly periſhed through Gods juſt puniſhment upon him for the murder of John the Baptiſt. And it is worth the marking, that this overthrow took beginning from men of that Country whence Herodias the cauſer of that murder, and of the preſent diſquietneſs had come. Herod upon this defeat, doubtful of better ſucceſs at another time, for it may be his conſcience told him this was but deſerved, betaketh himſelf by letters to Tiberius, certifying him of the accident, and it is likely, not without much aggravation. The Emperor either diſpleaſed at the fortune of Aretas in his victory, or at his audaciouſneſs in ſtirring ſo within the Empire, or at both together, ſendeth angry letters to Vitellius the Governor of Syria, charging him to undertake the war, and either to bring the rebellious King priſoner alive, or to ſend his head to Rome. But before the deſign came to maturity, Tiberius that had thus threatned another mans life had loſt his own, as will appear hereafter: when this firſt battel was that was ſo fatal to Herod, it ſhall not be inſiſted on to queſtion, but that this brewing towards a new war, befel in this year, is apparent ſufficiently by the ſequel.

The ROMAN Story.

§. 1. Macro, all base.

THIS man had been mischievous ever since he had power to be so, but now was he so most of all, that he might keep that power of his afoot, or might raise it more and more. He was used by Tiberius as an instrument to bring down Sejanus, the one bad, and the other worse; and after he had done that, none must stand by his good will, that was likely to stand in his way: He was made Master of the Prætorian Souldiers in Sejanus his stead, and as he possessed his place, so did he his favour with the Emperor, and the crookedness of his conditions: as if all the honours, fortune, and wickedness of Sejanus had been intailed upon Macro. An agent as fit for Tiberius as could be required, and a successor as fit for Sejanus. A man as bloody as the Tyrant could desire him, and sometimes more than he set him on work. He was the continual Alguazil and Inquisitor for the friends and complices of the late ruined Favorite, and under colour of that pursuit, he took out of the way, whosoever would not friend and comply with him. Of that number were Cn. Domitius, and Vibius Marsus, accused with Albucilla the wife of Satrius Secundus, for Adultery, but all three together for conspiracy against the Emperor, yet was there no hand of the Emperors shewed for the prosecution of the matter, which shewed the only spleen and machination of the Blood-

Blood-hound Macro. Albucilla, whether guilty indeed or knowing that his malice and power would make her ſo, ſtabbed her ſelf, thinking to have died by her own hand, but the wound not being deadly, ſhe was taken away to priſon. Graſidius and Fregellanus the pretended Pandars of her adulteries were puniſhed the one with baniſhment, and the other with degradation, and the ſame penalty was inflicted upon Lælius Balbus: A man, but juſtly, paid in his own coin, to the rejoycing and content of divers, for he had been a ſtrong and violent accuſer of many innocents. Domitius and Marſus (it may be) as guilty as the woman, but more diſcreet, traverſed the indictment, and ſaved their own lives, partly by the ſhortneſs of the Emperors life, and partly by the feigned prediction of Thraſyllus, that promiſed that it ſhould be long. But too ſullen was the indignation of L. Arruntius againſt Macro, and too deſperate his ill conceit of Caius who was to ſucceed in the Empire, for when he was inwrapt in the ſame accuſation with the two laſt named, and might have eſcaped the ſame eſcape that they did, yet deſpiſed he ſo to outlive the cruelty of Tiberius and Macro, as to come under the greater cruelty of Macro and Caius. No, ſaith he, I have lived long enough, and (to my ſorrow) too long. Nor doth any thing repent me more, than that thus I have endured an old age under the ſcorns, dangers and hate, firſt of Sejanus, now of Macro, and always of one great one or another, and that for no other fault than for deteſting their flagitiouſneſs. It is true indeed that I may ſurvive the old age and weakneſs of Tiberius, but what hopes to do ſo by the youth of Caius, and wickedneſs of Macro ? Can Caius a youth do well being led by Macro, who ſo corrupted Tiberius in his age? No, I ſee more tyranny like to come than hath been yet: And therefore will I deliver my ſelf from the preſent miſery, and that to come: And with theſe words and reſolution, he cut his own veins, and ſo bled to death: and ſpent a blood and a ſpirit, what pity it was that they ſhould have been ſo loſt? As Macro thus divided his pains in cruelty, betwixt the ſatisfying of Tiberius his mind and his own malice, ſo alſo did he, his affections ſhall I ſay? or flattery rather, and own-end obſervances betwixt Tiberius and Caius. For as he ſought to pleaſe the one that now ruled, for his own preſent ſecurity, ſo did he, to indear the other that was to ſucceed, for his future ſafety: Hereupon he omitted not any opportunity nor occaſion, that he might skrew Caius further and further into Tiberius his favour, and to keep him there, that he might do as much for himſelf into the favour of Caius. One rarity and non-parallel of obſequiouſneſs he ſhewed to the young Prince, worth recording to his ſhame, for he cauſed his own wife Ennia Thraſylla to intangle the youthfulneſs of Caius into her love and adultery, and then parted he with her and gave her to him in marriage. The old Emperor could not but obſerve this monſter of pretended friendſhip, nor were his old eyes ſo blind, but he perceived his flattery plain in other carriages, in ſo much that he brake out to him in theſe plain words: Well, thou forſakeſt the ſetting Sun, and only lookeſt upon the riſing.

§. 2. A wicked woman.

With the wife of Macro, that made her own proſtitution to become her husbands promotion, may not unfitly be yoaked, the mother of Sex. Papinius that made her own luſt her ſons overthrow: Whether this were the Papinius that was the laſt years Conſul, or his ſon, or ſome other of the ſame name and family, it is no great matter worth inquiring, but whoſoever he was, infortunate he was in his mother: for ſhe cauſed his end, as ſhe had given him his beginning. She being lately divorced from her husband, betook herſelf unto her ſon, whom with flattery and looſneſs ſhe brought to perpetrate ſuch a thing, that he could find no remedy for it, when it was done but his own death. The conſequent argueth that the fault was inceſt, for when he had caſt himſelf from an high place, and ſo ended his life, his mother being accuſed for the occaſion, was baniſhed the City for ten years, till the danger of the ſlipperineſs of her other ſons youth was paſt and over.

PART

PART II.

The JEWISH Story.

§. 1. Preparations of war againſt Aretas.

THE terrible and bitter meſſage of the Emperor to Vitellius againſt King Aretas, muſt be obeyed, though more of neceſſity than of any zeal of Vitellius in Herods quarrel. He therefore raiſing what forces he accounted fitting for his own ſafety in the Emperors favour, and for his ſafety with the enemy, marcheth toward the ſeat of the war, intending to lead his Army through Judea: But he was diverted from this intention, by the humble ſupplication of the Jews to the contrary, who took on how contrary it was to their ancient Laws and cuſtoms to have any Images and pictures brought into their Country, whereof there was great ſtore in the Romans Arms and Banners. The gentleneſs of the General was eaſily overtreated, and commanding his Army another way, he himſelf with Herod and his friends went up to Jeruſalem, where he offered ſacrifice, and removed Jonathan from the High-prieſthood, and placed Theophilus his brother in his ſtead. This was, ſaith Joſephus, at a feaſt of the Jews, but he named not which; and Vitellius having ſtayed there three days, on the fourth receiveth letters concerning Tiberius his death. I leave it to be weighed by the Reader whether this feſtival were the Paſsover or Pentecoſt. For on the one hand ſince Tiberius died about the middle of March as the Roman Hiſtorians do generally agree, it is ſcarce poſſible that the Governor of Syria and the Nations of the Eaſt ſhould be unacquainted with it, till Pentecoſt which was eight or nine weeks after: For all the Empire muſt as ſoon as poſſible be ſworn unto the new Prince, as Vitellius upon the tidings did ſwear Judea, and ſo long a time might have bred ſome unconvenience. And yet on the contrary it is very ſtrange, that the intelligence of his death ſhould be ſo quick as to get from Rome to Jeruſalem between the middle of March and the middle of the Paſsover week.

Vitellius upon the tidings recalleth his Army again, and diſpoſeth and billeteth them in the ſeveral places where they had wintered, for he knew not whether Caius would be of the ſame mind with Tiberius about the matter of Aretas and Herod: you may gueſs how this news was brooked by the Arabian King, and yet was it no other than what he looked for, if he believed what he himſelf ſpake. For hearing of the preparations of Vitellius againſt him, and conſulting with Wizards and Augury; This Army, ſaith he, ſhall not come into Arabia, for ſome of the Commanders ſhall die; Either he that commandeth the war, or he that undertaketh it, or he for whom it is undertaken: meaning either Tiberius, Vitellius, or Herod.

§. 2. An Omen to Agrippa in chains.

Such another wizardly preſage of the Emperors death, had Agrippa at Rome as Joſephus alſo relateth, who relateth the former. For as he ſtood bound before the Palace, leaning dejectedly upon a tree, among many others that were priſoners with him, an Owl came and ſate in that tree, to which he leaned, which a Germane ſeeing, being one of thoſe that ſtood there bound, he asked who he was that was in the purple, and leaned there: and underſtanding who he was: he told him of his inlargement, promotion to honour, and proſperity, and that when he ſhould ſee that bird again, he ſhould die within five days after. And thus will the credulity of ſuperſtition have the very birds to foretel Tiberius his end, from the Phenix to the Owl.

The Roman Story again.

§. 1. Tiberius near his end.

TWice only did Tiberius proffer to return to the City after his departure from it, but returned never. The later time was not very long before his end: For being come within the ſight of the City upon the Appian rode, this prodigy (as he took it) affrighted him back. He had a tame Serpent, which coming to feed as he uſed to do with his own hand, he found him eaten up by Piſmires: upon which ominous accident being adviſed not to truſt himſelf among the multitude, he ſuddenly retired back to Campany, and at Aſtura he fell ſick. From thence he removed to Circeii, and thence to Miſenum, carrying out his infirmity ſo well, that he abated not a whit of his former ſports, banquets and voluptuouſneſs: whether for diſſimulation, or for habitual intemperance, or upon Thraſyllus his prediction, let who will determine. He uſed to mock at Phyſick, and to ſcoff at thoſe, that being thirty years of age, yet would ask other mens counſel, what was good or hurtful for their own bodies.

§. 2. His choiſe of a ſucceſſor.

But weakneſs at the laſt gave him warning of his end, and put him in mind to think of his ſucceſſor: and when he did ſo, perplexity met with ſuch a thought. For whom ſhould he chooſe? The ſon of Druſus was too young, the ſon of Germanicus was too well beloved, and Claudius was too ſoft; ſhould he chooſe the firſt or the laſt, it might help to diſgrace his judgment, ſhould he chooſe the middle, he might chance to diſgrace his own memory among the people, and for him to look elſewhere was to diſgrace the family of the Cæſars. Thus did he pretend a great deal of care and ſerioufneſs for the good of the Commonwealth, whereas his main aim and reſpect was, at his own credit and families honour. Well: ſomething he muſt pretend to give countenance and credit to his care of the common good. In fine his great deliberation concluded in this eaſie iſſue, namely in a prayer to the Gods to deſign his ſucceſſor, and in an auſpicium of his own hatching, that he ſhould be his ſucceſſor that ſhould come firſt in to him upon the next morning, which proved to be Caius. It ſhewed no great reality nor earneſtneſs for the common good in him at all, when ſo ſmall a thing as this muſt ſway his judgment, and ſuch a trifle be the caſting voice in a matter of ſo great a moment. His affection was more to young Tiberius, his nephew, but his policy reflected more upon Caius: he had rather Tiberius might have had the rule alone, and yet he was unwilling that Caius ſhould go without it, ſeeming to divide his affections betwixt the two, whereas his chief thoughts and reſpects were to his own ſelf. But Caius whom the Gods had caſt upon it (as his fooliſh auſpicium perſwaded him) muſt be the man, though he read in his nature the very bane of the Empire: and yet for affection ſake too muſt young Tiberius be joynt heir with him, though he foreſaw and foretold that Caius ſhould murder him. A monſtrous policy: to lay his own grandchild for a bait, for thoſe jaws that he knew would devour him: and this was, that by that preſent cruelty of Caius his own cruelties that were paſt might be forgotten, and the talk of that might not give room to talk of old Tiberius. This was that pretended care that he had of the Commonwealth, to be ſure to leave one behind him that ſhould be worſe than himſelf, that by his greater wickedneſs his own might be leſſened, and that himſelf might ſeem to be leſs vitious, by the others vitiouſneſs above him. Yet giveth he counſel to Caius, inciting him to goodneſs which he himſelf could never follow, and exhorting him to tenderneſs towards young Tiberius, which in his heart he was reaſonably indifferent whether he followed or no.

§. 3. His death.

Charicles the Doctor gave notice of his death approaching, to Caius and Macro, though he ſtole this judgment and conjecture but by a ſleight. For ſitting with the Emperor at a Banquet, and taking on him ſome earneſt and ſpeedy occaſion to be gone to ſome other place, he roſe from the Table, and pretending to take the Emperors hand to kiſs, he cloſely and ſtealingly tried his Pulſe, which Tiberius perceiving, but not expreſſing ſo much, cauſed him to take his place again, and the Banquet to be renewed, and him him to ſet out the meal. But when the Doctor was got looſe from the Table, and was come to Caius and Macro, and the reſt of the adorers of that imperial Sun that was now waiting when he ſhould riſe, he reſolved them that his end drew on apace, and was not many days off: And then was all preparation for the new Emperor when the laſt gaſpe ſhould remove the old. But he that had uſed ſo much diſſimulation all his life, diſſembled even in his dying. For fainting and ſwooning ſo very ſore, that all conceived he was departed, and Caius and all his favorites were gone forth to take poſſeſſion of his new Empire: ſuddenly the tune is turned, and news comes forth that Tiberius is revived and calleth for meat: Macro that had often been his inſtrument of cruelty upon others, turns the faculty now upon himſelf, and in ſtead of meat ſtopt his mouth with a pillow, or with heaping cloaths upon his face and ſo he died. There are indeed diverſities of opinion about the manner of his death, ſome ſaying it was thus as is mentioned, others that it was by poyſon, others that it was by being denied meat in the intermiſſion of his fits, others that he roſe out of his bed and fell on the floor, no body being near him: all which are mentioned by Suetonius. It is not much material what his end was, that that is firſt named is moſt intertained, and certainly it ſuiteth very well with his deſervings, and it is ſome wonder that he came to ſuch an end no ſooner. He died the ſeventeenth of the Calends of April or the ſixteenth of March, or if Dion may have his will the ſeventh, and ſo the reſt of that year is accounted the firſt of Caius.

C A I U S.

AN evil Emperor is gone, but a worſe is to ſucceed him. Caius the ſon of Germanicus, a bad child of a good father, inheriting the love and favour of the people for his fathers ſake, till he forfeited it, by his reſerving the qualities of Tiberius. He was ſurnamed Caligula, from a garb that he wore in the Camp, in which he was bred and educated: from whence he had the love of the Souldiers, till his barbarous nature loſt it. It may ſeem incredible, that a worſe diſpoſition ſhould ever be found than that of Tiberius, but the old Politician ſaw that this was ſo much beyond it, that it would do him credit: ſome impute the fault to his bloody Nurſe one Preſſilla a Campanian, the cuſtom of which Country it was, that the women when they were to give their children ſuck, they firſt anointed the Nipple with the blood of an Hedg-hog, to the end their children might be the more fierce and cruel. This woman was as ſavage above the reſt of the Nation, as they were above other women, for her breaſts were all hairy over, like the beards of men, and her activity and ſtrength in martial exerciſes inferiour to few of the Infantry of Rome. One day as ſhe was giving Caligula the Pap, being angry at a young child that ſtood by her, ſhe took it and tore it in pieces, and with the blood thereof anointed her breaſts and ſo ſet her nurſling Caius to ſuck both blood and milk. But had not his infancy been educated in ſuch a Butchery, the ſchool of his youth had been enough to have habituated him to miſchief. For being brought up in the ſight, and at the elbow of Tiberius, it would have ſerved to have corrupted the beſt nature that could be; but this of his was either never good, or at leaſt was ſpoiled long before. Yet had he reaſonably well learned his Tutors art of diſſimulation, ſo that he hid thoſe Serpentine conditions, not only before Tiberius his death, but alſo a while after he had obtained the Empire. Only he that had taught him to weave this mantle of diſſembling could ſpie through it, inſomuch that he would profeſs, That Caius lived for the deſtruction of him and all others. And that he hatched up a ſnake for the Roman Empire, and a Phaeton for all the world. And it proved ſo both to him and them. For when Tiberius lay a gaſping ſtifled with a pillow preſt upon him, he alſo throtled him with his hand, and crucified one of his ſervants that cried out upon the hideouſneſs of the fact. And as for his demeanor toward the State, a little time will give too lamentable witneſs.

§. 5. Tiberius in a manner cruel being dead.

How welcom news, the tydings of Tiberius death were at Rome, may be eaſily conjectured, by any that hath obſerved his cruelties before. Some cried out, Tiberius into Tiber, ſome to the hurdle and Tyburne, ſome to one thing, ſome to another, uſing the more liberty liberty of their Tongues againſt the Tyrant now, by how much they had been tied up the ſtraiter whilſt he lived. Nor did the remembrance of his former cruelties only cauſe them to rejoyce for his death, but a preſent cruelty, (as if he were bloody being dead) made him the more odious to them, than alive. For certain men that were but lately condemned, and their execution day falling upon the very day when tydings of his death came to the City (for the Senate did ever allow ten days for the condemned perſons after their ſentence, before their end) the poor men emplored the aid and comfort of every one they met, becauſe Caius to whom they ſhould have ſued was not in the City, but they were haled away by the Executioners and ſtrangled.

§. 6. Agrippa in a perplexity, and inlarged.

Agrippa was partaker of the common joy, but withal of ſome mixture of miſery, for ſuch variety of fortune had he taſted ever, and now muſt he have a farewel to ſuch viciſſitudes. Marſyas his freeman hearing the rumour in the City, runneth with all ſpeed to certifie his Maſter; and finding him with ſome company in the ways toward the Bath, he beckneth to him with this ſpeech in the Hebrew Tongue, The Lion is dead. With which tydings Agrippa was ſo tranſported with joy, that the Centurion his Keeper perceived it, and inquiring the reaſon, and being told it by Agrippa, he rejoyced with him for the news, and looſeth him from his Bonds. But as they were at Supper, there cometh a contrary report that Tiberius was alive, and would ere long be in the City. What now think you is become of the heart and mettle of Agrippa and his Centurion? Both had done enough by this their preſent joy, to procure their endleſs ſorrow, and his Keeper the worſe of the two; but Agrippa muſt ſmart for all for the preſent. He therefore caſts him into irons again, and committeth him to a ſurer Guard than before: And thus, as his too much eagerneſs of Tiberius his death had impriſoned him before, even ſo doth it now: but the next morning puts him into life again, for the rumor of the old Emperours death, is confirmed by Letters from the new; and a ſpecial Warrant cometh from him for the inlarging of Agrippa out of Priſon, to the houſe where he had uſed to live before.

§. 7. Caius cometh to Rome.

The Corps of the dead Tyrant is carried by the Souldiers into the City, Caius himſelf in mourning apparel following the Hearſe; and there he maketh his Funeral Oration, and performeth his Obſequies with great pomp and ſolemnity. And on the very day of his comming to Town he had enlarged Agrippa, but that the advice of Antonia perſwaded him to hold a while, leſt the people ſhould ſuſpect that he was glad of the death of Tiberius, if he ſhould ſo ſodainly ſet free one that he had committed for an enemy. But within a few days he is inlarged and ſent for home unto him. And there is he trimmed, his garments changed, and he crowned King of the Tetrarchies of Philip and Lyſanias, and his chain of iron, and of his bondage, changed for a chain of Gold of the ſame weight. This is that King Agrippa that ſlew James, and impriſoned Peter, and is called Herod, Acts 12.

§. 8. Caius his diſſembling.

Caius his beginnings were plauſible and popular, diſſembling his curſed diſpoſitions under ſuch crafty colours, that the people were tranſported with ſo happy a change (as they ſuppoſed) and 160000 Sacrifices were ſlain for gratulation in his three firſt months. His tears for Tiberius, his piety to his dead Mother and Brother, his reſpect to his living Siſters, his fair words to the Senate, and as fair carriage to the people, his paying of Legacies, his inlarging of Priſoners, his remitting of offences, his reviving of good Laws, &c. made the people to forget either in what School of diſſimulation he had been brought up, or how ſoon ſo great advancement corrupteth men of little education; and it made them vainly to hope that they had a Germanicus, becauſe they had his ſon; and that a good Prince could be bequeathed to them by Tiberius.

Yet could he not hide the ilneſs of his diſpoſition under all theſe cloaks and coverts of diſſembling; for preſently upon his coming to the City, he diſanulled the will of Tiberius that he might nullifie the authority of his partner of the ſame name in the rule and Empire: And yet did he pay all the Legacies of old Tiberius with bountiful additions of his own, which ſhewed that he diſliked the will, only becauſe of partnerſhip of Tiberius the younger.

younger. Having thus the whole sway and dominion devolved upon himself, by the outing of his poor Cousin (for the Senate was made and packed by Macro for such a purpose) he was received with as much joy and applause, as was possible to express, upon the old memory of his Father, and the present expectation of himself. Nor was this jocundness confined in the narrow bonds of Rome and Italy, but dilated it self through all the Empire, in every corner where the hoped benefit, and happy fruit of so great an expectation would have come, had it proved right. Every Country, City and Town was poured forth into exultation and festivity, with a common joy in this common hope. Now could you have seen nothing but Altars, Offerings, Sacrifices, Feasts, Revels, Banquets, Plays, Dancings, merry Faces, crowned Heads, singing Tongues and joyful Hearts, that the World seemed to be ravished besides it self, and all misery to be banished out of it, and all the thoughts of a changing fortune utterly forgot. Had Tiberius but spied this work out of his Coffin, how would he have laughed for company, to behold this deludedness of the people, and dissimulation of the Prince? And thus lasted this musick and masking for his first seven months, in which the new Emperor behaved himself with that moderation and bravery, as if vertue it self had been come among them.

In the eighth month a grievous sickness seized upon him, and then was all this mirth and melody turned to mourning and lamentation: each man sorrowful, and women bemoaning, as if all the world had been sick as well as he. Now was their songs turned into Tears, their revelling into Prayers, and their festivals to Vows for his recovery. Nay, so far did some strain the expression of their affections, that they vowed their heads and lives for his restoring. Nor could the people be so much blamed for this their sorrow, as pitied for being thus deceived, nor could it so much be wondred at that they were deceived, as it was wonderful that he could so deceive. For who could have chosen but have erred their error, that had seen what they beheld; and who could have brought them into such an error, but such a one as he, who was both a Caius and a scholar of Tiberius? When he paid the Legacies of Tiberius, he also discharged those of Julia which Tiberius had stopped, and added a considerable sum of his own bounty: He gathered the ashes of his Mother and Brother, and committed them to their Urne with his own hands, choosing a tempestuous season purposely when he travailed about that business, that his piety might be blown about the more; and he instituted annual Festivals for them. Nor must his Father Germanicus be forgotten, nor indeed could he, nor did he deserve it, for his memory therefore would he have the month September to be called by his name, placing him in the Calendar next Augustus. His Grandmother Antonia he also dignified and deified equally with Livia; and that by the consent and decree of the Senate. His Uncle Claudius he honoured with partnership with him in the Consulship; and his Brother and partner Tiberius, with adoption to put him in future hopes now he had lost his present ones; and he titled him The Prince of the Youth, to stop his mouth belike, when he had put him beside his being the Prince of Men. But as for his Sisters, the sequel shewed that it was more doting and lust than pure brotherly affection, that caused him to shew these expressions: that in all oaths that were administred to any, this must be one clause to which they must swear, That they neither accounted themselves nor their children, dearer than Caius and his Sisters: and this in all the Records of the Consuls, Which he for the happiness of Caius and his Sisters, &c. The like popularity used he likewise to the people, releasing the condemned, and recalling the banished; condemning on the contrary all enormities in Judicature, and banishing all incentives to evil manners. Forgiving his own private grievances, and satisfying for injuries done by his Predecessors; that it was no marvail if the whole State were sick in the sickness of such a Prince.

§. 9. Caius beginning to shew himself in his own colours.

Not to insist longer upon the vizor of this dissembler, but to take him as he was, and not as he seemed, his nature began more evidently to shew it self after his recovery of his sickness, mentioned, and then the State began by degrees to be sick indeed. His beginnings were in lightness, sports, and lavishing of money; but his proceedings were in bestiality, cruelty and effusion of blood. His Banquets, Plays, Sword-fights, Fighting of Beasts (as 400 Bears, and as many other African wild Beasts at one time) his Musick, Shews, strictness that none should be absent from them, and expensiveness in all (insomuch that he spent above twenty millions in such vanities in less than three years) may be thought as vertues in him, in comparison of that that followed, and of the mischiefs that he mingled between.

The recovery of the Emperor Caius, from that diſeaſe under which we left him ere while, proved the ſickneſs of the whole State, and the death of divers. For now he began to ſhew himſelf in his own colours, and to lay open the inſide of his barbarous nature, which hitherto he had hid under ſtrange diſſimulation. P. Afranius Petitus a Plebeian, and Atanius Secundus a Knight, had bound themſelves by oath, in the Emperors ſickneſs, partly in flattery, partly in hope of reward, the one that he would die on condition the Prince might recover; and the other that he would venture his life in combate on the ſame condition. Caius underſtanding of this obligation, and pretending that he would have neither of them perjured, ſeeing he was now well again, conſtrained them both to perform their vows, and brought them to repent their flattery with repentance too late and vain, and to a reward clean contrary to their expectation. Nor was his cruelty any whit leſs, though for very ſhame it muſt be better diſſembled, to his Father in Law the noble Silanus. A man hated of him for the two main things that in humane ſociety are the tyes of love, vertue, and alliance, and ſo indignly uſed him, that he found no way to regain his love, nor any better to avoid his hate than to murder himſelf with his own hands. Claudia the daughter of Silanus was his wife, but he divorced her from him, and took Cornelia Oreſtilla, from her huſband Calpurnius Piſo, on their very wedding day, where he was preſent at the ſolemnization, and he kept her not two months, but ſent her to her Piſo again.

§. 11. Young Tiberius brought to a miſerable end.

Theſe entries being made for the fleſhing as it were the Tyrant in bloodineſs and cruelty, he is now made ready and fit to execute a more horrible deſign upon his poor Brother, partner and ſon by adoption, the young and innocent Tiberius. He poor Prince having been thruſt by him out of his right and patrimony, by the nullifying of old Tiberius his will, muſt now alſo be deprived of life. This was it that the old Teſtator did preſage, and yet would leave him for a prey to his inhumanity. The pretences againſt this young Prince were, that either he had been a means to cauſe his ſickneſs, or at leaſt had rejoyced in it, and deſired his death. A ſleight accuſation to bring ſuch a Perſon to death; yet might he only have died, it might have ſeemed more tolerable, but the manner of it made the cruelty double. He is commanded to die by his own hand, though Tribunes, Centurions, and men of war fitter far to have done ſuch an execution ſtood by and would have done it. He deſired but this mercy, that he might have been ſlain by ſome of them, but that was denied him upon a point of Honor and Juſtice forſooth, becauſe it was not fit that ſuch a Prince ſhould die by inferior hands. The poor Prince offered his neck to every one that ſtood near, but they durſt not ſtrike for fear of their own: The only favour that he could obtain was this, that they might teach him where to wound himſelf for his ſooneſt diſpatch, and ſo he did. And thus is the Tyrant delivered as he thinketh from all fear and danger of compartnerſhip and corrivality in the Empire: next will he take a courſe with thoſe that any way may croſs him in, or adviſe him againſt his headlong humors, and of them we ſhall hear in their courſe. The laſt ſix months of this year he had taken the Conſulſhip upon himſelf, and had choſen his Uncle Claudius for his colleague, but we have reſerved the names of the old till now, to avoid confuſion.

PART I.

The ROMAN Story.

§. 1. Cruelties at Rome.

THIS year began at Rome with a fatal Omen. For on the firſt of January, Machaon a Servant went up to the ſhrine of Jupiter Capitolinus, and there having preſaged and prophecied many fearful and terrible things, firſt he ſlew a whelp that he had with him, and then he ſlew himſelf.

Theſe beginnings had anſwerable ſequels, for Caius addicted himſelf wholly to bloodineſs, ſometimes for his ſports, ſometimes in cruel earneſt: He commanded ſword-plays to be made, in which he ſet not man to man, but multitudes to multitudes to ſlaughter each other: He ſlew in the ſame manner ſix and twenty Roman Knights, with great contentment taken by him in the effuſion of their blood: He ſet alſo another Knight to the ſame terrible ſports, and when he came off victorious, he cauſed him, and his father to be ſlain, and divers others with them incloſing them in a ſtrong Cheſt or Preſs: When once there were not enough of poor condemned wretches to caſt to the wild beaſts, he cauſed divers that ſtood upon the Scaffolds for ſpectators to be caſt unto them, cauſing their tongues firſt to be cut out, that they might not cry or complain: yet did he with theſe cruelties mingle ſome plauſible actions tending to popularity, as creating of Knights, priviledging the commons, and laviſhing in gifts, that ſtrengthing himſelf with theſe curteſies in the hearts of ſome men, he might with the more confidence be cruel to other.

§ 2. An

§ 2 An end of Macro.

It cannot be expected that he ſhould come to a good end himſelf, that had brought ſo many to a bad. His courſe is now come to taſt of the ſame ſauce that he had provided for ſo many others, and it would half move the ſpectator to ſome kind of pity to ſee him ſlaughtered for ſuch a cauſe as he was ſlaughtered for. How he had been a means to curry Caius favour with Tiberius, and to skrew him into the Empire and himſelf into his good opinion, even by the proſtitution of his own wife, we have heard before, and this his extraordinary officiouſneſs, he did not forelet or ſlacken, when he had brought him where he deſired to have him, to the Empire. But now he turned his obſervance a better way, and what he had done before by baſeneſs, flattery, and ſenſeleſs obſequiouſneſs to bring him to the rule, he changeth into good counſel to keep him well in it. For when he ſaw him fall aſleep at Banquets amongſt his cups, he would freely check him for it, as being neither for his credit, nor for his ſafety. The like would he do when he ſaw him misbehave himſelf by lightneſs, profuſe laughter, and ridiculous geſtures in the Theater, and in beholding of plaies: In brief, ſo round and plain was he with him when he ſaw juſt cauſe, that in fine the uncounſelable humoriſt became his enemy, and at laſt his death. His end is reported to have been the ſame with young Tiberius, forced to ſlay himſelf, and Ennia his wife, or the wife of Caius, whether you will, to have been conſtrained to the ſame extremity and end with him. An end well befitting and well deſerved of them both, but from all men living leaſt deſerved from Caius. Philo after the death of Macro placeth the death of M. Silanus, which upon the warrant of Dion we have ſet before, and in things ſo indifferent will not ſpend labour to examine.

PART II.

The JEWISH Story.

§ 1. Troubles of the Jews in Alexandria.

FLACCUS Avilius was now Governour of Ægypt, and had been ſo for ſome years before: A man that ruled well while Tiberius lived, but after his death, could not govern himſelf. For when he heard of the death of the old Emperour and the ſucceſſion of the new, ſorrow for the one, and fear of the other did ſo tranſport him beſides himſelf, that forgetting the bravery and glory wherewith he had governed hitherto, he let looſe the reins of himſelf to theſe two paſſions, and the reins of the government to deſperate careleſneſs and neglect. He did nothing but weep for the loſs of old Tiberius, to whom he had been very intimate and dear, and he might well weep the more, becauſe he could meet hardly with any that would bear any part and ſhare in that ſorrow with him. This his grief was augmented by the fear that he had of Caius and of his diſpleaſure, and that by the intelligence that his conſcience gave him that he had deſerved it: partly for his propenſity to young Tiberius and ſiding with him, but chiefly becauſe he had had ſome hand or at leaſt ſome conſent and inclination to the death of Agrippina, Caius his Mother. Both theſe his miſerable paſſions were brought to their height when he heard of the death of young Tiberius and of his old friend Macro. The thought of theſe two was the only comfort he had againſt his dejectedneſs and diſcontent, for all his hope was, that theſe two might make his peace with Caius, whoſe diſpleaſure he ſo much doubted: But what muſt he do now, when they cannot make their own peace? He yeeldeth himſelf therefore wholly to his diſcontented mood, and neglecteth utterly both himſelf and the State. His old friends he groweth jealous of and rejecteth: his profeſſed enemies he receiveth to his favour and to his counſels: Theſe rule him that ſhould have ruled Egypt, and he had done it worthily, but now is drawn any whither, that ill adviſe, ſulienneſs and melancholy doth direct him. Theſe his wicked Counſellors invent a courſe to procure his peace and the Emperours favour, a courſe indeed bloody, barbarous, and inhumane, but ſuch as ſuited with their own malice, and (as it proved) took place with the Governors deſperateneſs and cowardize, if

if ſo be he may be called a Governor ſtill. Caius the Emperour, ſay they, is an enemy to the Jews, and a friend to the Alexandrians: Let this be the opportunity whereby to work thy reconciliation, to ſuffer the City to riſe againſt the Jews and to commit outrage upon them, and thou canſt not perform an act more acceptable to the Prince, nor more profitable for thy ſelf. The wretched Flaccus that took to heart no mans miſery but his own, and cared not who ſuffered, ſo he might eſcape, gave ear to this damnable and deviliſh counſel, and put it in practice, firſt plotting miſchief againſt the Jews in ſecret, then oppreſſing them in judgment and in their ſuites openly, and at the laſt profeſſing and publiſhing himſelf their reſolved enemy.

§ 2. Agrippa at Alexandria an unexpected and unwilling occaſion of further troubles.

Thoſe incendiaries that had kindled this fire will be ſure to loſe no blaſt that may make it flame and keep it burning: Agrippa that had not long ago departed from Alexandria a poor private man, returneth now thither in proſperity and a King. Caius that had promoted him to his kingdom, did lovingly direct him by Alexandria, as the ſafeſt way to it. Thither he came with as great privacy as ſuch a perſonage could do, and yet was he eſpied by the jealous eyes of theſe rare counſellours, and his coming miſconſtrued, through their malice to the Jews. They perſwade Flaccus that his coming thither was an affront to him in his own Province, that his Pomp and Train was more ſumptuous than his, that the eyes of all men were upon the new King Agrippa, and in ſhort that his preſence there, was his preſent diſgrace and would prove his future diſadvantage. The ill governed Governour was ready enough to hearken to ſuch buzzings as theſe, and to yeeld them impreſſion in his mind, yet durſt he not put any thing in execution againſt the King for fear of him that ſent him. He therefore thought it beſt to carry a fair outſide to Agrippa, and to his face he ſpeaketh fair and pretendeth friendſhip, but behind his back, he did not only deſcry his hate and revile him in ſecret, but alſo connived at thoſe that did ſo openly: ſo that within a little while, the King that neither thought nor came for any hurt is made the publick ſcoff and ſcorn throughout the City, and on their ſtages, in their plays, ballads, ſpeeches, houſes, ſtreets, there is no language ſo common nor ſo currant, as the abuſive of Agrippa.

§ 3. A Pageant of one and more madmen.

This connivence of the Governour ſhall I call it, or his toleration, or his ſetting on, or his folly, or what you will, you may well preſume that it added boldneſs and impudency enough to the outragious multitude, which commonly in ſuch miſchievouſneſs need ſmall incouragement: Their madneſs among other things ſhewed it ſelf in this Pageant, whether more ſenſeleſs or ſpleenatick, if not both alike, let the Reader judge. There was a poor mad man or diſtracted wretch in the City whoſe name was Charabas, that uſed to walk up and down ſtark naked night and day, heat and cold, the common fool as it were of boys and young men, with whom they uſed to make ſport. The riotous rout (now ſet on miſchief) bring this ſilly wretch to one of their publick meeting places, and there ſetting him on high in a ſeat above all the people that he might be ſeen of all, they put a Diadem of Paper about his head, and mat of ſedge about his body in ſtead of his robes, and a piece of Reed for a Scepter in his hand: and thus have they ſolemnly and ſuddainly made him a King, and one indeed that had been fit enough for themſelves; and one that was indeed but a fit Emblem of their Governour Flaccus, that ſuffered ſuch a thing. Their mimical King being thus accoutred with his robes and royalty, they bring him forth in a ſolemn ſtate: Before and about him went youths with poles upon their ſhoulders for his guard, by the way as he went ſome come to do him homage, others to petition for juſtice, others to adviſe him concerning affairs of State, and at laſt they all of them All hail him with the title of Mare, which in the Syrian tongue, the Language of the Country of Agrippa, (whom by this very word they ſhewed that they mocked) betokeneth Lord and Maſter. And now let the Reader but look upon this rout of Alexandrians, and let him judge who was the madder, the poor Lunatick that was ſo uſed, or they that ſo uſed him. For was it not mere madneſs in them thus to taunt and revile ſo great a King, ſo greatly reſpected by the Roman Senate, and ſo great a favorite of their Lord and Emperour? But Flaccus the maddeſt of all that beheld all this, and yet did permit it. And on the other hand let him look upon the Jews to whom this ſportful mummery is the preface to miſery in good earneſt, and if this mockage of their firſt King with a Crown, Robes, and Scepter of deriſion, put not the Reader in the mind of their ſcorning and uſage of their true King and Saviour in the very ſame manner, he cannot but remember Barabbas upon the naming of Charabas by the very ſame ſound and rime.

מָרִי

§ 4. More outrage.

The Alexandrians thus countenanced by Flaccus in the deriſion of the new King of the Jews, grow to a boundleſs outrage againſt their God. For now they begin to aſſail their Synagogues, and there they deſire to ſet up Images: a thing as odious to that Nation, as beloved among the Alexandrians. For in them is fulfilled that propheſie of Hoſea Chap. 3. 4. where they neither are as yet to God, nor as yet to any other, but on the one hand deteſting falſe Gods, and yet on the other hand not imbracing the true: hating the Images of any creature for adoration, but withall hating him that is the very Image and Character of the living God, the Creator.

This enterpriſe of prophaning and defiling the Synagogues and houſes of prayer of the Jews was not a fearful and terrible vexation to thoſe of that City only, but what hurt may ſuch an example do, think you, both through Egypt, and indeed through all the other Cities of the Empire? What fruits theſe beginnings brought forth in the ſame City, and elſewhere, we ſhall ſee ere long.

§ 5. Caius will be a God.

A ſpecial incouragement to this inſolency at Alexandria was Caius the Emperours demeanour at Rome: A man not fit to be ranked in the rank of men, and yet no way with him now but he will be a God. The ſenſeleſs groundwork of this his impious fancy, he took from this damnable Logick and deviliſh argumentation. That ſeeing Sheepherds and Herds-men that are maſters of Sheep and Cattle, are in a degree far above their beaſts and cattle: So he that was the Lord of all men, was not to be ranked in the degree of men, but of the Gods: This his opinion founded upon impiety, backed with flattery, and ſtrengthned by his uncontrouled power, he followed with ſuch vehemency and vigour, that now no Deity muſt be thought on but the God Caius, and all the Gods as he pleaſed were ingroſſed into himſelf. He changed his Godſhip when he thought good, and that with no more ado than with change of his garb. To day he would wear a Lions skin and a golden Club, and then he was Hercules, to morrow a Kids skin, and an Alepole, and then he was Bacchus; when he laid that by, it may be he would put on his curious Bonnet, and then he was Caſtor or Pollux: He would but lay that by and put on a beamy golden crown, and take bow and arrows in his hands, and he was Apollo, a Caduceus made him Mercury, and ſword, helmet and gantlet made him Mars: But the terrour that attended him when he would be this God laſt named, walking in his armour, with his drawn ſword in his hand, and a band of cut-throats about him, ſhewed to the people but little of any divine qualities, or celeſtial intentions, but terrified them with expectation of deviliſh cruelty and murders: Sometimes would he ſit betwixt the two ſtatues of Caſtor and Pollux and indure to be ſaluted by the name of the Italian Jupiter; Sometimes would he ſit by Jupiter himſelf and whiſper with him, and threaten to baniſh him out of Italy into Greece: And indeed it had been but an equal change had he done ſo, for he got the moſt curious peeces of the Gods of that Country, and ſtruck off their heads, and on the trunck he ſet the repreſentation of his own. He had a ſtanding ſtatue of Gold erected for him, to repreſent his walking Diety, which was clothed with the ſame garb that he wore himſelf every day, and to this were offered daily ſacrifices as rare and new found out as was his Deity it ſelf, Peacocks, Pheaſants, and other birds of the greateſt rarity and value. So vain a thing is man deſerted and left unto himſelf, that he will be a God when he is in the next form to a Devil. The plain and ruſtick Gaule hit him right, and ſpake but the truth, when ſeeing him in theſe his poſtures of his fooliſh Diety, and laughing, and being asked by Caius what he thought of him that he laughed, he anſwered boldly and eſcaped with it, That he ſeemed to him to be a great folly.

§ 6. The miſeries of the Alexandrian Jews.

How theſe manners of the Prince might redound to the calamity of the Jews who would worſhip no God but their own, it is eaſie to gueſs by the common advantages that are always taken in the like caſes, by men that are armed with power and weaponed with with malice. As this humour of the Emperour was blown up with flattery and blaſphemous clawing at home, ſo was it ſoon blazoned and divulged abroad, and they that delighted in many Gods, it was good contentment, to have them all met in the Center of the new God, all-God, their Prince. But what will become of the Jews, the only oppoſers of ſuch impiety, and what eſpecially of the Alexandrian Jews, whoſe tragedy was begun already? This opportunity ſuited with the ſpiteful deſires of their adverſaries, as their adverſaries themſelves could have deſired. For now thinks Flaccus, he may ingratiate himſelf to Cæſar indeed by being ungratious to the Jews, and now have the Alexandrians a double forwarding beſide their own malice, their Governour and their Prince.

Firſt Flaccus deprived the Jews of their Synagogues, Oratories and houſes of prayer, and therewith as much as in him lay of their Religion, then of the benefit of the City and Country Laws, proclaiming them ſtrangers and forreigners, and at laſt gave free and open liberty to the Alexandrians to uſe their wills upon them, in what manner and meaſure their malice thought meet. And now their Tragedy begins.

The Jews in the City were above two parts of five; the Alexandrians driving them out of their own houſes, and ranſacking the houſes as they went, they force them into a ſtrait place of the City, where they had not room to ſtir one for another, much leſs to make any orderly battalia for defence of themſelves, or for reſiſtance. In this ſtrait both of place and fortune, it is no wonder if they ſpeedily ſuffered famine who had nothing of their ſuſtenance left them, unleſs they would have devoured one another. Here are many mouths and no meat, and great complaining but no relief. Plenty enough there was in the City, but none for them, and abundance of every thing neceſſary, but pity. The poor crowded, ſtarved, and diſtreſſed people, thoſe that had any hope or courage to ſhift for themſelves, ſtreak abroad and ſteal forth of their incloſure, for food and freſh air; ſome to the ſhore, ſome into the City, ſome one way, ſome another, but the miſery of them alſo was no leſs than theirs that ſtaid impounded, but that it was not ſo lingring. For whereſoever they were caught, as no where could they go but deſcried, they were either ſtoned, clubbed, or burned to death, yea, often man, wife, children and whole families ſo murdred all of a heap. Some they ſmoaked and choaked to death in a fire where they wanted fewel to burn them out, ſome they haled with ropes tied about their ankles, up and down the ſtreets till they were dead, and then neither ſpared they the dead bodies, but mangled them in pieces. Their Synagogues they all burnt down, with the loſs alſo of ſome of the Alexandrians houſes adjoyning, their houſes they defaced, and their lives they took away, when and whereſoever they could catch them. Flaccus in this bloodineſs, had done enough by connivance and toleration, but he is not content with this paſſive tyranny unleſs he be an actor himſelf in the Scene, and be not behind other in this miſchief, as he was before them in authority. Eight and thirty of their Judges and Counſellors (for a Senate of their own was tolerated by Auguſtus and allowed them) he ſendeth for by his officers, and binding their hands behind them, cauſeth them thus to be led along the ſtreets for a deriſion, and then cauſed them to be publickly ſcourged, ſome to death, ſome to the lingring out of a miſerable life. He cauſed alſo a pretended ſearch to be made throughout all the Jews houſes for armour, pretending a ſuſpicion of their inſurrection, but intending thereby to give the Souldiers the more advantage for their pillaging and oppreſſion. He ſpared neither age nor ſex againſt whom he could take an occaſion or find cavil, nor reverenced he any feſtival for their execution, nor omitted any kind of cruelty for their torture. Here is the firſt ſmarting blow to count of that this nation felt, ſince they called for the blood of the juſt one upon themſelves and upon their children, and ſome of this City were nimble agents for the comapſſing of the death of his firſt Matyr Steven, Act. 6. 9.

§ 7. Agrippa in his own Kingdom.

You may well preſume that the ſtay of Agrippa would not be long at Alexandria, where his intertainment was ſo foul, and his invitation to his own home was ſo fair and good. His welcome thither was not ſo full of ſcorn and diſgrace, as in the other place, but as full of unkindneſs, becauſe the unkindneſs was from his own ſiſter. Herodias, the inceſtuous wife of Herod the Tetrarch, and once ſome comfort to this her brother whileſt he was in diſtreſs, growes now, the bitter envier of his proſperity. A woman ever active to the miſchief of others, but now beginning to twine a whip for her own back. It griveth her to ſee the unlooked for pomp of the new King Agrippa: A man that had ſo lately been under the hatches of fortune, and in her bilboes, debt and danger, that had but the other day fled from his wife, country, and friends for poverty and ſhame, unable to pay the monies that he ought, and which was worſe, as unable to borrow more, and now he is returned again with a Kingdom, a Crown, and with pomp and train agreeable to both: Oh how this grated her haughty and emulative ſpirit, though he were her brother! Well, whether it were in ſpite to his promotion, or in diſdain to her degree that was now below him, which is the more like, the ſhower and ſtorms of her diſcontents do ſhower upon her husband. She lays in his diſh the preſent ſpectacle of Agrippa's glory, and his own inferioritie. Taxeth him with dulneſs and ſleepineſs, that would not ſeek for a higher dignity, which might be had for a journey to Rome; twitteth him for being an underling when he might prevent it, perſwadeth him to ſpare no coſt nor travail for that prevention, and in fine worketh ſo with him by unceſſant clamours, that though he could well have been contented to have ſitten quiet at home, yet he is induced or driven to travail, and ſhe with him to Rome to Caius. Agrippa was not unacquainted with her diſcontents and with both their deſigns, and will not be far behind in reciprocal requital of ſuch intentions, but their meeting, pleading and ſucceſs at Rome muſt be reſerved to another year.

PART III.

The Roman Story again.

§ Caius the new God, little better than a Devil.

AFTER the ſight of the goodly Godſhip of the Emperour ſhewed in little a little before, let us take him now as he is indeed, little better than a Devil. A man, the ſhame and confuſion of men, if he may be called a man, and ſo far beyond the vices of any that had gone before, that he ſeemed to live to no other purpoſe than to ſhew, what the utmoſt extent of vitiouſneſs could do in the utmoſt height of power and liberty. You would wonder, but that his defiance of the Gods doth leſſen that wonder, how ſcornfully and deſpitefully he uſed the memory and perſons of his anceſtors, ſiſters, kindred and beſt friends: He charged Auguſtus with inceſt, Livia with baſe birth, Tiberius but with what he deſerved, his own mother with baſtardize, and whoſoever was moſt near and moſt honour to him, with ſome ignominy and reproach or other. But ſuch words were curteſies in compariſon of his actions. All his ſiſters he firſt deflowred, and then proſtituted them to others being ſo deflowred. But his darling ſiſter Druſilla, ſped ſomewhat better, if that better were not as bad. To her he continued his affection, of love or luſt whether you will, while ſhe continued in life, and when ſhe was dead, he made her the means of his profit as he had done before of his pleaſure; ſhe was the wife of M. Lepidus, but ſtill the whore of her brother Caius, and after her death he made her a Goddeſs, whom all her life long he had made his harlot. Altars, Statues, Vowes, Feſtivals were ordained for her, and Livius Geminius played the knight o'th poſt, and ſwore devoutly that he ſaw her aſcend to heaven, and converſing with the Gods. Such a Deity had the Romans never known before, but only her brother, and ſhe troubled them as much in her heaven, as he did on the earth. For now was it impoſſible for any man ſo to behave himſelf, but he was intrapped on the one hand or the other, about this new found Goddeſs. To mourn for her death, it was criminal, becauſe ſhe was a Deity; and to rejoyce for her Deity was capital, becauſe ſhe was dead, ſo that betwixt this Dilemma, of piety, tears and devotion, that man was very wary indeed that ſuffered not inhumanity and violence. For to laugh, feaſt, bath, ſing or dance was mortal, becauſe the Emperours ſiſter and darling was dead, and yet to mourn, or ſorrow for her death was as deadly, becauſe ſhe was immortal. This laſt ſtale did he make of this his deceaſed ſiſter, when ſhe would now ſerve him for no other uſe, that both ſorrow for her mortality, and joy for her being immortal did alike bring in mony to his treaſures, (which were now almoſt drained of his many millions) either by bribes for the ſaving of the life of ſome, or by confiſcation upon the death of others.

But how muſt he do now for another Paramor after his dear Druſilla? Why, that needeth not to breed any great difficulty, when his unbridled luſt is not very curious of his his choice, and his as unbridled power might chooſe as it liſt. He firſt married Lollia Paullina the wife of C. Memmius, ſending for her from another country where her huſband was General of the Army, and all the reaſon of this his choice was, becauſe he was told that her grandmother was an exceeding great beauty; but he ſoon put her away again, and forbad that any ſhould touch her for ever after him. Next came Cæſonia into his affections, and there contined; a mother of three children, and of more age than beauty, but of a laſciviouſneſs and beaſtiality ſo well befitting his, that now he had met with his match, and it was pity they ſhould have miſſed meeting: He would ſometimes ſhew her to the Souldiers, in armour, and ſometimes to his friends ſtark naked, transforming her by theſe viciſſitudes into two extreams equally unbefitting her ſex, to a man and to a beaſt. By her he had a Daughter whom he named Julia Druſilla, and whom he brought to the ſhrines of all the Goddeſſes in Rome, and at laſt committed to the lap of Minerva for her tutorage and education. But this his behaviour is nothing in compariſon of that which followed. He ſlew divers of the Senate, and yet afterward cited them to appear as if they had been alive, and in the end pretended that they had died by their own hands, others came off with a ſcourging, and ſo they eſcaped with life, but he cauſed the Souldiers to tread on them as they lay, and as they whipped them that they might have them at the more command: And thus he uſed ſome of all ranks and degrees. Being diſturbed at midnight one night by the noiſe of ſome that were getting places in the Circus againſt the next day, he fell upon them with Clubs and ſlew twenty Knights, as many matrons, and an infinite company of the common people. He threw a great multitude of old men and decrepit houſholders to the wild beaſts, that he might rid ſuch unſerviceable men, as he thought them, out of the way, and he cauſed the granaries to be often ſhut up, that they that had eſcaped the wild beaſts, might periſh with famine: He uſed to fatten the beaſts that he deſired to have fed with the inhumane diet of humane bodies yet alive, that thereby he might ſave other charges: Many men he firſt mangled and maimed, and then condemned to the mines, or to the wild beaſts, or to little-eaſe-priſons, and ſome he cauſed to be ſawed in ſunder. He forced parents to be preſent at the execution of their children: and for one that could not come to ſuch a miſerable ſpectacle he ſent a letter; and another he invited to a feaſt, after he had cauſed him to be a ſpectator of the execution of his own Son. One of the maſters of his games that had offended him, he kept in chains, and cauſed him to be beaten every day before his face, till the offenſiveneſs and ſtench of his wounded brain obtained his death: A Roman Knight being caſt by him to the wild beaſts, and crying out of the injuſtice done to him, he cauſed to be taken out again, and his tongue to be cut out, and then he caſt him to them again. He cauſed all the baniſhed men that were in the Iſlands about Italy to be ſlain at once, becauſe having asked one that was baniſhed in the time of Tiberius, what he did all the time of his exile, and he anſwered, that he prayed continually for the death of Tiberius and the ſucceſſion of Caius, he thought that all the preſent exiles prayed for his death likewiſe. Every tenth day he cauſed an execution to be had of thoſe that were condemned, boaſting and vanting that he ſcoured the priſons: And ever as any one came to ſuffer, he commanded the executioners to end him with ſuch deliberate tortures, as that he ſhould be ſure to feel himſelf to die: involving many deaths in one, and cauſing men that were to die, to live even in death, that they might die with more pain.

ACTS IX.

Verſ. 32. And it came to paſs as Peter paſſed through all quarters.

THE occaſion of Peters travail at this time, may be well apprehended to be for the ſetling and confirming of thoſe Churches that were now begun by the Miniſtery of the diſperſed Preachers: One thing was moſt neceſſary for theſe new founded Churches, which the Preachers themſelves could not provide for them, and that was Miniſters or Paſtors, unleſs they would have ſtayed there themſelves, which in all places they could not do, and in many places they did not, if in any place at all they did longer than for a little ſpace, the neceſſity of diſperſing the Goſpel calling them from place to place: Therefore it was needful that the Apoſtles themſelves ſhould go after them to ordain Miniſters by the impoſition of their hands, with which they did not only inſtal or inſtitute into the office of the miniſtery, but alſo beſtowed the Holy Ghoſt, for the inabling of thoſe that they did ordain, for the performance of that office, which gift the other Diſciples could not beſtow; and this may be conceived one reaſon why ten of the twelve Apoſtles were abſent from Jeruſalem at Pauls coming there, as was obſerved before, namely becauſe they were diſperſed abroad over the new planted Churches for this purpoſe: And this was one cauſe why Peter travails thus at this time, the plantations of the Churches ſtill increaſing: and his comforting, confirming and ſetling the Churches was another.

Through all quarters.

This referreth to thoſe places mentioned in the verſe preceding, Judea, Galilee, and Samaria: only whereas that verſe ſpeaketh of the places themſelves: this Verſe in the word πάντων, a word of the maſculine gender, referreth to the people of the places, and this is all the difference: And therefore Baronius is beſides the Cuſhion, who upon this very place and out of this very word would conclude that Peter in this his peregrination did found the Epiſcopacy at Antioch. His words are theſe.

Luke

Luke, saith he, being intent (as it appeareth) to commend to memory the more remarkable miracles wrought by Peter, hath omitted in silence the rest of his actions performed in this visitation of the province, and among other things, the institution of the Church of Antioch: which that it was erected by him in this very year, we shall easily shew by the testimony of the ancients. Eusebius may be alledged as one of these ancients, and one for all, who speaketh much to the same purpose, and somewhat further, but only with this difference that he hath set down this matter a little before the death of Tiberius. Peter the Apostle, saith he, founded the Church of Antioch, and having there gotten his chair he sate five and twenty years. Thus Eusebius ad annum Christ. 38. Parisiis, 1511. Now to take up this position and story in its several particulars, almost every parcel will prove a stumbling block, and before belief can be given to it, it must pass thorow, and overcome these difficulties.

1. Whereas his journey to Antioch is laid in this visitation: it is strained beyond the Letter, and beyond the Spirit and meaning of the Text. For that speaketh only of the Churches of Judea, Galilee, and Samaria, and then how came in Antioch in another Country? And those words through all quarters run at a very uncertain randome if they be uncircumscibed by the Verse before.

2. It is past all peradventure that as yet there was no Church at Antioch at all, much more that there was no Episcopal Chair and See there. For it is a year yet to come before there be any mention of a Church there, Act. 11. and that that story of the first beginning of that Church lieth in its proper place and without any transposition or Hysteron-proteron is so plain to him that will but view it that it needeth no proof.

3. How is it consistent with Peters imprisonment at Jerusalem, Chap. 12. to sit Bishop in another Country? Much more is it inconsistent, or rather to speak plainly, impossible that he should sit five and twenty years at Antioch and as many at Rome, and yet go thither in the second of Claudius as he is held to have done. Now Baronius hath espied these two stumbling blocks, and laboureth to remove them: but in his striving about the one, he throweth dirt into Eusebius his best Authors face, for he saith he is corrupted; and indeed he doth little less about the other: For whereas Eusebius saith in plain terms, ibi sedit, Peter there sate, this his Paraphrast glosseth, that it sufficed though he never came there; For with him Peter was as a Creator of Churches and Bishopricks; for if dixit factum est, if he but spake the word, be he where he would, there was a Metropolis or an Episcopacy created in any place whatsoever. But not to spend much labour where we are sure but of little profit, let it suffice the reader to have but a Catalogue and particular of his arguments, and let him censure them according to his own judgment.

Argum. 1. It was Peters office to oversee and take care of the whole flock, and for this he visited all the Churches that lay round about Jerusalem, pag. 306. But that draweth on another question, which will be harder to prove than this, and it maketh Paul but an intruder, that took upon him such a care.

Argum. 2. Peter taking opportunity of the Churches tranquility, pag. 306. visited all (the Christians which were in Syria) pag. 309. But here he is besides his warrant of the Text, and maketh a History of his own head.

Argum. 3. Peter whersoever he was might raise an Episcopal or Metropolitical See at any place distant where he pleased, by the Authority wherewith he was indowed, pag. 309. When this is proved, we may believe the other that he would prove.

Argum. 4. The number of Eusebius, of his sitting 25. years at Antioch, is an error crept into the Text, but the number of his 25. years at Rome, in him is right, pag. 306. But if he be at liberty to suspect the one, sure we may have the like liberty to suspect the other.

Argum. 5. The Hierachical order seemeth not to indure, that the prime Church that had been as yet instituted, should be governed by any but the prime Apostle, pag. 309, 330. It will be some work to prove any Hierarchical order at all, or Peter Prime Apostle, or Antioh, a chief Church above others more than by humane preferring, or Antioch yet a Church; and were all these proved, which never will be, yet is the inference or argumentation thereupon but of small value and validity.

6. His last Argument is from Authorities, which at last he gathereth into the Center of a Councel at Rome, pag. 332. But Amicus Plato, amicus Aristoteles, magis amica veritas.

As for his answers to Eusebius that calleth Evodius the first Bishop of Antioch, his answer to Ignatius that saith he was placed there by the Apostels, more than one, and to Onuphrius, that maketh Peter Bishop of Rome before he was Bishop of Antioch, be they referred to the perusal of his own Text, for the matter is not worth the labour of examining them.

Vers.

Vers. 32. Lydda.

This seemeth to be the same with Lod, 1 Chron. 8. 12. A City in the Tribe of Benjamin, mentioned, Ezra 2. 33.

Vers. 35. Saron.

Heb. Sharon: A fertile valley famous in Scriptures as 1 Chron. 27. 29. Esa. 33. 9. Cant. 2. 1, &c. where the Targum renders it, the garden of Eden, and the LXX πέδιον a field or plain, the masculine Article sheweth, it is not named of a City: And so do the LXX article it, Esa. 33. 9. There is mention of a Sharon beyond Jordan, 1 Chron. 5. 16. inhabited about by Gileadites: by which it seemeth it was a common name for plain champion grounds wheresoever.

Vers. 36. Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas.

Tabitha the Syriack, and Dorcas the Greek, do both signifie a Hind, or Doe, Capream, as Beza renders it. Now the reason why Luke doth thus render the one into the other, seemeth to be because Tabitha was a Grecizing Jewesse, and so was commonly called by these two names, by the Syrian among the Hebrews, and by the Greek among the Greeks.

Vers. 37. Whom when they had washed.

Whether it were a common custom among the Jews to wash all their dead bodies before they buried them, as is concluded by many upon this place, we will not insist to question; nor whether it were in token of the resurrection, or no, as some apply it; only the other application that they make hereupon, I cannot pass over untoucht: which is, that Paul spake in reference to this custom, and to that intention is this custom, when he saith, τί ποιοῦσιν οἱ βαπτιζόμενοι ὑπὲρ τῶν νεκρῶν, &c. 1 Cor. 15. 29. Else what shall they do, which are baptised for the dead, &c. as our English reads it: as if the Apostle produced this custom as an argument for the resurrection, as meaning to what purpose should dead bodies be washed, if not to betoken this: thus he is conceived to argue: whereas, by the juncture of the thirtieth verse to this, it seemeth that he intended a clean contrary or different thing, by being baptized ὑπὲρ νεκρῶν, namely, being baptized so as baptism signifieth death by matyrdom, or suffering for the truth, as Matth. 20. 22, 23. Luke 12. 50. And his arguing is to this sense, if the dead rise not again, what will become of those that are baptized with a martyrial baptism, or that do suffer death for the profession of the truth? why are they then baptized for the dead? yea and why stand we in jeopardy every hour of such a baptism and matyrdom also? Why do they suffer, and why are we daily in danger to suffer for the truth, if there be no resurrection? And so the word ὑπὲρ to signifie, not vice, or supra, but pro, that is, in such a sense; and ὑπὲρ νεκρῶν to mean, In such a sense as baptized, meaneth, dead or martyred: As ὑπὲρ is taken in this clause, Παρέδωκεν ὁ Φάβιος τῷ Μινυκίῳ, τὴν δύναμιν ὑπὲρ τοῦ μὴ μάχεσθαι. Fabius delivered the power, or Army to Minucius, under this intent and meaning, or condition, that he should not fight, Plut. in Fab.

§ They laid her in an upper chamber.

This probably was the publick meeting room for the believers of that Town; Dorcas being a woman of some good rank, as may be conjectured by her plenteousnes of good works and alms-deeds. Now they purposely disposing of the dead corps, that Peter if he would come, might exercise a miracle upon it, they lay it in that publick room, that the company might be spectators of the wonder; but Peter would not suffer them so to be for some singular reason, vers. 40.

Acts X.

§ Some things remarkable about the calling in of Cornelius.

First, the Gospel had now dilated it self to the very utmost bounds of the Jews territories in Canaan, Judæa, Samaria, and Galilee, had been preached to, and through, and now is it got to the very walls of their dominions round about: And there wanteth nothing but laying the partition wall flat, that the Gospel may get out unto the Gentiles: and that is done in this Chapter; where the great partition and distance that was betwixt Jew and Gentile is utterly removed and taken away by God himself, who had first pitched and set it betwixt them.

Secondly, the two first and maineſt stones of interposition that were laid in this wall, were circumcision and diet: the one in the time of Abraham, Gen. 17. the other in the time of Jacob, Gen. 32. 32. And in reference to these two it is, that they of the Circumcision contend with Peter, upon his return to Jerusalem, for they are grieved that he went in to men uncircumcised, and ate with them, Chap. 11. 3. These were the proper distinguishers betwixt Israel and other Nations; for all their other Ceremonies were not so much to distinguish them from other people, as to compose them among themselves and towards God, they being first distinguished from others by these.

Of these two, singularity of Dyet, or Prohibition of certain meats, was the more proper difference, and the more strict distinctive: For all the seed of Abraham was circumcised, and so in regard of that Ceremony, there was no difference betwixt an Ismaelite and a Jew: But abstaining from such and such meats, was a proprium quarto modo, a singularity that differenced an Israelite from all the world besides.

Thirdly, therefore it was most proper, and of most divine reason, that the liberty of eating any meats, did denote and shew a liberty of conversing with any nation, and that the inlarging of the one, is the inlarging of the other.

Fourthly, the first-fruits of this inlargement, and entertainment beyond the partition wall is Cornelius, a Convert, but not a Proselyte: a man that was already come in to God, but not come in to the Church of Israel: a man as far contrarily qualified for such a business, in all humane appearance, as what could be most contrary, as being a Roman, a Souldier, a Centurion; and yet he of all men chosen to be the first-fruits of the Gentiles, that God herein might be the more plainly shewed to be no respecter of persons.

Fifthly, it had been now 2210 years since the Heathen were cast of at the confusion of Babel, and had lain so long in darkness, sin, superstition and Idolatry, strangers to God, and aliens from the congregation of Israel; bondslaves of Satan, and under his dominion, and even all the world (Israel only execepted) become the Kingdom of Hell and the Devil.

Sixthly, Satan had by this very time brought his Kingdom among these Heathens to the very Apex and perfection, when he had gotten one into the throne of the Roman Empire, (which was now over all the world) who by the very sword and power will force the people to adore him for a God, and had the sword and power in his own hand to force them to adore him: as we saw by Caius even now. And here I cannot but look back from Caius as he sate in his throne as an ungodly Deity when the Gentiles began to be called in, to the first Idol that they proposed and set up for themselves to adore at Babel, as he is described by the Jerusalem Targum at their first casting off: For thus doth it Paraphrase those Rebels plot and conspiracy, for the building of that Idolatrous City, Gen. 11. 3. And they said, Come let us build a City and a Tower, whose top may reach to heaven, and in the midst of it, let us build a Chappel, and an Idol in the head of it with a sword in his hand to fight for us that we be not scattered.

Nor can I but look forward also from the same Caius Deifying himself, and that in the Temple of God as we shall see ere long, to the succeeding times of the Gentile Church, which is now beginning: wherein a man of sin, the successor of Caius Caligula a thousand fold more likely, than the successor of Simon Peter, hath set up himself to be adored, and exalts himself above every thing that is called God.

Seventhly, the instrument of the first introducing of the Gentiles, by the bringing in of Cornelius, was Peter: not for any Primacy or universal Bishopship that he was invested withall, but rather because he was the most singular minister of the Circumcision: for his bringing in of the Gentiles would stop the mouth of the Judaizing believers the more.

Eighthly,

Eightly, and for this thing he had a special ingagement and deputation from our Saviour a good while ago as he himself speaketh, Acts 15.7. And that was when Christ giveth him the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, Matth. 16. 19. that is putteth into his hand, the peculiar priviledge to open the door of Faith and the Gospel to the Gentiles, and giveth him power withall to bind and to loose, the use of Moses Law among the Heathens when he brought the Gospel among them, some of it to fall and some to stand, according as the Spirit should direct him, and accordingly it should be ratified in Heaven. And that this is the genuine, proper and only meaning of that so much disputed place, will be undeniable to him that shall consider what is the proper meaning of the Kingdom of Heaven in Scripture, and of binding and loosing in Jewish authors from whom that Phrase is taken.

Vers. 1. In Cæsarea.

Called of old Turris Stratonis, Stratons Tower; but new built by Herod the great, and named Cæsarea in honour of Augustus. It lay upon the Sea shore betwixt Joppa * and Doræ * Dor. saith Josephus, Antiq. lib. 15. cap. 13. where he describeth at large.

§ The Italian Band.

Not to spend time in inquiring what Italian band this was, whether Ferrata, or Dives, or Voluntariorum, or the like, it seemeth to me that the consideration of the place it self where Cornelius was, will help to understand what Luke intendeth by it. For Cæsarea was the place where the Roman Governour or Proconsul resided: as appeareth, Acts 23. 23, 24. and 24. 6. and that partly for the bravery of the City, and chiefly for the commodiousness of the haven: Now this Italian band may very properly be understood of that band that attended the Governors person, or were his life-guard, and which had come out of Italy for this purpose to be his defence and the defence of the City where he lay.

Vers. 2. A devout man, &c.

Gr. Ευσεβής, A man that worshipped the true God, and followed not Idolatry: And a man that feared God indeed, as well as he worshipped him in profession.

§ Which gave much alms to the people.

To the Jews, to whom alms was not unclean though given by a heathen; to which thing our Saviour seemeth to allude in that speech, Luke 11. 41. But rather give alms of such things as ye have, and behold all things are clean unto you. And upon this respect it is like that alms are called צדקה Righteousness, so commonly among the Jewish authors, and used by the Syriack and Arabick here, because they lost not their nature or quality of cleaness or purity and righteousness, though they came even from an unclean, yea a heathen person.

§ And prayed to God alway.

Beza hath made this clause the beginning of the next verse, and that, as he saith, with the warrant of one copy. The Arabick doth the like: They think they mend the sense with it, in which they mistake because they mind not the scope: For it is the intent of the Holy Ghost to shew the constant carriage of Cornelius in his devoutness, as vers. 4. and not his devoutness as occasion of his vision.

Vers. 3. He saw in a vision evidently.

The word evidently, or φανερῶς, is added to shew that he saw it waking, and with his bodily eyes, for there were visions in dreams, as Gen. 20. 3. and 28. 12. Job 4. 13.

§ About the ninth hour.

The hour of the evening sacrifice, three a clock after noon: compare Dan. 5. 21. Cornelius though he were not yet proselyted by circumcision to the Jewish Church, yet followed he their manner and form of worship.

Vers. 9. To pray, about the sixth hour.

About twelve a clock or high noon, and this was the time of the Minchah gedolah as the Jews called it, or the very beginning of it: And so do they expound, Dan. 6. 10. and Psal. 55. 17. accordingly. Daniel prayed three times a day, that is, say R. Saadias and R. Solomon, Morning, Evening, and at the Minchah. And Evening and Morning, and at noon will I pray, R. Sol. Evening, Morning and at Minchah, the three times of prayer: Now this Minchah time is described by their Doctors thus, Minchah gedolah, is the beginning of the time of the dayly sacrifice between the two Evenings, when the Sun begins to decline: which is from the sixth hour and forward until night, some say, from the sixth hour and an half, which was according to our Phrase in hand about the sixth hour: Now this their accounting was not for that they always began to fall about their evening sacrifice at twelve a clock, or half an hour after, but because that it was lawful then to begin to fall about it; for when there were additional sacrifices besides the dayly, as the Passover, or the like, then it was necessary for them to begin to prepare the sacrifices from that time, that it was lawful to begin about them; which from that time of the day it was, all the time from thence forward till night being בין הערבים between the Evenings, according to the letter of the Law, Exod. 12. 6. Numb. 28. 4. And to this sense speaketh the Text, 1 King 18 19. When noontide was passed, and they had now prophecied till the offering of the Minchah: not till the very time of the very firing of the sacrifice, for that the verses following deny: but to the time of the Minchah in that sense that we have in hand: and to this purpose the difference of the words לעלות here and בעלות Vers. 36. is very remarkable.

So that Peter in this practise of praying about the sixth hour intimated the custom of the Jews, and though he had so long been a Convert to the Gospel, yet doth he not forsake their manner of worship: no more did the other Disciples, as hath been shewed elsewhere.

Ἐπέπεσεν ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἔκστασις. An extasie fell upon him, and so Chap. 22. 17. γενέσθαι μέ ἐν ἐκστάσει, I was in an extasie: This was the higheſt and excellenteſt way of all other, of revelations; when a man was rapt even from himself into heaven: for so Paul calls it, 2 Cor. 12. 2. and was wholly in the spirit, for so John calls it, Rev, 1. 10. being for the time as it were out of the body, and in the very next degree to souls departed, enjoying God. Seven manner of extraordinary ways did God use to reveal himself and his will to his people in ancient times. 1. By Dreams. 2. By Apparitions when they were awake. 3. By Visions when they were asleep. 4. By Voyce from heaven. 5. By Urim. 6. By Inspiration, or Revealing of the ear. 7. By Rapture or Extasie: and this last the excellenteſt, as to him that did injoy it. And of this should I understand that deep sleep that fell upon Adam, Gen. 2. 21.

Vers. 12. Fourfooted Beasts and wild Beasts.

בהמה and חיה Beasts tame and wild, for so doth the Scripture most frequently distinguish them.

Vers. 15. That call not thou common.

Gr. Μὴ κοίνου: Do not thou pollute, that is, do not thou call or account polluted, Vers. 28. For so is the use of Scripture very frequently, to speak as in an effective or active sense, and to intend only a declarative, as Gen. 41. 13. Me he restored to my office, but him he hanged, Ezek. 43. 3. When I came to destroy the City: The Priest did make clean, or make unclean the Leper, Lev. 13. 6. 8. &c. which was only pronouncing clean or unclean, as our English hath well rendred it: or teaching what was clean and what unclean, as Chap. 14. 57. And in the very same sense is the binding and looſing to be understood, Matth. 16. 19. and 18 18. for teaching what is bound and what looſe, what אסור and what מותר as the Jews speak, or what lawful, what unlawful.

Vers. 28. Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, &c.

Κολλᾶσθαι ἢ προσέρχεσθαι ἀλλοφύλῳ. By which words is not to be understood as if a Jew might have no dealing at all with a Gentile, for they might walk, and talk, and traffick with them, them, and it was within a little of impossible to do otherwise, they living exceeding many of them in heathen Cities: And Gentiles came continually in way of trade to Jerusalem, *Neh.*13.16. But the unlawfulness of their conversing with the Gentiles, was conversing in near and more close society, as the word κολλᾶσθαι signifieth, and that especially in these two things, not to eat with them, and not to go into their houses: And this is that for which they of the Circumcision excepted at Peter upon his return. Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them, Chap. 11. 3.

§ But God hath shewed me, that I should not call any man common, or unclean.

This vision that Peter had, when this satisfaction was given him, to learn to call nothing common, was only of beasts and fowles and creeping things, yet might he learn that the lesson was also to be understood of men, because the distinction betwen men and men in regard of common and unclean was first made and most strictly made by the difference betwixt meats and meats. For the very first distinguisher that ever began to inclose Israel for a peculiar from other people, was the not eating of the sinew that shrank, *Gen.*32. Circumcision distinguished the seed of Abraham from other people, but this began to distinguish Israel from the other seed of Abraham. And it is observable, that that ceremony or distinctive rite was first taken up, when Jacob first received the name of Israel.

Now it is true indeed that their forbearing to eat the sinew that shrank, was not as if they accounted it common or unclean, but it was in regard of the honorable memorial that they read upon it, yet was that ceremony the first and proper distinguisher of an Israelite from all other people under heaven some hundreds of years, till more distinctive rites came in, and more things were prohibited to be eaten, for the surer distinction.

There was distinction of clean and unclean beasts before the flood, as appeareth, Gen. 7.8. but this was in reference to sacrifice only, and not in reference to diet at all: for till the flood they ate nothing but the fruits of the ground, till God gave Noah liberty to eat flesh, and to eat any thing that was wholesome for diet. And in this liberty did the world continue till the Law given at Sinai, save only an Israelites not eating the sinew that shrank: And this liberty some Jews themselves confess shall be in the days of Messias, which now first taketh place at this vision of Peter and forward. And here doth Peter begin to put in use and ure that power of binding and loosing which Christ had put into his hands, when he put into his hands the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven: And this very place doth so clearly expound and interpet that speech of our Saviour to him, that it is a wonder that ever there should be such scruple and controversie about it.

For, 1. Here beginneth the Kingdom of Heaven: when the Gentiles are received to favour and to the Gospel, who had been so long cast off, and layn in ignorance and idolatry, and when no difference is made betwixt them and the Jews any longer, but of every nation, they that fear God and work righteousness are accepted of him as well as Israel. This is the very first beginning or dawning to the Kingdom of Heaven; and so it grew on more and more, till Jerusalem was destroyed, and then was the perfect day, when the Gentiles only were become the Church of Christ, and no Church or Commonwealth of Israel to be had at all, but they destroyed and ruined.

Secondly, here Peter hath the keys of the Kingdom, and unlocked the door for the Gentiles to come in to the Faith and Gospel, which till now had been shut and they kept out. And Peter only had the keys, and none of the Apostles or Disciples but he: for though they from hence forward brought in Gentiles dayly into the Kingdom of Heaven, by converting them to the Gospel; yet it was he that first and only opened the door, and the door being once opened, was never shut, nor never shall be to the end of the world. And this was all the priority that Peter had before the other Apostles, if it were any priority; and how little this concerneth Rome, or the Papacy, as to be any foundation of it, a child may observe.

3. Peter here looseth the greatest strictness, and what was the straitest bound up of any thing that was in all the policy of Moses and customs of the Jews, and that was, the difference of clean and unclean in the legal sense. And this he looseth on earth, and it is loosed in heaven, for from heaven had he an immediate warrant to dissolve it: And this he doth, first declaratively, shewing that nothing henceforward is to be called common or unclean, and shewing his authority for this doctrine, and then practically conforming himself to this doctrine that he taught, by going in unto the uncircumcised, and eating eating with them: Binding and looſing in our Saviours ſenſe, and in the Jews ſenſe from whoſe uſe he taketh the phraſe, is of things and not of perſons, for Chriſt ſaith to Peter ὃ ἐὰν δήσῃς, and ὃ ἐὰν λύσῃς: ὅ and not ὅν whatſoever thou bindeſt and not whomſoever, and to the other Apoſtles ὅσα ἐὰν δήσητε, Matth. 18. 18. ὅσα and not ὅσους, whatſoever things, and not whatſoever perſons, ſo that though it be true indeed that Jews and Gentiles are looſed henceforward one to the communion of another, yet the proper object of this looſing that is looſed by Peter, was that Law or doctrine that tied them up: and ſo concerning the eating of thoſe things that had been prohibited, it is true indeed that the Jews were let looſe henceforward to the uſe of them in diet and to eat what they thought good, but this looſing was not ſo properly of the men, as the looſing of that prohibition that had bound them before. And this could be no way but doctrinally by teaching that Chriſtian liberty that was given by the Goſpel.

Now though Peter only, and none but he had the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, yet had all the Apoſtles the power of binding and looſing as well as he: and ſo have all the Miniſters of the Goſpel as well as they, and all in the ſame ſenſe, namely, doctrinally to teach what is bound and looſe, or lawful and unlawful, but not in the ſame kind: for the Apoſtles having the conſtant and unerring aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, did nullifie by their doctrine, ſome part of Moſes Law, as to the uſe of it, as Circumciſion, Sacrifices, Purifyings, and other legal Rites, which could not have been done by men that had not had ſuch a ſpirit, for there muſt be the ſame ſpirit of Prophecy to abrogate a Law, which had ſet it in force.

This matter therefore of Cornelius his calling in, as the firſt-fruits of the Gentiles, is a thing that deſerves very high regard and conſideration; as in which are included and involved ſo many things of note as have been mentioned, and divers others that might be added thereunto; and in the conſideration of the matter, the time of it is not to be neglected, which to the ſerious and conſiderate Reader and weigher of things in the ballance of Judgment, will appear to be in this year in which we have laid it; eſpecially that being concluded upon, which before we proved undeniable, that the Famine was in the ſecond year of Claudius. And this time is the rather to be looked upon, becauſe that ſome do fooliſhly miſconſtrue a clauſe in Daniel 9. 27. by miſſing of the right time of this occurence of Cornelius. For looking no further into the text than in our Engliſh tranſlation, which there hath not ſpoken the mind of the Original, they conceive that Chtiſt dyed in the midſt of the laſt ſeven years of the ſeventy ſevens, namely, when three years and an half of the ſeven were gone, and that at the end of the other three and an half Cornelius was converted: and ſo they will make thoſe ſeventies to end in that his converſion, and not in Chriſts death: which were ſcarcely worth anſwering, though we had time and ſeaſon to do it: ſeeing it riſeth from a miſtake in the Text, and ſets in a miſtake of the time.

Verſ. 30. Four days ago I was faſting, &c.

The Greek hath it, From the fourth day until this hour I was or have been faſting: by which it ſeemeth that Cornelius had now been faſting four days together, as Paul was three days at his converſion, Chap. 9. 9. But it is not much material whether we underſtand it ſo, or as it is commonly underſtood of his faſting four days ſince, till ſuch an hour of that day, as it was now of this day when he is ſpeaking to Peter, unleſs we will make any thing of it, that the Jews eſpcially upon their ſolemn days uſed to taſte nothing till noon, and Cornelius herein follows there cuſtome: and that it was about noon when Peter comes to Cornelius, as it was about noon when Cornelius meſſengers came to Peter: And ſo the diſtance betwixt Cæſarea & Joppa to be a days journey and an half.

Verſ. 36. The Word which God ſent.

Beza ſuppoſeth that this verſe ought to be referred and joyned to the verſe that went before, and they two together, to be conſtrued to this ſenſe, Now I know that God is no reſpecter of Perſons: but in every Nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted of him; which is the very doctrine which God ſent among the children of Iſrael by Moſes and the Prophets, preaching peace by them by Jeſus Chriſt. And one main induction that he hath to this construction is, because otherwise it would be improper for Peter to say, Cornelius and his friends knew this word, when it was Peters very errand to instruct them in it, and teach it to them. But the words are to be read and taken in the sense that our English hath well made of them; namely, as following the word ye know: For all the Country knew that Jesus preached, and preached peace and the like; and thousands though they knew that he preached, and what he preached, yet did they not believe that he was the Messias, nor that he was risen from the dead: and these two last things it was that Peter came to teach Cornelius, and not to tell him that Jesus of Nazareth had preached, for that he and all his friends knew.

that

Vers. 44. The Holy Ghost fell on all them that heard the Word.

This was a second confirmation of the entertainment of the Gentiles to the Gospel, or a miracle added by God, to the doctrine preached by Peter, that nothing now was to be accounted common or unclean: for when God had poured the Holy Ghost upon the uncircumcision as well as upon the circumcised, it was evidence sufficient that now God made no difference betwixt them: How these extraodinary gifts of the Spirit had been confined hitherto only to the Nation of the Jews, it is not only clear by Scripture, but it is upon that clearness thought by the Jews that it must be confined thither ever, and that neither any Gentile at all, nor hardly any Jew out of the Land of Canaan could be capable of them; and therefore when they here see the same measure and fulness and freeness of the Spirit upon the Gentiles, as had been upon Jews; they cannot but conclude the difference was in vanishing, and that God was setting up a Church among them, when he bestowed the Spirit of Prophecy upon them.

Vers. 47. Can any man forbid water, &c.

Peters thoughts in these words, look back to those words of our Saviour, Go teach all Nations, and baptize them, Mat. 28.19. where he meaneth not, that none should be baptized but those that are capable of teaching, but his meaning is this, that whereas his Disciples had hitherto been limited and confined only to preach to the Jews, to go to none but to the lost Sheep of Israel; now had the Jews by the murdering of Christ shewed themselves unworthy, and had forfeited the benefit of the Gospel; and therefore Christ now inlargeth his Apostles and Disciples, to go now and to teach all Nations, and to baptize them to preach to the Heathens, and to bring them in by baptism, since the Jews had despised the Gospel, and crucified the Lord of life that preached it: To this it is that Peter here looketh, at this first conversion of the Gentiles; and when he seeth the very same gifts bestowed on them from Heaven, that were upon the Jews, he concluded that none could object against their being baptized: and accordingly he commands that they should be baptized: either by some of those that came with him from Joppa, they being more than probably Ministers; or he commanded that provision should be made for their baptizing by himself.

Acts XI.

That part of this Chapter which falleth under this year that we have in hand, viz. to vers. 19. is but a rehersal of this Story in the tenth Chapter, and therefore it is not necessary to insist upon it.

PART II.

The ROMAN Story.

§ 1. Caius still cruel.

THE beginning of this year Caius was Conſul, but held that place only for a month or thereabouts, and then reſigned for ſix months more to his partner Apronius, and after thoſe ſix months Sabinius Maximus took the place. A policy above his reach, howſoever he came to it, to ſhake the chief Magiſtracy by ſo often changes, that his own power might ſtand the ſurer. Both in his Conſulſhip, and after it, he behaved himſelf after his wonted manner of barbarouſneſs and cruelty, but that now he began to add one vice more to his cruelty in bloodineſs, namely intolerable covetouſneſs and oppreſſion. Now, ſaith Dion, was nothing but ſlaughter: For many of the Nobles were condemned, many periſhed by the Sword-playes, and many impriſoned by the late Emperor Tiberius, were drawn to execution. Now did he bend himſelf to croſs the people, and the people being thorowly incenſed began to croſs him. The main cauſes of this his diſpleaſure (gueſs how weighty) were ſuch as theſe: Becauſe they came not to the Plays and Shews ſo conſtantly, and at ſuch conſtant times as he had appointed: becauſe ſometimes when they came, they liked ſuch ſports as he liked not, & contra: And becauſe they once extolling him, called him by the title of young Auguſtus. For ſuch occaſions as theſe (behold the madneſs of a man ſelf-willed) he brake out into all cruelty, ſlaying many at the Theater for the one fault, and many as they went home for the other, and many at their own homes, or otherwhere for a third. And now was his rage grown ſo high, that he wiſhed that all the City had but one head, that he might ſtrike it off at one blow; and bewailed his times, for that they had not been enfamouſed with ſome notable miſery of the Roman State, as was the reign of Auguſtus with the overthrow of Varus and his Army in Germany; and the reign of Tiberius with the ſlaughter of above twenty thouſand men by the fall of an Amphitheater at Fidenæ. And that we may take a full view of his cruel words and actions here together, (the Reader I hope will not be punctual in expecting an exact order of time in this diſorder of conditions) his common reſolution againſt the people always was, Let them hate me and ſpare not, ſo that they fear me. But what was his anger think you, when his very feaſts and imbraces of his minions were mixed with cruelty? he uſed to have men tortured in his preſence as he ſate at meat, mingling his ſauce as it were with innocents blood. At a great feaſt to which he had invited the two Conſuls, he ſuddenly fell out into an extream laughter, and upon demand of his reaſon, his anſwer was, Becauſe he had power to take away their two heads whenſoever he pleaſed. And whenſoever he was kiſſing the neck of his wife or paramour, he would conſtantly add theſe words, but cruelly amorous, This neck, as fair as it is, when I command ſhall be cut off. Such was his jeſting; and as for his eraneſt, I ſuppoſe you will eaſily believe, that it was proportionable. Whereas hitherto, he had been very free and laviſh of his tongue in diſpraiſing Tiberius, and not only had not checked, but alſo countenanced, and taken delight in thoſe that ſpake ill of him, as well as he; he now turneth his tune, and breaketh out as fluently into his commendations: pleading that he himſelf had liberty to ſay what he liſt, but accuſing thoſe that had aſſumed the like liberty, when as no ſuch thing belonged to them. Then did he cauſe a liſt or catalogue to be read of thoſe that had been executed and put to death under Tiberius; laying withall the death of the moſt of them to the charge of the Senate, and accuſed ſome for accuſing them, others for witneſſing againſt them, and all, for condemning them. Theſe things he alledged out of thoſe books which in the beginning of his reign and in the time of his ſeeming goodneſs, he profeſſed that he had burnt: and after a moſt bitter and terrible ſpeech now made among them in the Senate, and reviving an act of treaſon for ſpeaking againſt the Prince, he ſuddainly departed out of the Senate and the City. In what caſe the Senate and the people were, that were guilty of either words or actions, that he had charged them with all, it is readily gueſſed, but how they ſhall come off, and what they ſhall do to eſcape, is not eaſily to be reſolved. Their preſenteſt help is to fawn and ſpeak fair, and that courſe they take, praiſing him infinitely at their next meeting, for his juſtice and piouſneſs, and giving him as infinite thanks that he ſuffered them to live, and decreeing that ſacrifices ſhould be offered annually to his clemency on that very day that thoſe charges were publiſhed againſt ſo many, ſeeking to appeaſe his ſenſeleſs and fooliſh anger by as ſenſeleſs and fooliſh a pacification. But how little they could ſacrifice, or pray or praiſe him into any better mind than he hath been in hitherto, you ſhall ſee by the ſequel.

§ 2. An inhuman Cruelty.

Among the many cruelties of this monſter, the murder of Eſius Proculus may bear ſome bell, becauſe he ſlew him for nothing but only for this, for that he was ſuch an one as God had made him. This man was the goodlieſt man of perſon and ſhape in all the City, inſomuch that he was commonly called Colofferos, for his extraordinary properneſs and ſtature: One day as he ſate a ſpectator upon the ſcaffolds, of the bloody ſports below, Caius commanded him ſuddainly to be put down among the combatants, and there to fight for his life. When he had had a tryal with two ſeveral men and came off victorious, the inhuman Tyrant cauſed him ſpeedily to be bound, and arraied in tatters and rags to be led about the City, ſhewed to the women, and then ſlain. So much of beaſt had this monſter in him that he could not indure the goodlineſs of a man.

§ 3. Caius his Luxury, Laviſhneſs and prodigality.

Thus beſtial was he towards men, and no leſs was he in another kind towards women. This appeared in the deflouring of his own ſiſters, and adulterating the moſt of the noble Ladies of the City. He was his own Pimp, and purveyer for his luſt, with this open and hideous way of brothelry. He would invite the great men and their Ladies to ſupper, and as the women paſſed by him in way of ſalutation he would earneſtly and leaſurely view them, mercantium more, ſaith my Author, as they do that are to buy any thing, and if any matron for modeſty held down her head, he would lift it up, that he might have his full ſurvey: ſhe that pleaſed him, he took into a retiring room and adulterated: and preſently would he bring her forth again, and tell openly whether ſhe had given him content or no. Nor was he content with this choice and variety of women neither, but that he might be beaſtly in every kind, he abſtained not from the abomination of Sodomie with men. But let us ſtay no longer upon him in this his filthineſs, but trace him a little in his more tolerable vices of fantaſtickneſs and prodigality. He ſeemed to affect a ſingularity in theſe three things, ſinging, working and ſpending, according to the uncontroledneſs of his will, the vaſtneſs of his command, and the hugeneſs of his revenue. He invented new manner of bathings, and prodigious kinds of meats and feaſts; he would diſolve moſt rich and precious Jewels in Vinegar, and then drink them off. And becauſe he doubted, as it ſeemeth, that he could not waſt his treaſure faſt enough with ſuch tricks as theſe, he would ſtand upon a Tower divers days together, and fling great ſums of mony among the people. To all which ways of laviſhing and expenſiveneſs, he joyned monſtrous works and machinations, which ſhewed at once, his folly in their undertaking, and the vaſtneſs of his power in their performance: As levelling mountains to even the plain, and in other places filling up the plain to equal mountains; ſometimes cauſing rocks of flint to be cut through, to make a paſſage: and ſometimes foundations of houſes or walls to be laid in the bottom of the Sea, bringing ſoil and rubbiſh to fill up the place and to make it firm ground: ambitious to bring to paſs ſeeming impoſſibilities, and cruelly haſty in the accompliſhing of what he undertook, puniſhing the ſlacking of the work with certain death.

§ 4. His ſtrange Bridge and Ships.

In the liſt of theſe his vanities, and ungodly ways of ſpending, let his bridge between Puteoli and Bauli, come in the firſt place, or elſe you do it ſome injury. Theſe two places were about three miles and a half diſtant, an arm of the Sea of that breath, ſevering them, and lying between. The ambition of the vain Emperour was to ride on horſeback and in his chariot between theſe two places: What his fancy or Phrenzy rather, rather, was, that ſtirred up ſuch a humor in him, is diverſly related, and it is no great matter to inquire after it. Some ſay it was, that he might terrifie Germany and Britain againſt whom he intended hoſtility, with the very rumor of ſo great a work: others, that he might intimate, or rather excel Xerxes, who made a bridge of Ships over the Helleſpont. But the rumor of it at Court, where his mind was likelieſt to be beſt known, was, that he did it in confutation of a prediction of Thraſillus, who had told Tiberius, that Caius ſhould no more rule then ride over the bay of Baiæ on horſeback. Dion gueſſeth this to have been his reaſon, that whereas the Senate upon their fear and fawning mentioned before, had decreed an Ovation for him, or a kind of triumphant riding on horſeback, he thought it too poor a thing to ride ſo by land, and therefore invented this trick of his own vain head, to ride ſo by Sea. For this purpoſe, all the ſhips that could be got were ſent for in, and when they were not enough, others were made and ſo they all were ſet two and two linked together till they made a bridge of that three miles and an half long: Then cauſed he an infinite number of workmen to carry on earth, and make a cauſey like the Apion road over all thoſe ſhips from the continent to the Iſland. (If this were not a Pontifex Romanus with a witneſs, let all men judge.) When his dear bought way was thus prepared, he prepares for it and for his Phantaſtick journey over it: His garb in which he would ride was this: He put a breaſt plate on, which he ſaid had been Alexanders, and over that a rich purple robe, then his ſword and buckler, and an oaken garland about his head: and having ſacrificed to Neptune and to the other Gods, and even to the Deity Envy, leſt the bridge ſhould miſcarry, he ſets forth on horſeback with a great troop of armed men attending him, and takes his ſtrange and idle voyage. When he had ridden thus one day on horſeback, he returns the next day in his Chariot, with an infinite train of his freinds in Coaches, of Souldiers in arms, and of the common people lookers on, and among others of ſtate Darius an hoſtage of Parthia attended his Chariot; when he had done this great exploit, of walking, riding and coaching ſo many miles upon the Sea, he getteth up into a Desk, which was made upon this new-found bridge on purpoſe, and there maketh a ſolemn ſpeech in commendation of this his great attempt, and of the ſouldiers and workmens pains and care about it; And when he had done he beſtowed a large munificence among them. And the reſt of that day and the night that followed, he ſpent in feaſting and banqueting in banqueting houſes that he had made purpoſely upon his bridge, becauſe he would make the Sea a perfect road. Into theſe houſes he had brought freſh water in Pipes from the ſhore to ſerve the occaſions of this nights feaſt, if he will ſuffer one to call it night: For he that had turned the Sea into a Coach-way, was ambitious alſo to turn night into day; that in him might be ſhewed at once both how fooliſh he may prove that hath once let go the reines of reaſon, and how boundleſs that folly is when it is backed with power. The ſhips that made the bridge were ſet in manner of a creſcent, and ſo went the rode: upon it he cauſed a great number of fires to be made, and ſo upon the mountains all about, that what had been his Coach-way by day was now at night become his Amphitheater. But it is ſtrange that we hear of no murder of all this while among all this madneſs, for if Caius be not cruel he is not Caligula. After this his entertainment of his friends and of the company, he ſuddainly caſt a great multitude of them into the Sea, and when they laid hold of rudders or any thing that might ſuccor and ſave their lives, he cauſed them to be thruſt away and ſo they periſhed.

Anſwerable to the vanities of this his bridge, had he alſo Ships and Frigots to ſail in for his own recreation, in which were baths, vineyards and orchards that ſailed with him, that as upon his bridge he went over the Sea by land, ſo in his ſhips when he went by Sea, the land went with him.

It is not ſo much wonder that theſe courſes waſted the Emperours treaſures, as it is how they have held out ſo long: And now that all his wealth is emptied, and gone, he can find as ſtrange and unheard of means to fetch in more as he had found out to conſume the old. He now began to accuſe, condemn and execute apace, that he might be dealing with their goods in confiſcation. So died Claviſius, Sabinus, Titius Rufus, and Junius Priſcus, for no other real fault but only for being rich. But why ſhould I reckon them by one and one, when at one clap he condemned forty men together, and when he came into his Chamber he bragged to Cæſonia his darling Lemman, Behold how much much I have done in the time that thou art taking a nap at noon! but this feat of condemning would not bring in mony fast enough, therefore as there were more ways of spending than one, so must there also be of getting. He inventeth new taxes and payments, strange exactions and imposts, suffering nothing to pass in common use, but it must bring some tribute unto his treasures. He sate a rate to be paid him out of all meat that was eaten, a rate out of every sute or action for debt, a rate out of the porters gains, nay a rate out the whores hire. He made men that were already free of the City to buy their freedom again, and many that had named him for their heir when they should die, he poisoned, that he might inherit their estate sooner: And these his exploits he used not only in Rome, but when mony was scarce there, he went into France and Spain and set up the same trade of polling there: He sold the Jewels, the goods, and the very servants of his condemned sisters; nay the very Jewels of the Crown, as the royal robes and ornaments of Antony, Augustus, Julia, Antonia, and others of the princely bloody. And to conclude all in one, he set up a stews in his own Palace, and had women there of all sorts and sizes, and his panders went about to fetch in whoremaster customers: and all this was done, because it was for the Emperours profit. He also made the Palace a common dicing house, and himself was the master gaimster; cogging, cheating, lying, forswearing, and doing any thing to make himself a gainer. Having once left another to play his game, and being gone down into the court of the place, he saw two rich Knights passing by, and caused them suddainly to be apprehended, and their goods to be confiscated, and returned to his game again, bragging that he had had an exceeding good throw. Another time at play, wanting mony to maintain his stake, he went down and caused divers rich Nobles to be slain, and returned presently again, saying, You sit here playing for a few pence, and I since I went, have gotten six hundred thousand sesterces.

As he thus cruelly murdered many, only for their goods, so also did he many others upon other spleens: as Lentulus Getulicus, because he was beloved of the Souldiers: Lepidus because he had adulterated his sisters, when he had done with them himself, and he caused Agrippina one of them to carry his bones in an urn in her bosome to Rome. A poor serving man for filching a silver plate off the cubboard, he caused to have his hands cut off, and hung about his neck, and to be led up and down with a Crier before him proclaiming his offence. Seneca was condemned by him for being too eloquent, or more eloquent than himself, (for that he could not indure in any) but he escaped through the intreaty of one of Caius his Lemmans. But Domitius Afer deserved to scape indeed who overcame him with silence, and mastered the Tyrant by being mastered. For being a man of renowned and incomparable eloquence, and now under accusation, Caius had strained the utmost of his own Rhetorick to frame a speech to confound him, both in his cause and in his Oratory. Domitius (when the Emperour looked that he would have answered him with the same height of Rhetorick again, and had he done so, it had cost him his life) sate mute, and took upon him to be amazed at so admirable and infinite fluency, and instead of pleading his own cause, he rehersed his Oration word by word, seeming to be so ravished with that eloquence that he forgot and neglected his own life. And then cast he himself at the Tyrants feet, and begged for mercy, avowing that he dreaded him more as an Orator than as Cæsar. The Lion grows mild upon this fawning, and turnes his malice and spleen into pride and vain glory, rejoycing that he had so overcome Domitius in eloquence, whereas Domitius had more cause to rejoyce that he had so overcome him by silence.

PART III.

The JEWISH Story.

§ 1. Herod and Herodias before the Emperour.

WE are now to present to Caius as bloody a woman as he was a man: Herodias, that hath committed as much murder in taking away but one mans life, John the Baptist, as he hath done in all his: And when these two are met together, two Princes of the greatest cruelty and bloodiness that either sex could then afford, are met together. You may remember that not long since we left Her and her Herod (for husband I may not call him) shipped for Rome to purchase, if possible, the Emperours good respect, and with that, an augmentation of their dignity and dominion. Agrippa, knowing of this their journey, and suspecting that as it began in envy and emulation to him, so would it terminate, if they could compass it, to his disadvantage, he sendeth his servant Fortunatus after them with letters to the Emperour, either because himself was not yet at leasure to come, or in policy trying how his letters would speed and be entertained before he ventured his own person. At Baiæ they all met before Cæsar, and Agrippa's complaint by writing meeteth theirs by word of mouth. He layeth to Herods charge, confederacy with Sejanus at Rome and with Artabanus in Parthia, and an armory and magazine at his own home, sufficient to furnish seven thousand men, all which laid together could not but breed a just suspition of his revolting. Herod not being able upon questioning, to deny the last thing that he was charged withall about his arms, gave Caius presumption to conclude the truth of all the other: whereupon he adjudgeth him to perpetual banishment to Lions in France: and thus (thank Herodias) by his looking for a greater dignity and honour, he lost that which he had already.

Cæsar would have spared Herodias for Agrippa's sake as being his sister, but she refused the curtesie, and chose to suffer the same fortune with her husband; and but very justly neither, for she had brought him to it. And she could not in civility refuse to take part with him in his misery, as he had done with her in her folly, that had caused it; both their estates, dignities and dominions Caius bestoweth upon Agrippa to their greater vexation; and so we leave them going to Lions, there to think, and repent too late, how wholesome the counsel was that was given them by the Baptist and that they tooke it not.

§ 2. The Alexandrian Jews still perplexed.

And now let us return from Rome to Alexandria, where the last year we left the Jews in so extream misery and distress, and now it is to be suspected we shall find them in the same still. Being so oppressed, plundred and massacred by Flaccus as we have heard, their utmost refuge is to petition to the Emperour, but a miserable refuge you must needs think it will prove when they cannot do it but by Flaccus his permission and assistance. When they made this motion and request to him (fooliſh men to expect such curtesie from their greatest enemie) he taketh on him to approve of their intention, promiseth to speed their petition the best he could, but when he had it, pretending to have sent it away, he keepeth and suppresseth it, and answered neither his promise nor their expectation, either in hast or in assisting. Thus do the poor Jews lie waiting in uncertain hopes but in certain misery, looking for some comfortable answer from Rome to their petition, which is still at Alexandria. But at last comes their old friend and countreyman Agrippa to Rome with the old grudg in his bosome against Flaccus for his base usage of him at his last being there, and he promotes their cause to Cæsar with the best excuses he can make for them, and with some bitter accusing of their enemie the Govenour.

§ 3. Flaccus his downfall.

Whether it were the prevalency of Agrippa's letters with the Emperour, or the divine vengeance upon this unjust and murderous Governour, or both, or some other conjoyned, joyned, Caius ere long sent Bassus a Centurion, with his band into Alexandria, to apprehend Flaccus: He stole in by night into the City, lest his approach (had it been detected) should have bred commotion, and meeting with a Souldier in the dark, and inquiring for the chief Captain, that he might acquaint him with the cause of his coming, and obtain his assistance with his Souldiers if there should be any resistance, he was informed that Flaccus and he were both at supper with Stephanio one of the Freemen of Tiberius. Thither he getteth with all secrecy, and scouting before the house, he sendeth in one of his Souldiers habited in the garb of a Servingman, that he might the more safely thrust in among the Servitors to see what store of company was there, and when he heard by him that it was but small, he bursteth in with his men and apprehendeth him. I leave to the Reader to imagine the contrary operation that this suddain action had with Flaccus and with the Jews. It was now the time of the feast of Tabernacles with them, but the feast was intermitted because of their common misery, but now somewhat solaced by the event of this feast of Flaccus. He is hurried away to Rome in the beginning of winter, and there tried, and condemned to perpetual banishment in the Isle of Andros, where what became of him you shall hear the next year.

§ 4. The Jews of Alexandria still distressed.

Flaccus the Jews enemies at Alexandria, they are thus happily rid of, but a worse, if worse may be, springeth, as it were out of his corruption at Rome. Helicon a Servant of Tiberius whilst he lived, and now of Caius, a fit man for such a master, the more to ingratiate himself into the Princes favour (yet had he it already in no ordinary measure) bendeth himself with the utmost of his Rhetorick and Eloquence, skill and flattery to traduce the people and Religion of the Jews, and to make them odious, and himself the more acceptable to the Emperour. The envious Alexandrians having by their Ambassadours espied this advantage, do spur him forward who needed no incitation: with great presents and greater promises they urge him on to prosecute that malicious accusation that he had begun: which he performed accordingly, with a renewed impetuousness, added to his present spleen by his future expectation, and present fee. The miserable Jews thus betrayed, lie under distress and under the Emperours displeasure for a season, and could not learn from whence it proceeded: But at last they address a number of petitioners to Rome to make their peace with Helicon, if possible, and to make an humble remonstrance to the Emperour of their state and grievances, and a petition for some remedy and redress. Their Legation and Ambassy they indeed presented not to the Prince till the next year, yet since Philo saith that they took their voyage in the very depth and middle of winter, it was not unproper to mention their preparation and setting forth, this year, and you shall hear of their business, and the success of it, when the next year comes in.

CHAP. XI.

Verſ. 19. Now they which were ſcattered abroad, &c.

IN this fourth year of Caius, and forty firſt of our Saviour, we conjecture theſe occurrences to have been in the Church: namely Antiochs receiving the Goſpel: Barnabas his being ſent from Jeruſalem, and preaching there to the converſion of many: his going to Tarſus to hearken out Saul: and his bringing him thither: and there did they two ſpend a whole year in preaching, which whole year may very probably be concluded to have been the next year after this that we have in hand, or in the firſt of Claudius, in which year Agabus prophecyed of the great famine which was to come; which befel in the ſecond of Claudius, as we obſerved and proved before. So that we may hence take up the time of theſe Miniſters diſperſion and preaching up and down; which were ſcattered at the death of Stephen; namely, that they had been in this employment and travail for the ſpace of ſix whole years or thereabout: And in this time they had gone over Judea, Samaria, and Galilee, and were now got out of the Land of Canaan into Phœnicia, Cyprus, and Syria, and yet preached the Goſpel to none but Jews onely.

Verſ. 20. Men of Cyprus and Cyrene.

Men of theſe places by Original, but of Jeruſalem, or ſome other part of Canaan by education and reſidence, as Simon, Alexander, and Rufus were. Mark 15. 21. and Barnabas, Acts 4. 36.

5. They

§. They spake unto the Grecians.

Gr. To the Hellenists: This word is not opposed to the word Jews in the preceding verse, but it is a part of the same story: for that telleth of their preaching to the Jews in Phenicia, Cyprus, and Antioch; and this telleth of the fruit of their Ministry to the Jews in Antioch, that it was to the conversion of many of them. That sheweth that they came to Antioch, and preached to Jews only, this sheweth who they were that came to Antioch, and how they preached to the Hellenists, which must be understood in the same sense with the former: But he calleth them Hellenists, because they were Jews of the Corporation or enfranchisment of the City, for Antioch was a Syrogrecian City.

Vers. 22. They sent forth Barnabas.

He himself was an Hellenist, being a man of Cyprus; and he was to be a fellow helper to the Apostle of the Gentiles for their conversion: and therefore he a very fit man to go to this Gentile City, who coming thither and seeing a great conversion of all sorts of people, Gentiles as well as Jews, he goeth over to Tarsus to seek the Doctor of the Gentiles, to bring him over thither to a work agreeable to that his function, to preach to the Gentiles.

PART II.

The JEWISH Story.

§. 1. Troubles at Jamnia.

THE troubles and miseries of the Jews are now drawing to the heart of their State, and this year are got into their own Land, and drawing near Jerusalem it self. And the poor Alexandrian Jews Commissioners, that the last year set forward for Rome, and in the beginning of this year are gotten thither, to petition for redress of their own calamities, do there receive tydings of worse miseries coming towards all their Nation. The original and occasion was from Capito a gatherer of Tribute for the Romans in Judea. This man coming into that Office and Country a very poor man: and (as no other can be expected from men of so base and mean quality put into so high places) having pilled and polled all before him, to raise and to mend his fortunes; and being now grown rich, and being afraid to be accused of the Jews to Cæsar, for his injustice and oppression, he thinks it the safest way to prevent that, to get some occasion against them, that he might accuse them, and cry thief first. In Jamnia therefore where he resided, there was mixture of Inhabitants, very many Jews, and not a few Strangers, or Gentiles. Hereupon Capito secretly contriveth, That these strangers should set up an Altar in the City to Caius, who as they heard, would be worshipped for a God. This both he and they knew that the Jews would never indure, as being a most notorious violation of their Law; but would oppose the matter, and so should he have cause and accusation enough against them to Cæsar, for despising of his Majesty, and contemning his Godhead. Accordingly did the cursed plot take effect: for suddainly and unexpectedly an Altar is built and erected in the City, the Jews as soon as they hear and see the business, they rise generally and pull it down. Their enemies that had built it, run to Capito, who indeed had had the chief hand in the design, and complain of the indignity: He not thinking it enough to take recognisance of the business himself, by Letters acquaints the Emperor with the affront, for so he sets it forth; and well he knew the Emperor would be ready enough to second him to do mischief to the Jews according to his desire.

§. 2. Troubles

§. 2. Troubles at Jerusalem and elsewhere throughout Judea. Caius his Image to be set up in the Temple to be Worshipped.

Caius having received this intelligence from Capito, which he had mingled with all kind of gall and vinegar of exasperation and evil language against the Jews, and being himself already irreconcileably incensed and bent against them; partly through mischievous incendiaries and accusations, and chiefly because they only were cross to his deifying and impious Worship; he now determineth a course against them, which should strike at the very root, and bring them either to bend or break. He dispatcheth therefore a message to Petronius the Governor of Judea; that in stead of the Altar of stone which the Jews had pulled down at Jamnia, he should without fail set up a Golden Colos or an Image of the Emperor in the Temple at Jerusalem: and that this design might receive no hindrance by opposition, he charged that he should send for part of the Army from Euphrates that lay there for the guard of the East; that if the Jews would quietly receive the statue it was well, and if they would not, they must be forced to it, whether they would or no. What must the Jews do now at such a pinch? Nay, what must Petronius? If he disobey what he is commanded, he hazardeth his own ruine; if he perform it, he ruineth a whole Nation: The Jews will be ready to dye before they will admit of such an Idol; and Petronius is not like to escape, if he bring them not to admit of it. In this strait between affection to himself, and to a whole people, he useth the best accommodation that the present necessity would afford: namely, not to decline the injunction for his own safety, but to delay it as much as may be for the safety of the Jews: that in the space while the image was leasurely making the one party might possibly be brought to comply, either the Emperor upon consideration to lay his resolution down, or the Jews upon perswasion to lay down their resoluteness. He appointeth the Image to be wrought at Zidon, whence on the one hand, less offence might accrew to the Jews, and on the other some satisfaction might come to the Emperor, he hearing by Passengers that the work was in hand, and they seeing the gentleness of Petronius that would not work it in their own Country.

Josephus relateth this story far different from Philo: For he saith that Caius sent away Petronius for this purpose; but Philo that he was in Judea already: Josephus that the notice of the message came in time of seedness; Philo in time of harvest: Josephus that the Jews came to Petronius at Ptolemais and Tiberias; Philo in Phœnicia; and the like: which the Reader will readily see if he compare the two Authors together, and his judgment subscribe to Philo as the more probable, he being at the Emperors Court when these things were done; but only that he hath flourished the truth with Rhetorick more than needful.

Tydings of this lamentable and heavy design could not be long kept from the Jews, nor they upon the tydings long from Petronius. To him they come into Phenicia, men and women, young and old, of all sorts and conditions an innumerable multitude, with tears in their eyes, and bitter cries in their mouths, that either he would surcease the enterprise that was in hand, or take their lives before they saw the performance of such abomination. Petronius threatens, speaks fair, urgeth, perswadeth, but all to no purpose, they tendering their necks rather to the execution, than enduring to hear of such violation of their Religion. In the end they obtain this favour of the gentle Governor, that he will not proceed in this impious work, till he or they, or both have sued to Cæsar, by petition to surcease the design, and to remit of his resolution. And so return the Jews to their home and harvest, with some contentment in speeding so well at the present, and in some hope to speed better for the future. Josephus here telleth a story of a miraculous and suddain shower that fell as Petronius and the Jews were thus parlying together, whereas there had been no rain of a long time before, and no sign at all of any rain instantly before this fell: God (as he would have it) seconding this their request with this wonder, and using this argument for the moving of Petronius to back theirs.

§. 3. Petronius his Letter to the Emperor.

The gentle Governor failed not of his promise, nor of the trust the Jews had reposed in him, but though it may breed his own smart, he addresseth a message to the Emperor in their behalf, and useth the utmost of his perswasive skill and faculty in it. He layeth before him that the prosecution of his commanded and intended enterprise, would be the destruction of a whole Nation, the loss of a fair and goodly Tribute and Revenue, the impairing of the Roman strength and honour, the prejudice of his Majesties journey into Alexandria, which he intended ere long to take: That they were already grown desperate, and began to neglect their harvest and occasions, whereby a certain famine would follow upon the Land, and a disadvantage to the Countries round about: with other

Arguments of the same nature, sensible, strong, and perswasive, had not the Emperor been wedded to his own sensless will, and bewitched and led away with destructive counsel. Two caitives he had about him that continually suggested evil to him against the Jews, as if for either ear one, Helicon an Egyptian mentioned before, and Apelles an Ascalonite, such another as he. These were ever adding spurs to his malice against that Nation, which was in its full carreer already, and blowing those coals which it was impossible to quench. Wretched men that they were, that sought to rear their fortunes upon others ruines, and to cement estates with other mens blood. Such instruments it pleased God to use for the scourging of that ungracious and condemned Nation, and having done the work by them that he had appointed, he cast these rods into the fire, Apelles being tortured by Caius, whom he had indoctrinated to cruelty, and Helicon slain by Claudius, the Emperor that succeeded in Caius his room.

§. 4. Agrippa his mediation for the Jews.

King Agrippa the Jews old friend and Advocate is now at Rome, and ready in affection, as well as in place, upon these heavy tydings to intercede for his people, and to do them good, if it be possible for any good to be done. Josephus and Philo do again differ about the relation of this his undertaking of a meditation, as they do almost in every thing that they relate jointly, in one circumstance or other. Josephus saith that Agrippa hearing of this misery of his people, invited Caius to a most sumptuous and extraordinary banquet; using to his cost such a preparative to his fairer and better aggress and accoasting the Tyrant upon a matter of so great import: That Caius at the banquet offered him a boon, whatsoever he should desire, expecting he would desire some great Revenue: but that Agrippa requested nothing but the liberty of his people in their Religion, and the removal of that fear that now lay upon them by the Image preparing. That Caius, overcome by so honest and unexpected a petition condescended to his desire, and was well apaid and pacified, till Petronius his Letter came to him after this, and then was he all of a fury and ragedness again. But Philo thus, That the intelligence from Petronius was come to him before Agrippa began to mediate: That Agrippa coming as at other times to attend the Emperor, was so cast down and daunted at the terror of his looks, and thunder of his words against the Jews, that he fell down in a swoon, in which he lay till the next day. Then he addresseth a Letter to him in his peoples behalf, so powerful and pithy, that Caius betwixt anger and calmness, betwixt commending Agrippa, and being displeased with him, at the last granteth it to Agrippa as a special boon, that the dedication of his Image should not go forward: and to such a purpose he writeth to Petronius; but withal mingling mischief with this his mitigation, he giveth order that if any one would set up his Image, or dedicate his statue in any Town or City of Judea, (Jerusalem excepted) it should not be opposed, but the opposer should be suddainly and severely punished. A politick and a deadly plot to involve the Nation in an insurrection and rebellion: For the enemies of the Jews would be ready to be erecting such offences; not so much for the honour of Cæsar, as for spite of the Jews, and the Jews would be as ready to oppose them to the hazard of their lives, because they abhorred Idols for themselves, and not for the place; and the Tyrant would be as ready as either to take this opportunity of their insurrection, to entangle them in a destructive War. But the time of their final desolation was not yet come, and so it pleased God that none of their enemies were active at this time in this kind; nor when he set awork a Colosse to be made for him in Rome, intending from thence to convey it secretly into the Temple at Jerusalem, it took effect according to his impious design and desire, but came to nothing and the intention quashed, either by his death, which fell out the beginning of the next year, or by some other stop and hinderance.

§. 5. Flaccus Avilius in banishment and his end.

The last year we brought Flaccus to the Isle of Andros, and now let us land him there. When he came within ken of Land, he burst out into tears and lamentation, comparing that place in his pensive thoughts with Italy and Egypt, and his deplorable condition of life upon which he was now to enter, with the pomp and prosperity in which he had lived in those two places of his education and Authority. Being landed, his pensiveness increased the more, by how much he was now nearer to that misery which his thoughts presaged. His demeanor in this his banishment; if Philo have not set it forth with more Rhetorick than truth, was full of horror and amazedness: avoiding the society of men, running running up and down the woods, tearing his hair, tormenting himself, and sometimes rising out of his sleep at midnight, and running abroad, and he would look up towards Heaven and cry out in a lamentable note. Βασιλεῦ θεῶν καὶ ἀνθρώπων οὐκ ἄρα τῆς Ἰουδαίων ἔθνους ἀμελῶς ἔχεις. O King of Gods and men, thou art not therefore careless of the Nation of the Jews.

Thus did he spin out a miserable life for certain months, till Cæsar cut his woful thred in two. For the Tyrant lying awake one night and could not sleep, among other thoughts that came into his mischievous mind, he considered how happily retired those men lived that were banished: they wanting nothing, and enjoying all things in enjoying themselves. The cruel caitif from these thoughts of their estate, began to envy it, and accounting their banishment rather a pleasure than a punishment, he gave charge the next morning that they should all be slain. Under this doom fell Flaccus, one of the first in the Tyrants thoughts, because one of the first in his displeasure. Executioners are sent for his dispatch, whose errand he knew as soon as he saw them, and from them he flies as soon as he knew them. But it is in vain to flee, and it is too late, for they and vengeance have soon over taken him, and with many wounds have put him to death.

The miseries of the Alexandrian Jews could find no remedy, while the source from whence they flowed, was not stopped, but overflowed them continually. The well-head of this their mischief was double: The spiteful counsel that was given the Emperor against them by others; and the endless rancor that he bare to them himself. To stop the current, and inundation of the calamity that overwhelmed them continually from these two puddle springs, they can find no better, or more feasable means and way than to send some men of their own Nation to Rome, to atone, intercede and mediate for them. We left them upon their journey the last year, three in number, as saith Josephus, but five, as Philo, who was one of them himself: and now let us trace them to Rome, and see how they speed.

The first sight of the Emperor was in Campus Martius, who saluted them friendly, and promised to give them hearing with a great deal of speed, and it was hoped by the most of them with a great deal of favour, but it proved far otherwise. For he shortly went out of the City down to Puteoli by the Sea, and they follow him thither. There they first hear the tydings of the state of Judea under Petronius, and of Cæsars Image that was preparing. From Puteoli they follow him to Rome again, and there being admitted to audience, he with a terrible and grinning countenance first asked them; What? Are you that people that of all others scorn my Deity, but had rather worship your nameless God? And then scornfully lifting his hands up to Heaven, he named the name Jehovah. At this all the company of the malignant party rejoyced, as accounting they had got the day. But when the Jews began to excuse and answer for themselves, he flung away, and frisked from room to room, they following him all this while: At last, after some chiding at somewhat that he disliked in the rooms, and appointing how he would have it mended; he asked them, How comes it to pass that you forbear to eat Swines flesh? Here the company laughed out again: and as the Jews began to answer, he angerly interposed thus, I would fain know what are those privileges of your City, that you challenge? When they began to speak, he frisked away into another room. Shortly he cometh to them again in a milder manner: And now, saith he, what say you? And when they began to lay open their matter to him, away flings he into another room again. At last, coming again more mildly still, These men seem to me, saith he, not so evil, as miserable, which cannot be perswaded that I am a god; And so he bad them to depart. And thus concluded this great scene of expectation, for ought that we can find further in Philo. But whether this was the very end of the matter, or it proceeded further, but that the relation of it is failing in Philo, is hard to decide. It seemeth by him that this was the end of their conference with the Tyrant, but it appeareth withal, that they presented him with some Palinodia, or recantation, which is perished and gone. Eusebius speaketh of five Books written by Philo, about the calamities of the Jews, and the madness of Caius, whereof we have but two extant at this time, that against Flaccus, and that about the Embassie to Caius, and the other three seem to be the Palinodia, or it to be some part of them. Eccles. Hist. l. 2. c. 5.

§. 7. Apion.

Among the five, or three Ambassadors of a side, (as Josephus and Philo differ in their number) the most renowned in their contrary and differing kinds were Apion the Greek, and Philo the Jew; the others are wholly nameless, and their memory extinct, but these two have left a perpetuation of theirs behind them by their writings.

Apion was an Egyptian, born in the utmost borders thereof in a place called Oasis, but fained himself for an Alexandrian. A man given to the Grecian studies of Philosophy, but with more vainglory than solidity. He not contented, to have been a personal accuser of the Jews to Caius in that their Embassie, wrote also bitterly against them in his Egyptian History, to disgrace them to posterity. Of which Josephus that wrote two books in answer of him giveth this censure. That some things that he had written were like to what others had written before, other things very cold, some calumnious, and some very unlearned. And the end and death of this blackmouthed railer he describeth thus, To me it seemeth, that he was justly punished for his blasphemies, even against his own Country laws, for he was circumcised of necessity, having an ulcer about his privities, and being nothing helped by the cutting or circumciling, but putrifying with miserable pains, he died, Contr. Apion. lib. 2.

§. 8. Philo the Jew.

Philo was a Jew by Nation, and Alexandrian by birth: by line, of the kindred of the Priests; and by family, the brother of Alexander Alabarcha. His education was in learning, and that mixed, according to his original and residence, of the Jews and of the Greeks: his proof was according to his education, versed in the learning of both the Nations, and not inferior to the most learned in either: From this mixture of his knowledge, proceeded the quaintness of his stile and writing; explaining Divinity by Philosophy, or rather forcing Philosopy out of Divinity, that he spoiled the one, and did not much mend the other. Hence his Allegories which did not only obscure the clear Text, but also much soil the Theology of succeeding times. His language is sweet, smooth, and easie, and Athens it self is not more elegant and Athenian. For attaining to the Greek in Alexandria, partly naturally, (that being a Grecian City) and partly by study, (as not native Grecians used to do) he by a mixture of these two together, came to the very Apex and perfection of the language, in copiousness of words, and in choice. His stile is always fluent, and indeed often to superfluity, dilating his expressions sometimes so copious, that he is rather prodigal of words, than liberal, and sheweth what he could say if the cause required, by saying so much, when there is little or no cause at all. And to give him his character for this, in short, He is more a Philosopher than a Scripture man in heart, and more a Rhetorician than a Philosopher in tongue. His manner of writing is more ingenious than solid, and seemeth rather to draw the subject whereon he writeth whither his fancy pleaseth, than to follow it whither the nature and inclination of it doth incline. Hence his allegorizing of whatsoever cometh to his hand, and his peremptory confidence in whatsoever he doth allegorize, insomuch that sometimes he perswadeth himself that he speaketh mysteries, as pag 89. and sometimes he checketh the Scripture, if it speak not as he would have it, as pag. 100.

How too many of the Fathers in the Primitive Church followed him in this his vein, it is too well known, to the loss of too much time, both in their writing and in our reading. Whether it were because he was the first that wrote upon the Bible, or rather because he was the first that wrote in this strain, whose writings came unto their hands, that brought him into credit with Christian Writers, he was so far followed by too many, that while they would explain Scripture, they did but intricate it, and hazarded to lose the truth of the story, under the cloud of the Allegory. The Jews have a strain of writing upon the Scripture, that flieth in a higher region than the writings of Christians, as is apparent to him that shall read their Authors. Now Philo being a Jew, and naturally affecting like them to soar in a high place, and being by his education in the Grecian wisdom more Philosophical than the Jews usually were, and by inclination much affected with that learning, he soareth the Jewish pitch with his Grecian wings, and attaineth to a place in which none had flown in before (unless the Therapeutæ, of whom hereafter) writing in a strain that none had used before, and which too many, or at least many too much uſed after; of his many ſtrange and myſterious matters that he findeth out in his vein of allegorizing, let the Reader taſte but ſome.

Pag. 251. He telleth a fable, how all Birds and Beasts spake the same Language, and understood one another; but that their Tongue was confounded because they petitioned that they might never grow old, but renew their youth as the Serpent doth, who is the basest of them.

But this is more than enough for a taste: we shall conclude this Character with that Apophthegme that came from him when Caius was in a rage against him and his fellow-Commissioners, How ought we to chear up, saith he, though Caius be angry at us in words, seeing in his deeds he even opposeth God? Josephus relateth it, Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 10.

PART III.

The ROMAN Story.

§. 1. Caius still foolish and cruel.

THIS year did Caius make an expedition to the Ocean, as if he would have passed over into Britain: but the greatest exploit that he did was, that first he went a little upon the Sea, and then returning, he gave a signal to his Souldiers, that they should fall to battail, which was nothing else but that they should gather cockles and shells upon the shoar, and so he returned with these goodly spoils, and brought them to Rome in a foolish triumph, as if he had conquered the Ocean: being come into the City he had like to have slain all the Senate, because they had not decreed divine honours and worship to him: But he became reconciled to them again upon this occasion: Protogenes his bloodhound (that used to carry his two Books, or Black-bills, the one whereof he called a Sword, and the other a Dagger; in which Books he inrolled whom he destined to death or punishment) he coming one day into the Court, and being saluted and fawned upon by all the Senate, was among them all saluted by Scribonius Proculus. Upon whom looking with a grim and displeased countenance, What, saith he, dost thou salute me, that hatest so deadly the Emperor my Master? Whereupon the rest of the Senators arose, came upon him and pulled him in pieces. With this piece of service so well suiting with the Tyrants humor, he was so well pleased, that he said they had now regained his favour again. Under his cruelty this year perished by name, Ptolomy the son of King Juba, because he was rich: Cassius Becillinus for no crime at all: and Capito his father, because he could not indure to look upon his sons death. Flattery delivered L. Vitellius our late Governor of Syria; and it was much to appease such a Lion, but that it was a flattery without parallel.

§. 2. Caius profane.

The blasphemous Atheist continued still in his detestable Deity, being what God he would when he would, and changing his Godship with the change of his cloths: sometimes a male Deity, sometime a female, sometime a God of one fashion, sometime of another. Sometime he was Jupiter, sometime Juno, sometimes Mars, sometimes Venus, sometime Neptune, or Appollo, or Hercules, and sometimes Diana: and thus whilst he would be any thing, he was nothing, and under the garb of so many gods he was indeed nothing but Devil: He built a Temple for himself in Rome, and made himself a room in the Capitol, that he might (as he said) converse with Jupiter. But it seems Jupiter and he fell out, for he removed his own mansion, and built himself a Temple in the Palace, because he thought that if Jupiter and he shared in the same Temple, Jupiter would have the upper hand, and the more repute.

Therefore that his own Deity might have room enough, he built this new Temple; and that he might be sure to get equal worship with Jupiter, he intended to set up the statue of Jupiter Olympius there, but pictured directly after his own Image; so that it must have been Jupiters statue, but Caius his picture; Jupiturs trunk, but Caius his his head and face; but this fine deſign came to nothing, and was clean ſpoiled, for the Ship that went for this ſtatue was ſpoiled with lightning; and there was a great laughing always heard, whenſoever any one went about to meddle with the picture, to forward the buſineſs; and truly it was as fit an Omen, as likely could have been invented for it. When this invention thus failed him, he found out a new trick, to get part of the Temple of Caſtor and Pollux for himſelf, and joyned it to the Palace; and he ſo contrived the matter, that his entrance was juſt in the middle between thoſe two gods: and therefore he called them his Porters, and himſelf he ſtiled the Dialis: and his dear Cæſonia, and his uncle Claudius, and divers of the richer ſort he ordained to be his Prieſts, and got a good ſum of money of every one of them for their Office; nay he would be a Prieſt unto himſelf, and which beſt ſuited with him in ſuch a function, he admitted his Horſe to be fellow Prieſt with him; and becauſe he would be a right Jupiter indeed, he would have his tricks to imitate thunder and lightning, and he would ever be defying Jupiter in Homers ſpeech, Either take me away, or I will take thee. And thus was his Palace parted into a ſenſleſs contrariety, one part to be a Temple, and another part a common Stews; in one, Caius to be adored as a god, in another, Caius to play the Beaſt, deflowring Virgins, violating Boys, adulterating Matrons, exacting and extracting Money from all; and uſing to tumble himſelf in heaps of Money which he had ſo gotten.

PART I.

The ROMAN Story.

§. 1. Caius his death contrived.

THIS madneſs of Caius could not laſt long, it was ſo mad and it was ſo violent, and he could not expect a dry and timely death himſelf, which had brought an untimely and bloody to ſo many hundreds. He began a Conſulſhip this year with Cn. Sentius, but it was ſoon out of date, as he was himſelf, but he not ſo ſoon as the people deſired, as he had deſerved, and ſome had compaſſed, had their plot but taken effect. One or two conſpiracies had been contrived againſt him before this, but had failed in the ſucceſs, and he eſcaped to do more miſchief ſtill. But now a deſign is in undertaking, that will run the buſineſs to the full, and men are entred into the combination, that have mettle, and want not fortune. Theſe were Caſſius Chæreas and Cornelius Sabinus that contrived in chief, and they intertained many others into the conſpiracy with them, as Calliſtus and Eparchus, Regulus and Minutianus. While the plot was in hatching, Caius gave an extraordinary offence and diſguſt unto the people, which haſtned and ripened it the more, upon his own head. There were ſolemn ſports kept now in the City, at which time it was the cuſtom that if the people asked a boon, the Emperor did freely grant it. Now therefore they begged that he would eaſe their taxes, and releaſe ſomewhat of the grievous impoſitions under which they groaned.

But he was so far from granting, that he caused many of the petitioners to be slain, hasning his own death by theirs, and condemning himself by their condemnation. For what now remains thought the conspirators, but a speedy course, when neither his own reason, nor their petitions, nor their Countries custom can any whit move him to goodness, nor divert him from his cruelties? Besides this general quarrel of their Country, some of them had their peculiar heart-burnings against him for particular abuses: As Minucianus for the death of his friend Lepidus and for fear of his own life: but Cassius Chereas for divers affronts and disgraces, which the Tyrant not only used but loved to put upon him above other men. He was Tribune of the Prætorian band, or as it were Captain of the guard, and a man as valiant, as that place required or any whatsoever. Yet was it the senseless and inconsiderate Tyrants delight and continual custom, to jeer him with the taunts of Cowardise or Effeminacy: Whensoever he came to him to ask of him a word or ticket for the Watch, he would give him Venus or Priapus: when he offered him his hand to kiss, he would frame it into an obscene form, and so hold it to him: And that which might make him odious to others, he caused him to be the wracker and tormentor of delinquents, himself standing by, that he might use no mercy for fear; and yet when he had cruelly and miserably torn and rent the poor wretches, would the spiteful Prince speak pitifully to them, bemoan the extremity, condole their condition, and sometimes give them rewards, thus turning the detestation of all the cruelty upon the head of Chereas only: such things as these set the abused man all of a fire for revenge, that was hot enough already for the common cause, and he wanteth nothing to end his own disgrace and his Countries misery, but partners and opportunity. He therefore first assaieth Clemens the chief commander of the souldiery, and Papinius the chief Querry or Squire of the Emperors body, with feeling words and forcible arguments to draw them into the same design with himself of freeing the Common wealth from the common misery, and themselves from the common guilt that lay upon them, not only for not redressing, but also for promoting it. For Caius, saith he, indeed commandeth such cruelties, but we are the men that execute them, he guilty in word only, but we in action. Whilst we obey his bloodiness we incourage it, and the weapons that our offices have put into our hands, for our Country, we use only against it: forwarding that cruelty which when it wanteth further objects will not stop to fall upon our selves. Come let us at the last right our Country and our own consciences: and give an end to those butcheries which we promote by our obedience, and of which we are doubly guilty, because we execute them, and because we avenge them not. With these or such expressions as these, did Chereas easily bend these men to his opinion, who were in the same guilt, danger and misery with him: But Clemens, whether for cowardise or variableness of his disposition, fell suddainly off again, and persisted not either in resolution or in secrecy, but began to divulge the conspiracy all abroad: Now therefore was it time for Chereas to hasten his enterprize, or it would be too late: such undertakings as these will not brook long delays, especially when any one of the faction beginneth to run out, and leak. He therefore speedily addresseth himself to Sabinus, and to Minutianus, though a kinsman to Caius, and prevaileth with them both, to be of the same mind and action with him: and all of them having men ready for this exploit do but wait for an opportunity to bring it to effect.

Chereas afraid to lose any time, thought several times to have thrown the Tyrant headlong from an high place which he used to stand in in the Capitol, to throw and scatter money to the people, but he was withheld partly by his own judgment, which doubted whether the fall would kill him or no, and partly by the advise of his friends, which perswaded him to hold till a solemn festival which was now coming on, in which they might have better access in a mixed crowd and multitude.

This time was come, and three days of the festival, and of the shews were past before opportunity would serve their turn: On the fourth and last of the solemnity which must be the day or none, and this was the ninth of the Calends of February or January the three and twenty, Chereas provideth his confederates for the expedition both for mettle and weapons. In the morning betime, people of all conditions flock to the place of the shews and solemnity to get them places, disposing of themselves where they could, so that men and women, bond and free, noble and base sat mixedly together, and happy was he that could get a place no matter where. At last comes Caius, way forced forced for him through the crowd, all eyes upon him, but theirs especially that meant him mischief. His first beginning of that days solemnity was with sacrifice, with the blood whereof when the cloaths of Asprenas a Senator were accidentally bedawbed, it afforded matter of laughter to the Emperor, but it proved a fatal omen to himself. After his sacrifice he took his place with the Nobles about him, and the plays began: one of them was a Mimick acting that part which Neoptolemus did at the slaughter of King Priamus: Another, of one or more actors that seemed to vomit blood, so that the stage was even bloody over; and his sports read his destiny, himself being presently to substantiate in his own person, what these did but personate and represent of others. Having sitten a spectator of these his own Omens till towards one a clock, and indifferent whether to go to dinner or no, his stomack being undispos'd through his yesterdays gluttony; Asprenas a partner in the plot, sitting near him, perswaded him for his refreshment to go to the Bath, and so to Dinner, and then to the Plays and shows again. Caius giving notice of his rising, the company busles to make him room, the conspirators pretending officiousness, helpt to keep off the crowde and people; when he was come from among the multitude, he took not the open and ordinary way to the Palace, but a back and by way toward the Bath: There was he met and accoasted by Chereas, who came to him as the custom was to demand the word: which when he gave him with his accustomed scorn, and disgracefulness, Chereas drew and flew upon him, with these words, Hoc age, and smote him sore into the coller bone: upon the wound Cæsar neither cried out nor resisted, but sought to have slipt away. Then was he intertained by Sabinus with the like curtesie of a blow or stab, so that by this time the great Lion is gotten down, and then the rest of the confederacy flie all in upon him, every one with his slash, that there he lieth mangled with few or no less than thirty wounds.

§. 3. The sequel.

A pleasant spectacle was this to the overpressed Common-wealth, but there must be some more trouble before she can enjoy the pleasure. Such storms as these, though they come suddainly, and without expectation, yet are they not so suddainly, passed and calmed again.

The German Souldiers were the first that had notice of the Princes death, and they are the only men that will avenge it: Men not only conditioned like himself, in barbarousness and headlong cruelty, but also in love with those conditions, because they found acceptance and reward with him. These men upon the report, rise up in revenge, and in searching for the murderers of Cæsar, you must expect some innocency will be murdered. They first light upon Asprenas, a man that indeed had a finger in the business, but it is like it is more than they knew, yet howsoever he must pay for it because he cometh in their way, and so the shedding of his own blood answereth the Omen that he had but even now by the blood of the sacrifice. Next cometh Barbarus Norbanus to handling, because next to hand, and after him Anteius whose curiosity was his destiny, for coming to look upon the corps of the slain Tyrant, he was made a corps himself: When the rumor of what had passed came into the Theatre, it moved different passions according to their different affections. Some could not believe the news it was so good, others would not, because it was displeasing, hoping better, than that they had lost so great a patron of their unrulineſs and sporting. But when the Souldiers came in thither after the rumor, with the heads of Asprenas, Norbanus and Anteius in their hands, then imagine what case they were all in there, expecting to be all involved in the same fatal end, by the same fatal fury, though they were not of the same opinion and affection to the fact that had lately passed. But this fear and fury was with as much speed as wit, and indeed were both finely calmed and removed by one Aruntius; for coming in among them in a mourning weed, as if for Caius, he plainly, and dolefully, and assuredly averred that he was dead. One would have thought that this should have increased the raging of the Souldiers far more than before, but it had the clean contrary effect, as his policy had wittily foreseen. For when they knew certainly that he was dead, of whom they expected a reward for this their outrage in his quarrel, and when they considered what the people might do now he was dead, who so hated him while he was alive, they sheathed their swords and their fury together, and withdrew themselves from the Theatre, and the peoples fear from the people fairly and quietly both at once. By a carriage of as much valour as this was of ingenuity, did Valerius Asiaticus calm the tumult of the people in the market place, for when there was no other language, but, who is it, and who is it that hath killed Cæſar? he ſteppeth into ſome place above the people, and boldly cried I would it had been I, and with his boldneſs daunted the mutiny, and amazed their anger.

§. 4. Diſſention about the Government.

The hearts of the people were pretty well ſetled about the death of the Prince, but their minds not ſo well about the manner of the future Government. The Senate being aſſembled in the Capitol were divided about this great matter, whether the Commonwealth ſhould return to its old Democracy, or to its latter Monarchy again; ſome remembring the tyrannies uſed by the two latter Monarchs, abhorred the thought of that Government any longer: Others conſidering that it were better to be under one Tyrant, than under many, were as much againſt Democracy; and yet if they might have a Monarch, which they deſired, they were yet to ſeek who ſhould be he. Sentius the Conſul was vehement for the former choice, and might have well been ſuſpected for affecting ſome kind of Monarchy for the preſent himſelf, for he was chief Governor alone, but that his earneſtneſs to reduce the ſtate to its former rule ſtopped the mouth of any ſuch prejudice. Thus roſe the Court without any determination, and no leſs was the City divided in opinion. And indeed it was a very hard task that they had in hand, to reſolve for futurity what might prove the beſt, being to take a gentle medium betwixt their too much liberty and too little.

§. 5. Claudius.

Whilſt they were thus in doubt and agitation, and better able to reſolve what they would not have, than what they would, fortune ſeemed to offer them an umpirage and determination, winding an acceptance of a Monarch into their hearts before they were aware. Claudius an uncle of the Tyrant that now lay dead, hearing the tumult and hubbub that the Palace was in, and how the matter went with Caligula, he crept into an obſcure hole to hide himſelf, not much guilty indeed of any other cauſe of ſuch fear, but only becauſe he was ſo near allied to the man ſo hated and now ſlain. When lo Gratus a common Souldier ſearching about, whether for a prey or for a conſpirator, ſpieth his feet lying out of his skulking hole, and draws him out to ſee who it was; here might a ſtander by have laughed to have ſeen the different paſſions of Claudius and the Souldier meet together in one like and uniform action. Claudius, ready to kneel to the Souldier to beg for his life, and the Souldier already kneeling to Claudius to reverence his perſon. For being drawn out and brought into the light, and his face known by him and who he was, he preſently ſhews him all reverence and homage, and crieth out An Emperor, an Emperor; with this cry they bring him out to ſome more of their fellows, who getting him on their ſhoulders bring him into their Garriſon, the people as he went pitying him, as going unto execution. There he lodged that night, and you may ſuppoſe that he ſlept but little, being ſo divided betwixt hope and fear. The Conſul and Senate the next day hearing what was done, ſend to him adviſe him to ſubmit to their Government, and not to diſturb the State with a Monarchy again, which had been ſo burdenſom and tedious to it ſo long: which if he ſhould go about to do they would oppoſe him to their utmoſt ſtrength, and doubted not the aſſiſtance of the Gods in this their vindication of their liberty. Verrannius and Brachus, their two Legats upon this meſſage, delivered their errand with as much moving Rhetorick and intreaty as they could invent, beſeeching him with all the vehemency they could, not to diſtemper the Republick again by affecting and aſpiring the Monarchy, which was now in a hopeful poſſibility of ſetling her tranquility and liberty to her own content. But the ſight of the ſtrength and forwardneſs of the Souldiers that were about him, made them to ſtrain their Oratory one key higher than it may be they had either commiſſion for at their coming forth, or any thanks for at their return. For they beſought him that if he would needs have the Empire, that he would rather receive it from the hands of the Senate than of the Souldiers, and make an entry to his Government by conſent and approval and not by violence.

Claudius, howſoever his mind ſtood, gave a gentle anſwer, either diſſembling till he could be ſure to have his own party good, or indeed rather forced upon this purſuit than propenſe, and though affecting the Majeſty of the Empire, yet not patient of the trouble.

§. 6. Cæſonia

There let us leave him to study, as far as his fear and the Souldiers tumult would suffer him, what to resolve upon as best to be done, or if he were resolved already, then how to do it: And let us a little step aside to the corps of Caius, and there we shall see some partners with him in his death, which had better relation to it than Asprenas and the other that we saw slain before: Chereas not thinking it enough for the common safety, and the accomplishment of his design, that Caius was dead alone, unless so much also of him were cut off with him, as was in Cæsonia his wife and her and his little child, he sendeth one Lupus one of the tribunes upon this execution, that nothing might remain of Caligula, but his putrified memory. Some were of opinion that Cæsonia had been his perswasive and provocation to his mischiefs either by charms, or exhortations, or both; others thought, that she used her utmost endeavours to have reduced him to a better mind, but could not prevail: But were it the one or the other, were she good or bad, it is all one to Chereas, she was Caius his wife, and so must needs die for the desert of her actions, if she were nought, and though she were otherwise, yet for the due of her relation. Lupus findeth her tumbling upon the ground with the corps, all besmeared with his blood and her own tears: She conceiving his errand by his very person, boldly invites him to accomplish what he came about, which he did accordingly, and withal slew the little child upon the heap: And so their lieth the greatest Prince and Princess under Heaven, a spectacle of misery and majesty tied up together, and to be lamented in regard of these two, howsoever but justly rewarded in regard of their deserts.

§. 7. Claudius made Emperor.

That rule and Monarchy that the Souldiers would have tumbled upon Claudius they cared not how, Agrippa the King of whom we had mention a good while ago folded it as it were upon him fairly and smoothly, that it both lay more easie for him himself, and less wrinckled and rugged to the eyes of others. For first coming privately to Claudius whilst he somewhat fluctuated in opinion, and was ready to have yielded to the Senates propositions, he setled him in a contrary resolution, perswading him by no means to forsake or relinquish that fair apprehension and seisure of the dominion that was offered him. Then cometh he as craftily into the Senate as if he had been a meer stranger to what was in hand, and there asketh how the matter went between them and Claudius; when they ingenuously laid all the business before him, and demanded his counsel and advise in those affairs: He subtle enough for his own ends, and neither regarding their liberty, nor Claudius his Monarchy so much in the matter as his own security in his Kingdom, maketh fair weather to them, and professeth with all solemnity to serve them in their designs to the utmost of his power. But when it came to the vote what must be done, and the resolution was that they must take up arms, and arm their servants, and compass that with the sword that they could not do with perswasions; then Agrippa thought it was time to work or never. He therefore puts them in mind of the strength of the Souldiers that had proclaimed Claudius, and of their forces but weak, few, and utterly unexpert: that to hazard a war was to hazard their State, and therefore he would advise them to tender to Claudius propositions of accommodation, and if they were so pleased, he himself would be the agent. It is agreed upon, and he sent upon this imployment, which how he would perform it is easie to guess, by looking upon his own condition in which he now stood. For in the life of Caius it was conceived that his evil counsel had very much forwarded the others cruelty and mischievousness, and therefore if the Senate be masters of their desires, he can little expect to be master any more of his Kingdom, but if with all his officiousness and trotting up and down he can help Claudius to the Monarchy, he is sure he hath then holpen himself to the Royalty. It was therefore not an oversight in that grave and discreet great Councel that they imployed such a man as this in their occasions, who, a far dimmer eye of judgment than any of theirs would easily perceive, would be against them: but it was their discreet evasion with their honour, when finding themselves too weak to deal it out by force of Arms, they came to a noble reference, by the motion and meditation of so great a Prince.

Whet

When Agrippa cometh to Claudius he is now more urgent than before, that he ſtand to his challenge, becauſe he had now groped the mind and ſtrength of the Senate: and he prevaileth with him ſo far that the Souldiers go to the Senate houſe, and there demand a confirmation of their choice. It was now come to it in the Councel, that they were reſolved to chooſe one Monarch, for they ſaw the Souldiers would ſo have it, but now the queſtion was who that muſt be; ſome were for one, ſome for another; but the conſpirators againſt Caius were againſt Claudius howſoever: This diviſion had like to have cauſed another tumult, but the end of all was, that the power and fear of the Souldiers prevailed, and the Senate was glad to accept him for their Prince whom they durſt not refuſe.

Agrippa had perſwaded him to deal gently with the Senate, but he either perſwaded not or prevailed not with him for the like towards the conſpirators of his nephews death. Chereas and Sabinus the ſlayers of Caius, and Lupus the Executioner of Caſonia and her child were not like the Senate, either perſwaded by reaſons, or affrighted by forces to accept of Claudius, or to owe him homage, but they boldly and reſolutely gainſay his election even to the death. Claudius therefore cauſeth Chereas to be ſlain, and Lupus with him, which doom they underwent with different demeanours, Chereas ſtoutly, but Lupus weeping, Chereas at one blow, for he met death half the way, but Lupus at many, for he ſhrunk it all he could. But Sabinus, foolhardy as he was, when Claudius had granted him his pardon, and not only ſo but alſo reſtored him to his former honors, he diſdaining to be ſingled from his fellow conſpirators in their end any more than in their deſign, fell upon his own ſword and died. Such a beginning did the new made Emperor make into his Empire, mingling ſeverity and clemency together in the cenſure of offendors of the ſame knot, that he might alſo mingle fear and love in the hearts of the people. This Claudius was the ſon of Druſus the ſon of Livia, a man dull and diſeaſed even from his childhood, and for that brought up moſt in the converſe with women or nurſes: hence his effeminacy and luxurioufneſs at all times, and his readineſs to be led away by the counſel of women at ſome. He was now about fifty years of age when he began to reign, at the very ripeneſs of all the diſcretion he had, but that it was often blaſted with fearfulneſs, drunkenneſs and wicked counſel. When he was ſet quietly in the Throne, the firſt thing he did was to get the two days in which the agitation was about the change of the Government, quite out of memory, and for that end he made an Act of Oblivion of all things that had paſſed either in Words or Actions of all that time: yet had he not wrought his own ſecurity ſo far, but that he cauſed all that came near him to be ſearched for weapons, and while he ſat at any meal, he had a ſtrong guard about him. For the motion that had been ſo lately and ſo ſtrongly carried for the abolition of Monarchy, and the other which propoſed others thereto when Monarchy was agreed upon, and would have excluded him, had taken ſuch an impreſſion upon him, that he reputed no ſafety in his holding of the Royalty, but by that ſtrong hand and power by which he had gotten it. Yet tried he fair and gentle dealing though he durſt not truſt it: Thoſe from whom he had received any affront, in the days of Tiberius and Caligula (for ſometimes in thoſe days to abuſe Claudius, was to curry favor) he freely pardoned if he found them guilty of no other crime, but if he did he paid them then for all together. The unjuſt fines of Caius he remitted, his illegal decrees he revoked, his innocents impriſoned he releaſed, and his cauſleſs baniſhed he called home.

The poiſons which he had prepared for the Nobles, and a liſt of their names for whom they were prepared, being found in the Palace, though Caius had pretended to have burnt them, he ſhewed publickly to the Senate and then burnt them indeed. He forbad any one to adore him or to ſacrifice to him, he reſtrained the great and loud acclamations that were uſed to be made to the Emperor, and carried himſelf with ſuch ſweetneſs and moderation, that happy had the Republique been in the continuance of the Monarchy, had he been ſo happy as to have continued in this his firſt demeanor. But his wicked Empreſs Meſſallina, and her wicked conſorts firſt provoked him to miſchief, and his too much delight in the bloody ſports did by degrees habituate him unto cruelty. He had recalled Julia and Agrippina the two ſiſters of Caius out of baniſhment, whither they had been ſent by their own Brother after he had deflowred them, and he reſtored them to their Eſtates and Revenues again. But

Meſſallina

Meſſallina ſtomacking that Julia did her not honour and homage enough, and envying her beauty, and being jealous of her privacy with Claudius, ſhe cauſed her to be baniſhed again, and in a ſhort time ſhe compaſſed her death.

Theſe were but ominous beginnings, when Cæſars love to his own neece was cauſe enough to work her ruine, but was not ſtrong enough to ſtand between her and the fury of his own wife: And it did but fatally preſage what miſchief her wretched counſels would work the cowardize and indiſcretion of her husband to, when their firſt effect was upon one ſo near allied: Nor did cruelty and bloodineſs enter thus only in at his ears, by the ſuggeſtion of his curſed wife, but the like it did alſo at his eyes, by his frequent and delightſom beholding of the bloody ſports: that growing by degrees to be his delight to act, which had grown by degrees alſo to be his delight to ſee. Sometimes beaſts with beaſts, as twelve Camels and Horſes at one time, and 300 Bears, and 300 African wild beaſts at the ſame: ſometimes beaſts with men, and ſometimes men with men, and at all times hideous bloodſhed, that he that can look upon ſuch barbarouſneſs and ſlaughter with content, it may be ſuſpected that he in time will grow to act the like with the ſame delight.

PART II.

ACTS XI.

Verſ. 26. And the Diſciples were called Chriſtians firſt in Antioch.

§. 1. The name of Chriſtian.

THE Jews and Gentiles being now ſince the calling of Cornelius knit up together into one Church, they are this year tied up into the roſie and glorious knot of the ſame name and Epithet, the name of Chriſtian: A new name which the Lord himſelf did give them, as we may well underſtand that propheſie, Eſa. 65. 15. that the two diſtinguiſhing names of Jews and Heathen might no more continue the ancient diſtance that was betwixt them, but that that and all differences ariſing therefrom might be buried under this ſweet and lovely denomination given equally to them both. The current of the ſtory hitherto hath fairly and plainly led this occurrence to this year, as the Reader himſelf will confeſs upon the trace of the Hiſtory, and he will be confirmed in it, when he ſeeth the next year following to be the year of the famine, which next followeth in relation in St. Luke to this that we have in hand, Act. 11. 26, 27, 28.

By what names the Profeſſors of the Goſpel were called before this time, it is plain in Scripture. Among themſelves they were called (b) Diſciples, (c) Believers, (d) The Church, (e) Devout men, (f) Brethren; But among the unbelieving Jews, by this ſole common and ſcornful title of (g) The ſect of the Nazarites. Epiphanius hath found out a ſtrange name for them not to be found elſewhere, nor to be warranted any where, and that is the name of Jeſſæans.

(b) Act. 4. 15; (c) Cap. 5. 14. & 6. 1. & 9. 1. (d) Act. 8. 1. (e) Act. 8. 2. (f) Act. 11. 29; 1 Cor. 15. 6. (g) Act. 24. 5.

Before they were called Chriſtians (h) (ſaith he) they were called Jeſſæi; either from Jeſſe the father of David, from whom the Virgin Mary and Chriſt by her deſcended, or from Jeſu the proper name of our Saviour. Which thou ſhalt find in the books of Philo, namely in that which he wrote Περὶ Ἐσσαίων. In which treating of their Policy, Praiſes and monaſteries which are about the Mariſh Marian (commonly called Mareotis) he ſpeaketh of none others than of Chriſtians. Of the ſame opinion in regard of the men themſelves, are divers others, both the Fathers, and later writers; though they differ in regard of the name. No Romaniſt but he takes it for granted, that Philo in that book (that is meant by Epiphanius, though he either title it not right, or elſe couch two books under one title,) ſpeaketh of Chriſtian Monks, and from thence who of them doth not plead the antiquity of a Monaſtick life, ſo confidently, that he ſhall be but laughed to ſcorn among them that ſhall deny it? They build indeed upon the Ipſe Dixit of ſome of the Fathers to the ſame purpoſe, beſides the likeneſs of thoſe men in Philo to the Romiſh Monks, that ſuch a thing as this is not altogether to be paſſed over, but ſomething to be examined, ſince it ſeemeth to carry in it ſelf ſo great antiquity and weightineſs.

(h) Lib. 1. adverſ. Nazaræos pag. 120.

Euſebius

Eusebius therefore in his (i) Ecclesiastical History delivereth such a matter as tradition. They say (saith he) that Mark being first sent in Egypt, preached the Gospel there which he also penned, and first founded the Churches of Alexandria, where so great a multitude of believing men and women grew up, Διὰ ἀσκήσεως φιλοσοφωτάτης τε καὶ σφόδρα σπουδαίας in a most Philosophical and strict course, that Philo himself vouchsafed to write of their converse, meetings, feastings, and all their demeanor: And for this his writing of them, He is reckoned by us (saith (k) Jerome) amongst the Ecclesiastical writers, because writing concerning the first Church of Mark the Evangelist, he breaketh out into the praises of our men: relating that they are not only there but also in many other Provinces, and calling their dwellings Monasteries. Of the same mind with these Fathers, are Cedrenus (l) Nicephorus, (m) Sixtus Senensis, (n) Bellarmine, (o) Possevine and others; which last cited Jesuite is not contented to be satisfied with this opinion himself, but he revileth the Magdeburgenses, and all others with them, that are not of the same opinion with him. For the examining of which, before we do believe it, we may part their position into these two quæres. First, Whether Mark the Evangelist had founded the Church at Alexandria before Philo wrote that book. And secondly whether those men about Alexandria reported of by Philo, were Christians at all yea or no.

First then look upon Philo and upon his age, and you shall find that the last year when he was in Embassie at Rome, he was ancient, and older than any of the other Commissioners that were joyned with him, for so he saith of himself: Cæsar speaking affably to them when they first came before him, the standers by thought their matter would go well with them, (p) But I (saith he) that seemed to outstrip the others in years and judgement, &c. and then from him look at the time when Mark is brought by the Ecclesiastical Historians first into Egypt and Alexandria. (q) Eusebius, (for we will content our selves with him only) hath placed this at the third of Claudius, in these words, Marcus Evangelista interpres Petri, Ægypto & Alexandriæ Christum annunciat. And then is Philo four years older than before. To both which add what time would be taken up after Marks preaching before his converts could be disposed into so setled a form of buildings, constitutions and exercises, and then let indifferency censure, whether Philo that was so old so long before, should write his two books of the Esseni, and the Therapeutæ after all this. But because we will not build upon this alone, let us for the resolution of our second Quære, character out these men that are so highly esteemed for the patterns of all Monasticks, and that in Philo's own words and description.

The JEWISH History.

§. 1. The Therapeutæ.

"THEY are called Therapeutæ and Therapeutrides (saith Philo) either because they "profess a Physick better than that professed in Cities, for that healeth bodies "only, but this diseased souls. ——— Or because they have learned from na- "ture, and the holy Laws to serve him that is ——— Those that betake themselves to "this course, do it not out of fashion, or upon any ones exhortation, but ravished with "a heavenly love, (even as the Bacchantes and Corybantes have their raptures) until they "behold what they desire. Then through the desire of an immortal and blessed life, re- "puting themselves to die to this mortal life, they leave their estates to sons or daughters "or to other kindred, voluntarily making them their heirs, and to their friends and fa- "miliars if they have no kindred. ——— When they are thus parted from their goods, "being taken now by no bait, they flie irrevocably, leaving Brethren, Children, Wives, "Parents, numerous Kindreds, Societies and Countries, where they were born and "bred ——— they flit, not into other Cities ——— but they make their abode without "the walls in gardens or solitary Villages, affecting the wilderness not for any hatred of "men, but because of being mixed with men of different conditions, which thing they "know is unprofitable and hurtful. This kind of people are in many parts of the world, "——— but it abounds in Egypt through every one of those places that are called Nomi, "especially Τὸ ὄν.

" eſpecially about Alexandria. Now out of all places the chief or beſt of the Therapeu-
" tæ are ſent into a Colony (as it were into their Country) into a moſt convenient re-
" gion, beſides the lake Maria, upon a low gentle riſing bank, very fit, both for ſafety
" and the wholeſom air. ---------- The houſes of the company are very mean, affording
" ſhelter in two moſt neceſſary reſpects, againſt the heat of the Sun, and the coldneſs
" of the air. Nor are they near together like houſes in a City, for ſuch vicinity is " trouble and diſpleaſing to ſuch as love and affect ſolitude. Nor yet far aſunder, be-
" cauſe of that communion which they imbrace, and that they may help one ano" ther if there be any incurſion of thieves. Every one of them hath a holy houſe
" which is called a * Chappel and Monaſtery, in which they * being ſolitary do per" form the myſteries of a Religious life: bringing in thither neither drink nor meat, nor " any other neceſſaries for the uſe of the body, but the Law and the Oracles given by " the Prophets, and hymns and other things whereby knowledge and religion are in-
" creaſed and perfected. Therefore they have God perpetually in their mind, inſomuch
" that in their dreams, they ſee nothing but the beauty of the Divine powers, and there
" ſome of them who by dreaming do vent excellent matters of Philoſophy. They uſe to " pray twice every day, morning and evening, at Sun riſing and Sun ſetting, and all the " time between they meditate and ſtudy the Scripture, allegorizing them, becauſe they be" lieve that myſtical things are hid under the plain letter: they have alſo many commen" taries of their predeceſſors of this Sect to this purpoſe. They alſo made Pſalms, and " Hymns to the praiſe of God. Thus ſpend they the ſix days of the week every one " in his Cell, not ſo much as looking out of it. But on the ſeventh day they meet to" gether and ſit down according to their age demurely, with their hands within their " coats, the right hand betwixt their breaſt and their skin, and the left on their ſide.
" Then ſteps forth one of the graveſt and skilfulleſt in their profeſſion and preacheth to " them, and the reſt hearken with all ſilence, only nodding their heads, or moving their " eyes: their place of worſhip is parted into two rooms, one for the men and the " other for the women: All the week long they never taſte meat nor drink any day be" fore Sun ſetting, becauſe they think the ſtuddy of wiſdom to be fit for the light, and
" the taking eaſe of their bodies for the dark: ſome hardly eat above once in three days,
" ſome in ſix; on the ſeventh day after they have taken care of the ſoul, they refreſh
" the body. Their diet is only bread and ſalt, and ſome add a little hyſſop. Their " drink ſpring-water. Their cloths mean and only fit to keep out heat and cold. At " the end of every ſeven weeks they feaſt together, honouring much the number ſeven:
" Old women are preſent at their feaſts, but they are ſuch as are Virgins upon devotion.
" When they firſt meet together, they firſt ſtand and pray that the feaſt may be bleſſed to " them, then ſit they down the men on one ſide and the women on the other, ſome of " their young Scholers wait on them: their diet is but as at other times, bread and ſalt
" for their meat, hyſſop for ſauce, and water for drink: there is general ſilence all the " meal, ſave that one or other asketh or reſolveth queſtions, the reſt holding their
" peace; and they ſhew by their ſeveral geſtures that they underſtand, or approve or " doubt. Their interpretations of Scripture are all allegories; when the preſident hath
" ſatisfied the things propoſed, they give a general applauſe, and then he ſingeth a Pſalm
" either of his own making or of ſome of the ancients: And thus do the reſt in their
" courſe, when all have done, the young men take away the table: and then they riſe
" and fall to a daunce, the men apart and the women apart for a while, but at laſt
" they joyn and dance all together: and this is in repreſentation of the dance upon the " ſhore of the red Sea. Thus ſpend they the night, when Sun riſeth they all turn their " faces that way, and pray for a happy day, and for truth and underſtanding, and ſo
" they depart every one to their Cells.

* Σεμνεῖον καὶ Μοναστήριον.
* Μονεμένος.

κοινὸν σεμνεῖον.

To this purpoſe doth Philo deſcribe theſe Therapeutæ of his times: which howſoever they are taken for Chriſtians by divers as was ſaid before, yet it is ſo plain by divers paſſages in Philo's Characterings of them that they were no Chriſtians, but Jewiſh ſectaries, that it is even needleſs to determinate it: let the reader but conſider that it is a Jew that commends their devotion, that he himſelf imitates their manner of expounding the Scriptures by allegories, that he ſaith they had many commentaries of their predeceſſors to that tenour, that they were ſuperſtitious about the number ſeven, as he himſelf is not a little, and if there were no other arguments to prove that they were only a Sect of the Jews, theſe were enow.

§. 2. The affairs of the Jews in Alexandria, and Babylonia.

The death of Caius was an allay to the troubles of the Jews both in Judea and Alexandria, and the proclamation of Claudius which we ſhall hear of the next year, was their utter ceſſation for the preſent, but ſo it was not in Babylonia. The terror and trouble that had ſeized Judea, about the ſtatue of Cæſar, was removed, and extinct with the removal, and extinction of Cæſar himſelf, ſo were the preſſures of them in Alexandria mitigated much from what they were before, though their commotions and troubling continued ſtill in an equal meaſure. For whereas before the diſpleaſure of the Emperor lay ſo heavy upon them that they neither could nor durſt ſtand out in their own defence, when that burden is now removed they gather heart and metal, and now though the Greeks and they be continually at daggers drawn, yet now it is upon equal terms, and they dare ſtrike as well as the other. But in Babylonia and thereabout, their miſeries is but now a brewing, and an equal ſtrait is preparing for them, as had been to either of the other, though it began with ſome ſmiling of a ſeeming happineſs, and the ſunſhine of preſent proſperity. The bloodhound of vengeance was to hunt this Nation, and not to be taken off till it was deſtroyed: and therefore when it giveth off the queſt in one place, it takes it in another, and leaveth not their footing till it had left them no footing at all.

Thoſe Jews whoſe Tragedy we have ſeen acted already found their own miſery, though they ſought it not, and how much more ſhall they that we are now to bring upon the ſcene that ſought and wooed it with their utmoſt pains.

§. 1. The rebellion of ſome Jews.

There were in Neardaa (the reſidence and Univerſity of the Jews in Babylonia) two brethren named Aſinæus and Anilæus, or in their proper language Chaſinai, and Chanilai. Theſe two their Mother (their Father being dead) had put to a trade and to a Maſter, for the making of ſails or other tackle for ſhips. The ſturdy youths having one day given their Maſter ſome offence, and he them ſome blows, did take the matter in ſuch high ſcorn and diſdain, that they reſolve not only to overrun their Maſter, but indeed to run over all Maſterſhip whatſoever. They therefore getting away all the Arms their Maſters houſe would afford, betake themſelves to a ſtrong place in an Iſland of Euphrates, and there publiſh and proclaim their rebellious reſolution. Young men flock in to them apace, men of the ſame deſperate minds and fortunes, and after building ſome Caſtles in the air of future expectations, they begin to build a Fort in the Iſle for their preſent ſecurity and rendevouz. They then command the neighbour Towns to pay them Tribute, which the numerouſneſs and reſolution of the Commanders made them that they durſt not diſobey. The Governor of Babylonia thinking to quel this growing evil before it ſhould be too ſtrong, cometh ſecretly upon them on the Sabbath day, thinking to involve them in their own ſuperſtition into the trap that he had prepared for them. But the furious youths were not ſo over-religious as to be kild in devotion, nor did they prize the Sabbath above their own lives, but for all it was that day they are reſolved to fight, and they fight reſolvedly, and kill and rout and foil the forces that made no other account but of victory.

Artabanus King of Parthia hearing of the power of this newborn Army, and the reſolution of thoſe upſtart Captains, and conſidering how advantageous it might be for his own affairs, to have them ſure and firm unto himſelf, he ſendeth for the two Brethren with aſſurance of their ſafety: whereupon they come to him, and are Royally and bravely intertained by him: and when Abdagaſis the General of his Army would have ſlain Aſinæus treacherouſly, the King forbad him, ſent Aſinæus home with rich gifts and the Government of Babylonia committed to him: There he grew greater and greater in power and honour: and ſtood in high repute both with the Babylonians and the Parthians, and had all Meſopotamia at his command. And thus continued theſe Brethren in pomp and height for fifteen years together: till a miſcarriage of Anilæus began to cloud and eclipſe their proſperity: For Anilæus having ſlain a Parthian Peer that he might enjoy his Lady, and ſhe when ſhe was now his wife, uſing her ancient Idolatry as in her firſt husbands days, this became a double offence to his chiefeſt friends, namely, for that he had married an Heathen, and for that ſhe continued ſtill in her Idolatry: They ſeriouſly admoniſh Anilæus of the matter, but he ſlew one of the chiefeſt of them for his home-reproof and admonition. Therefore the reſt addreſs themſelves to Aſinæus, and demand demand the vindication of their native Laws and Religion: he rebuketh his Brother Anilæus, and is therefore poiſoned by the Parthian Lady, becauſe that her husband might be from under rebuke, and might be commander of all. He being now ſo indeed, firſt invadeth the Country of Mithridates, ſon in Law to Artabanus, and forrageth that, and by a ſurprizal getteth Mithridates priſoner, yet ſendeth him home again to his own poſſeſſions, having hardly delivered him from his Souldiers fury that they did not kill him: Mithridates ſenſible of the diſgrace of his uſage (for they had ſet him naked upon an Aſs,) and inſtigated by the haughty and revengeful ſpirit of his wife, raiſeth what force he can get, and giveth Anilæus battel and routeth him. But Anilæus himſelf eſcaping, and recruiting an Army of diſſolute and reſolute fellows again, he beginneth to ſpoil ſome Towns of the Babylonians, but the Babylonians finding a fit opportunity, fall upon Anilæus and his troop, and ſlew many of them, and Anilæus himſelf among the reſt: This bridle and curb of the Jews, which had lain ſo long and ſo heavy upon the Babylonians being now taken off, they begin now to riſe up and to curb and oppreſs the Jews: who for their ſafety flee to Seleucia: and there they reſide quietly for the ſpace of five years, but in the ſixth year, a hot Plague driving the reſt of them that had ſtaied behind at Babylon, into Seleucia alſo, providence did as it were bring them all thither together to execution: for a quarrel being firſt between the Greeks and Syrians that dwelt in that City, and the Syrians getting the better through the help of the Jews, at laſt Greeks and Syrians joyn both together againſt the Jews, and deſtroy fifty thouſand of them: And this was a ſecond notable vengeance that hath ovetaken that Nation ſince the murder of the Lord of Life.

ACTS.

CHAP. IX.

Verſ. 28. Great dearth throughout all the World; which came to paſs in the days of Claudius Cæſar.

THAT this famine was in the ſecond of Claudius, we have ſhewed before, not only out of Dion the Roman Hiſtorian, but even by neceſſary collection from other things. Now whether it proceeded from want of Rain, or from what other cauſe, it is not determinable: it appeareth by Suetonius that it came to this height through a continued ſterility of the ground, which it ſeemeth had been ſome years together. This year was Helena the Queen of the Adiabeni, preſent at Jeruſalem, and her preſence there was a happineſs to the City, for from Cyprus and Alexandria, ſhe ſent for Proviſions, and diſtributed them among the people, when divers had periſhed of famine before.

Verſ. 30. Sent it to the Elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

§. Pauls rapture into the third Heaven.

Although it be not mentioned in this Chapter that Paul went up to Jeruſalem, but was ſent only with proviſions to the poor brethren in Judea: yet have we alſo proved before, that at this journey he had his trance in the Temple, Acts 22. 17. and in that that trance he was rapt up into the third Heaven. The ſtory of which he himſelf relateth, 2 Cor. 12. 2. I knew a man in Chriſt above fourteen years ago, whether in the body I cannot tell, &c. And there he relateth alſo the ſtory of the meſſenger of Satan, buffeting him, and himſelf praying, and God giving him a gracious anſwer: all which we ſhall explain, by Gods permiſſion, in another place.

In this trance God bids him get out of Jeruſalem, and gives him commiſſion to go preach among the Gentiles, Acts 22. 18, 21. And ſo he returneth from Jeruſalem to Antioch, where we ſhall have him the next year.

§. 2. Peter not this year at Rome.

This year the Romaniſts have brought Peter to Rome, and made this the firſt year or beginning of his Epiſcopacy there. For thus Baronius, That Peter came to Rome this ſecond year of Claudius the Emperor, it is the common Opinion of all men. And to this purpoſe he alledgeth Euſebius his Chronicle, and Jerome de ſcriptoribus Eccleſiaſticis, and concludeth that others have written the ſame things concerning the time, that there can be no doubt left of it.

It may be tolerated to inſiſt a little the more largely upon the examination of this opinion, not for that it is of any ſuch great import in its own nature, as for that it is made of ſo great by them for their own advantage. For were it granted that Peter was Biſhop of Rome, and that he went thither in this year, yet what great matter were there in this, in common ſenſe and reaſon? But becauſe unreaſonable men have from hence, or upon this foundation built the ſupremacy of the Pope, the great deluſion of the world, let the ſame common ſenſe and reaſon equally and impartially judge of the probability or improbability of this thing, in theſe two parts into which this tenet doth fall of it ſelf.

1. Whether it be probable that Peter was Biſhop of Rome at all.
2. Whether it be poſſible that he could come thither this year according as they themſelves have laid his progreſs, and that he ſhould ſet up an Epiſcopacy there.

Weigh the firſt by theſe;

Firſt, Peter was Miniſter of the Circumciſion, why then ſhould he go ſettle himſelf to live and die among the uncircumciſed? He might indeed have preached to the uncircumciſed as he travailed up and down, as Paul did to the circumciſed, being the Miniſter of the uncircumciſion, but to take up his abode and reſidence, and there to ſettle, to live and die among them; was a thing neither probable in the eyes of other men, nor juſtifiable in him himſelf.

Secondly, If Peter were at Rome in the ſenſe and extent that the Romaniſts will have it, then hath the Scripture omitted one of the greateſt points of ſalvation that belongeth to Chriſtianity: For how many main points of Faith hath Popery drawn out of this one concluſion, that Peter was Biſhop of Rome; as the Primacy of the Pope, the infallibility of his Chair, his abſolute power of binding and looſing, no ſalvation out of the Church of Rome, and divers other things, which all hang upon the Pin forenamed: And it is utterly incredible; 1. That the Holy Ghoſt that wrote the Scriptures for mans ſalvation, ſhould not expreſs or mention a thing that containeth ſo many points of ſalvation. 2. That Luke that undertook to write the Acts of the Apoſtles, ſhould omit this one act of Peter, which is made of more conſequence than all the actions of all the Apoſtles beſide. It is above all belief, that he that would tell of Phillips being at Azotus, and going to Cæſarea, Chap. 8. 40. Sauls going to Tarſus, Chap. 9. 30. And Barnabas his going thither to him, and divers other things of ſmall import, in compariſon, ſhould omit the greateſt and moſt material, and of the infiniteſt import that ever mortal mans journy was (for to that height is the journy of Peter to Rome now come) if there had ever been ſuch a thing at all.

Thirdly, It is as incredible, that Paul ſending ſalutations to ſo many in Rome, and again from ſo many there, ſhould omit to have named Peter at one time or other if he had been there. What was become of Peter in theſe reciprocal kindneſſes and ſalutations of the Saints one to another; was he aſleep, or was he ſullen, or what ſhall we make of him, or was he not indeed at Rome at all?

But not to inſiſt upon this queſtion whether Peter were at Rome at all, which hath been proved negatively by many Authors, and by many undeniable Arguments; let us look a little upon this foundation of his being there, which hath been laid, namely, his coming thither this year, which is the ſecond thing to be taken into conſideration.

And

And about this point, there have been divers simple Ignoramus's in former time, who so they held this first Article of the Roman Creed, That Peter was Bishop of Rome five and twenty years, and died in the last year of Nero, and so believed as the Church believed, they never cared to bring the head and heels together, or to observe how the times agreed, but have easily swallowed this camel of senseless computation, that Peter went from the Councel of Jerusalem, Acts 15. to Rome, and there sate Bishop five and twenty years, which expired in the last of Nero; whereas, betwixt the Councel at Jerusalem, and the last of Nero there were but twenty years in all, if there were so many: But nimbler wits, that cannot be caught in so plain and apparent a trap as this, have found out a quainter and more curious date from which to begin the Chair of Peter at Rome than this, and that is from the Story in the twelfth of the Acts of the Apostles. Where Peter being apprehended by Herod after his murder of James the great, and being delivered by an Angel, and having acquainted the Disciples with his delivery, they being together in John Marks house, he is said, to depart to another place, which they say, (and you must believe it, or they will take it very ill) was to Rome, and this was (say they) the second year of Claudius. A long journey believe it, to run to Rome, to avoid danger at Jerusalem: and Rome but a mad place to set up an Episcopacy in at this time, as hath been plain in the preceding, and will be also in the subsequent story of it. But that we may see, if not the impossibility, yet the utter improbability of that his journy in this second of Claudius, if that were the journy in the twelfth of the Acts, it will not be impertinent to insert a story out of Josephus concerning Agrippa's return from Rome to Jerusalem, where he slew James, and imprisoned Peter.

PART II.

The JEWISH Story.

5. Herod Agrippa his coming to Jerusalem.

CLAUDIUS the Emperor having attained the Empire as we have seen, the more easily and readily by the mediation and agitating of Agrippa, he would requite him like an Emperor for that his service: and therefore he confirmed to him by Charter, that Kingdom in which he had been inthroned by Caius, adding also Judea and Samaria, which had belonged to his Grandfather Herod (from hence it may seem that he took that name) and Abilene, and the Region near it, and appertaining to it in Lebanon, which had belonged to Lysanias. He caused also the Articles of a League betwixt himself and the King, to be cut in brass, and to be set up in the midst of the Forum.

There was now some sedition and civil hostility in Alexandria; for the Jews having been suppresst and oppresst by the Greeks, all the time of Caius, began after his death to stand in their own defence, and to rise up against those that had opposed them. Claudius by Letter commands the Governor of Egypt to quel the tumult: and at the request of Agrippa, and of Herod King of Chalcis, he sendeth forth an Edict into Syria and Alexandria in behalf and favour of the Jews. And another Decree he sent also through the rest of the Roman Empire, to the same tenor, and for the benefit of the same people, beginning with these his Titles, Tiberius Claudius Cæsar, Augustus, Germanicus, Pont. Maximus. Trib. Pleb. or Tribunitiæ Potestatis Consul designatus II. or second time Consul, and so it goes on.

By these decrees (saith Josephus) being thus sent to Alexandria, and through the whole Empire, Claudius declared what opinion he had of the Jews: And presently he sent away Agrippa to manage his Kingdom, with inlarged Honors, and wrote to the Governors of the Provinces, and to the Magistrates to favour him. And he, as it befitted a man that had had happy success, returned with speed. And coming to Jerusalem, he performed or offered Thanks-Offerings, omitting nothing that was injoyned by the Law: Wherefore he caused many Nazarites to be shaven, and the golden Chain which was given him by Caius, weighing equally with the iron chain that had bound his Royal hands, hands, he hung up * in the consecrate Court over the Treasury, for a memorial of his adversity, and for a witness of his better fortune. Thus Agrippa having performed rightly this his service to God, he removed Theophilus the son of Ananus from the High Priesthood, and conferred the honour upon Simon the son of Boethus, whose name was also Cantheras, thus *Josephus Antiq. l.*19. *c.*4.

§. Peter not imprisoned in the second year of Claudius.

To which let us joyn some of St. Lukes text in the twelfth of the Acts, and then let us make use of both together. Now about that time (saith he) Herod the King stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the Church; and he killed James the brother of John with the sword. And because he saw it pleased the Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter; then were the days of unleavened bread.

Now let the Reader observe in either story one special circumstance of time, as in Josephus, That Claudius was now second time Consul: and in St. Luke, that James was slain before Easter; and then let him cast whether it were possible, at the least probable, that so many things should be done and intercede between the beginning of January, when Claudius entred his Consulship, and Easter, as in these Stories must intercede, if Peter were imprisoned at the Easter of this year; yea though it fell the latest or furthest in the year that ever Easter yet fell. For, for Claudius to make his decree, and disperse it: for Agrippa to provide for his journy, and part from his friends in Rome: for him to travail from Rome to Jerusalem, to perform his Sacrifices and Ceremonies there, to seek to lay hold upon certain of the Church, to light upon James, and to kill him, and then to apprehend and imprison Peter, and all this betwixt Claudius his entry of his Consulship in January, and Easter, is a thing so incredible (especially to him that considereth how slowly great bodies move, as Kings and Emperors in their actions) as that it seemeth next impossible. For it cannot be imagined that this decree for the Jews was the first thing that Claudius did after he was made Consul, or that he fell upon that work in the very beginning of January; for matters of the City and of Italy one would think should take up the first thoughts of the Consuls, when they entred into that Office, and not of Jerusalem and Alexandria so many hundred of miles distant: and matters of the Romans themselves, and not of the Jews a despised Nation: But grant that on the very first day he set pen to paper for that decree, on the second dispersed it, and on the third dismissed Agrippa, yet must so great a Prince have some preparation for so great a journy, he must have some time to part with so great acquaintance; it was strange if he waited not some time for a convenient wind, and he must take up some reasonable time after he is shipped, before he land in Judea. After his landing some time was required for such a King in his own Kingdom to prepare for his journy by Land to Jerusalem, some for his setling there; some for his Sacrifices, and performances of the Rites of the Law mentioned; and all these before the apprehension of James, and that no man knows how long before Easter. Let indifferency judge, whether all these things were possible to be done in that space of time; and then let it censure of the matter in hand.

To the eviction of this opinion, that Peter went to Rome, and there began his Episcopacy the second year of Claudius, Romanists themselves may be produced that do gainsay it; as Salmeron on the twelfth of the Acts, who holds that he went thither in Claudius his fourth, and he produceth Comestor, Nauclerus, and Petrus de natalibus of the same opinion with him.

So likewise Simeon the Metaphrast, though he bring Peter from Jerusalem this year for fear of Herod, and lead him through many places, ordaining Churches and making Bishops, yet in conclusion he mentioneth not one word of Rome, but bringeth him to Jerusalem again at Passover next. Hereupon Surius, or at least his Marginist, and Baronius are ready to give him the lie; and though they both alledge him, and applaud him while he serveth their own humor, yet here they fly in his face, and tell him he is beside the cushion, because he is beside their opinion, and saith not what they would have him say.

Upon consideration of what hath been said before, we have put over the death of James to the year next following, as not seeing it possible to have fallen out this year before Easter, all circumstances being well considered: and accordingly have we referred thither, as the order requireth, the imprisonment of Peter, and his fleeing for his life, or retiring for some other cause, which the Romanists will have to have been to Rome; and there will we take it into some examination again.

PART

PART III.

The ROMAN History.

THE Moors rebelling, are beaten by Suetonius Paulinus, and after him by Cn. Sidius Geta, who following them far into the Sands, fell into an extream want of water for his Army: But by the wicked advice and furtherance of a renegado Moor, he obtaineth an extraordinary great rain by Magick, to the sufficient refreshing of his Army, and to the terror and subduing of the enemy. And now did Claudius divide Mauritania into Tingitana and Cæsariensis.

Claudius is exceedingly delighted with and given to the cruelty of the Sword-plays, in which he swept away a world of Servants and Freemen that had been accusers of their Masters in the time of Caius. And which was most ridiculous, he caused the statue of Augustus to be removed out of the place, because it should not behold such bloody work; being inhumanely himself delighted in that butchery, which he thought too barbarous for a brazen statue to look upon.

These bloody spectacles brought him to an habit of cruelty; which was augmented and hardened in him by the damnable counsels of his Empress Messalina, a woman wicked above parallel or expression, and by the spurrings on of other sycophants C. Appius Silanus is put to death, because he refused to incestuate Messalina when she desired him, for he had married her mother; but because Claudius must not hear of this beastly cause of her displeasure, Narcissus a freeman of the Emperor accused him for this, that in a dream he had seen Appius slay the Emperor.

Upon his death the people began to expect no more goodness from Claudius at all, but gave him up for a Tyrant like the two that had gone before him: whereupon, Annius Vinicianus, and Futius Camillus Scribonianus and others conspired against him; but being deserted of their souldiers in the enterprize, they are glad to end their lives by their own hands, that they might escape the executioners.

Messalina and Narcissus and others of their faction using the stupid folly of the Emperor to the compassing of their own wills, involve in false accusations and in miserable deaths, an infinite multitude of men and women, honorable and inferior, of all qualities and conditions, according as the spleen of any of them moved or was provoked. Among them that thus perished Arria the wife of Cæcinna is upon record for her Roman valour: for when her husband trembled and was afraid to slay himself, she took the sword out of his hand, and fell upon it, and gave it him again, reeking with her blood, with these words, Behold boy how I feel no pain: And now, saith my Author, were matters come to such a pass, that nothing was reputed a greater vertue than to die valiantly and like a Roman. To such a cruelty had custom and evil counsel brought him, that of himself was of a reasonable gentle nature, but wanted constancy and discretion to manage it.

CHAP. XII.

Verſ. 2. And he killed James.

§. 1. The Martyrdom of James the great.

WE are now come to the time of Great James his death. For Agrippa coming the laſt year into Judea, as we ſaw from Joſephus, and it not being probable that he ſhould do this exploit before Eaſter, as the circumſtances told us; we may juſtly take this year for its proper time and place. Now about that time (ſaith St. Luke) Herod the King (the Syriack addeth who is called Agrippa) ſtretched forth his hands to vex certain of the Jews; and he killed James the brother of John with the ſword. The firſt words, About that time, relate to what went before in the preceding Chapter, verſ. 28. and meaneth in the days of Claudius Cæſar. Now what ſhould be the incentive of the ſpleen of Agrippa againſt the Church, is not ſpecified: it may well be ſuppoſed it proceeded from that his Ceremoniouſneſs and ſtrict obſervance of Moſaick Rites, which is mentioned by Joſephus: Concerning the Martyrdom of James under this his ſpleen, we will content our ſelves with the words of the Text, He killed James the brother of John with the ſword; accounting all other additional circumſtances which may be found in officious Authors to be nothing elſe but gilded legends, and fond inventions: As that mentioned by Euſebius out of Clemens his Hypotypoſeon, concerning his accuſer, that ſeeing his conſtancy to the death, confeſſed the faith, and was martyred martyred with him. That by Epiphanius that he lived and died a Virgin: and that by * Surius (who is the bell-weather for old winter tales,) that telleth, That his body after his martyrdom was shipped by Ctesiphon and his fellow-Bishops for Spain; that the Ship in six days was directed thither without Pilot or Compass, but only by the influence of the Corps that it carried. That at the landing the body was taken up into the air, and carried near the place of its burial, twelve miles off. That Ctesiphon and his fellows were led to it by an Angel: And more such trash, that it is but labour lost, either to read or mention.

* Tom. 2. Julii 25.

§. 2. The Apostles Creed.

The Creed was made upon this occasion (saith (a) Rabanus Maurus) as our Ancestors have delivered unto us. The Disciples after the Ascension of our Saviour being inflamed with the Holy Ghost, &c. And being charged by the Lord to go to all Nations for the preaching of the Gospel, when they are to part one from another, they first make a common platform among themselves for their future preaching. Lest being severed in place, divers and different things should be preached to those that were invited to the faith of Christ. Being therefore together in one place, and filled with the Holy Ghost, they compose a short platform for their preaching, conferring together what they thought. And this they appoint to be given to them that believe, and to be called Symbolum, &c. Thus he, and very many others with him, conceiving that the Apostles supplied not only the matter of the Doctrine contained in the Creed, but the very form and words also.

(a) De Institut. Clerici. l. 2. c. 56. extat in Auctario ad Biblioth. Patrum. col. 620

For Peter said, say they, I believe in God the Father Almighty.
John, The maker of Heaven and Earth.
James, And I believe in Jesus Christ his only Son our Lord.
Andrew, Which was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary.
Philip, Suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead and buried.
Thomas, He descended into Hell: the third day he rose again from the dead.
Bartholomew, He ascended into Heaven: sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty.
Matthew, From thence shall he come to judge both the quick and the dead.
James the son of Alpheus, I believe in the Holy Ghost, the Holy Catholick Church.
Simon Zelotes, The communion of Saints, the forgiveness of sins.
Judas the brother of James, The resurrection of the flesh.
Matthias, The life everlasting. Amen.

Thus the hundred and fifteenth Sermon de Tempore, that goeth under the name of (b) Austen: but apparent that it is not his, by this, that here is reckoned the descent into Hell, which in his book (c) de Fide & Symbolo is quite omitted.

(b) Tom. 10. col. 849.
(c) Tom. 3. p. 143.

Now were this Tradition as true as it is punctual, it would readily plead for its own place in Chronology, namely, about this time at which we now are, before James his death, for he gave in his symbolum (according to this tradition) among the rest. But that this opinion of the Apostles casting in every one his parcel, is of no validity, but a presumptuous and false surmise, may be evinced by these Arguments.

First, (d) Because the title of The Catholick Church, is neither used in any of the Apostles writings, nor is it likely that it came into use till after the Apostles days, when the Church was dispersed into all parts of the earth.

(d) Mr. Perkins on the Creed.

Secondly, Because the Article He descended into Hell, is not owned or acknowledged at all by the Nicene Creed, nor by any of the ancientest Fathers next the Apostles times, in their reckoning up of the Articles of the Creed, as see instances in abundance in (e) Polanus his Syntagma, lib. 6. cap. 21.

(e) Pag. 410.

Thirdly, If the matter and words of the Creed had been from the Apostles themselves, why is it not then Canonical Scripture as well as any of the sacred Writ?

Fourthly, In the giving in of their several Symbols or parcels, after the manner opinionated before, there is so great disproportion and inequality, some giving so much, and some so little, that it maketh the contribution it self to be very suspitious.

Fifthly, The Summary Collection of the points of Christian Religion taught by the Apostles, and delivered by them to others to teach by, consisteth of two heads, Faith and Love, 2 Tim. 1. 13. But the Creed consisted of faith only. I rather think therefore, saith Mr. Perkins, that it is called the Apostles Creed, because it doth summarily contain the chief and principal Points of Religion, handled and propounded in the Doctrine of the Apostles; and because the points of the Creed are conformable and agreeable to their Doctrine and Writings.

§. 3. Tra-

§. 3. Traditions.

With their framing of the Creed before their parting, hath Baronius joyned alſo their delivery of Traditions. Sicut ſymbolo, ſaith he, ita etiam aliis abſque Scriptura traditionibus Eccleſiæ imperitis, diviſerunt ſibi ad quas ſinguli proficiſcerentur orbis terræ provincias. Having thus imparted the Creed, and alſo traditions without Scripture to the Church, they parted among themſelves what Country every one of them ſhould go unto.

Theſe Traditions the (a) Councel of Trent divideth into thoſe which were received by the Apoſtles from the mouth of Chriſt; or delivered from hand to hand, from the Apoſtles to our times; the Holy Ghoſt dictating them unto them. And theſe thoſe Fathers hold of equal authority with the Scriptures, and the Councel curſeth them that ſhall willingly and knowingly contemn them. And well do they deſerve it, if they did but certainly and aſſuredly know that they came from ſuch hands. Bellarmine (b) hath ſtretched the name and piece of Traditions to one tainterhook higher. For Traditions, ſaith he, are Divine, Apoſtolical and Eccleſiaſtical. Divine, are thoſe which were received from Chriſt himſelf teaching his Apoſtles, and yet are not to be found in the Scriptures; ſuch are thoſe which concern the matter and form of the Sacraments. Apoſtolical are thoſe which were inſtituted by the Apoſtles, not without the aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt, and yet are not to be found in their Epiſtles. Eccleſiaſtical traditions are properly called certain old cuſtoms, begun either by Prelates, or by people, which by little and little by the tacit conſent of the people obtained the power of a Law. Under theſe heads, eſpecially under the two firſt, hath he placed theſe particulars (c) The perpetual Virginity of Mary, the number of the Canonical books, Baptizing of Infants, bleſſing the water before, bidding them renounce Satan and his works, ſigning them with the ſign of the croſs, anointing them with oyl, not re-baptizing after Heretiques, Lent, Ember week, inferior Orders in the Church, worſhipping of Images, &c. To which (d) others add, The oblation of the Sacrament of the Altar, Invocation of Saints, Prayer for the dead, the Primacy, Confirmation, Orders, Matrimony, Penance, extreme Unction, Merits, neceſſity of Satisfaction, Auricular Confeſſion, &c. Into which controverſie not to enter, concerning the thing it ſelf, which ſo many grave and learned pens have handled ſufficiently, reckoned by Bellarmine, though with ſmall good will, in his entry upon this queſtion; let but reaſon and indifferency cenſure, concerning that which is more proper to this diſcourſe, namely, the time of delivering theſe Traditions, whether this or any other: And here in the firſt place let the Reader but conſider that at this time, there was no more of the New Teſtament written, than the Goſpels of Matthew and Mark, if ſo be that thoſe alſo were written at this time. And then let him judge how ſenſleſs a thing it is to ſpeak of delivering unwritten Traditions to the Church, when almoſt all the New Teſtament was yet to be written. Or take it at the Councel at Jeruſalem, which was divers years hence, when all the Apoſtles were all together, and giving rules to the Church, or take it at Pauls apprehenſion at Jeruſalem, when imagine all the Apoſtles to be together again, and even at either of thoſe times, will the ſame abſurdity follow ſtill for no more of the New Teſtament was written, or very little more than now. And then how ridiculous doth it appear, That the Apoſtles ſhould offer to give rules to the Church by unwritten Tradition, when they had all their Epiſtles for rules of the Church yet to write: If they would leave the Church to be regulated by unwritten Traditions, why ſhould they write after? And if they would have her regulated by their writings, why ſhould they give her unwritten Traditions before? A quick wit will nimbly anſwer, that they left her ſuch Traditions as were not to be expreſſed in their writings, but let an honeſt conſcience and an unprejudicate judgment cenſure whether this will abide the teſt, yea or no. For is it within any compaſs of likelihood that theſe Apoſtles did know what things Paul would not write of in his Epiſtles, that they ſhould deliver ſuch things before-hand for Tradition, when as yet they hardly knew whether he was to be an Apoſtle of the Gentiles or no, when they did not know whether he would write any Epiſtles or no, much leſs did they know what Epiſtles he would write? Appello conſcientiam, and ſo much for Traditions.

Verſ. 3. He proceeded to take Peter alſo, &c.

§. Peters impriſonment and delivery.

James his death was ſeconded by Peters impriſonment, but his time for martyrdom was not yet come as was the others. Agrippa having laid hold upon him, deferred his execution execution till after the Passover, (e) either because he would not defile that holy feast with effusion of humane blood, or because he would afflict Peter the more, and give the Jews the greater content by his long restraint and strait imprisonment, or rather because he feared a tumult if he should have slain him in that concourse of people as was there at Passover time. Thus lay he guarded, with four quaternions, or (as the Syriack hath it) with sixteen Souldiers, which as it seemeth watched him by course, for the four watches of the night, two close by him and two at the gate. Besides these two and two successive jaylors, he was bound with two chains, and if (f) some say true, his two keepers were tied for the more sureness in the same chains with him. Happy men were they sure, that had so great interest in these happy chains, which if you dare believe (g) Surius, had the virtue to work Miracles, to diffuse Grace, to procure Holiness, to heal Diseases, to affright the Devil and to defend Christians. They were preserved, saith he, by some of Herods servants that believed, and in process of time laid up for a sacred relique at Constantinople, and there either he or they lie.

(e) Sanctius in Act. 12.

(f) Sanct. ubi supra ex Chrysost.

(g) Augusti. 8. c. 18, 19, 20.

That very night that preceded Peters intended execution, he being fast asleep between his keepers, is waked, loosed and delivered by an Angel. (h) Baronius maketh a great matter of it that the whole Church prayed for Peter whilst he was in prison, and since the like is not related to have been done by them for any other, he will needs from hence infer his primacy, the whole flock praying for her universal Pastor, whereas the reasons of this expression are apparent to be only these two. First, To shew that the Church was praying for him whilst he was sleeping, for after he had taken a part of his first sleep, this night he cometh to the house of John Mark, and they are there still out of their beds and at prayer. Secondly, Because the fruit of their prayers were shewed in his delivery. There is no doubt but constant prayers were made for James by the whole Church whilst he was in prison as well as for Peter, but so much is not expressed, because the story could not answer that relation with relation of his delivery: And Atheism and profaneness would have been ready to have scoffed, that the whole Church should have prayed in vain.

(h) Anna ad ann.

The Angel, and Peter (thus loosed) pass two watches, and then come to the iron gate; there are some that hold these watches to be two prisons, and the word φυλακὴ to be taken as it were passively for places where men are kept, and that Peter was in a Gaol within these two, as in the worst, basest and surest place, and that all were closed with a gate of Iron. But (i) others hold these watches to be guards of men, and that the prison was without the City, between or within the two outmost walls, but in these things it is not material to insist for determination. The latter is far the more probable, both in regard of the signification of the Greek word, and that Josephus mentioneth three walls about Jerusalem, and divers towers in every wall, as also in regard of the greater heightning of the miracle, in that Peter escapeth, not only his own sixteen mens watch, at the prison door, but also two watches more at the two walls gates, and the second which was the Iron gate gave them free passage of its own accord.

(i) Vid. Baron

Peter being cleared of the danger, and left of the Angel, betaketh himself to the house of Mary the mother of John Mark, where when Rhoda upon his knocking and speech averred constantly it was Peter, the whole company there assembled conclude that it was his Angel. Here is some ambiguity about their thus concluding. (k) Some understand it of his tutelar Angel, and from hence would strongly plead the opinion that every man hath his proper and allotted Angel to attend him.

(k) Chrysost. in loc. hom. 27.

But first, we sometimes read of one Angel attending many men.

Secondly, Sometimes of many Angels attending one man.

But thirdly, If the matter may be agitated by reason, if a singular Angel be destined to the attendance of every singular man, what doth that Angel do till his man be born, especially what did all the Angels but Adams and Eves and a few more for many hundreds of years, till the world was full? (l) Others therefore understand it of a messenger, which the Disciples supposed Peter had sent to them upon some errand. But this opinion is easily confuted by Rhoda's owning of Peters voice. (m) There is yet a third opinion as much unwarrantable as either of these; That the Disciples concluded that an Angel by this knocking and voice came to give them notice of Peters death to be near at hand, and that therefore they call him his Angel, and that it was sometimes so used that one Saint should know of anothers death by such revelations. The Jews indeed in their writings make frequent mention of Samael the Angel of death, but they call him so for inflicting it, and not for foretelling it: And we have some examples indeed in the Ecclesiastical history of one man knowing of anothers death by such revelations and apparitions as these: but because those stories are very dubitable in themselves, and that the Scripture

(l) Vid. Salmeron in locum.

(m) Arctius in loc.

Scripture is utterly without any such precedent, this interpretation is but utterly groundless and unwarrantable. The most proper and most easie meaning therefore of those words of the Disciples, It is his Angel, seemeth to be, that they took it for some Angel that had assumed Peters shape or stood at the gate in his resemblance.

Vers. 17. He departed and went to another place.

The place whither he went is not to be known, because not revealed by Scripture. As for his going to Rome, which is the gloss that Papists set upon this place, it is a thing senseless and ridiculous, as was touched before, and might be shewed at large were it worth the labour. I should as soon nominate Antioch for the place whither he went at this time, as any other place at a far distance: For I cannot imagine any time when he and Paul should meet at Antioch, and Paul reprove him, Gal. 2. 11. so likely as this time: for it is most probable that Peter being put to flee for his life, would get out of the territories of Herod for his safety: now there was no place more likely for his safety than in Antioch, where not only the distance of place might preserve him, but the new born Church would seek to secure him.

Vers. 21. And upon a day Herod arraied in Royal apparel.

The acts of this Herod Agrippa after his coming from Rome to Jerusalem and the manner of his death are largely described by Josephus, and therefore we will trace them in him in our Jewish Story.

PART II.

The ROMAN Story.

§. 1. Some Acts of Claudius this year.

THE Roman year was now taken almost wholly up with sacrifices and holy days, even as it is at this day, to the great hinderance of the people in their employments and occasions, therefore Claudius being now Consul abrogated abundance of these days and solemnities, and contracted those that he let remain into as narrow compass as was possible: Many things that Caius had foolishly given away, he remanded, and many again that he had wickedly wronged he repaired: He brought Lycia under servitude, because in a tumult they had slain some Romans, and he joyned it to Pamphylia: and disfranchised a Lycian Ambassador that came to treat about the business, because he could not speak Latin, saying, That it was not fit that he should be a Roman that understood not the Roman tongue: and many others he disfranchaled for other causes, yet on the contrary was he most lavish, he, Messalina and his and her favorites in conferring the Roman freedom and other offices for money, insomuch that he was glad to give an account of it in an oration in Campus Martius. He exhibited some sword plays this year in the Camp.

§. 2. The abominable whoredoms and actions of Messalina the Empress.

She lived in continual lust and uncleanness: and was not content to do so her self, but she forced divers other women to the same course: Nay she caused some women to commit adultery even in the very sight of their own husbands: And those that consented to her villany she honoured and rewarded, and those that did not, she hated and sought to destroy: These her detestable carriages she kept long unknown from Claudius, providing him lasses for his bed, while she took whom she thought good to hers: and killing and taking out of the way, whomsoever she suspected likely to tell Claudius. So slew she Cotonius Justus, to prevent his telling of tales: and the two Julia's upon other occasions.

A Roman Knight was also this year executed as for some conspiracy against the Emperour.

§. 3. An

§. 3. An expedition into England.

This year did Aulus Plautius with much ado lead an Army into Britain: For one Bericus, who had been expelled thence for sedition, had perswaded Claudius to send an Army over: But hardly would the Souldiers be gotten out of Gaul over thither, they being incensed and taking it ill that they should go fight even out of the world: Narcissus being sent by Claudius to the Army, made a speech to them which exasperated them the more, in so much that they made the outcry of Io Saturnialia: or All Masters, and were ready to make head, but at last they willingly followed Plautius: He parted his army into three parts, because that if they were repelled and opposed in one place, they might land in another: They had some trouble in their passage, through cross winds, but they took heart and bare it out, and the rather because a bright light or flame ran from the East toward the West even that way that they were to go: they entred the Island without opposition: for the Britains suspected not their coming: but when they were now entred and they not ready to withstand them, they ran into the woods and bogs, hoping to weary out the Romans with following and seeking them, and so to cause them to return without doing any more.

It cost Plautius a great deal of toil accordingly to find them out, which at last he did, and overcame first Cataractacus and then Togodumnus the two sons of Cynobellinus, who himself was but lately dead.

These fleeing, he took into homage part of the * Boduni, who were subject to the * Catuellani, for the Britains were now subject to divers Kings. He leaving a Garrison there, marched on till he came to a river, which the Britains thought he could not have passed without a bridge, and therefore they incamped carelesly on the other side: But Plautius sent over some * Germane Souldiers, who were accustomed to swim over Rivers, and they suddenly assault the enemy, but wounded not the men, but only their horses that should have drawn their Chariots, and so spoiled and undid the Riders. Then sent he over Flavius Vespasian, who was afterwards Emperor, and Sabinus his brother, who passing the River slew many of the enemies on a suddain: yet did not the rest flee but gave battel the next day, and the fortune of the fight was doubtful till C. Sidius Geta, being in danger to be taken, did so stoutly behave himself, that he got the victory, and triumphal honours, though he were not Consul.

* Glocestershire and Oxfordshire.
* Buckinghamshire and Hartfordshire. See Camdens Britan.
* Κελτὸς.

Then did the Britains betake themselves to the Thames towards the place where it falls into the Sea and flows high, and they easily get over, knowing the convenientest places: but the Romans following them were in danger: when the Germans had again swum the River, and others had passed at a bridge above, they fell upon the Britains on all parts, and made a great slaughter: but in pursuit of them they fell into some marishes, and so lost many of their men.

Upon this mishap, and because the Britains were exceedingly exasperated for the death of Togodumnus, and made still greater preparations for war, Plautius proceeded no further, but garrisoning those places that he had gotten, he sends for Claudius: for so he had been commanded to do if he came to a pinch.

Claudius receiving the tidings, prepares for the expedition, and among many other things brings divers Elephants along with him, and coming to his army at the Thames, and passing the River he fights a pitcht battle and obtains the victory, and takes in * Camalodunum the ‖ chief City of Cynobellinus; disarms the Britains, leaves them that were conquered to be governed, and the rest to be conquered by Plautius, and so goes for Rome, where the Senate gives him the title of Britannicus, appoints triumphs and Statues for him, and honors for Messalina.

* Maldon.

§. 3. A Whorish trick of Messalina.

Little did she either deserve either honour or respect, but fear and flattery regard not desert. Among her various and continual adulteries, she cast her eyes of lust upon one Mnester, an Actor or Player, a man that had been very intimate with Caius, and never the better to be thought of for that. This man she sollicites to her bed, with words promises and gifts, but prevails not with him, not for any honesty that was in the man, but for fear of the displeasure of Claudius: When the shameless strumpet could not prevail with all her sollicitations, she goeth to Claudius, and desires him to command Mnester to do what she would have him: which Claudius did, not knowing what he commanded.

manded. And then did Mneſter adulterate the Empreſs ſo freely from fear of Claudius, that he thought it had been the Emperors expreſs mind he ſhould ſo do. And by divers other men did Meſſalina practiſe the very ſame project. And to that impudency did ſhe grow in her whoredom with this Mneſter, that when the Senate had commanded that all the braſs coin that bare Caius his Image ſhould be melted, and this in deteſtation of Caius, ſhe cauſed pictures of Mneſter to be made of it.

PART III.

The JEWISH Story.

AGRIPPA returned the laſt year to Jeruſalem, where as we obſerved and ſaw before, he performed much ceremoniouſneſs, and changed the Highprieſt, ſlew James and impriſoned Peter. Beſides theſe things he remitted a tribute to the men of Jeruſalem, for their kindneſs in entertaining of him: he obtained the letters of Petronius to the men of Dor for the removal of Cæſars ſtatue, which ſome ſeditious men had ſet up in their Synagogue: He removed Cantharas from the Highprieſt again, and placed Matthias in his ſtead. He impriſoned Silas the Maſter of his Horſe for his free diſcourſe concerning his ſervice done to him in the time of his calamity and poverty, but on his birth day feſtival he inlarged him again, where he continuing ſtill in the ſame freedom of ſpeech, he impriſoned him again. He began to fortifie Jeruſalem, and to make it exceeding ſtrong, but Marſus (the preſent Governour of Syria in ſteed of Petronius) got letters from Claudius to ſtop his work, as ſuſpitious towards innovation. He was exceedingly obſervant of his Countries Laws, and much care and coſt he beſtowed on ſacrifices, yet was he challenged by one Simon* that took on him to be a teacher, for an unholy man and one unfit to come into the Temple: which Simon he ſent for to Cæſarea, where he queſtioned with him about the words, and diſſwaded him without puniſhment but with a reward.

* It may be this ſtory aimeth ſomething at Simon Peter.

He built ſumptuous things in Berytus, as a Theater, Amphitheater, Baths, Porches, and ſuch like magnificences, and ſet 700 and 700 condemned men to fight together for paſtime, and ſo deſtroyed them. From thence he went to Tiberias of Galilee whither divers Kings came to him to viſit: And ſo did Marſus alſo the Governor of Syria; but he ſeeing ſo many Kings together with him (for they were five) he ſuſpected the matter as tending to innovation, and therefore he commanded them home. Herod after this went down to Cæſarea, and there he made ſports and ſhows in honour of Cæſar; and on the ſecond day being moſt gorgeouſly apparelled, and the Sun ſhining very bright upon his bright cloathing, his flatterers ſaluted him for a god, and cried out to him; Be merciful unto us, hitherto have we feared thee as a man, but henceforward we will acknowledge thee to be of a nature more excellent than mortal frailty can attain unto. The wretched King reproved not this abominable flattery, but did digeſt it: And not long after he eſpied his Owl which the German had foretold to be the Omen of his death. And ſuddainly he was ſeized with miſerable gripings in his belly, which came upon him with vehement extremity, whereupon turning himſelf towards his friends, Lo, ſaith he, he whom ye eſteem for a God is doomed to die; and deſtiny ſhall evidently confute you in thoſe flattering and falſe ſpeeches which you lately uſed concerning me. For I who have been adored by you as one immortal, am now under the hands of death: And ſo his griefs and torments increaſing, his death drew on a pace, whereupon he was removed into the Palace, and all the people put on ſackcloth and lay on the ground praying for him, which he beholding could not refrain from tears: And ſo after five days he gave up the Ghoſt being now 54 years old, and having raigned ſeven years, four years in the time of Caius and three under Claudius: He left a ſon behind him of ſeventeen years old named alſo Agrippa, and three daughters, Bernice, Mariamme and Druſilla. Before his death was publiſhed, his brother Herod the Prince of Chalcis, and Chelchias the Kings Lieutenant, cauſed Silas to be put to death.

TO THE READER.

IT was my desire, and so it was my hope that this poor Treatise, should not have gone abroad into the world so thinly and so alonely as it doth, but that it would have had a mate to have gone forth with it, which was bred and born and grew up with it, even till the time that it should go forth: but then it stumbled at the threshold, got a lameness, and so was forced to stay at home. My design in reference to the affairs of the Temple, when first I undertook a work of that nature, was first to describe the place, and to give the character and platform of the Temple it self, and then to have something to say about the service. And accordingly with no small pains and study, out of the Scripture, and the highest Antiquities of the Jews, I drew up in a large Tractate and Discourse, as also in a very large Map and Figure, a full, plain, punctual, and exact prospect and description (if I may have liberty to say so much of mine own Work) of the Temple at Jerusalem, especially, as it stood in those times, when our Saviour himself in humane flesh did resort thither. Its Situation, Dimensions, Platform, Fabrick and Furniture, both within and without: the Walls, Gates, Courts, Cloisters, Chambers and Buildings that were about it. The Altar, Lavers, Stations for Men, Slaughter places for Beasts, and all the Offices belonging to it: with observation of all or most of those places in either Testament, that speak concerning it, or any of the parts of it. A delineation so copious and plain, of all the particulars in that holy ground, that had it had the hap to have come to the publick view, I should not have feared to have made the Reader the Judge and Censor, upon the nature and use of the thing, and whether it might have proved of any benefit and advantage yea or no.

But that hap of becoming publick, is not happened to it: for the Schemetical delineation of the Temple, and of the buildings about it, in the Map, and the Verbal description of them in the Written Tract, do so mutually face and interchangeably refer one to the other, (the Map helping to understand the Description in the Book, and the Book helping to understand the Delineation in the Map) that they may not be sent forth into publick apart or one without the other, but must needs appear (if ever they appear) both together. For this purpose have I waited very many months since Book and Map were both finished, (nay many months before I would suffer this present Tract to go to the Press) for the Ingraving or Cutting of the Map in Brass, that it might be Printed, and so it and that Treatise and this might have come forth at once, as it was my desire and mine intention. But I have so far failed of my desire and expectation, and find so little fruit of all my long waiting, that to this very hour I have not obtained so much as the least hope of the Maps Ingraving at all, or the least probability when it will be begun. I have therefore laid both those aside in suppression, the one to wait for the speeding of the other, (if that will ever be) and both to see how this speeds which is sent abroad, which it may be had been as good to have staid at home as they do, and not to have been ſo forward. That reſts in the Readers manner of entertainment, Curteſie or Cenſure: I ſhall not uſe many words to Court the one or Deprecate the other: Learned ingenuity will be Courteous, though not Flattered: and proud or unlearned cenſoriouſneſs will be crabbed, unleſs I would be a Spaniel: and it may be I ſhould be then kickt too. I ſhall only ſay thus much of what I have done, I have deſired to benefit, and I have ſpared no pains, I have walked in paths very rugged and very untroden: if I have ſtumbled or erred, it is no wonder; the way full of difficulty and I of humane frailty: And as for many things, which I have left, not explained, as it may be the Reader would have deſired, it was becauſe I ſuppoſed all along, as I drew up this tract, that the other would have come forth with it, in which divers things, which will be thought wanting here, are more fully handled and ſupplied.

The TEMPLE SERVICE as it ſtood in the days of Our SAVIOUR.

Deſcribed out of the SCRIPTURES, and the eminenteſt Antiquities of the JEWS.

CHAP. I.

Of the different Holineſs of the ſeveral parts of the Temple.

THE degrees of the Holineſs of places among the Jews, by their own reckoning were (a) theſe eleven.

1. The land of Iſrael was more holy than other lands. Not to mention the many appropriations, fixed to that land by them, which they will have no other land under Heaven to partake of, [as (b) that the ſpirit of Propheſie, (c) Ordination, (d) appointing the New Moons, &c. ſhould be no where elſe) theſe two or three peculiarities they obſerve by name, as proper only to that very ſoil and no other. That the Omer or firſt reaped Sheaf and other firſt Fruits that were to be offered, and the two Loaves of Shew-bread which were to ſtand continually before the Lord, might not be taken and made of the Corn of any Country under Heaven, but only of the Corn that grew in the Land of Iſrael.

(b) R. Sol in Jonah. 1.

(c) Maymon. in Sanhed. per. 4.

(d) Idem in Kidduſh hhodeſh. per. 1. & per. 5.

2. Walled Cities were more holy than the reſt of the Land: For, 1. Lepers were not ſuffered to be in them, but were turned out, 2 Kings 7. 2, 3. and this their turning out was called (e) שלוח Shilluah: and it may be poſſibly the fountain Siloam took its name from ſuch a thing, it being without the City, a place whither ſuch poor creatures were ſent. 2. A dead body carried out of the walls, might not be brought in again: מסבבים בתוכה ערך מה שירצו : they might carry it up and down in the City, as they thought good, but if it were once carried out of the gates it might not be brought in again. 3. A dead corps was not to be buried within the walls, Luke 7. 12. And none [ſaith (f) Rabbi Nathan] were buried within the walls of Jeruſalem, but the Kings of the houſe of David, and the Propheteſs Huldah.

(e) Maymon in hiath Mikdaſh per. 3.

(f) Avoth. R. Nathan. per. 34.

3. Within Jeruſalem was holyer than within any other walled City; for (g) there they might eat the Peace-offerings, the firſt fruits, and the ſecond tithe, which they might not eat in any City elſe whatſoever: And there alone (while Jeruſalem was theirs] did they eat the Paſsover.

(g) Rambam in Kelim per. 1.

4. The mountain of the Temple was more holy than Jeruſalem; for זבים וזבות נדות ויולדות Men or Women that had Iſſues or Fluxes, and Women that were unclean in their menſtruis, menſtruis, and upon child-bearing, might not come in thither; yet ſuch were in Jeruſa-

(h) Maymon. ubi ſupr. lem continually. And the reaſon of this their reſtraint was (h) becauſe they made that unclean that either they ſate or lay upon, yea even the place where they ſtood: which in this circumſtance was a deeper defiling, than defiling by the dead, for a dead corps might [if there were occaſion] be brought in hither, [as to ſave the dead body of an eminent perſon from violence, and as they give the example of Moſes carrying the bones of Joſeph with him, even within the camp of Levi,] but one of theſe unclean perſons might not come in here.

5. The חיל chel, or alley was holyer than the mountain of the Houſe; for ſtrangers and thoſe that were defiled by the dead might not come within it, which they might do into the other. By ſtrangers, here, we are not to underſtand Proſelytes that were circumciſed and baptized, for they were as Iſraelites to all purpoſes; but ſtrangers, were ſuch, as were of other Nations, that were not come to that conformity with the Jews in Religion; were they Proſelytes of the gate, or were they ſtrangers in the moſt proper ſenſe: For we ſhall obſerve hereafter, that even Gentiles unproſelyted, yea while they were yet Idolaters, might and did ſometimes bring their offerings to the Temple, and ſo might come into the mountain of the Houſe; and hence, that is ordinarily called among Chriſtian writers, The Court of the Gentiles: But though they might come within the mountain of the Houſe, yet might they not enter into the chel upon pain of death, which was ſignified to them by inſcriptions upon pillars at the entrance into it, as is obſerved in its place.

And from hence roſe that tumult againſt Paul, Act. 21. who being himſelf, and four others, attending upon their purification, in the court of the Women, ſhaving their heads, and burning their hair in the Nazarites room, and doing what was to be done by thoſe whoſe vow was out; an bubbub ariſeth upon ſuppoſal that one of the four had been a Gentile, namely Trophimus an Epheſian, whom they had ſeen walking with Paul in the City, and indignity was taken at this, as if Paul had brought in a ſtranger within the חיל chel.

6. The Court of the Women was more holy than the חיל for טבול יום Tibbul iom might not come in thither, that is, whoſoever was defiled with ſuch an uncleanneſs, as required his waſhing, and his Sun going down, before he was clean; though he had waſhed, yet if the Sun were not ſet, he or ſhe might not come in there.

(i) Id. ubi ſupra, & Kelim. per. 1. (k) Id. in Mechoſeret capparah per. 1. (l) Joſeph. de bell. 5. cap. 14. (m) Toſapheta in Erachim per. 2.

7. The Court of Iſrael was more holy than the Court of the Women, (i) for מחוסרי כיפורים they might not enter into it, that were, indeed, acquitted from their uncleanneſs, but had not as yet their atonement made for their purification: (k) There were four ſorts of theſe, the Leper, a man that had an Iſſue: a Woman that had had been in her Separation, and ſhe that had born a Child: (l) As for the Women they might not go into the Court at all, (m) unleſs it were when they brought a ſacrifice: but men who were capable of going in at other times, yet might they not enter the Court in this condition, till their atonement made.

(n) Piske Toſaph. ad Mid.

8. The Court of the Prieſts was more holy than the Court of Iſrael: for no Iſraelite might come in there but upon neceſſity: and that was in theſe three occaſions (n), either for the laying of his hands upon the head of the ſacrifice to be ſlain, or for ſlaying of it, or for waving of ſome part of it being killed.

9. Between the Porch and the Altar was more holy than the lower part of the Court; for even no Prieſt might come there that had a blemiſh, or bareheaded, that is, without his bonnet or without his vail: for they uſed the covering of their heads as one moſt ſolemn rite in their greateſt devotions, as ſhall be ſhewed afterward.

10. The Temple was more holy than that: becauſe none might go in thither, unleſs with waſhed hands and feet: which up and down the Court they might more tolerably do with both unwaſhed, if they did not meddle with ſome part of the ſervice.

11. The Oracle or within the vail was moſt holy of all: becauſe that none might go in thither, but only the High-prieſt, and that but one day in the year only.

Thus many riſings and degrees of Holineſs were in that Land, and in theſe places; now, and many hundreds of years ago raked up in as many, and many more degrees of miſery, defilement and deſolation. The blinded Nation deſpiſing the life and marrow of thoſe holy things, whereby theſe places received all their holineſs and honour; and ſo loſing the things, places, and holineſs it ſelf.

(o) R. Sol. in Kelim. per. 1. Maym. in Beth habbitch. per. 7.

The Jews do parallel Jeruſalem and the Temple, to the Camp of Iſrael in the wilderneſs and the Tabernacle, in theſe proportions. (o) From the gates of Jeruſalem to the mountain of the Houſe, was the camp of Iſrael. From the gate of the mountain of the Houſe, to the gate of Nicanor, the camp of Levi: and from the gate of Nicanor inward, the camp of the divine glory.

SECT.

SECT. I.

How the unclean were kept from the Temple.

UPON the obſervation of what perſons were prohibited acceſs to the Temple, leſt they ſhould defile it, two things methodically do come to hand to be conſidered thereupon, as referring to it; and thoſe are, 1. What courſe was taken for the prohibiting of the unclean from coming there. And, 2. What was the penalty of thoſe that were in their uncleanneſs, yet would dare to come.

The former inquiry is not of ſo eaſie reſolution as is the latter, and the reaſon is, becauſe thouſands of perſons might come, that were not in a fit caſe to have come thither; and yet it was impoſſible, without immodeſty and uncivility, unleſs it were by oath, to diſcover in what caſe they were. There were indeed Porters and Guards at the gates, but thouſands of unclean perſons might paſs them, and they never the wiſer, unleſs they ſhould have put the paſſengers to an oath, which I believe was never yet dreamed of by any writer that hath handled the Jews cuſtoms. Men in iſſues of blood or ſeed, and women in their ordinary or extraordinary fluxes, could neither be diſcerned by their face in what caſe they were, nor do we find that they were ever at all examined, much leſs ſworn or ſearched. They might repel and keep back, indeed, what or whoſoever carried with them viſible defiling, as one that appeared to be a Leper, one that came with things about him that might not be brought into the Temple: or they might keep back thoſe that would go beyond their bounds: or they might have an eye to any that came ſuſpiciouſly either to ſteal or to diſturb the Service: or they might check thoſe that ſhewed any lightneſs at their coming in, or being entred: or they might direct thoſe that were not well acquainted with the place what to do and how to behave themſelves there: or they might admoniſh all that came, to take heed of coming there if they were unclean: But as for keeping out all that were in any uncleanneſs, and ſuch as whereby the place might receive defilement, it was a thing ſo far impoſſible, that it is far from being imaginable. A man might have touched a dead Corps, or might have touched a Woman in her ſeparation, or ſuffered Gonorrhœa in the night, or twenty ſuch like caſes as theſe, and he cometh to enter into the Temple, and no one in the world knew how the caſe was with him but himſelf, how ſhould this man be poſſibly diſcovered or reſtrained, unleſs it were by the ſpirit of Propheſie, or by giving him an oath, which power we never read the Porters to have had, nor is there any ground or colour to ſuppoſe ſuch a thing.

The ſecurity of the place therefore from ſuch pollutions lay more in the ſeverity of the penalties that were ſentenced againſt and inflicted upon thoſe that were deprehended offenders in this kind, than it did in any poſſible care, or practical prevention they could uſe that they ſhould not come there: And as the rigour and ſtrictneſs of Laws, and execution upon offenders in other caſes, is the ſureſt prevention of ſuch offences, the like was the way of caution and prevention here.

SECT. II.

Penalties doomed upon unclean Perſons found in the Temple. Death by the hand of Heaven, and Cutting off.

FOur ſad and ſevere puniſhments [for puniſhments I cannot but call them all] were ſeverally allotted, two in ſentence or doom and two in execution, upon thoſe that preſumingly by their uncleanneſs, did violate the Holineſs of the place and ſervice, ſome upon one degree of offending, and ſome upon another: And thoſe were theſe,

מכות מרדות The Rebels beating.

1. There is a penalty of which the Jews do ſpeak exceeding often, due as they hold to divers ſorts of offenders, and amongſt other, to ſome of thoſe that we are ſpeaking of, namely ſuch as being unclean, yet would for all that go into the Temple, and they do call it Death by the hand of Heaven [or by the hand of God, (a) for they do very commonly call God Heaven,] (b) An unclean perſon, [ſaith Maymony,] that ſerveth in the Sanctuary profaneth his ſervice, and is guilty of Death by the Hand of Heaven, though he ſtay not there. And again (c) A Prieſt that ſerveth and waſheth not his hands and feet

(a) Vid. Eliæ Levit. in Tesbi in שמים.
(b) Maymon. in Hilch Mikdaſh.

(d) Ibid. per. 4. the morning, he is guilty of Death by the hand of Heaven. And again, (d) Men or Women with Fluxes, Women in their Separation and upon Childbirth, or one unclean by a creeping thing or by a carcaſe, or the like, may not deal with the ſervice, nor go into the Court: But if they do, they are liable to cutting off for their going in thither, and to Death by the hand of Heaven for their ſerving. And divers other inſtances and examples might be given in other delinquencies and offences, to which Death by the hand of Heaven is doomed as the proper puniſhment of them, but theſe may be ſufficient to our preſent purpoſe.

2. There is likewiſe as frequent mention, if not more, among the Hebrew Writers, of another doom or penalty upon divers offenders [and amongſt others upon thoſe of whom we are ſpeaking, who would go into the Temple in their uncleanneſs, knowing how the caſe was with them] which they call כרת kereth or Cutting off: And the Talmud in the Treatiſe Kerithuth which bears the name upon this very ſubject doth reckon up ſix and thirty offences to which, if wilfully committed, this penalty accrewed. It may not be amiſs to give the matter at large in their own words, and that the rather becauſe we have not only ſome occaſion to look after them now, but ſhall have again alſo, when we come to treat concerning ſin-offerings, which was a part of their ſervice, and which, as we ſhall ſee then and even in the words now before us, had ſomewhat to ſay to the matter of Cutting off. Their words are theſe.

(e) Kerithuth. per. 1. (e) There are ſix and thirty cuttings off in the Law: He that lieth with his mother, or his fathers wife, or his daughter in Law, or with a male, or with a beaſt, or a woman lying with a beaſt: or a man lying with a woman and her daughter, or with another mans wife, or with his own ſiſter, or his fathers ſiſter, or his mothers ſiſter, or his wifes ſiſter, or his brothers wife, or his fathers brothers wife, or with a woman in her ſeparation: or he that blaſphemeth, or comitteth Idolatry, or giveth his ſeed to Molech, or uſeth Sorcery, or profaneth the Sabbath, or eateth holy things in his uncleanneſs, or that cometh into the Sanctuary he being unclean: or that eateth fat or blood, or what is left of the ſacrifice, or any ſacrificed thing not offered in ſeaſon, or that killeth or offereth up a ſacrifice out of the Court, or that eateth leaven at the Paſſover, or that eateth ought on the day of Expiation, or doth any work on it: or that makes oil or incenſe like the holy, or that anoints with holy oil: that delayeth the Paſſover or Circumciſion for which there are affirmative precepts: All theſe if done wilfully, are liable to cutting off, and if done ignorantly, then to the fixed ſin-offering: and if it be unknown, whether he did it or no, then to a ſuſpenſive treſpaſs-offering: but only he that defiles the Sanctuary and its holy things, for he is bound to an aſcending or deſcending offering.

Now that we may the better underſtand what Death by the hand of Heaven, and Cutting off mean; we are firſt to take notice, that neither of them was any penalty inflicted by the hand or ſentence of man, but both of them do import a liableneſs to the wrath and vengeance of the Lord in their ſeveral kinds. And the Jews do ever account Cutting off to be the higher and more eminent degree of Divine vengeance: As to ſpare more evidences of this, which might be given copiouſly, this paſſage of Maymonides is ſufficient, and it is remarkable, when he ſaith (f) Is it poſſible for a Prieſt that ſerveth in his uncleanneſs, to ſtay ſo little in the Court שלא יתחייב כרת אלא מיתה ביד שמים בלבד As that he ſhould be guilty of death by the hand of Heaven only, and not guilty of cutting off? He had had thoſe words but a little before which were cited even now. An unclean perſon that ſerveth in the Sanctuary profaneth his Service, and is guilty of death by the hand of Heaven, although he ſtay not there: and then he comes on, and is it poſſible, (ſaith he) that he ſhould ſtay ſo little as to be guilty only of death by the hand of Heaven, and not to be guilty of cutting off? Apparently ſhewing that cutting off was the deeper degree and die of guilt and vengeance by the hand of God, and Divine indignation.

(f) Maym. in Biath. Mikdaſh. per. 4.

By Death by the hand of Heaven in their ſenſe therefore is to be apprehended ſome ſuch a ſodain avengeful ſtroke as the Lord ſhewed upon Nadab, and Abihu, or Ananias and Saphira to take them away. And this may the better be collected by two paſſages uſual in the Rabbins about this matter: Firſt, In that they give up the offence of the Prieſts drinking wine before they went to ſerve, [which is held to have been the offence of Nadab and Abihu;] (g) to death by the hand of Heaven, which argues that they mean ſuch a kind of ſtroke as they two had. And ſecondly, In that whereſoever the Law enjoyneth Aaron and his ſons, and the people about the affairs of the Sanctuary, they ſhall or they ſhall not do thus or thus, leſt they die; they interpret this of death by the hand of Heaven.

(g) Id. b. per. 1.

(h) Kimchi in Eſay 38.

(i) R. Sol. in Gen. 17.

(k) Aruch. in כרת

But what to underſtand by Cutting off, is not ſo readily agreed among them: (h) Kimchi alledgeth it, as the opinion of their Doctors, That Dying before fifty years old is death by cutting off. [Compare Joh. 8. 57.] (i) Rabbi Solomon ſaith, It is to die childleſs, and to die before his time: Baal Aruch giveth this diſtinction between Cutting off, and Death by the hand of Heaven, that (k) Cutting off is of himſelf and of his children, but Death by the hand of Heaven, is of himſelf, but not of his children. But mean it which of theſe you will, or all theſe together, or [which may have good probability to conceive] a liableneſs liableneſs to cutting off from the life of the world to come; both this, and Death by the Hand of Heaven, were held by that Nation, with whom the phraſes were ſo much in uſe, to mean, not any cenſure or puniſhment inflicted by man, but an impending vengeance of God, and a continual danger and poſſibility when indignation ſhould ſeize upon him that was faln under theſe gilts: Anathema Maran Atha, one under a curſe whenſoever the Lord ſhall come to inflict it: as *Joh.*3.18,36.

SECT. III.

Penalties inflicted upon unclean perſons found in the Temple. Whipping and the Rebels beating.

IT was not a ſmall awe, that this might work in the hearts of the people, towards their reſtraining from going into the Sanctuary in their uncleanneſs, to have this impreſſed and inculcated upon them [as it was continually,] that ſuch a venture did hazard them both body and ſoul, and brought them ipſo facto into Gods dreadful diſpleaſure, and into undoubted danger of accrewing judgment.

But did they let the offender thus alone, that had offended, as if he was fallen under the guilt of death, by the Hand of Heaven, or under the guilt of cutting off, that they had no more to do with him, but leave him to the juſtice of God, and to judgment, when it ſhould fall upon him? Many a wretch would make ſleight of this matter, and becauſe ſentence upon his evil work was not executed ſpeedily, his heart would be fully ſet in him to do ſo again, as *Eccleſ.*8.11. Therefore they let not the Delinquent ſo eſcape, but as he had fallen under the wrath of God, ſo they alſo brought him under a penalty by the hand of man. And this penalty was twofold, either מלקות or מכות מרדות whipping by the appointment of the Judges, or mawling and beating by the people.

1. There was the penalty of מלקות whipping or ſcourging, upon the cenſure of the Judges, according to the Law, *Deut.*25.2. Where he was to receive forty ſtripes: but their Tradition brought it to forty ſave one, 2 *Cor.*11.24. And the reaſon of this was, becauſe they would make a hedge to the Law, and whereas that commands that they ſhould not give to a Delinquent that was whipt, above forty ſtripes, leſt their brother ſhould ſeem vile unto them, they abated one of forty to make ſure to keep within compaſs: The meaſure and manner of their whipping is largely deſcribed in the Treatiſe Maccoth, thus in their own words (a) How many ſtripes do they give him? [ſaith the Miſhuch there.] Why, forty lacking one: As it is ſaid by a certain number, forty ſtripes; that is a number near to forty: Rabbi Judah ſaith, he is beaten with full forty; and where hath he the odd one above thirty nine? Between his ſhoulders: They allot him not ſtripes, but ſo as they might be triplicated: They allot him to receive forty, he hath had ſome of them, and they ſay he is not able to bear forty, then he is quit: they allot him to receive eighteen, and as he is in whipping they ſay he is able to bear forty, yet he is quit. How do they whip him? His hands are tied to two pillars or poſts, and the Officer of the Court lays hold of his garments, and rip or rent, it is no matter; he pulls them down till he have bared his breaſt. Now there was a ſtone lay behind him, upon which the Officer of the Court ſtood, with a whip of whit-leather in his hand, platted four plats, and two laſhes hanging by it; the handle was a hand bredth long, and the whip a hand bredth broad, and the end of it raught to his belly: A third part of his ſtripes he gave him before [on his belly,] two parts behind: And he beats him not ſtanding nor ſitting, but bowed down, as it is ſaid, The Judge ſhall cauſe him to lie down, and he ſtrikes him with one hand with all his might. And in the mean while, one ſtanding by, reads or ſays theſe portions of Scripture: But if thou wilt not obſerve to do all the words of this Law, &c. Then the Lord will make thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy ſeed, &c. Deut. 28. 58, 59. And therefore ye ſhall keep the words of this Covenant, &c. And he concludes with, But he being full of compaſſion forgives iniquity, and deſtroyeth not, Pſal.78.28.

(a) *Maccoth. per.*3.

This was the manner of their ſcourging; a very ſharp penalty, thirteen laſhes with a three-laſh whip, which by that triplication, aroſe to forty ſave one, or if the number were allotted leſs, yet it was as many ſtripes as they conceived the party could bear.

2. There was the penalty of מכות מרדות The Rebels beating, the beating or the mawling by the people; which was a terrible rugged beating by all the people, without any ſentence of the Judges paſſed upon him at all, and without any meaſure: As in divers caſes, if a man were deprehended faulty in ſuch or ſuch an offence, the people made no more ado, but fell upon him pell mell, with fiſts, ſtaves or ſtones, and mawled him unmeaſurably, and very often to death: Rabbi Nathan deſcribes it thus, (b) The beating according to the Law is, of thoſe that tranſgreſs againſt negative precepts, and it is by meaſure, and for admonition, and with a three corded whip: But he that tranſgreſſeth againſt affirmative ſpeeches, they beat him till his life depart, and not with a threefold whip. And likewiſe, whoſoever tranſgreſſeth againſt the words of the wiſe men, they beat him without number and meaſure, and they call it מכות מרדות, The Rebels beating, becauſe he hath rebelled againſt the words of the Law,

(b) Aruch in מרד

(c) Gloſſ. in Maym. in Sobbath. per. 1. Law, and againſt the words of the Scribes. The reaſon of this beating, (c) [ſaith another Jew] is becauſe he tranſgreſſed againſt a prohibition of theirs, in a thing which hath its foundation in the Law, and he is בן מרדות A Son of Rebellion: The frequent taking up of ſtones by the People to have ſtoned our Saviour, and that incurſion upon him, *Mat.*26.67. and upon Stephen, *Act.*7.57,58. for blaſphemy as they would have it, and upon Paul, Act. 21. 31. for defiling the Temple, as they ſuppoſed, were of this nature.

Thus he that committed a tranſgreſſion for which he became liable either to Death by the hand of Heaven, or to Cutting off, he did not eſcape barely with that liableneſs, but either he was to be whipt, or thus mawled, or in ſome caſes was to ſuffer death by the ſentence of the Judges: [d] Every negative precept [ſaith Maymony] upon which they become liable to death by the hand of Heaven, they are beaten for it: Much more where there is a liableneſs to cutting off, which is the greater guilt. And the ſame Author [e] reckons eighteen offences, that fell under liableneſs to death by the Hand of Heaven, and for which the Offenders were whipt: and twenty one that fell under liableneſs to cutting off, and for which the Offenders were alſo whipt, and were not put to death by the Judges.

[d] Maym. in Biath. Mikdaſh. per. 4.
[e] Id. in San. per 19.

Amongſt thoſe tranſgreſſions that deſerved theſe penalties; going into the Sanctuary in uncleanneſs; fell under as many of them as any one offence whatſoever: It were too tedious to inſiſt upon all particulars, let us take up theſe few, and gueſs and conjecture of the reſt by them: A Prieſt or any other that went into the Court being unclean, fell under the guilt of being cut off, and if they ſerved there in their uncleanneſs, the Prieſt at the Altar, and any other perſon in laying on of his hands on the ſacrifice, or waving any part of it, they then became liable to death by the hand of Heaven. And ſuch a Prieſt being deprehended thus faulty, [f] they never brought him before the Sanhedrin; [g] but the young men of the Prieſts thruſt him out of the Court, and daſht out his brains with the billets: And the like they did by the other perſons; A Leper that entred into the Mountain of the Houſe was beaten with eighty ſtripes: He that was defiled by the dead, or unclean for a day, if he went into the Court of the Women, he was to be beaten with the Rebels beating: And ſo was he that came in, having eaten or drunk any unclean thing, or after a ſeven days uncleanneſs would go into the Court of Iſrael before his atonement was made. And he that brought in a Veſſel, or came in any Clothes which one that was defiled by the dead had toucht, was to be whipt. And not to multiply particulars, whoſoever came within the holy Ground, being unclean, and knowing of it, and yet would come in, he incurred the guilt of cutting off ipſo facto; and if he were diſcovered, and the matter proved by witneſs, he was ſure either to be whipt, or elſe to be mawled with the Rebels beating, the former always moſt terrible, the latter deadly very oft. It is indeed a common ſaying among the Talmudick Writers; that for ſuch or ſuch offences, though a man be not whipt, yet is he beaten with the Rebels beating, as if the latter were the gentler caſtigation; they do not mean, that the Rebels beating was the leſs penalty, but they intend this, that though there be no expreſs in the Law, that appoints his whipping, yet the decrees of the Wiſe-men which he hath broken, appoint him to be beaten: [h] Whoſoever had incurred the guilt of being Cut off, after he is whipt is acquitted from that guilt: as it is ſaid, Leſt thy brother be vile in thine eyes: Behold after he is whipt he is thy brother again: But the beating with the Rebels ſtripes, very ordinarily coſt the life.

[f] Id in Biath. Mikd. ubi ſupr.
[g] Talm. in Schedr. per. 9.
[h] Talm. in Maccoth. per. 3.

This then was the ſure guard of the Temple, that kept it from defilement and pollution: the dreadful penalties that were ſure to light upon thoſe that were diſcovered to be unclean, and to know ſo much, and yet to have dared to enter there: Nay, he that knew not of his uncleanneſs, if he came in there, was not ſo entirely excuſed by this his ignorance, but that whenſoever he came to know in what caſe he was, he was bound to bring an Offering for this his ſin, and ſo was he to do in the other caſes [whoſe witting and wilful committing them, deſerved cutting off] if he did any of them unwillingly and not knowing: Did he eat fat or blood, and not know what he eat, or come into the Sanctuary in uncleanneſs, and not know that he was unclean, or commit any of the other tranſgreſſions mentioned, and not know that he tranſgreſſed, there was an Offering appointed to atone for him, which he was to bring as ſoon as he came to know that he had miſdone: but he that knowingly and wilfully would run into thoſe faults, there was no Sacrifice to atone for him, but he fell under the indignation of God, and liableneſs to divine vengeance, and humane penalty, and expectation when it would ſeize upon him: And to this the Apoſtle writing to the Hebrews who were very well acquainted with theſe things, ſeemeth to allude in thoſe words, *Heb.*10.11. If we ſin wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there is no more ſacrifice for ſin, but a certain fearful looking for of judgement and fiery indignation, &c. Heb. 10.26,27.

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

Of the ſeveral ranks of Prieſts, and ſeveral Officers of the Temple.

THE diſtinction of the Prieſts that attended the Temple Service, was into theſe ſeveral ranks and degrees.

1. The High-Prieſt, of whom there is ſo known, and common mention in the Scripture.

2. (a) The Sagan or ſecond Prieſt, as *Jer.*52.24. where the Chaldee Paraphraſt uſeth the word Sagan; and which word in this ſenſe, is moſt ordinary in all Jewiſh Writers; betokening the Vice-high-prieſt, or one next ſubſtitute to him. (a) Vide Maym. in kele hammik. daſh. per. 4.

3. There were two Katholici קתוליקין which were ſubſtitutes to the Sagan, as the Sagan was to the High-prieſt.

4. There were ſeven Amarcalin אמרכלין [the word is uſed by the Chaldee Paraphraſts exceeding often.]

5. There (b) were three Gizbarin גוברין or Treaſurers, theſe were in a manner under the Amarcalin. (b) Talm. in Shekalim per. 5.

6. The ראש המשמר chief Prieſt of every courſe that ſerved interchangeably its week.

7. The ראש בית אב chief of any family that ſerved in that courſe.

8. And laſtly, there was כהן הדיוט An ordinary Prieſt, or one that was of none of theſe ranks, but an inferiour.

Now theſe degrees were one above another as they are named, the High-prieſt above the Sagan, the Sagan above the Katholici, the Katholici above the Amarcalin, the Amarcalin above the Gizbarin, the Gizbarin above the chief of any courſe, and the chief of the courſe above the Head of any Family.

Theſe ſeveral ranks [of the five firſt eſpecially,] were as a conſtant and ſtanding Council, for the continual regulating and ordering of the Affairs of the Temple Service and attendance there.

Theſe are thoſe that are called the Beth din ſhel cohanim, The Conſeſſus or Conſiſtory of Prieſts: ſpoken of by the Talmud in the Treatiſe Ketubboth in theſe words, אחת אלמנת ישראל ואחת אלמנת כהן כתבתה מנה בית דין של כהנים היו גובין תוו לבתולה ולא מוחו חכמים ביום. (c) It is all one whether ſhe be the Widow of an Iſraelite, or the Widow of a Prieſt, her contractive dower is a Maneh, The Conſiſtory of Prieſts demanded 400 Zuzims for a Virgin; and the Wiſe Men did not contradict them: which may be confirmed by that paſſage of Maimonides: (d) who relating how Women after Fluxes and Childbearing, brought Money to buy Turtles and Pigeons, and put it בשופר into the Treaſury, אין בית דין של כהנים עומדים משם עד שובלו, &c. ſaith that the Conſiſtory of Prieſts departed not thence till they had taken out all the money, and offered Turtles and Pigeons anſwerable to it. (c) Ketubboth. per. 1. (d) Maym. in mechoſere Caparah. per. 1.

And theſe alſo we may well underſtand to be the זקני כהונה (e) Elders of the Prieſthood, to whom the High-prieſt was delivered by the Sanhedrin, that they might prepare him for the ſervice of the day of Expiation, and theſe were the בוליטי Counſellers of the Temple, of which we have had occaſion to ſpeak elſewhere. (e) Joma. per. 1

Beſides theſe, there were (f) fifteen Overſeers ממונין or Preſidents over fifteen ſeveral companies, in ſo many ſeveral employments. (f) Vid. Shekalim. per. 6. Maymon. in Kele.

1. ממונה על זמנים The Overſeer concerning the times: He or one of his Deputies, when it was now time to begin the ſervice, cried aloud, O ye Prieſts to your ſervice, O ye Levites to your Desks [to ſing] and O ye Iſraelites to your ſtation: and all of them upon his Proclamation went to their ſeveral duties. Mikdaſh. per. 7

2. על נעילת שערים The Overſeer for ſhutting of the doors: by whoſe appointment they were opened and ſhut, and by whoſe appointment the Trumpets ſounded when they were opened: He was ſome one appointed by the Amarcalin for this care; for they ſeven had the keeping and diſpoſing of the keys of the ſeven Court gates.

3. על השומרים The Overſeer of the Guards. This was called איש הר הבית (g) The man of the mountain of the Houſe: He went about among the Levites guards every night, walking as it were the round, and if he found any one aſleep he cudgelled him, and ſet fire on his Coat. (g) Mid. per. 1

4. על המשוררים. The Overſeer of the Singers. He appointed who ſhould be every days Songs-men, and blowers of the Trumpets.

5. על הצלצל. The Overſeer of the Cymbal Muſick: As the other appointed the Voices, Trumpets and ſtrung Inſtruments, ſo did this take care for the Muſick by the Cymbal, which was of another kind, as ſhall be ſhewed ere long.

6. על הפיסות The Overſeer of the lots: Who by lots every morning deſigned the Prieſts their ſeveral ſervices at the Altar.

7. על

7. על הקינים The Overſeer about birds: He provided Turtles and Pigeons ready, that thoſe that needed them might have them for their money, and he gave account of the money to the Treaſurers.

8. The Overſeer of the Seals, על החותמות. Theſe Seals were ſuch kind of things, as the Tickets or Stamps that Miniſters have uſed to give to thoſe they admitted to the Sacrament: (b) There were four kinds of theſe Seals or Tickets, and they had four ſeveral Words written or ſtamped on them: on one was עגל a Calf, on another זכר a Male, on a third גדי a Kid, and on the fourth חוטא a ſinner.

(b) Shekalim. per. 5.

Now the uſe of them was this: Any Perſon that brought a Sacrifice, to which he muſt have a Drink-offering, went to this Overſeer of the Tickets: He looked what his Sacrifice was, and ſo upon the ſight of it, conſidered what Drink-offering was aſſigned by the Law to ſuch a Sacrifice: Thereupon he gave him a Seal or Ticket, whoſe Inſcription was ſuitable to his Sacrifice: as was it a Ram? he gave him a Ticket with זכר a Male: was it a Sin-offering? then the Ticket חוטא a Sinner, and ſo of the others: And for the Ticket he received from the Man, as much money as his Drink-offering would coſt, with this Ticket the man went to

9. על חנסכים the Overſeer of the Drink-offerings, who took care to provide them ready, and delivered them out to every man according to his Ticket, for by that he ſaw what nature his Sacrifice was of, and what Drink-offering it required, and ſo he ſuited them therewith accordingly: And at night this Overſeer of the Drink-offerings, and the Overſeer of the Seals, reckoned together what one had received, and the other had given out.

10. על החולים The Overſeer of the ſick: The attendance of the Prieſts at the Altars bare-footed, and thin-clothed, and their eating much fleſh, which in thoſe parts was not ſo very agreeable, made them ſubject to Colds, Colicks, and other diſeaſes: therefore was a skilful man appointed to look to ſuch as were ill, and to give them Phyſick.

11. על המים The Overſeer of the Waters. Who was to look and take care that Wells, Ciſterns, and Conduits ſhould be digged and made, that the Temple and Jeruſalem might never want Water: and more eſpecially that there might be no ſuch want at the three Feſtivals, when all Iſrael was gathered thither together. (i) Nicodemus if he be the ſame with Nicodemus mentioned in the Talmud, ſeemeth to have been of this employment, for it relateth a ſtrange Story of him tending to ſuch a purpoſe.

(i) Avoth. R. Nathan. per. 6. Taanith. fol. 19.

12. The Overſeer of the making of the Shew-bread.

13. The Overſeer of the making of the Incenſe.

14. The Overſeer of the Workmen that made the Veils.

15. The Overſeer for the providing of Garments for the Prieſts.

CHAP. III.

Of the High-prieſthood.

(a) R. Sol. in 1 Chr. 24.

THE High-prieſthood, ſtill deſcended to the firſt-born: for ſo was Eleazar to Aaron when Nadab and Abihu were dead; which (a) Rabbi Sol. pertinently obſervs upon thoſe words, in 1 Chron. 24. 1. Nadab and Abihu died and had no Sons, therefore Eleazar and Ithamar executed the Prieſts office: For [ſaith he] if Nadab or Abihu had left Sons, they had had the High-prieſthood before Eleazar or Ithamar. And ſo Jozedek and Ezra were the Sons of Seraiah the High-prieſt, but Jozedek was the High-prieſt after him, and not Ezra, for Jozedek was the firſt-born. And as the firſt born in the Family of any Tribe, was Prieſt before the Law was given [and accordingly doth the (b) Chaldee, on Gen. 49. 3. paraphraſe the words of Jacob to this ſenſe, Reuben thou art my firſt born, and to thee belonged three Portions, the Birth-right, the Prieſt-hood, and the Kingdom] ſo the firſt born in the chief Family of Aaron, was High-prieſt lineally deſcended, and by Suceſſion. And therefore (c) when Simeon the juſt having two Sons Shimei and Onias, would have put Shimei the eldeſt, by the High-prieſthood, and put Onias the younger in, he could not do it but, Shimei obtained his right, and Onias was put to flee into Egypt, where he built a ſumptuous and a famous Temple.

(b) Targ. in Gen. 49.

(c) Jucaſin fol. 15.

And by this neceſſity of Succeſſion it came to paſs that ſometimes the High-prieſt proved to be but meanly qualified for ſuch an Office; as appears, amongſt other evidences, by that paſſage in (d) Joma where it is related how againſt the Expiation day, ſome Elders were appointed to attend the High Prieſt, and they ſaid to him, Sir High-prieſt read thou thy ſelf, it may be thou haſt forgotten, or it may be thou haſt not learned: And a little after it is ſaid, If he was a wiſe man he expounded; if not, they expounded before him.

(d) Joma per. 1.

him. And to this purpoſe is that Proverb or Probleme ממזר תח חשוב מכנ עם הארץ. (e) A Scholar though he be a baſtard, is of more value than an unlearned Highprieſt. This ſheweth that the Function was rather Typical than the Perſon. (e) Maym. in Talmud. Torah. per. 3.

2. (f) The inſtalling of the High-prieſt into his Office was by the Sanhedrin, who anoynted him, or when the Oyl failed [as there was none under the ſecond Temple] cloathed him with the High-prieſtly Garments: If he were anointed, he was anointed dayly ſeven days together; and if he were not anointed [when the holy Oyl was gone] he was cloathed with the eight Garments of the Prieſthood, daily ſeven days together, and he was called מרובה בגדים, The inſtalled by the garments. (f) Id in Kele Mikdaſh. per. 4.

The Garments were theſe:

1. כתונת The Coat: (g) This he ware next his skin: it was made of fine linnen, wrought checker work, like Diaper, and therefore it is called כתונת תשבץ, *the checkered Coat, Exod.*28.4. as Sauls Coat of Mail is called שבץ, 2 Sam. 1.9. ſuch a Coat as this had every one of the Prieſts in the ſervice, without any difference: and ſuch a one did the High-prieſt wear whilſt he was an ordinary Prieſt, before he came to that dignity: * when theſe Linnen Coats of the ordinary Prieſts were grown ſo old; that they were paſt wearing, they ravelled them in pieces, and made Yarn of them for the Lamps in the Golden Candleſtick. (g) Id. ib. per. 8. * Talm. Jorus in Succah. per. 5.

2. מכנסי בד. *Linnen Breeches. Exod.*28.42. When it is ſaid, that the checkered Coat was next the Skin, it is to be underſtood from the Loins upward, and thicker clad were not the ordinary Prieſts there than with that thin Diaper Shirt, for ſo we may call it: but upon their Thighs they had Linnen Breeches to cover their nakedneſs: which Breeches or Drawers when they were old, they ravelled them alſo to make wick-yarn for Candles of light at the joyful feſtivity of drawing of water on the laſt and great day at the Feaſt of Tabernacles; and ſo they did by their overworn Girdles.

3. אבנט The Girdle; which was as a long linnen ſwaddle, which went many times about them, over their paps and downward; partly to keep them warm, and partly to ſtrengthen their backs in the hard ſervice to which they were ſometime put, the High-prieſt and ordinary Prieſts had of theſe alike.

4. מעיל The Coat of the Ephod. This garb the ordinary Prieſts had not, but only the High-prieſt, and it was called the Coat of the Ephod, becauſe the Ephod did gird it to him: it had no ſleeves as his checkered Coat had, but it was made of two main pieces, the one whereof, hung before him, and the other behind him: the Collar of this Ephod was like the Collar of an Habergion whole, and to be put over his head: and from the Collar downward the pieces were parted, and his Arms came out between them: At the lower end of either of theſe pieces, were thirty ſix little golden Bells with Clappers, and Pomgranats of needlework, between every Bell: ſeventy two Bells in all. This Coat was ὑ ακίνθινος as both (h) Joſephus, and (i) Philo relate, and ſo render the word תכלת of which [as Maymonides ſaith] it was all made, which Philo renders alſo ἀέρος ἰκτῖνος the colour of the Air, or sky colour. (h) *Joſeph. Ant. lib.*3. cap. 8. (i) Philo de Vita Moſis l. 3. p. apud me. 519.

5. אפוד The Ephod. The breadth of this was the breadth of his back from ſhoulder to ſhoulder, and it hung behind him, from his armholes to his feet, from it there came two pieces under his armholes, and met together, and claſped over his paps, and this was called חשב the curious Girdle of the Ephod, becauſe both it and the Ephod were curiouſly wrought of fine twiſt and Gold. It had two ſhoulder pieces alſo which went over the Prieſts ſhoulders, and were faſtned to the Ephod behind, and to the Girdle before: and ſo the Ephod hung low behind like a Womans Vail, and came but ſhort before, like ſome Workmens Aprons hanging over their ſhoulders, and coming down but to their Breaſts. Upon theſe ſhoulder pieces were two Beryl ſtones ſet in Gold, in which the names of the Twelve Tribes were ingraven, ſix in one ſtone on the one ſhoulder, and ſix in the other: ſo equally divided for the Letters, that there were 25 Letters in either ſtone, and Joſephs name was written Jehoſeph to make the equality, and ſo he is called and written, Pſal. 81.6.

Upon theſe ſhoulder-pieces there were two boſſes of Gold, near to theſe ſtones, into which, two Gold Chains, which tyed the Breſt-plate to the Ephod, were ſo faſtned, that Breſt-plate and Ephod might not be parted: and who ſo willingly parted them was to be whipt.

6. חושן The Breſt-plate. This was a rich piece of Cloth of Gold, an hand-bredth ſquare, double; ſet with twelve Precious Stones in four rowes, three in a row; theſe are called Urim and Thummim, *Exod.*28.30. which are eminently mentioned in Scripture, and famous for the inquiring by Urim and Thummim, and Gods anſwering by them, the manner of which we have diſcourſed elſewhere. (k) In the ſecond Temple they made a Breſt-plate and Urim and Thummim, that is, ſet the Stones in the Breſt-plate, but never inquired by them, becauſe the Spirit of Propheſie was then departed. (k) Maym. ubi ſupr. per. 10.

7. מצנפת. The Miter. So it is almost Englished in Philoes Greek, when speaking of the High-priests garb, he saith among other things, (l) ὐδέποτε ἀπομτᾳόσει that in the service he never went without the Miter. (m) This was called πίλος ἄλωνϑ ὁ διηνύμενϑ εἰς πᾶσαν κεφαλὴν ἀλλ' ἐπόλιγον ὑπερβεβηκὼς μέσης. A bonnet [saith Josephus] without a Crown, which went not over all his head, but only a little above the middle of it: sitting upon his head as it were a Crown. It was made of linnen, and was a long kind of swaddles of a large bredth, which he wrapt oft about his head, and complicated it in and out: That the wrapping or warping of it up about his head was after the manner of the Turkish Tullibants; only it wanted a crown, but was open on the top, sitting on his brows after the manner of a Garland.

(l) Philo in lib. de profugis. pag. apud me 364.
(m) Joseph. Ant. ubi sup.

8. ציץ The golden plate, Exod. 28. 36. this was fastned on the front of the Miter: and in it was ingraven Holiness to the Lord: (n) And between the Miter and the Plate he put and wore his Phylacteries.

(n) Maym. ubi sup. per. 10.

Thus was the High-priest dresst, exceeding rich and exceeding gorgeous: and his office eminent, and high in dignity; but the choicest eminency of it, was in what it typified and resembled, the great High-priest that was to come; the explication and application of which Type and Antitype is so abundantly set forth in the Scripture, especially in the Epistle to the Hebrews, that it is needless to insist upon it: Let us only for conclusion take the testimony of one that was either a stranger or an enemy to the Gospel, and yet in this point and matter speaketh exceeding consonant and concurrent to it, and that is Philo the Jew whom we mentioned before, who speaking divers things concerning the High-priest concludes thus, Λέγομεν γὰρ τὸν ἀρχιερέα, οὐκ ἀνθρώπων ἄλλα λόγον ϑεῖον εἶναι, πάντων ἀκ ἐκουσίων μόνον, ἀλλὰ κὴ ἀκουσίων ἀδικημάτων ἀμέπτον. (o) We say that the High-priest meaneth not a Man but the Word of God: who was free from all sin, both voluntary and unvoluntary. And if any one desire to see how allegorically he applieth the several parcels of the High-priests Garments to the several parts of the World, Air, Earth, Water, Fire, &c. he may have him at large discoursing it, according to his accustomed fluency, in his third book de Vita Mosis, pag. apud me 519, 520, 521. where after he hath spent a great deal of time and words, and fancy to little profit, he at last comes on with this Golden Saying, worthy a Thousand Volumes of such stuff as he had produced before: Ἀναγκαῖον ἦν τὸν ἱεραμένον τῷ τῷ κοσμῷ πατρὶ παρακλήτῳ χρῆσθαι τελειωτάτῳ τὴν ἀρετὴν υἱῷ πρός τε ἀμνηστίαν ἁμαρτημάτων κὴ χορηγίαν ἀφθονωτάτων ἀγαθῶν. (p) It was necessary that he setting up a Priest to the father of the world, should use his most absolutely perfect Son for a Mediator or Advocate both for the obtaining of pardon of sin, and supply of abundant good.

(o) Philo ubi supra.
(p) Id. p. 521.

An High-priest once installed was High-priest for his life. ὁ γὰρ ἄλλϑ γενὸς ἀφηρέϑη τὴν τιμὴν ἅπαξ παραλαβών. (q) For none was deposed from this honour, when he had once obtained it: that is, not by any legal deposition: but Money and Power at the last broke this priviledge, and the High-priests were frequently thrust in and thrust out by these, according as the one or the other prevailed: as the Gemara on the Treatise Joma maketh mention, and Josephus in divers places giveth example.

(q) Joseph. Ant lib. 15. cap. 3

The High-priest in some things was nothing differenced from others of the People. (r) He might be a witness in causes, and might be witnessed against as well as any other. He might be a Judge as well as any other, and he might be judged. Nay כּהן שעבר עבירה שחייב עליה מלקות מלקות בבד של עגל כשאר מחוייבי וחזר לגדולתו. (s) If he committed an offence which by the Law deserved whipping, the great Sanhedrin whipt him, and then he was restored again to his dignity. His shoe was pulled off for not raising seed to his brother [though by the Law he might not do it, being not permitted to marry a Widow,] and his Wife so left, might pull off the shoe of the next kinsman: and several other things might be mentioned in which the High-priest in point of Law or Practice had no priviledge above other men, or difference from them, which are not material to insist upon, to our purpose.

(r) Sanhedr. per. 2.
(s) Maym. in Biath. Mikdash per. 4.

But there were some things again in which he was differenced from the rest of the People, and that not only in regard of the Dignity of his Function [in which he was also distinguished from the rest of the Priests] but also in regard of some things in Civil Converse. As had he any of his that died, he might not follow the Corps to the Grave, he might not rent his Clothes for the dead: he might not be vailed if others were vailed, nor unvailed if they were unvailed, but still in a contrary Garb to them; whilst others sate on the ground he sate on a Seat; and divers particular differences which it would be tedious to recite.

His difference from the rest of the Priests was especially in his superiority above them, in his anointing or cloathing with the rich garments, and in his service on the day of Expiation.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Succeſſion of the High-prieſts.

SECT. I.

To the building of the Temple.

THE Catalogue and Succeſſion of the High-prieſts, from the firſt inſtitution of this Order, to the laſt times mentioned in the Old Teſtament, are thus given us in Scripture.

1. Aaron, Lev. 8. 7, &c.
2. Eleazar, Num. 20. 28.
3. Phinehas, Num. 26. 13. Judg. 20. 28. He is tenaciouſly held by the Jews to be Elias.
4. Abiſhua,
5. Bukki, } 1 Chron. 6. 5, 6.
6. Uzzi,
7. Zeruhiah,
8. Merajoth, } Here the High-prieſthood changed from the Line of Eleazar into the Line of Ithamar.
9. Eli of Ithamar, 1 Sam. 1. 9. & 2. 35. 36.
10. Phinehas, 1 Sam. 4.
11. Ahitub, 1 Sam. 14. 13. & 22. 20.
12. Ahimelech or Ahijah, ibid.
13. Abiathar, 1 Sam. 22. 20. He was put out of the High-prieſthood by Solomon, 1 King. 2. 26.

In the time of theſe High-prieſts of the Houſe of Ithamar, there were theſe ſucceſſions in the Line of Eleazar.

Amariah, 1 Chron. 6. 7.
Ahitub, } 2 Sam. 8. 17.
Zadok, }

Now whereas it is ſaid in the place cited laſt, that Zadok the ſon of Ahitub, and Ahimelech the ſon of Abiathar were Prieſts; it is to be underſtood as the like is in the 1 Sam. 1. 3. of Hophni and Phinehas, that they were Prieſts unto the Lord, chief among the Prieſts, and Chief Overſeers in the conſtant ſervice and matters of the Sanctuary, but their Father Eli was High-prieſt; ſo in the beginning of Davids ſettlement in his Kingdom, Abiathar was chief Prieſt, and he was of the Houſe of Ithamar; now the High-prieſt did not ſo much attend the ordinary and common ſervice of the Sanctuary; therefore Zadock of Eleazar, and Ahimelech of Ithamar, were the chief in that ſervice under him.

SECT. II.

The High-prieſts from the building of the Temple to the Captivity.

AS ſoon as Solomon was ſet upon the Throne, he put Abiathar from the High-prieſthood, as a man guilty of Treaſon in the Conſpiracy of Adonijah, and he put in Zadok in his room, and now Eleazars Line hath the Prieſthood again.

Zadoks ſon was Ahimaaz, 2 Sam. 15. 36. his ſon Azariah, and his ſon Johanan, 1 Chron. 6. 9. Theſe ſix are omitted by Ezra in his reckoning up of the Line of the High-prieſts, Ezra 7. and the reaſon of the omiſſion we may gueſs to be, becauſe from the time of Amaziah the Houſe of Eli began in the Function, and till the time of Azariah the ſon of Johanan the ſervice in the Temple of Solomon did not begin.

The ſon of Johanan was Azariah. He it was that executed the Prieſts Office in the Temple which Solomon built in Jeruſalem, 1 Chron. 6. 10. But the queſtion is, What time it was when he executed this Office, whether at the beginning of the Temple ſervice, when it was new built, or in after times? The Jews do very generally hold, that this Azariah was he that withſtood Uzziah when he went into the Temple to burn Incenſe, 2 Chron. 26. 17. 21. And becauſe he ſtood ſo gallantly for the honour of the Prieſthood againſt the King, that therefore it is ſaid of him alone, that he executed the Prieſts Office in the Temple.

But Kimchi goes yet further, holding indeed that this was Uzziahs Azariah, but that he was born in Solomons time, and ſo he makes him to live at the leaſt two hundred years, an Age not uſual in thoſe times. But by looking over the times of the High-prieſts that ſucceeded ceeded him to the Captivity, it will be apparent enough that this Azariah the son of Johanan, was High-priest in Solomons time, and was dead and rotten many years before Uzziah was born.

This Azariah begat Amariah, as it is recorded, 1 *Chron.*6.11. Now this Amariah was High-priest in the days of Jehoshaphat, 2*Chron.*19.11. Amariah begat Ahitub, 1 *Chro.*6.11. this Ahitub was Jehojada, 2*Chron.*23.1. &c. and he is called Ahitub the Ruler of the House of God, 1*Chr.*9.11. *Neh.*11.11. because of his great power and sway in the crowning of Joash, and in the work of Reformation.

Ahitub begat Zadok, 1*Chron.*6.12. this Zadok was father in law to King Uzziah.2*Chr.* 27.1. Now Zadok was not Ahitubs immediate Son, but his grand-child, for Zadok was the son of Merajoth the son of Ahitub, 2*Chr.*9.11. which Merajoth may well be supposed to be Zechariah, the son of Jehojadah, who was stoned in the Temple Court, 2 *Chr.*24. and named here Merajoth, in Memorial of that great Rebellion of the People against God, his Prophet, and his Temple, and omitted in the Line of the Priests, 1*Chron.*6. because he was not used like an High-priest, his High-priesthood was not long, and he died as a Prophet.

Zadok begat Shallum, 1*Chron.*6.12. or Meshullam, 1*Chr.* 9.11. one of those two it was, either the father or son, that opposed Uzziah when he would have offered Incense, but I rather believe it was Zadok the Kings father in law, who in that story is called Azariah after the Kings name; either he or Shallum is called Urijah, 2*King* 16.10.

Shallum begat Hilkiah, 1*Chr.*16.13. this Hilkiah found the Manuscript of Moses in the days of Josiah, 2*Chr.*34.14.

Hilkiah begat Azariah, 1*Chr.*6.13 & 9.11. Ezra 7.1.

Azariah begat Serajah, 1*Chr.*6.14. this Serajah begat Jozedek and Ezra, Ezra 7.1. He was slain by Nebuchadnezar at the destruction of Jerusalem, 2*King.* 25.18.

Jozedek, the eldest son of Serajah, was captived into Babel, 1*Chr.*6.15. and thence he never returned: and thus have we the High-priests till the Captivity: And now if we look back upon these times that we have observed, it is no hard thing to conclude, that that Azariah which is said to have executed the Priests office in Solomons Temple, 1 Chr. 6. 10. did do it presently after the Temple was built, either at the very first service of it, or at the restoring of the service upon Solomons Repentance after his Apostasie.

SECT. III.

The High-priests under the second Temple.

IT may not be amiss for the entrance into this discourse concerning the High-priests after the return out of the Captivity, till the ruine of the Temple, to produce a passage out of the Jerusalem Talmud, which speaketh something unto that occasion. In the first Temple [saith the Gemara in Joma] the High-priests served, the son still succeeding the Father, and they were eighteen in number: But in the second Temple, they got the High-priesthood for money, and some say they destroyed one another by witchcraft: so that some say that there were fourscore High-priests in that space: some fourscore and one, some fourscore and two, some fourscore and three, some fourscore and four, and some fourscore and five.

Talm. Jerus. per.1. Joma.

Not to insist upon examination of their number of eighteen before the Captivity [which, falls something in with what was said before, though R. Solomon think it is to be read eight] it may be as a piece of Apology before hand, if we cannot exactly reckon up the persons after the Captivity, seeing the number by their own confession is so very various and uncertain, as some to say thus differently one thing, and some another.

R.Sol. In 1Chr. 6.

1. JOSHUA the son of Jozedek [called also Jeshua after the Syrian pronunciation] returned out of Captivity [where his father had died] with Zerubbabel and began and forwarded the building of the second Temple, and the settlement of the People. He was High-priest all the time of Cyrus and Ahasuerus, and some part of the time of Darius. The High-priesthood that was now grown poor and low, is restored and beautified to him in a Vision, *Zechar.*3. who as he bare the name, so he was a figure of the Lord Jesus.

Ezra 2. 2. Hag. 2. 2.

Hag. 1.1. &c.

2. JOAKIM, *Neh.*12.10.

3. ELIASHIB, *Neh.*12.10.

Joseph. Antiq. lib.11. cap. 5.

4. JOJADA. *Neh.*12.10. Josephus calls him Juda.

*Antiq.*11.6.7.

5. JONATHAN or JOHANAN, Neh. 12.11.22. Josephus calleth him Ἰωάννης or John, and relateth how he slew his own brother Jesus in the Temple, whom Bagoses the chief Commander for Artaxerxes the younger would have made High-priest: for which foul fact Bagoses broke into the Temple, and laid a Tax of forty Drachmes upon every Lamb that was sacrificed in the daily sacrifice.

Joseph. Antiq. b.11. 6.7.

6. JADDUA,

6. JADDUA, *Neh.*12.11.12. He had a brother called Manaſſes which married Sanballats daughter, and for that was driven from the Prieſthood, and went and occaſioned the building of the Temple on mount Gerizim. This Jaddua met Alexander in the High-prieſts Garments, when he marched in fury againſt Jeruſalem, and the very ſight of him appeaſed him. Id. ib. c. 8.

7. ONIAS the ſon of Jaddua. Id ib. prope finem & lib. 12. c. 2.

8. SIMON or SIMEON the juſt: There is exceeding famous mention of this man among the Hebrew Writers, and of him they ſpeak many eminent things: As that he was the three and twentieth receiver of their Traditions, that he burnt two red Cows to make purifying aſhes, that he was the laſt of the 120 of Ezra's great Synagogue, that he took but one Nazarites offering all his time; that every day of Expiation an Angel went in with him into the moſt holy place, and came out with him, only the laſt time he went in, the Angel went in with him, but came not out, whereupon he knew he ſhould dye that year, and that when he died, the fire on the Altar ſlacked much, &c. and that he left behind him Shimei and Onias: he would have had Onias to have been High-prieſt, but his brother Shimei put him to flee to Alexandria, where he built that famous Temple, &c. Idem ibid. Juchaſin. fol. 1. & fol. 13.

Some think this Simeon the juſt to have been the ſame with Jaddua, and to have been the ſon of Joſhua or Jeſus whom his brother Jonathan ſlew, but this matter we will not diſpute here.

9. ELEAZAR: he was Simeons Brother. This Eleazar was he that ſent the Lxx. Elders to Ptolomy Philadelphus to tranſlate the Law into Greek. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 12. c. 2.

10. MANASSES Eleazars Uncle. Id. ib. c. 3. 2.

11. ONIAS the ſon of Simeon the juſt, a covetous Wretch, and that brought the diſpleaſure of Ptolomy Euergetes againſt him by his covetize. Id. ib. ad finem.

12. SIMON the ſon of Onias. Id. ib. c. 4. ad fin.

13. ONIAS the ſon of Simon. Id. ib. c. 6.

14. JESUS the brother of Onias, for Onias left a ſon behind him, but very young: this Jeſus called himſelf Jaſon.

15. ONIAS the brother of Jaſon or Jeſus, he called himſelf Menelaus. This Wretch quarrelling with his brother Jaſon, calleth in Antiochus Epiphanes, and himſelf forſaketh his Countrys Laws and Religion: And Antiochus coming in, deſtroyed all Laws and Religion, and brought in ſuch trouble as Iſrael never had ſince they were a Nation, until that time, *Dan.*12.1. of which read Dan. 11.30.31. 1 *Mac.*1.44,45, &c. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 12. cap. 7. Id. ib. c. 8. 1 Mac. 2. 1.

16. The deſolation that Antiochus had brought upon Religion and the Temple, cauſeth Mattathias a Prieſt of the courſe of Jojarib, which was the firſt courſe of the four and twenty, he being now old, to ſtand up for the maintenance of Religion, and for the delivetance of his Country. The Chaldee Paraphraſt calls him the High-prieſt, *Cant.*6.6.

Here began the Name and Renown of the Aſmonæan Family, of which there is ſo frequent and famous mention in all Authors; The Chaldee Paraphraſt applies that ſpeech of Hannah to this Family, in 1 *Sam.*2.4. They that ſtumbled are girded with ſtrength. Hannah, ſaith he, propheſied of the Greeks Kingdom, when ſhe ſaith, The bow of the mighty are broken: and of the Aſmonæan Family, which was weak, and for which ſigns and wonders were done, when ſhe ſaith, They that ſtumbled are girded with ſtrength. And ſo doth the Targum on the Canticles, apply the ſeventh verſe of the ſixth Chapter of that Book to the ſame Houſe: As a piece of a Pomegranate are thy Temples: The Kingdom, ſaith it, of the Aſmonæan Family was full of Judgments as a Pomegranate, &c.

Not to be inquiſitive after the derivation of the word [which we find in Pſal. 68. 32. and which is generally interpreted by the Jews to ſignifie great Dukes and Princes] Mattathias not living long after his firſt appearing a Champion for his diſtreſſed Country, he left the charge of that War and Expedition to his ſons after him: amongſt whom

17. JUDAS [ſurnamed Maccabæus from theſe four Acroſtick Letters in his Enſign, מכבי which meant מי כמכה באלים יהוה, Exod. 15. 12. Lord who is like thee among the mighty?] undertook the quarrel of his People, and of the Law, Religion, and Covenant, and did very victoriouſly; but at laſt was ſlain. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 12. c. 9, 10, &c. 1 Mac. 3. & 4, &c.

In theſe times when all things were in a combuſtion and confuſion in the Land, and in Religion, one ALCIMUS bare the name of High-prieſt, being indeed of that Line, but a man for miſchief and impiety more like a Heathen than a High-prieſt of Iſrael, doing much evil whilſt he lived, and coming at laſt to a moſt fearful end. Joſeph. ubi ſup. c. 15, 16, 17. 1 Mac. 7. 12. 13, 14, &c. & 9. 1. 5, 55. 1 Mac. 9. & 10. & 11. & 28.

18. JONATHAN ſucceedeth his brother Judas as chief Commander: he was made High-prieſt by Alexander the ſon of Antiochus; and confirmed therein by Antiochus the ſon of Alexander, doth many valiant acts, and at laſt is ſlain by Trypho. Joſep. Ant. l. 13. ad c. 11.

19. SIMON his brother ſucceedeth him: valiant alſo and advantagious to his people like his brethren, but ſlain at laſt treacherouſly by his own ſon in Law. 1 Mac. 14. & 15. & 16.

20. JOHN Joſeph. ubi ſupra c. 11, 12, 13.

20. JOHN called alſo Hyrcanus, or Hyrcanus Jannai: He ſacked Samaria, deſtroyed the Temple at Gerizim, ſlew many of the wiſe men at Jeruſalem, was High-prieſt eighty years and turned Sadducee.

21. ARISTOBULUS his ſon: He firſt took upon him to be King.

Ibid. c. 22, 23.

22. ALEXANDER: He bare alſo the name of a King; made many Wars, and at laſt died of a Quartan Ague, which had held him three years.

Ibid. c. 24.

23. HYRCANUS his ſon is made High-prieſt: but his mother Alexandra by the ſupport of the Phariſees ſways the Kingdom.

Lib. 14. c. 4, 5, 6.

24. ARISTOBULUS younger brother to Hyrcanus, after the death of their mother Alexandra, maketh War upon his brother, drives him from his Kingdom to a private life, and takes both Kingdom and High-prieſthood upon himſelf: They both deſire help and aſſiſtance from the Romans, Scaurus, and Pompey; Ariſtobulus provoking Pompey by ſome dalliance cauſeth the ſacking of Jeruſalem, and the ſubjecting of the Jews to the Roman yoke, from under which they were never delivered. Pompey reſtoreth the High-prieſthood to Hyrcanus, and carries Ariſtobulus and his ſon Antigonus priſoners to Rome, and his two daughters.

Ibid. c. 10.

25. ALEXANDER the ſon of Ariſtobulus eſcaped the hands of Pompey, when he captived his father and his brother to Rome: and he in Judea raiſed divers ſtirs and tumults, and affecting the Kingdom is twice ſuppreſſed by the Roman Gabinius.

Ib. c. 21. & 25.

26. ANTIGONUS, Ariſtobulus his other ſon eſcaping from Rome into Judea, firſt by the help of the King of Tyrus, and after by the help of the Parthians buſleth for the High-prieſthood and power, out of the hands of Hyrcanus: getteth Hyrcanus priſoner, cauſeth his ear to be cut off, and by that blemiſh or maim he maketh him uncapable of the Prieſthood: But as Hyrcanus loſt his ears, ſo at laſt Antigonus loſt his head, by the ax of Antony at Antioch: having been firſt crucified and whipt.

Lib. 15. c. 1. Dion. Caſſ. l. 49.

Joſ. l. 15. c. 2.

27. ANANELUS an inferiour Prieſt, ſent for out of Babylon, is made High-prieſt by Herod. Here Alexandra the daughter of Hyrcanus, and wife of Alexander the ſon of Ariſtobulus took indignity, and ſo did Mariam Herods wife who was Alexandra's daughter, that an inferiour perſon ſhould be preferred to the High-prieſthood, and Ariſtobulus Mariams brother and Alexandra's ſon be paſſed by: Theſe womens ſhifts and importunities obtain the High-prieſthood for Ariſtobulus, and the depoſition of Ananelus.

Ibid. c. 2.

Ibid. c. 3.

28. ARISTOBULUS a young man of a rare beauty is made High-prieſt, being not much above fifteen years old: after a years injoyment of it or little more, he is drowned by Herods policy, as he was ſwimming: And then Ananelus becomes High-prieſt again.

Ibid. c. 12.

29. JESUS the ſon of Favens: him Herod removed again.

Ibid.

30. SIMON the ſon of Boethus: he was but a Prieſt before: But Herod marrying his daughter, a woman of a rare beauty, he made him High-prieſt.

Lib. 17. c. 6.

31. MATTHIAS the ſon of Theophilus: Herod depoſed his father in law Simon from the High-prieſthood, becauſe he thought both he, and his daughter [Herods wife] were privy to the counſels of his ſon Antipater.

Ibid. c. 8.

32. JOZARUS the ſon of Simon, Herods brother in law; Matthias being depoſed by Herod.

Ibid. c. 15.

33. ELEAZAR made High-prieſt by King Archelaus, Jozarus being depoſed.

37. ISMAEL promoted by Valerius Gratus, upon Ananus his removal.

38. ELEAZAR the ſon of Ananus promoted by the ſame Gratus upon Iſmaels removal: he injoyed the High-prieſthood but one year.

39. SIMON the ſon of Kamith, advanced by the ſame Gratus. The Jeruſalem Talmud calls him בן קמחית and relates this ſtory of him, that on the Eve of the day of Expiation, he went out to ſpeak with the King, and ſome ſpittle fell upon his garments and defiled him, therefore Judah his brother went in on the day of Expiation, and ſerved in his ſtead: and ſo their Mother Kamith ſaw two of her ſons High-prieſts in one day. She had ſeven ſons and they all ſerved in the High-prieſthood; hence came up this Proverb, כל קמחאי קמחאי וקמחא קמחית סולת All meal is meal, but Kamiths meal is fine flower, In Joma per. 1.

40. CAIAPHAS, who was alſo called Joſeph: He was Gratus his creature too; and all theſe changes were made by Gratus in eleven years: and now are we come up to the time of our Saviours death, and to a wretch that had not a ſmall hand in it. Annas or Ananus who had been High-prieſt four changes before him, is ſaid to be High-prieſt with him, Luke 2.

41. JONATHAN the ſon of Ananus made High-prieſt by Vitellius in the room of Cajaphas, whom he removed. Ibid. c.6.

42. THEOPHILUS the brother of Jonathan, upon the removal of Jonathan by the ſame Vitellius is made High-prieſt. Ibid. c.7.

43. SIMON called alſo Kantheras made High-prieſt by Herod Agrippa, Theophilus being removed: this was he whoſe daughter Herod married, and who was removed from the High-prieſthood ſo many changes ago. Lib.19. c.5.

44. JONATHAN the ſon of Ananus reſtored by Agrippa again: but he deſires that his brother Matthias might be put in the place as a fitter man than himſelf: which was a wonder in the great ambition for the High-prieſthood which commonly was afoot. Ibid. c.6.

45. MATTHIAS put in the room of Jonathan.

46. ALIONEUS or Elioenai placed by Agrippa in the room of removed Matthias. Ib. cap.7.

47. JOSEPHUS the ſon of Kanei: promoted by Herod King of Chalcis. Lib. 20. cap 1

48. JONATHAN ſlain by an Aſſaſſin by the contrival of the Governour Felix. Ibid c.6.

49. ISMAEL the ſon of Fabi. Ibid

50. JOSEPH the ſon of Simon. Ibid

51. ANANUS the ſon of Ananus mentioned before. This man was a Sadducee: He put to death James the brother of our Lord, he is called Ananias a whited wall, one whom Paul will not own for High-prieſt, *Act.*23.3,5. Ibid. c.8.

52. JESUS put in by Agrippa King of Chalcis in the room of Ananus: this Jeſus was the ſon of one Gamaliel. Ibid.

53. MATTHIAS the ſon of Theophilus. And here began the Wars of the Jews, which at laſt were their deſtruction. Ibid.

In which time, the confuſion of the times did breed ſuch confuſion and jumbling about the High-prieſthood, in chooſing and counterchooſing, and putting in and out according to the pleaſure of this or that faction that prevailed, that it would be but confuſed work to go about to give a Catalogue or account of them; therefore having led the row of the High-prieſts thus far, as till all order both in Church and State were periſhed, and the dignity and reſpect of that Order was utterly loſt, we will ſuperſede with this number that hath been related, and paſs on to the other ranks of Prieſts that are before us.

CHAP. V.

The Sagan, Katholikin, Immarcalin, and Gizbarin.

SECT. I.

SAGAN.

THE word Sagan is rare in the Scripture, but both the name and the dignity is very commonly known and uſed in the Hebrew writers. It is undoubted that he was next to the High-prieſt, or Vicegerent to him, but under what notion he came into this deputation is diſputable, and (a) Abraham Zacuth doth purpoſely diſpute it. One conjecture about this matter is from that Tradition mentioned in Joma. That againſt the day of expiation, when the High-prieſt was to go into the moſt Holy place: (a) Juchaſin fol 57.

מתקינין לו כהן אחר תחתיו שמא יארע בו פסול (b) They appointed another Prieſt in his ſtead, who might ſupply the ſolemn work of that day, if any uncleanneſs did befal the High-prieſt himſelf: And R. Judah alſo ſaith, they appointed him another wife leſt his own wife ſhould have died, becauſe he was enjoyned to atone for himſelf and for his houſe, that is, for his wife: Now it is conceived by ſome, that this Prieſt that was appointed as a reſerve, if any thing had befallen the High-prieſt, to make him unfit for that work, was called the Sagan. (c) Joſephus giveth one example, when the work of the day of Expiation was carried on by ſuch a ſubſtitute; but this opinion maketh the Sagan uſeful but for one week in the year, whereas it appeareth by the Jewiſh records that he was in a continual office all the year thorough. Some therefore again conjecture, that the Sagan was to be he that was to be the next High-prieſt, and in his Sagan-ſhip was as a Candidate for that Office. (d) So R. Solomon calleth Eleazar the ſon of Aaron the Sagan: And (e) the Jeruſalem Talmud obſerves that none was High-prieſt unleſs he had been Sagan firſt; but there are two arguments that oppoſe this opinion; the firſt is, becauſe the High-prieſts, after the time of Herod eſpecially, were ſo made at the arbitrary diſpoſal of the Governor; that (b) Joma per.1. abenitio.

that it is not imaginable that they ever regarded whether he had been Sagan before or no. And another is, because in all the Old Testament where the succession of the High-priesthood was fair and legal, and it was still known who should be High-priest next, yet there is never mention of the word or of the thing Sagan, but only in 2 King. 25. 18. and Jer. 52. 24 where is mention of Zephaniah the second Priest, and the Chaldee Paraphrast calls him Sagan: Now unless he were son to Serajah, which I know not who ever held, he was in no possibility of the High-priesthood, had the Temple scaped the Babylonian fire and desolation.

For the discovering therefore what the Sagan was, and under what notion he came into his Office, it is observable that he is most commonly called סגן הכוהנים The Sagan of the Priests: So the Chaldee in the two places cited, titleth Zephaniah. So the Talmud in two places in the Treatise Shekalim speaketh of (f) Ananias the Sagan of the Priests: and in divers places both in the Talmud and in other Hebrew writers, the phrase is used in this conjuncture סגן הכוהנים The Sagan of the Priests. By the which it seemeth his Office had relation as much, if not more, to Priests below him, as to the High-priest above him: and I know not what fitter conception to have of him than this, that he was as the High-priests Substitute, in his absence to oversee, or in his presence to assist in the oversight of the affairs of the Temple, and the service of the Priests: For although it is true, that in some particulars his attendance did especially respect the High-priests person, as in three reckoned by (g) the Talmud of Jerusalem, yet did his Office also relate to the Priests below him, and so saith Maymonides כל הכוהנים תחת יד כגן (h) That all the Priests were under the disposal or command of the Sagan. For the High-priest having the chief charge and care of the holy things, and that burden and incumbency being of so great a weight, he was forced to get an assistance to help him to bear the burden [nay sometime the sillines and weakness of the High-priest did add to this necessity] and to this his assistant had the inferior Priests a respect and observance as to the High-priest himself. This was called (i) especially the Memunuch or President above all the fifteen that have been named, because upon him lay the great charge of the looking to the service, as the High-priests Deputy; and of this President we shall have occasion to make somewhat frequent mention when we come to speak of the service.

(g) Talm. Jerus. Joma. per. 3.

(h) Maym. in Kele Mik. per. 4.

(i) Id. ibid.

In such a sense it was observed before, that Zadok and Ahimelech are said to be Priests in the days of Abiathar the High-priest, he the chief, and they in the chief care and charge and oversight under him: And whether Annas and Cajaphas may not be said to be High-priests together in this sense, Luke 3.2. namely Cajaphas High-priest, and Annas his Sagan [the Hananiah the Sagan of the Priests mentioned out of the Talmud before] be it referred to the Learned to determine: I was * once of another mind I confess, and supposed Annas to be called High-priest, because a Priest and head of the Sanhedrin, in which I was too credulous to Baronius a man far better skilled in Christian Antiquity than in Jewish; but now I find that never any such man was head of the Sanhedrin at all; and therefore I am now swayed to believe that Annas is called High-priest, as indeed having been so once, but now deposed, and now the Sagan under Cajaphas.

SECT. II.

KATHOLIKIN.

Either Maymony himself, or his Transcriber, hath put a twofold reading upon this word: For in his (a) Jad Hazakah he reads it קתיקולין Kathikolin but in his (b) comment upon the Talmud Text he reads it קתילוקין Katholokin; and with the latter the (c) Jerusalem Talmud, and other Jews agree something near, and utter it קתוליקין Katholkin Catholici: The Gloss interprets it, ממנים על אוצרות The Presidents or chief Overseers of the Treasures: And so might the use of the word be shewed in other Authors, sometime to signifie chief Treasurers, and sometime to signifie chief Favorites or Officers. (d) Rabbi Tanchuma compares Moses and Aaron in reference to God, to two Kathlikin [for so he writes it קתליקין] in reference to a King: For speaking of Gods commanding Moses and Aaron to go up into mount Hor and Nebo and there to die, he utters this Parable: To what is this matter like? It is like to a King that had two Katholici, who did nothing without the will of the King: one of them had some difference with the King, and the King had need of him; the King saith, although this man is in my power, yet will I not differ with him but he shall know it: So also the holy blessed God saith, these two righteous men never did any thing out according to my mind, and now I will take them away, yet I will let them know it, &c. In this comparison he takes Katholikin to be chief Favourites or Officers, without designing any peculiar Office that they were in; (e) but other of the Hebrew writers assign them to the Treasuries; as Bamid bar Rabba that saith, Korah was Katholicus

(a) Kele Mikd per. 4.
(b) Gloss. in Talm. Shekal. per. 5.
(c) Ibid. in Gemara.
(d) Jelammedenu. fol. 83. col. 1.

Katholicus to the King of Egypt, and had the keys of his Treasures: nay the same Tanchuma in another Parable putteth that sense upon the word also, for he saith, (f) It is like unto a King that made his friend his Katholicus, and set him over his treasures: Katholiciani in the terms of the Law, of old, signified Rationum Præfecti, the Overseers of Accounts, as is observed by the most Learned Buxtorfius. (f) Aruch. in voce.

We need not to be curious in determining these men to a peculiar Office, they were two men that were in the highest Office and Employment about the Temple, and but only two men above them, The High-priest and the Sagan: and whereas there were three common Treasurers of the Temple stock, [as we shall see by and by] these two were Headtreasurers and Overseers over them; much like the constitution of the Presidents in the Persian State, where 120 Princes were set over the 120 Provinces, and three Presidents were set over all these to take account of them, Dan. 6.1,2. Maymony gives this short character of these Katholikin; That ממנין קתיקולין להיות לסגן כמו הסגן לכ׳ (g) They appointed the Kathicolin or Katholikin, to be to the Sagan, as the Sagan was to the High-priest: substitutes and assistants, and next in place and in honour. The business of the Temple consisted especially in these two things, its service, and the disposal of its treasury or stock that came by Oblations or otherwise: Now as there were inferiour Priests that performed the dayly service, and as there were inferior Treasurers or Receivers that received the Offerings and whatsoever was brought in into the common stock, so these four men especially, the High-priest, Sagan and the two Katholikin, were Overseers both of the one and the other: that the Treasury might be disposed fitly for the Temple service, and that the service might be performed as was fitting. (g) Maym. in Kele Mikd. par. 4.

SECT. III.

IMMARCALIN. אמרכלין

WITH these may we joyn the seven Immarcalin [for that was their (a) number and they might not be less] men whose peculiar Office is as hard to find out, as was theirs before: but only that it is agreed upon, that they carried the keys of the seven gates of the Court, and one could not open them without the rest: (b) some add, That there were seven rooms at the seven gates, for the laying up of the holy vessels, and holy vestments, and these seven men kept the keys of them, and looked to their disposal. (a) Talm. in Shek. per. 5. Maym. ubi sup. (b) Vid. Tosaph. ad Shekalim cap. 5. & R. Sol. in 2 King. 12.

The Chaldee Paraphrase upon the Law, [that goeth under the name of Jonathan] useth this word אמרכול in Numb. 1. and Numb. 7. 11. for the Princes or chief heads of the twelve Tribes that stood with Moses to number the people, and that offered their gifts at the dedication of the Altar, and in Levit. 4.15. he useth it for the Elders of the Tribes who laid their hands on the head of the sin-offering of the Congregation: And so whosoever was the Targumist on the Canticles, he useth it in Cant. 4. 3. for a Prince or Potentate that was near the King: for that verse [Thy lips are like a thred of scarlet, and thy speech is comely: thy Temples are like a piece of a Pomgranate within thy locks,] he gloseth thus. (c) The lips of the High-priest were earnest in prayer on the day of Expiation before the Lord, and their fulness turned the sins of Israel which were like a scarlet thred, and made them white as pure wool. And the King which was head over them was full of judgment, like a Pomgranate בר מן אמרכליא וארכונין Besides the Nobles and Rulers which were righteous, and there was no evil in them. (c) Targ. in Cant. 4. 3.

And likewise in other places in the Chaldee Paraphrasts, the word is sometimes used to signifie only dignity and high place: but sometime again to denote a Function and Office; and so the Chaldee of Jonathan upon the Prophets, renders, the Priests the keepers of the door, in 2 King. 12.10. כהניא אמרכליא The Priests, the Amarcalin; whereupon David Kimchi giveth this Comment, שומרי סף (d) The keepers of the threshold, meaneth, the keepers of the vessels of the house: For סף is a general name for the vessels of the service: And Jonathan interprets it Amarcalin; now these were chief Treasurers, which had others under them: And so Onkelos renders that passage, Eleazar the son of Aaron shall be chief over the chief of the Levites, Numb. 3. 32. אמרכלא דממנא The Amarcal appointed over the chief of the Levites. (d) Kimch. in 2 King. 12.10.

It is not much material to look after the various writing and reading of this word; how sometimes it is written Marcol [and that especially by the Jerusalem Talmud, which useth now and then to take away the first א Aleph in certain words, and so it constantly reads Lazar for Eliazar] and according to this reading Aruch doth Etymologize it to mean מר עד כל Lord over all] sometimes Amarcol, sometimes Immarcol or Immarcal, which by the Gemara of the Talmud is rendered, An appointer of all things, or one by whose appointment the affairs of the Temple were managed; it is the office of the men we are looking after, which the writing or notation of the word little helps us in. It

It is agreed on all hands that their number was seven, and that they carried seven keys, according to the seven gates of the Court: But here ariseth a question, were these seven Amarcalin pepetual officers, or did they change every week, as the Courses of the Priests changed? These several arguments might be used for the several assertion of either part: if they were not perpetual officers, why are they reckoned as perpetual? For in the changing Courses the Head of the Course is reckoned as chiefest, and these are reckoned two steps above him: and if they were perpetual officers, and the unlockers and lockers of the Court-gates continually, what shall we answer to that passage in the Treatise Middoth (c) which saith, That the keys of the gates were in the keeping of the seniors of the house of their Fathers in the changed Courses?

(c) Mid. per. 1.

Therefore for a temper between these two we are to apprehend that these seven Amarcalin, were perpetual in their office, as well as were the High-priest, Sagan and Katholikin, and that the keys of the Court were at their disposal; but that they committed the opening and shutting of the doors of the Court to Deputies, namely to some of the seniors of every course as it came in; and that they had not only these keys at their dispoſal, but also the keys of the Temple Wardrobes, and of the rooms of the several vessels, and were Overseers about them, and disposed of them for the use of the Temple.

SECT. IV.

GIZBARIN. גוברין.

(a) Maym. in Kele Mikdash. per. 4.

IT was a fixed tradition אין פוחתין משלשה גוברין (a) That the Gizbarin were not to be less than three, and they were as substitutes to the Immarcalin.

The word גובר is used in the Hebrew Text, Ezra 1.8. and in the Chaldee Text, Ezra 7. 21. in both which places our English hath rendred it Treasurers: the scope and sense of the former place doth evidently enough justifie the translation; for, speaking of Cyrus, his restoring the vessels of the Temple, to the Temple again; he saith, He brought them forth by the hand of Mithredath the Gizbar: which the LXX hath rendred Gazbarenus, as if it were some proper name, or a name Patronymick: but the very place sheweth that it meaneth that he was the man that kept these vessels or was Treasurer of them: and so Kimchi expounds it, (b) He was Overseer and Treasurer. In the latter place cited, the LXX renders it ταξεις, not Treasurers but Treasuries, but the sense of the place sheweth that it meaneth the Kings Officers and Receivers, and so Rabbi Solomon glosseth it, המקבלים מסים (c) The receivers of his Tributes.

(b) Kimchi in Michol. in voce.

(c) R. Sol. in Ezra 7.

Now as for these officers of the Temple that we are speaking of, which were called Gizbarin, Maymony in the place cited a little before, gives them this character, (d) That they were they that demanded all the hallowed things, and redeemed what was to be redeemed: which in his gloss upon the Talmud treatise, Shekalim he speaketh more at large, and saith (e) that the Gizbarin were those that were appointed over the holy stock and all consecrate things: And they redeemed every sanctified thing [הקדשות *Lev.*27.14.&c.] And every devoted thing [חרם *Num.*18.14.] And every estimated person or thing, [ערכים *Lev.*27.2.&c.] And the second tith.

(d) Maym. ubi sup.

(e) Id in Gloss. in Shek. per. 5.

And the Talmudick Text it self in that Treatise Shekalim (f) speaketh of the Gizbarin, receiving the half-shekel poll money: and of the Gizbarin opening the Treasury of the dedicate vessels. And in the Treatise Megillah (g) it speaketh of the Gizbarin receiving wood, &c. So that these men that we have in discourse, were the first Receivers and Treasurers of all things due or dedicate to the Temple treasury, as the half shekel mony of every Israelite, the vessels that were offered to the service, things that were vowed or devoted, and the thing vowed or devoted, that was to be redeemed with mony; these were they that stated the rate of the redemption, and received the mony; now these were but as sub-collectors and sub-treasurers, for what they received they were accountable for to the seven Immarcalin, and both these and the Immarcalin, to the Katholikin: and all under the oversight of the High-priest and Sagan.

(f) Talm. in Shek. per. 11. & per. 5.
(g) Talm. in Megillah per. 3. Aruch. in גוכר

And this was properly the Beth Din or Consistory of the Priests, of which we spake before, which transacted the business of the Sanctuary; not sentencing nor inflicting any penalties, or mulcts, corporal or pecuniary, upon their brethren or any other; but they were בולוטי The Counsellors for the Temple, that took care of the dues, stock, treasury, vessels, vestments, repair and service of the Temple, and of ordering of all things tending to these ends: and these were they, that kept their sitting to consult of these things in the chamber of Parhedrin or Palhedrin of which we have spoken in the survey of that piece of building: And these in the honester times were called Βελδται Counsellors, because they consulted and contrived really for the good of the Temple, but when they grew corrupt and minded their own ends, they were called but Parhedroi or sitters: Joseph of Aramathea is said to be Βελδτης τιμιος, an honourable Counsellor, Mark 15.43. Probably a Priest of this society, but of more than ordinary integrity and goodness. And so the Talmud speaks of R. Simeon בולוטה the Counsellor. Jerus. in Taanith. per. 4.

SECT. I.

Of the four and twenty courſes of the Prieſts.

IT is a very received opinion among the Hebrew Doctors, (a) that the courſes of the Prieſts were firſt ordained by Moſes; namely [as ſome of them ſay] four of Eleazar, and four of Ithamar; but as others, eight of the one, and eight of the other. They that conceive that Moſes ordained but eight in all, hold that Samuel added eight more, and made them ſixteen, and then came David, and added yet other eight, and made them four and twenty. But thoſe that hold that Moſes ordained ſixteen, conceive that David and Samuel joyned counſels together, in adding the other eight to them. In which intricacy to perplex our ſelves to diſpute whether it were this way or that way, is both needleſs and uſeleſs, ſince the firſt time the Scripture tells us of any Courſes, it tells us of the four and twenty, and David the ordainer and diſtributer of them: he by the ſpirit of God, giving them their number, and a divine lot appointing their order.

(a) Talm. Jeruſ. in Taanith per. 4 Maym. in Kele Mikd. per. 4. Kimch in 1 Chron. 24. R. Sol. ibid.

For our better viewing and obſerving of theſe Courſes, and ſervice of the Prieſts in them; it may not be amiſs to begin with the conſideration of their age, when they entred into the ſervice, and their manner of induction to it, and then to ſee the manner and condition of their courſes.

1. We read in the Jewiſh writers exceeding frequent mention of פרחי כהונה The ſpringals of the Prieſthood; for ſo I may well render it; or buds of the Prieſthood; for ſo the word ſignifies in propriety: as in the Treatiſe Joma it is ſaid, That (b) on the night that preceded the day of Expiation, if the High-prieſt began to ſlumber, the פרחי כהונה Springals of the Prieſthood filliped with their fingers to waken him: where the Gloſs expounds it, That they were young men, the hair of whoſe beards began to bud. And in the Treatiſe Tamid, (c) it is ſaid, that the Ancients of the Houſe of their father, lay upon benches, but the פרחי כהונה Springals of the Prieſt-hood lay on the ground, there the Gloſs giveth the very ſame expoſition of the phraſe that it did before: But R. Nathan expounds it, (d) The ſons of the Prieſts that were now fit for the ſervice: and (e) ſome others do alſo expound it, שהגיעו לעבודה ſuch as were new come to the ſervice; which in the ſame place in the Miſhneh are called רובים Youths.

2. Now the ages of the Prieſts at their entrance into the ſervice, we find to be threefold, or held out in the Scripture in a threefold variety: for the firſt law about the age of the Prieſts at their entrance into the ſervice, was at thirty years of age, Numb. 4. 3. and ſo the Levites, verſ. 23. & 30. & 35. But another Text ſpeaketh of the Levites going in to wait from twenty five years old and upward, Numb. 8. 25. And a third Text ſpeaketh of the ſons of Levi, doing the ſervice from twenty years old and upward, 1 Chron. 23. 24, 27. In which variety there is not contradiction, but alteration in reference to ſeveral reſpects: The fixed and conſiſtent time was thirty years old initiant [and ſo our Saviour anſwered the type at his entrance into his Miniſtry, Luke 3.] but at five and twenty they were Probationers, and might do ſome ſervices, ſaith Aben Ezra, but they might not do all: (f) for they might wait upon the Tabernacle, but they might not bear the Ark. And (g) therefore when the Ark was now ſetled in the Temple and no more to be born up and down; David by divine warrant, warrants their entrance to their function at twenty years old: And then were they but פרחי כהונה Springals of the Prieſthood, the down of their cheeks but now breaking out. The attendance of Samuel at the Tabernacle at Shiloh from a very child was a caſe extraordinary, and (h) his work there was but a Candidate and Probationer, to learn the manner of the ſervice and the ſong.

(f) Aben. Ezra in Num. 8.
(g) D. Kimch. in 1 Chron. 23.
(h) Id. in 1 Sam. 2.

3. The manner of their inſtalment and admiſſion to the ſervice was thus; (i) The great Sanhedrin ſate dayly in the room Gazith, to judge concerning the Prieſts that came to age, to enter into the ſervice, to ſee whether they were of the Prieſts line rightly deſcended or no; and if they proved ſo, then to ſee whether they were without blemiſh: if they proved not truly and compleatly Prieſts born, they were cloathed in black, and vailed in black, and ſo turned away, and no more to do with them: but if he proved of the Prieſts line rightly begotten, and there were any blemiſh in him of the 140 bleminſhes, (k) for ſo many they number, then he was ſet to the worming of the wood, of which we have ſpoken in the deſcription of the Court of the women. But if he proved rightly deſcended, and without any blemiſh, then was he clothed in white, and inrolled among the reſt of the Prieſts, and he went in and ſerved at the Altar as the others did: and to theſe cuſtoms that ſpeech alludeth, in Rev. 3. 5. He that overcometh, the ſame ſhall be clothed in white raiment, and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life.

(i) Mid. per. 5. Maym. in Biath. Mikd. per. 6.

(k) Id. ib. per. 8.

And here a ſtory mentioned by Suidas may not be unworthy to be related, though it be not ſo worthy to be believed, and that is this.

(l) One Theodoſius a Jew in the time of Juſtinian the Emperor related to one Philip a Chriſtian [who perſwaded him to become a Chriſtian alſo] as a great ſecret among the Jewiſh Nation, and known but to few neither; That in the time of the Temple ſtanding, even while Jeſus Chriſt lived as a private perſon, a certain Prieſt died at Jeruſalem, and the heads of the Prieſts met together to chooſe another in his ſtead: And while one named one, and another another, a certain Prieſt ſtood up and named Jeſus the ſon of Joſeph the Carpenter, as one known to them for a man of moſt ſingular wiſdom and integrity: But when ſome objected that Joſeph was not of the Tribe of Levi, but of Judah, and ſo Jeſus his ſon was not capable of the Prieſthood; and it was anſwered again, that he was come of a ſtock that had ſo mixed with the Tribe of Levi that he might be admitted, he was generally approved of, as one fit to ſucceed in the room of the Prieſt deceaſed. Now becauſe it was the cuſtom to inrol the names of thoſe that were admitted to be Prieſts, and the names of their parents, they called the mother of Jeſus to give them account of his parentage, [for Joſeph was now dead] and when ſhe had told them that he had no earthly Father, but was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, and that ſhe bare him, as divers could witneſs which were peſent at her Travail, but that ſhe was yet a Virgin: and when they had taken the witneſs of ſome that were with her at her Child-birth, and had received teſtimony from other women whom they ſet to ſearch her, that ſhe was ſtill a Virgin, they entred the name and Parentage of Jeſus into their Regiſter; in theſe words, Such a day ſuch a Prieſt died, the ſon of ſuch a man, and ſuch a woman; and by the common ſuffrage there was choſen in his ſtead, Jeſus the ſon of the living God, and of the Virgin Mary. And this Regiſter Book [ſaith this relater] at the ſacking and deſtruction of Jeruſalem, was preſerved by the care and induſtry of ſome of the chief of the Jews, and is now laid up privately at Tiberias: and this ſtory [ſaith Suidas] I had from ſome that heard it from Philip; to whom it was related.

Not to inſiſt upon the examination of this ſtory, but to leave it as we found it, and to return to the Courſes that we are about; It is held by the Jews, and that not without ſome ground, that of all the four and twenty Courſes that ſerved under the firſt Temple, four only returned out of the captivity of Babel; namely Jedajah, Harim, Paſhur, Immer. Thus the Jeruſalem Talmud, and Toſaphoth ad Taanith (m) reckon them, from Ezra 3. 36, 37, 38, 39. But the Babylon Talmud in ſtead of Harim (n) nameth Jojarib; and the Gloſs upon it doth juſtly ſcruple, how Paſhur is now become one of the Courſes, who was none of them before.

(m) Talm. Jeruſ. ubi ante. Toſaph. ad Taanith. per. 4.

(n) Tal. Bab. ib.

But how ſhall theſe four families do, to make four and twenty Courſes, as was the Primitive and Original diſtribution, and that by Prophetick and Divine appointment? The Prophets therefore that were amongſt the children of the Captivity [ſay the ſame Authors] found out a way to caſt them into ſo many Courſes, and their way was this.

They made four and twenty lots, and they wrote the names of the heads of the four and twenty Courſes upon them, and put them into the lottery box. Jedajah took out five, and himſelf one, there is ſix. Harim took out five, and himſelf one, there is ſix. Paſhur took out five, and himſelf one, there is ſix. Immer took out five, and himſelf one, there is ſix. And the Prophets that were among them conditioned with them, that though Jojarib came out of captivity, yet ſhould he not drive out the Courſe that was before him.

Now the meaning of this Tradition is this: That in drawing theſe lots with the names of the heads of the old Courſes upon them, they only intended to find out, what Courſes of the old names muſt be made out of every one of theſe four families, and they did not intend to alter the order of the Courſes, but to let them run as they did in the ancient round: only the Courſe of Jojarib which of old was the firſt, is now put to give place to Jedajah. And the reaſon of this was becauſe Jedajah was of the High-prieſts family, of the houſe of Joſhua the ſon of Jozedek, and ſo they allotted him the prehemi-nence, Ezra 2.36. The Gloſs indeed upon the Babylon Talmud, gives the reaſon to be, becauſe (o) in this their new molding, every one was to take his Courſe as his lot was drawn, and that in the order that the lot came up in the drawers hand they ſerved their weeks. But if this were a reaſon, why ſhould not Jojarib be a drawer of the lots as well as Jedajah, ſince the record ſaith he was preſent? And if they were ſo indifferent for the altering of the order of the Courſes, why ſhould they be ſo punctual for their number, ſince the one in the Primitive inſtitution was appointed by divine direction as well as the other? When the Evangeliſt Luke ſaith that Zachary the father of John the Baptiſt was of the Courſe of Abia, Luke 1.5. he undoubtedly referreth to the order of Abia's Courſe as it is ranked in 1 Chron. 24. For the family of Abia was not now extant among the Courſes, for there is no mention at all of him among the Prieſts that returned out of Captivity, and therefore the Evangeliſt ſaith, not that Zachary was of his family but of his Courſe, that is, of a Courſe that bare bare his name; but as for the Order of the Courſe, he either referreth to the Text mentioned, as to a place to be found in Scripture, and ſo his words to be conſtrued and underſtood by it, or elſe there is no order of his Courſe to be found at all.

The Courſes being thus divided after the Captivity anew, but ordered and ranked as of old, and in time encreaſed and grown numerous כל משמר ומשמר היה מעמד בירושלים Every Courſe [ſaith the Miſhneh in the place aforecited] had a ſtation in Jeruſalem; which the Jeruſalem Gemara expoundeth thus, It is a tradition that 2400 were the ſtation at Jeruſalem, and half a ſtation was at Jericho. And Jericho alſo was able to have produced a whole ſtation, but becauſe it would give the honour to Jeruſalem it yielded but half: And wen any Courſe was to go up to Jeruſalem, half the Courſe went up to Jeruſalem out of the Land of Iſrael, and half the Courſe went up out of Jericho; which the Babylonian Gemara wordeth thus, There were four and twenty Courſes in the Land of Iſrael, and twelve at Jericho.

Not that there are ſix and thirty Courſes to be ſuppoſed, but that the four and twenty were thus divided; that half or more of every Courſe were continually reſident in Jeruſalem, and about it; that they might unfailingly be ready for the Service when the time of their Courſe came: and the other part, or half of every Courſe was up and down diſperſed through the Land: only at and about Jericho, there was a great number conſtantly of every Courſe reſiding there, as the others did at Hieruſalem; who when the Week of their Courſe came, went up, either to aſſiſt their Bretheren of the courſe in their Service, or to help to cater proviſions for them, while they ſerved מחקנים לאחיהם: They ordered for their Brethren, ſaith one gloſs upon the place, שיספקו מים ומזון לאחיהם That their brethren might have ſufficient of Water and Proviſion, ſaith another: And as for the reſt of that Courſe that were neither at Hieruſalem nor at Jericho, but diſperſed up and down the Country, they and the Levites and the Stationary men, that were appertaining to that Courſe, met together in their Synagogues, according as they were near together, and faſted, and prayed, and read the Law, and made ſupplications that their Brethrens Service now in hand at Hieruſalem, might be accepted ישראל שבאותו משמר מתכנסין לעריהן Iſrael that was of that Courſe, ſaith the Miſhneh even now cited, gathered themſelves into their Cities and faſted, &c. Where by the word Iſrael is not meant the Iſraelites or Stationary men of that Courſe, as they ſtood in oppoſition and diſtinct to Prieſts and Levites, but it meaneth all the Prieſts and Levites, and Stationary men that were of that Courſe, who were diſperſed through the Land of Iſrael, in diſtinction to thoſe that were then at Hieruſalem at the Service.

As the Courſes were every one of them thus divided, in regard of place and attendance, ſo was every one of them alſo diſtinguiſhed into degrees.

1. There was ראש המשמר The head of the Courſe, who was Preſident over them all, and who reſembled that eminent perſon from whom the Courſe took its name: the moſt of theſe Heads no doubt were of the great Sanhedrim, and though in the affairs of the Temple the Sagan, Katholikin, Immercalin and Gizbarin, of whom hath been ſpoken already, were above them; yet in this great Council they were all equal, and theſe altogether are thoſe that are ſo frequently mentioned by the Goſpels, as Members of that Judicatory, by the name of Chief-prieſts.

2. There was ראש בית אב The heads of the houſes of their fathers: (p) for the Preſident of the Courſe, divided the Courſe ſo among the Houſes of the Fathers, that every Houſe or Family might ſerve its day. And thoſe that were in theſe ſeveral Families under the Head of the Houſe of their Father, were called כהנים הדיוטים, Ἱερεῖς Ἰδιῶται, private or ordinary Prieſts. (p) Maym. in Kelé Migdaſh per. 4.

Theſe Courſes entred on the Sabbath, and on the next Sabbath they went out, 2 King 11. 7. 2 Chron. 23. 4. ſerving only a Week at a time; and ſo their attendance was required twice in the year.

The ſerving of every Courſe, was thus divided.

(q) The Courſe that had five houſes of Fathers in it, three ſerved three days, and two ſerved four days. (q) Talm. Jer. & Toſaph. ubi ſupr.

The Courſe that had ſix houſes of Fathers in it, five ſerved five days, and one ſerved two days.

The Courſe that had ſeven houſes of Fathers in it, they ſerved every one their day.

The Courſe that had eight houſes of Fathers in it, ſix ſerved ſix days, and two one day.

And the Courſe that had nine houſes of Fathers in it, five ſerved five days, and four ſerved two days.

(r) In their attendance, the men of the Courſe were permitted to drink Wine in the night, but not in the day; becauſe it might be, that the ſervice of their brethren might be too heavy for the houſe of the Father that was to ſerve, and they might be neceſſitated to come in and help, which they might not do having drunk Wine. But the men of the houſe of the Father that were to ſerve, might not drink Wine either by day, or by night. Whoſoever knew his courſe and the houſe of his Father, he was forbidden Wine only for that day that his Fathers houſe ſerved; He (r) Toſaph. ibid.

that knew his course, but not his fathers house (the knowledge of which in long continuance might be lost) he was forbidden Wine all that Week.

(f) Maym. in Biath. Migdash. per. 4.

In some exigents the Priests might serve though they were unclean. (f) Every offering either of the Congregation, or of a particular person, the time for the offering of which is fixed, (as all the offerings time of the Congregations be) they dispence with the Sabbath, and with uncleanness, but that is with uncleanness, or defiling by the dead only: As for example, the time fixed for such a Sacrifice is come, and the most of the Congregation that should offer it, are defiled by the dead; as 2Chro. 30. 17. or the Congregation is clean, but the Priests that should offer it, are defiled by the dead; or both of them are clean, and the Vessels of the Service are so defiled, yet must it be offered in this uncleanness, and the clean, and unclean may be imployed about it alike, and they may all go into the Court. But those that are unclean with any other uncleanness, as by fluxes, issues, touching of creeping things, any carcass, or the like, may not be imployed about the Service, nor may they go into the Court.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Levites.

SECT. I.

Of the Porters and Guards of the Temple.

(a) 1 Chron. 25. & 26.
(b) Erachin. per. 2. in Gemar.

THE (a) Levites were divided into Porters and Singers; (b) fixed Offices which they might not change, one to intrude into anothers Office, and neither of them into the Priests.

The distribution of Porters into four and twenty Courses, is not so clearly legible in the Scripture, as is such a distribution of the Priests and Singers; for the Courses of both those are both numbred and named, and so are not these. And yet do these two Texts, 2*Chron.*3.14. and 1*Chron.*26.17,18. hold out so fair a probability of such a thing, that it may almost as readily be concluded upon, as may the other. For in the former, the Porters go in the very same Equipage, as to the matter of division into Courses, with the Priests and Singers. He appointed the Courses of the Priests according to the order of David his Father, and the Levites to their charges, to praise and minister before the Lord, as the duty of every day required; the Porters also by their Courses at every Gate. And in the latter, the first Fathers of the Porters are summed up to the very same number that the first Fathers of the other Courses were, namely, to four and twenty: Amongst all the Porters (c) [saith David Kimchi] there were four and twenty according to the rest of the courses; six on the East side, four on the North, four on the South: at Asuppim two and two, four in all; four on the West, and two at Parbar; behold four and twenty. And our Rabbins have distributed them into four and twenty places, &c.

(c) Kimchi in 1 Chron. 26.

The Office of the Porters was first to open and shut the Doors of the Mountain of the House, and of the Court of the Women; (for we have observed elsewhere, that the Priests took care for opening and shutting the Gates of the other Court) and to attend in those Gates all the day for prevention of any inconvenience that might come: to the prejudice of the purity, safety, or peace of the place or service. Secondly, the Scriptnre puts some Treasureship upon the Porters, as that they had some Treasures and Treasuries at the Gates where they attended; of which is spoken at large in our Treating concerning the Gates and Treasuries elsewhere. As for that part of their office and imployment which the Rabbins do sometimes make mention of, (under the phrase of לחנות דלתות) whether it were the brushing of the Gates, and keeping of the guilding bright, or their being the Turn-keys at the Wickets, or little doors within the great Gates when the Gates were shut; it was a work so coincident with their attendance at the Gates continually, that it is but a piece of that imployment, and needs not to be taken for an Office by it self.

Now besides this care of the Porters at the Gates by day, there was as much or more both at the Gates and other places by night in the Guards which were set to watch the Temple, which were four and twenty in all. (d) The guards of the Sanctuary (saith Maimony) was an affirmative command; although there were not fear either of enemies or thieves: and the command concerning this guarding, was that it should be by night. And they that warded were the Priests and the Levites, as it is said, thou and thy sons with thee, before the Tabernacle of the Congregation, &c. Now whether the Levites that were of these Guards were the Porters only, and not the Singers also of every Course as it came in, might might very well be queſtioned, if it were worth the labour to examine it; (e) but were they, or were they not, the guards were in number four and twenty, and were kept in four and twenty places every night, three of Prieſts, and one and twenty of Levites. 1. There was a guard at every one of theſe Gates of the Mountain of the Houſe, one at the Eaſt Gate Shuſha; one at the North Gate Tedi; two at the two South Gates Huldab; and one at the Weſt Gate Coponius: And there was a Guard within every one of the four corners of that great Square: ſo that there were nine in that boundary Wall that encompaſſed the Holy Ground. The three other Gates on the Weſt quarter, namely, one of Parbar, and two of Aſuppim, had not Night-guards at them as the reſt had, though they had Porters by day, either becauſe the ſteep deſcent from them did help their ſecurity, or becauſe they found ſome ſecurity for them ſome other way. 2. About the Wall that encloſed the Courts, there were two Guards at the two Eaſt corners, and at the Weſt, and both of them without the Wall of the Court; and there were five at five of the ſeven Gates. The two Gates that had not the Levites Guards upon them, were the Water-Gate, over which there was a Guard of Prieſts in the Chamber of Abtines and the upper Gate of Corban, by which there was a Guard of Prieſts in the room Beth Mokadh. And there was one Guard more of Levites on the North ſide, in the Chamber of Corban, over againſt the Holy Place, and another on the South ſide over againſt the Vail, and another juſt behind the moſt Holy Place. The Gate Nitſets had a Guard of Prieſts and Levites both at it, very near together; All which places will be eaſier underſtood upon ſight of them in the Map that we have drawn of the Temple, and building about it, if it could once find the hap to come to ſight.

(f) There was one that walked the Round through all theſe Guards every night, and him they called, The Man of the Mountain of the Houſe: And if he found any one not ſtanding on his feet, he ſaid unto him, Peace be unto thee; but if he found any one aſleep, he ſtruck him, and had liberty to ſet fire on his Garments: ſo that they would ſay, what noiſe is yonder in the Court? why it is the noiſe of a Levite beaten, and his Coat burnt becauſe he ſlept upon the Guard. Rabbi Eliezer the ſon of Jacob ſaith, one time they found my Mothers Brother ſleeping, and they burnt his Garments. Now whether this Man of the Mountain of the Houſe were the Sagan [as ſome have thought, but very unlikely,] or one man of the Courſe that then waited, appointed for this purpoſe; as is the Opinion of (g) Maimony and (h) Bartenora, or whoſoever he was, methinks his action in burning the ſleepers Garments, giveth light to that place, Rev. 16.15. Bleſſed is he that watcheth and keepeth his Garments.

SECT. II.

Of the Singers and Temple Muſick.

NOt to inſiſt upon the ordaining and diviſion of the Singers and their Courſes, of which there is large deſcription, 1 Chron. 25. nor to ſearch the ground of the Temple Muſick from the Law; about which the Gemariſts are copiouſly inquiſitive in the Treatiſe (a) Erachin; let us take up a little conſideration firſt of the perſons of the ſingers themſelves, and then of their Song and Muſick.

(a) Erachin fol. 11.

(b) Maimony tells us, that the Singers were Levites and Iſraelites together מחן לויים ובהן ישלא לין מיוחכין המשיאין לכהונה שאין עולה עיר דוכן אלא מיוחס He had ſpoken immediately before, that the Song of the Temple was properly with Voices, and not with Inſtruments, becauſe the ground of that Song which was the Service, was the Voice. עיקר שירה בקול which is a Maxime that the Talmud ſpeaketh of exceeding oft; yet he concludeth that others ſtood with the Voices, with Inſtruments. And ſome of them (ſaith he) were Levites, and ſome of them were Iſraelites of note, that had married with the Prieſthood; for none might go up into the desks of the Song men, but men of note.

(b) Maim. in Kele Mikdaſh ptr. 3.

The Miſhnah in the Treatiſe Erachin cited above, doth make the like diviſion in this point, and it doth it ſo, as that the Iſraelites our Rabbin ſpeaketh of, appear to have their part in the inſtrumental Muſick only, and not in the Vocal. For having made mention of the ſounding of the Trumpets, and the Muſick of other Inſtruments, and how, and when they were uſed, it concludeth thus: Now theſe (that played upon ſuch and ſuch inſtruments, for that was the diſcourſe in the next words before) were the ſervants of the Prieſts. The words of Rabbi Mier: Rabbi Joſe ſaith, it was the Family of Pegarim, and the Family of Tſipporiah of מעימעוס Emmaus which were taken to the Prieſthood. Rabbi Haninah the ſon of Antigonus, ſaith they were Levites. The Gloſs upon the place, ſaith theſe were Families of Iſraelites of note, whoſe Daughters the Prieſts had married. (c) The Treatiſe Succah, ſpeaketh of theſe very Families, and ſaith they were of Ai and Emmaus. (it is written אמאם there) and the Gloſs there, ſaith they were Iſraelites of worth, whoſe daughters and widows were fit to be married to the Prieſts.

(c) Succah ptr. 5. in Gemara.

So

So that it is a disputed case whether any were imployed in the Musick but the Levites only; but if any other, they were to be as near the Priesthood as possible, both for alliance and qualifications, and when they were come to the highest they could, they were not admitted to joyn Voices with the Vocal Musick, which was the proper Song, and the proper Service, but only to joyn with the Instrumental: which was but thus much, that if any man of worth and piety, or in near affinity with the Priesthood, had addicted himself to Musical Devotions, and to pour out his Praises to God that way, (as that was then greatly in use) if he came to offer to joyn his Skill and Devotion to the Temple Chorus, they refused him not, but let him put in with his Instrument among the Instruments, but among the Voices he might not joyn, for that belonged only to the Levites. So it is said in the 2 *Sam.*6.5. And David and all the House of Israel played on all manner of Instruments made of fine wood, even on Harps, and on Psalteries, and on Timbrels, and on Cornets, and Cymbals.

As for the number of the Singers, that is the Voices, they were never to be under twelve, for so was the number of every Course when they were divided into their Courses, 1*Chron.*25. But as many above twelve as might be, and so their Tradition is express; (f) There must not be less than twelve Levites in the desks, but they add to the number ever. And whereas the Levites Children might never come within the Court, upon any other occasion, nor at any other time wqatsoever: yet might they come in when the Levites were singing, and might sing with them, not going up into the Desks, and looking over as the Levites did, but standing upon the ground, between their Fathers Legs. (g) And the Warrant for this they take from those words in *Ezr.*3.9. Then stood Jeshua with his sons, Kadmiel and his sons, &c. And they sang together by course, &c. And they back it also with this reason, &c. דהני קטי קלייהו והני עב קלייהו (h) Because the voice of those was small, and the others big, those trebled, and the other sang more base: And so by this means they made the more full, and the more sweet Musick.

(h) Gemara. ibid.

The Instruments that they used, were either wind Instruments, or Instruments with strings. The first of their wind Instruments to be looked after, were their Trumpets, of whose Attendance on the Altar service we find mention, 2 Chron. 7.6. and 29.26. and in divers other places, where the use of them is ascribed to the Priests, and not to the Levites; for indeed they were none of the Consort, but a Musick when the Consort stopped, as we shall see anon.

The number of the Trumpets was to be (i) not under two, nor above an hundred and twenty, the reason why not under two, was because of that command, *Num.*10.2. Make thee two Trumpets: and why not above 120. was because of that example at the beginning of the Temple Service, 2 *Chron.*5.12.

(i) Maym. ubi supr.

The Lord enjoined in *Numb.*10.10. That in the day of their rejoycing, and in their solemn Feasts, and in the New Moons, they should blow with Trumpets: This was the warrant and engagement of this Trumpet Musick, and the manner of it was thus:

Those that blew with Trumpets were the Priests, for so was the original institution, that the Priests the sons of Aaron should blow with them, *Numb.*10.18. 1 *Chron.*15.24. And their standing, when they were about this piece of service, was not where the Levites stood in the desks, or near them, but it was clean on the other side of the Altar, and they stood looking down the Court when they blew the Trumpets, as the Levites stood looking up the Court when they sang and plaid, but both looking on the Altar: (k) Two Priests stood by the Table of the Fat שולהן חלבים with two silver Trumpets in their hand, &c. as saith the Mishnah of the Talmud in the place cited in the Margine: Now it speaketh of two Priests, because that was the lowest number of Trumpets that might be used, and if there were more, they stood in the same place in more compass, namely on the West side of the rise of the Altar, for there as is observed in the place, the Table of the fat was placed.

(k) Tamid. per. 7.

The manner of their blowing with their Trumpets was first a long plain blast, then a blast with breakings and quaverings, and then a long, plain blast again; this the Jews call תקועה תרועה תקועה, and in their short writings they express it thus תתת. The Mishnah last cited, saith, thas the Priests standing in the place there mentioned, תקעו וחריעו ותקעו, sounded, blew alarm, sounded, for so let me English it till further discourse do more fully shew its meaning.

The Priests did never blow, but these three blasts went together, and hereupon arose that dispute which occurs more than once or twice in the Talmud, about how many times the Trumpets sounded before the Altar every day.

The general Tradition ran thus, אין פוחתין מכּא תקיעה במקדש ולא מוסיפין על מ״ח: (l) They never sounded less than one and twenty soundings in the Sanctuary, and never more than eight and forty: But there were some that express it thus, (m) That they never sounded less than seven soundings, nor more than sixteen: Now the reason of this difference, which indeed was no difference at all, was this (n) because the one party held the three distinct ſtinct blowings to be but one ſounding, and the other held them to be three ſoundings diſtinct.

(l) Erachin. per. 2. in Mish. & Succah. per. 5

(n) Talm. Jer. in Succab. per. 5. & Gemara. Bab. in Erach. per. 2.

The Jews do expreſs theſe three ſeveral ſoundings, that they made at one blowing, by theſe words, תרועה באמצע ופשוטה לפניה ולאחריה (o) an Alarm in the midſt [for ſo our Engliſh renders תרועה, *Num.*10.5,6. Vatablus, vox infracta, a broken or quavering ſounding] and a plain note before it and after it: which our Chriſtian Writers do moſt commonly expreſs by Taratantara; though that word ſeem to put the quavering ſound before and after, and the plain in the midſt, contrary to the Jewiſh deſcription of it.

(o) Talm. Bab. in Succah. ubi ſup. in Gemar. fol.53. & Gloſs. ib. & Gloſs. in Erach. ubi ſup.

A ſecond wind Inſtrument that they uſed, was חליל Chalil, or אבוב Abbubh, a Pipe, or Hoboy, or Cornet, or ſome ſuch loud Wind Muſick [which of theſe I will not much queſtion:] the Jews in this ſtory give us ſome Character of it. (p) Our Rabbins have delivered [ſay they] that there was an Abbubh or Pipe in the Sanctuary; [the Gemara and the Gloſs intimate Chalil and Abbubh were all one] It was ſmooth, it was thin, it was of reed, and it was from the days of Moſes. The King commanded, and they gilt it all over with gold, but then the ſound of it was not ſo ſweet as before. They took off the gilding, and the ſound was as ſweet as ever.

(p) Gemara in Erach. ibid. & Aruc. in אבוב.

Now this Pipe or Hoboy, or call it what you will, was not a conſtant Muſick at the Altar every day, as the Trumpets were, and the other inſtruments that we are to ſpeak of, but it was uſed only twelve days in all the year, (q) There were not to be leſs than two Chalils or Pipes [ſaith the Talmudick Tradition] and there were not to be more than twelve. And on twelve days of the year did they play on the Chalil, before the Altar, namely at the killing of the firſt Paſſeover [or the Paſſeover in the firſt month:] and at the killing of the ſecond Paſſeover; [in the ſecond month] on the firſt Holiday of the Paſſeover Week, on the Holiday of Pentecoſt, [Lev.23.21.] and on the eight days of the feaſt of Tabernacles: And they played not on a Pipe of braſs but of reed, becauſe the ſound of that is ſweet: And the cloſe was made with one Pipe or Hoboy alone, becauſe ſuch a cloſe is moſt delightſome: For one Pipe [r ſaith the Gloſs] drew out the cloſe after the other had done: for this is a better way than if they ſhould have cloſed all together. And this Muſick of the Chalil was at the time of the Offering: and the Levites ſung the Hallell with their voices, all the twelve days mentioned, but on the other days the other inſtruments were uſed, and they ſung the ordinary ſong.

(q) Erach. ubi ſup. in Miſhn.

Thoſe other inſtruments therefore, that were the conſtant Muſick, and never failed from attendance were theſe three, נבל כנור צלצל Nebhel, Kinnor and Tseltſel, and theſe were ſeverally diſtributed to the ſons of the three Maſter Muſicians, Aſaph, Heman and Jeduthun, 1*Chron.*15.19,20,21. See theſe three Inſtruments named together [ſave that inſtead of צלצל the word מצלתים is uſed, which maketh no difference] 1*Chr.*16.5. and 25. 1. *Neh.*12.27. &c. 2*Chron.*29.25.

In going about to determine punctually and exactly, what kind of Inſtruments theſe three were; we might ſpend a great deal of time in ſhewing what this and that, and the other Author ſaith of them: and when we have done all, we muſt ſit down with a conjecture, that it may be one of them was of this faſhion, and another was of that, for it will be very hard and daring to be poſitive in them; and therefore we will only take up with Joſephus his Character and deſcription of them, who himſelf was often preſent no doubt at the Temple Muſick, and whoſe deſcribing of them will give ſatisfaction enough to thoſe that look rather after the time, order, and managing of the Muſick, than at the very conſort of the Muſick it ſelf.

1. נבל (s) He renders Νάβλα, and defines it thus, Ἡ δὲ Νάβλα δώδεκα φθόγγους ἔχουσα τοῖς δακτύλοις κρέσται.

(s) Joſeph l.7. c.10.pag. apud. me. 216.

2. כנור He expreſſeth by Κιννύρα, and gives it this character; Ἡ μὲν κιννύρα δέκα χορδαῖς ἐξημμένη τύπτεται πλήκτρῳ.

3. And צלצל or מצלתים he tranſlateth Κύμβαλον, and ſaith of that kind of inſtrument, Κύμβαλά τε ἦν πλατέα καὶ μεγάλα χάλκεα.

Upon which words we may take up theſe Obſervations:

1. That נבל and כנור which our Engliſh conſtantly tranſlates Harps and Pſalteries, were ſtrung inſtruments, and not wind inſtruments, as thoſe were that we have ſpoken of before.

2. That though both theſe were inſtruments with ſtrings, yet there was this difference between them. 1. That the one was ſtruck with a quill or a bow, as are our Citterns and Viols; and the other with the fingers, as the Pandura and the Lute. And 2. that the notes of the one was made and differenced by ſtops and frets, and of the other by the ſeveral ſtrings, for ſo are the words φθόγγους and χορδαῖς to be underſtood and diſtinguiſhed. 3. That the נבל Nebhel had twelve ſtrings, which made twelve ſeveral Notes; [as it is with our Harps and Virginals, where the ſeveral Notes are not made by ſtops, as they are on Lutes, but every ſeveral ſtring is a ſeveral Note] And the כנור Kinnor had ten ſtrings, but the Notes were made with frets and ſtops. I ſhould therefore according to Joſephus his character, if that be current, tranſlate Nebhel a Harp, for the ſeveral ſtrings made the ſeveral notes, and it was ſtruck with the fingers, in both which things our Harps

Harps agree. And כינור Kinnor I ſhould liken to our Citterns or Viols, ſtopt on the frets, and played on with a quill or bow, and ſhould tranſlate it a Viol. (t) Rabbi Judah ſaid, The כינור Kinnor of the Sanctuary had ſeven ſtrings: but in the days of Meſſias it ſhall have eighth, as it is ſaid, To him that excelleth upon Sheminith, or upon the eight ſtring of the world to come.

3. צלצל which both our Engliſh, the LXX. [in Pſal. 150.] and Joſephus [in his words cited] do render Cymballs, ſeemeth to have been neither wind inſtrument, nor ſtring inſtrument, but ſome broad inſtrument of braſs, whereon their muſick was made by beating on it as on a Taber. They were great and broad Cymbals of braſs, ſaith Joſephus. And the Talmudicks tell this ſtory of one of their Cymbals; (u) There was a Cymbal צלצל in the Sanctuary, and it was made of braſs, and the ſound of it was ſweet. It became crackt, and the wiſe men ſent and fetcht workmen from Alexandria, who mended it, but then the ſound was not ſo ſweet as before. They took off the mending, and the ſound was as ſweet as it uſed to be. * There might not be above one Cymbal in the Quire at once, and this ſeemeth to have born the Baſe, as being deepeſt and loudeſt: to this the Apoſtle alludes in his expreſſion, 1 Cor. 13. 1.

(u) Ibid. fol. 10. & Tal. Jeruſ. in Succah. fol. 55.

* Maym. in Kele Mikd. per. 3.

We ſhall not be further curious, nor inquiſitive about this matter, concerning the form or nature of the muſick-inſtruments: ſince our inquiry is after the ſong it ſelf, I ſhall only add this, (w) that of the Nebhels or Harps, there might not be leſs than two in the Quire, nor above ſix: (x) and of the כנורות Kinnor or Viols not under nine, but as many above as poſſible: and ſo the leaſt Quire that could be, was nine Viols, two Harps and one Cymbal. And now let us hear the Muſick it ſelf.

1. The Trumpets ſounded their תקתה Taratantara [for ſo for company will we call it,] (y) every morning at the opening at the Court Gates, particularly at the opening of the Eaſt gate, or the gate of Nicanor: (z) Now though this practice had not any expreſs and literal Command, yet was it grounded upon this neceſſity and reaſon, becauſe that the Levites and Stationary men might have notice to come to attend their Desks and Service: and that the People of Jeruſalem might hear and take notice, and thoſe that would come to the Temple: ſo that this ſounding was as it were the Bells to ring them into the Service: And after this the Trumpets ſounded not till the very time of the morning Sacrifice.

2. The Song and Muſick began not to ſound, till the pouring out of the Drink-offering. This is a Traditionary Maxime, exceeding common, and received among the Rabbins, and they deſcant upon it thus, אין אומר שירה אלא על היין [1.] They utter not the ſong but over the Wine of the Drink-offering: [2.] for a man ſingeth not but for gladneſs of heart. [3] Therefore they utter not the ſong at the very time of the Offering, but over the Wine which cheareth God and Man, as Jud. 9. 13. And ſo the Treatiſe Tamid deſcribing the manner of the daily ſervice, relateth that when the High-prieſt was minded to offer the Sacrifice, [4] He went up the riſe or bridge of the Altar, and the Sagan on his right hand: when he came to the midſt of the riſe, the Sagan took him by the right hand and lift him up: then the firſt man that was to bring up the pieces of the ſacrifice, reached him up the head and the feet, and the ſecond reached him the two ſhoulders, and ſo the reſt reached him the reſt of the parts, and he diſpoſed of them, &c. And when he was to go about the Altar, to ſprinkle the blood upon the horns of it, he began at the South-eaſt corner, and from thence to the North-eaſt, and ſo to the North-weſt, and concluded at the South-weſt. They give him the wine of the drink-offering to pour it out: the Sagn ſtood by the horn of the Altar, and a napkin in his hand: and two Prieſts ſtood by the Table of the fat, and two ſilver Trumpets in their hand to ſound. They came and ſtood by Ben Arza, the one on his right hand, and the other on his left: He [the High-prieſt] ſtooped down to pour out the drink-offering, and the Sagan waved with his napkin, and Ben Arza ſtruck up his Cymbal, and the Levites began the ſong. And ſo may we underſtand that paſſage, 2 Chron. 29. 27. And when the burnt-offering began, the ſong of the Lord began with the Trumpets and with the Inſtruments; namely, when the drink-offering was poured out, for till then the Offering was not perfect becauſe every burnt offering was bound to have a meat offering, and a drink offering, or elſe it was not right, Num. 15. 5. And this may be the proper cauſe, whatſoever the Jews deſcant, why the Muſick began not till the drink-offering: namely, they ſtayed till the offering was compleat, and then began.

3. The conſtant and ordinary Pſalms that they ſang were theſe:

[5] On the firſt day of the week, the four and twentieth Pſalm, The earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs thereof, &c.

[5] Tamid. ubi ſup. Roſh. haſh. fol. 31. Maym. in Tamid. per. 6.

On the ſecond day of the week, the forty eight Pſalm. Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praiſed in the City of God. &c.

On the third day, the eighty ſecond Pſal. God ſtandeth in the Congregation of the mighty, and judgeth among the Gods, &c.

On the fourth day, the ninety fourth Pſal. O Lord God to whom vengeance belongeth, &c.

On

On the fifth day, the eighty first Pſal. Sing aloud unto God our ſtrength, make a joyful noiſe unto the God of Jacob, &c.

On the ſixth day of the week, the ninety third Pſal. The Lord reigneth, he is cloathed with Majeſty, &c.

On the ſabbath day they ſang the ninety ſecond Pſal. which bears the Title of A Pſalm or Song for the Sabbath day.

Theſe were the known, and conſtant, and fixed Pſalms, that the ſingers ſang, and the muſick plaid to, on the ſeveral days of the week: And the reaſon of the choice of theſe ſeveral Pſalms for the ſeveral days; [6] the Gemara on the Treatiſe Roſh haſhanah, and the Gloſs upon the Treatiſe Tamid, do give to this purpoſe. [6] Roſh. haſh. ubi 1 p Gloſs. in Tamid. c. 7.

On the firſt day of the week they ſang the Pſalm, The earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs thereof, &c. Becauſe on the firſt day of the week of the Creation, God poſſeſſed the world, and gave it in poſſeſſion, and ruled in it.

On the ſecond day of the Week they ſang the Pſalm, Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praiſed, &c. For on that day the Lord divided his works, the waters, and reigned over them.

On the third day they ſang the Pſalm, God ſtandeth in the Congregation of the mighty, &c. Becauſe on that day the earth appeared, on which is Judging and Judges; and by his Wiſdom he diſcovered the Earth, and eſtabliſhed the World by his Underſtanding.

On the fourth day they ſang the Pſalm, O Lord God to whom Vengeance belongeth, &c. Becauſe on the fourth day he made the Sun, Moon and Stars, and will be avenged on them that worſhip them.

On the fifth day the Pſalm, Sing aloud unto God our ſtrength, &c. Becauſe of the variety of Creatures that were made that day to praiſe his name.

On the Sixth day the Pſalm, The Lord reigneth, he is cloathed with Majeſty, &c. Becauſe on the ſixth day God finiſhed his works, made man, who underſtands the glory of the Creator, and the Lord ruled over all his works. Thus they deſcant.

4. [7] Now the ſingers, in ſinging of theſe Pſalms, divided every one of them into three parts, making three large pauſes or reſts in them; and ceaſed their Muſick and Singing for a while; theſe parts and pauſes the Talmudicks call פרקים, and they ſay thus of them, that they were בנעימת קול להפסיק Pauſings or intermiſſions in the vocal muſick, and when the voices ceaſed, the inſtruments ceaſed alſo, and ſo in every Pſalm the muſick made three intermiſſions. [7] Ibid.

5. At theſe intermiſſions the Trumpets ſounded, and the People worſhipped על כל פרק תקיעה ועל כל תקיעה חשתחויה For at every pauſe [ſaith the Talmud] there was a ſounding with the Trumpets, and at every ſounding there was a worſhipping, their ſounding with the Trumpets, was, as hath been ſpoken before, a Taratantara, [as we have choſen to call it,] and they never ſounded otherwiſe than ſo, when they ſounded, namely, three ſtrains, a plain, a quavering, and a plain again: and thus did the Trumpets ſound one and twenty blaſts every day; three at the opening of the Court gate, nine at the morning ſacrifice, and nine at the evening ſacrifice: namely, three ſoundings at the three pauſings of the Muſick, and the three ſtrains named, at every ſounding: and ſo we ſee that the Trumpets were never joyned with the Quire in Conſort, but ſounded only when the Quire was ſilent.

Thus was the Song, and theſe were the Pſalms ſung ordinarily throughout all the year: but at ſome certain days there were other Pſalms and Songs uſed, and the Trumpets alſo ſounded extraordinary ſoundings, beſides that number now mentioned.

As 1. [8.] On the Eve of the Sabbath, the Trumpets ſounded two ſoundings more than they uſed to do at other days; namely one [which conſiſted of the three ſtrains] to cauſe the People to ceaſe from work, and another to diſtinguiſh between the common day, and the holy day that was now come in. [8] Succ. per. 5.

2. On the Sabbaths themſelves, there was an additional ſacrifice, beſides the daily ſacrifice, according to the appointment, *Num.*28.9,10. [9] And at the time of this additional ſacrifice, the Levites ſang Moſes his Song, in *Deut.*32. Hear O Heavens, and I will ſpeak, &c. but they ſang it not all at one time, but divided into ſix parts, and ſang one part of it every Sabbath, and ſo in ſix Sabbath days they finiſhed it, and then began again. Thus did they at the additional morning ſacrifice: and at the evening ſacrifice they ſang Moſes ſong in *Exod.*15. And the conſideration of this [that on the Sabbaths they ſang both the ſongs of Moſes] helpeth to illuſtrate that paſſage in *Rev.*15.3. where the Saints are ſaid to ſing the Song of Moſes the ſervant of God: becauſe they were now come to their everlaſting Sabbath, having gotten the Victory over the Beaſt, and over his Image, and over his Mark, and over the number of his Name, and having the Harps of God in their hands: [10.] Now at the additional ſacrifice, and ſong of the Sabbath, the Prieſts ſounded their [9] Maym. in Tamid. per. 6. [10] Succah ubi ſup.

their Trumpets three times more, as they did at the ordinary ſongs, the ſingers making their pauſes and ſtops in thoſe ſongs, as well as in the other.

[11] Roſh. haſh. ubi ſup. & Maym. ubi ſup.

3. [11.] At the Additional ſacrifices which were appointed for the firſt day of the year, Num. 29. 1, 2, &c. [which was called the feaſt of Trumpets, becauſe the Trumpets then ſounded to give notice of the years beginning] the Levites ſang the eighty firſt Pſalm, Sing aloud unto the God our ſtrength, &c. And if the firſt day of the year fell upon the fifth day of the week, [for which day this Pſalm was appointed in the ordinary courſe] then they ſaid it twice over, once at the daily ſacrifice, and once at the additional ſacrifice, but beginning at one of the times at the ſixth verſe, I removed his ſhoulder from the burthen, &c.

4. At the evening Sacrifice of the firſt day of the year, they ſang the nine and twentieth Pſalm, The voice of the Lord ſhaketh the Wilderneſs, &c. And if the firſt day of the year chanced to light upon the Sabbath, the Pſalms of the firſt day of the year were ſung, and took place of the Pſalms for the Sabbath.

5. At the Paſſeover, and at ſome other times, as hath been related, they ſang the Hallel, which to deſcribe we will refer till we come to take up the Celebration of the Paſſeover in its due place.

SECT. III.

Of the Stationary men, or Iſraelites of the Station.

AS there were four and twenty Courſes of the Prieſts, and as many of the Porters and Singers, ſo alſo were there four and twenty Courſes of Iſraelites for the Station. This indeed, is a title that is a ſtranger to the Scripture, and not mentioned there, and yet the thing it ſelf ſeemeth not to want its ground, nor the men themſelves their warrant from thence.

There were two Maximes in reference to their Sacrifices, which were as premiſes, out of which was neceſſarily deduced the concluſion for Stationary men, and thoſe were theſe.

1. A mans Sacrifice could not be offered up, unleſs he himſelf were preſent at it, and ſtanding by it, and ſo is the undoubted Tenet in both Talmuds אין אפשר שיהיה קרבנו של אדם קרב והוא אינו עומד על גביו (a) A mans Sacrifice may not poſſibly be offered up, if he himſelf be not preſent at it. And hence it was that although Women were at all other times, forbidden coming into the Court of Iſrael; yet when any Woman had a Sacrifice to be offered up for her, ſhe had admiſſion into the Court, and there was a kind of neceſſity that ſhe ſhould be there, אין נראית אשה בעזרה אלא בשעת קרבנה בלבד (b) A Woman might not be ſeen in the Court, but only at the time of her Offering: and then ſhe might be, nay then ſhe muſt be preſent there. And the reaſon of this was, becauſe of that command, that whoſoever had a burnt Sacrifice to offer up, (c) he muſt bring it to the Sanctuary himſelf, and if Bullock or Lamb, he muſt put his hand upon the head of it, Levit. 1. 3. and 3. 2. 8.

(b) Toſaph. in Erach. per. 2.

(c) Ab. Ezr. in Lev. 1.

2. There were ſome Sacrifices, that were the Sacrifices of all Iſrael, or of the whole Congregation: and particularly תמידין קרבניהן של כל ישראל (d) the continual daily Sacrifice was the Offering for all Iſrael: And accordingly the (e) Lambs for the daily Sacrifice, and other Sacrifices which were offered up for the whole Congregation were provided, at the Publick Charge, out of the Temple Treaſury.

(d) Tal. Jeru. in Pejachin. per. 3.

(e) Snek. per. 4.

Now it was impoſſible that all Iſrael ſhould be preſent at the Sacrifices that were to be offered up for all Iſrael, and therefore it was needful that ſome repreſentatives ſhould be choſen, who in ſtead, and behalf of all the People, ſhould be preſent at every Sacrifice that ſhould be offered up for the whole Congregation: And becauſe this attendance would be continual, in regard of the daily Sacrifice, which was a Sacrifice of this Nature, and ſo the Service would be very heavy for any one company of Men to attend continually; therefore they appointed four and twenty Courſes of theſe Stationary men, as well as of the Prieſts and Levites, that their attendance in theſe viciſſitudes might be the more eaſie and portable, even as the others were alſo divided into the like Courſes for the ſame eaſe. The Jews hold that theſe ſtations were firſt ordained by the former Prophets. For the former Prophets appointed [ſaith (f) Maymony] that they ſhould chooſe out of Iſrael, men upright and religious, and that theſe ſhould be as the Meſſengers of all Iſrael, to ſtand by the Sacrifices, and theſe are called אנשי מעמד The Men of the ſtation, and they divided them into four and twenty Courſes, according to the number of the Courſes of the Prieſts and Levites, and over every ſtation there was one made Chief or Preſident, and him they called, the Preſident of the ſtation.

[f] Maym. ubi ſup.

(g) Theſe

(g) These men of the Station in every Course, did as the Priests and Levites did in their Courses, those that were in Jerusalem and near it, when their week came, went and attended upon their station: but those that were at distance and further off, gathered together into their several Synagogues, and there fasted and prayed, and read some part of the Law: because though at distance, yet would they joyn in service with, and for their brethren of their Course, who were now in their attendance at Jerusalem: They fasted on the second, third, fourth and fifth days of that week, and read over the story of the creation, in Gen. 1. & 2. in the six days, every day a portion of it. They would not fast on the first day of the week, because they would not slip out of the joy and delight of a Sabbath into a Fast, and they would not fast on the last day of the week, because they would not preface the joy and delight of the Sabbath, with a Fast neither. But the four days betwen, they spent in that solemn duty, for the prosperity of their brethren that were at Jerusalem, and of the work that they were about. (g) Taan. per. 4. Maym. ubi sup.

The Stationary men that were at Jerusalem, were to attend constantly upon the Temple Service, whilst it was in hand, except at some particular times, when they had a dispensation, of which anon: and their attendance referred especially to two ends:

First, They stood to be a representative Congregation, in behalf of all the people, at the offering up of the daily sacrifice, which was the sacrifice of all the people; and at the use and administration of the publick Ordinances and Service. The Jews were so precise and punctual about this point, of having a competent congregation present, when the publick Ordinances were administred; (h) that in their Synagogues they would not have publick Prayers, nor reading of the Law, unless ten men were there; much more was there a fitting Congregation of the people required to be at the Temple-service, which concerned all the people, to be administred unto, besides the Priests which were to administer: There was sacrificing there, twice a day, and reading of the Law at the least twice, and Prayers four times, and it had becomed and behoved [if it had been possible] all the people to have been there present and attending; which because it could not possibly be done, that all the people should be constant there, they ordained and provided these Courses of Stationary men, to be as the Deputies of all the people, and a representative Congregation in their behalf. It had been a visible contempt of those ordinances, to have had them administred daily, and none of the people to have been attending on them: and it would have been a hazard, that in time they would have been neglected by the people, if they had been only left to their own liberty, to come, or not to come to them, as they saw good; therefore to prevent this visible contempt that might have accrewed, and to provide that there might be always a Congregation of the people, these stationary Courses were ordained, that if devotion brought no other of the people to the service, yet these their representatives might be sure to be attending ועמידתן שם לתפלה ולתחנה ולבקשה ולקרות בתורה נקרא מעמד And this their standing there, at prayers, supplications and oraisons, and at the reading of the Law, was called the station. (h) Megillah. per. 4. Maym. in Tephillah. per. 11.

A second imployment that they, or at least, some of them had, was to take care [as representatives of the people] that those of the people that had been under any uncleanness, and being now cleansed were come to have their atonement made, might be dispatched, and the business done for which they came. And so it is intimated by the treaty Tamid, when it relateth (i) that upon the ringing of the Migrephah, [of which hereafter] by those that went into the holy place to offer incense, the head or chief man of the station, brought such persons up into the gate of Nicanor, to have their atonement made. (i) Tam. per. 5.

There have been some who have conceived that these Stationary men, as representatives of the whole Congregation, were to lay their hands upon the head of the daily sacrifice, which was an offering for all the people; I did once go along also with this opinion, but now I find the Jews on the contrary, asserting (k) That there was no laying on of hands upon the sacrifices of the whole Congregation, but only in two cases. The one was upon the scapegoat, and the other was upon the bullock that was offered for the whole Congregation, when it sinned of ignorance, and the thing was hid from the eyes of the Assembly: And that it was a Tradition delivered even by Moses himself: that for the whole Congregation, hands were laid but upon these two sacrifices. And accordingly there were divers sacrifice times, when the Stationary men were excused from attendance; though the sacrifice were a sacrifice for the whole Congregation; (l) As they never made a station at the morning sacrifice all the eight days of the feast of Dedication, nor at the evening sacrifice on those days, when there was an additional sacrifice, added to the dayly. (k) Maym. in Corban. per. 3. (l) Id. ib. Tal. in Taan. per. 4.

These Stationary men in the week of their attendance, might neither be trimmed by the Barber, nor might they wash their cloaths in all that time: And the reason of this was, because they were to do these things before they entred their attendance, and to come neat to it, and not to have these things to do, when they were entred.

CHAP. VIII.

Concerning their Sacrifices and Offerings.

THE right of ſacrificing had theſe ſeveral ends.

1. To repreſent, and to be a memorial of the great ſacrifice of Chriſt, who ſhould once be offered up in behalf of ſinners.

2. To lecture unto them, the deſert of ſin and ſinners, death and fire, in the death and firing of the ſacrifice before their eyes.

3. To acknowledge their goods received from God, in offering up unto him, ſomething of all they had.

4. To be a matter of Worſhip and Religion in thoſe times of ceremoniouſneſs: wherein, all did acknowledge their homage to God, and true believers acted their faith on Chriſts ſufferings.

5. To be ſigns of repentance, and pledges of expiation.

Their oblations were either of living Creatures or of other things.

Of living Creatures they offered only theſe five kinds, Bullocks, Sheep, Goats, Turtles, Pigeons: Their offerings of other things, were Tithe, Firſt-fruits, Flower, Wine, Oil, Frankincenſe, Salt, &c.

Their ſacrifices of living Creatures were either קדשי הקדשים the moſt holy ſacrifices, or קדשים קלים [it is the Jews own diſtinction] ſacrifices of an inferiour alloy. Thoſe that they call the moſt holy ſacrifices, were Burnt-offerings, ſin-offerings, treſpaſs-offerings, and the Peace-offerings of the whole Congregation. Their inferiour ſacrifices were Peace-offerings of particular perſons, Paſchal-lambs, firſtlings and tenths.

Some of their offerings were זבחי חובה ſacrifices of duty, and to which they were bound, and ſome were זבחי נדבה voluntary ſacrifices which they offered of their own free will.
